DRAY, a low cart for heavy goods. (E.) The word dray-load occurs in State Trials, an 1643 (R.); dray-men in The Spectator, no. 307. The form dray agrees with A. S. drage, which occurs in A. S. 307. The told broy agrees with A.S. drage, which occurs in A.S. drage-net, a draw-net, or dredge-net, + Swed. drög, a slerige, dray. It means 'that which is drawn along;' see Dredge (1), Drag. [+] DREAD, to fear, be afraid. (E.) M. E. dreden, P. Plowman, B. xx. 153. - A.S. drédan, only found in the compounds on-drédan, adrédan, ofdrédan; of which the first is common. + O.Sax. drédan, adrédan, is a drédan, of the second drede only in the compound andrádan or anddrádan, to be afraid. + O. H. G. trátan, only in the comp. intrátan, M. H. G. entráten, to be afraid. Root unknown. Der. dread, sb.; dread-ful, dread ful-ly, dread-ful-ness, dread-less, dread-less-ly, dread-less-ness.

DREAM (1), a vision. (E.) M.E. dream. dream, dream; Havelok, 1284. It also has the sense of 'sound,' or 'music;' as in 'mid te dredful dreame of he englene bemen '= with the dreadful sound of the angels' trumpets, Ancren Riwle, p. 214. – A.S. dream, (1) a sweet sound, music, harmony; (2) joy, glee. The sense of 'vision' is not found in the earliest English, but the identity of the M.E. dream with the A.S. dream is undeniable, as Grein rightly says; the O. Saxon usage proves that the sense of 'vision' arose from that of 'happiness;' we still talk of 'a dream of bliss.' + O. Sax. drom, joy; also, a dream. + O. Fries. drám, a dream. + Du. droom. + Icel. drawmr. + Dan. and Swed.  $dr\deltam. +$  G. traum.  $\beta$ . The original sense is clearly 'a joyful or tumultuous noise,' and the word is from the same root as drum and drone. See Drum, Drone. Der. dream, ¶ Not connected with Lat. verb, q.v.; dream-less, dream-y. dormirs, but with Gk. Spoos, a noise, SopuBos, a tumult.

DREAM (2), to see a vision. (E.) The form shews that the verb is derived from the sb., not vice versa. - A.S. dréman, drýman, to rejoice (Bosworth); from the sb. dream, joy; see further under Dream (1). So too G. traumen, to dream, from sb. traum. DREARY, DREAR, gloomy, cheerless. (E.) Dre Drear is a modern poetical form, used by Parnell and Cowper. It is quite unauthorised, and a false form. M.E. dreori, dreri, druri; spelt dreery, drery, Chaucer, C. T. 8390. - A. S. dreorig, sad, mournful; originally 'bloody.' or 'gory,' as in Beowulf, ed. Grein, 1417, 2789. Formed, with suffix -ig, from A. S. dreir, gore, blood; Grein, i. 205. And again, A. S. dreor is from the verb dreosan, to fall, drip, whence also dross, q. v. + Icel. dreyrigr, gory; from dreyri, dröri, gore. + G. traurig, sad, orig. gory, from O. H. G. trur, gore. See Droas, Der. dreari-ness, dreari ly.

DREDGE (1), a drag net. (F.,-Du) Also spelt drudge. "Drudger, one that fishes for oysters;" Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674. ± istic of Dutch to turn orig. Low G. th into d; as in drie = E. three. = of fish-net, forbidden to be used except for oysters;' Cot. - Du, dregnet, a drag-net. - Du dragen, to bear, carry; sometimes to draw, drag; thus Sewel gives the phrase alle de zeylen draagen, all the sails are drawing, or are filled with wind. + A. S. dragan, to draw, See Drag. drag. ¶ There is an A.S. drage net, a draw-net, found in glosses (Lye); but the particular form dredge is, apparently, It comes to much the same thing. French.

DREDGE (2), to sprinkle flour on meat, &c. (F., - Prov., DREIDGE (2), to sprinkle nour on meat, ac. (r., -2.00., -Ital., -Gk.) 'Burnt figs dreg'd [dredged] with meal and powdered sugar;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Scornful Lady, Act ii. sc. 3. 'Dredge you a dish of plovers:' id. Bloody Brother, Act ii. sc. 3. To dredge is to sprinkle as in sowing dreg, or mixed corn; thus Holland says that 'choler is a miscellane seed, as it were, and a dredge, made of all the passions of the mind;' Plutarch, p. 108. 'Dredge or Dreg, oats and barley mingled together;' Kersey, ed. 1715.-O. F. dragee, dragee aux chevaux, ' provender of divers sorts of pulse mingled together; also the course grain called bolymong, French-wheat, Block-wheat, or Buck-wheat; Cot. Cotgrave also gives the older sense of dragée as 'a kind of disgestive (sic) powder, usually prescribed unto weak stomacks after meat; 'this is the mod. F. dragée, a sugar-plum.  $\beta$ . Introduced, through Prov. dragee, from Ital. treggea, a sugar-plum (Brachet). Diez quotes from Papias: ' collibia sunt apud Hebræos, quæ nos vocamus tragemata vel vilia munuscula, ut cicer frixum,' &c. - Gk. τραγήματα, dried fruits, pl. of τράγημα, something nice to eat. - Gk. They (2nd aor. - They ov), to gnaw; also to eat dried fruits; allied to rowe, I injure, rove, I rub. - V TAR, to rub; see Curtius, i. 275, who discusses the variations of the root in form and sense.

DREGS, lees. sediment. (Scand.) A pl. form, from sing. dreg. 'Fra fen, ful of dreg '= out of a fen full of mire; Northern Met. ver-sion of Ps. xxxix. 3. 'Dregges and draf;' P. Plowman, B. xix. 397. - Icel. dregg, pl. dreggjar, dregs, lees. + Swed. drägg, dregs, lees.  $\beta$ . The theoretical European form is dragja (Fick), and the derivation is, apparently, from Icel. draga, to draw; cf. Icel. draga soman, to collect, draga út, to extract; see Draw, Drag. ¶ Not allied to G. dreck, dirt, for that is the Icel. prekkr; nor yet to Gk. rouf, dregs. Dor. dregg. y, dregg-i ness. DRENCH, to fill with drink or liquid. (E.) The causal of drink;' the old sense is 'to make to drink.' M. E. drenchen, Havelok, 583. - A. S. drencan, to drench, Grein, i. 202; causal of A. S. drincan, to drink. + Du. drenken, to water a horse. + Icel. drekkja, to drown, swamp. + Swed. dränka. to drown, to steep. + G. tränken, to water, to soak. See Drink. Der. drench, sb.

DRESS, to make ready, deck. (F.,-L.) M. E. dressen; King Alisaunder, 1332 .- O. F. dresser, dresser, to erect, set up, arrange, dress - Low Lat. drictiare *, not found ; but formed from Low Lat. drictus, a contracted form of Lat. directus, direct, straight, hence just, right, upright. See Direct. Der. dress, sb. ; dress-ing, dress-ing-

DBIBBLE, to let fall in small drops. (Scand.) The reading drib-ling in Shak. Meas. for Meas. i. 3. 2, may be an error for dribbing. Dribble is the frequentative of drib, which is a variant of drip. 'Like drunkardis that dribbis,' i. e. drip. slaver; Skelton, Garland of Laurel, 641. See Drip. Der. dribbl er; also dribl et, formed with dimin. suffix -et. Kersey has ' dribblet (old word), a small portion, a little sum of money owing. (B) Not the same word as drivel. DRIFT, that which is driven. (E.) 'The dragoun drew him awaie [departed] with drift of his winges,' i. e. driving, violent move-ment; Alisaunder, frag. A., ed. Skeat, 998. Formed, with suffix A, form M E drifts to drive of drawalty form draw draw for the form draw from M. E. drifen, to drive; cf. draught from draw, flight from fly, weight from weigh, &c. + Du. drift, a drove, flock, course, current, ardour. + Icel. drift, dript, a snow-drift. + Swed. drift, impulse, in-stinct. + G. trift, a drove, herd, pasturage. See Drive. Dar. drift, verb; drift-less, drift wood. [+]

DRILL (1), to pierce, to train soldiers. (Du.) Cotgrave explains F. trappan as 'a stone cutter's drill, where with he bores little holes in marble.' Ben Jonson hints at the Dutch origin of the word in the sense of 'to train soldiers.' 'He that but saw thy curious captain's drill Would think no more of Flushing or the Brill; Underwoods, lxii, l. 29.-O. Du. drillen, ' tremere, motitare, vacillare, ultro citroque cursitare, gyrosque agere, gyrare, rotare, volvere, tornare, terebrare,' Kilian; mod. Du. drillen, to drill, bore, to turn round, shake, brandish, to drill, form to arms, to run hither and thither, to go through the manual exercise. Sewel's Dutch Dict. gives drillen, to drill, shake, brandish ; met den piek drillen, to shake a pike; to exercise in the management of arms.  $\beta$ . The orig. sense is 'to bore,' or 'to turn round and round,' whence (1) to turn men about or drill them, (2) to turn a pike about, or brandish it. It is the same word as thrill, which is the true E. form ; it is character-

i. 375. See Thrill, Trite. Der. drill, sb. DBILL (2), to sow corn in rows. (E.) We find an old word drill used in the sense of rill. 'So does a thirsty land drink up all the dew of heaven that wets its face, and the greater shower makes no torrent, nor digs so much as a little furrow, that the drils of the water might pass into rivers, or refresh their neighbour's weariness; Bp. Taylor, vol. i. ser. 6 (R.) We also find the verb drill, to trickle. 'And water'd with cool rivulets, that  $drill^{2}d$  Along the borders;' Sandys, Ecclesiastes, c. ii.  $\beta$ . This verb cannot be separated from trill, used in precisely the same sense; as in 'Few drops . . . adowne it trild, i. e. trickled; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 12. 78. In Chaucer, C. T. 13604 (Group B, 1864), Tyrwhitt prints trilled where the Ellesmere MS. has trykled; and it is clear that trill is a mere corruption of trickle. We may conclude that drill is likewise corrupted from trickle, and means 'to let corn run out of a receptacle,' the said receptacle being moved along so as to sow the corn in rows. the same time, it is highly probable that the particular application to corn was due to confusion with W. rhillio, to put in a row, to drill, from the sb. rhill, a row, a trench, a shortened form of rhigol, a groove, trench; and rhigol is a dimin. form (with suffix -ol) from DRILLING, a coarse cloth, used for trousers. (G. - L.) A corruption of G. drillich, ticking, huckaback. And the G. word is a corruption from Lat. trilic-, stem of triliz, having or consisting of three threads. - Lat. tri-, from tres, three; and licium, a thrum, a thread.

DRINK, to suck in, swallow. (E.) M. E. drinken; Chaucer, C. T. 135. – A. S. drinean (common). + Du. drinken. + Icel. drekka (for drenka = drinka). + Swed. dricka. + Dan. drikke. + Goth. drigkan (for drinkan). + G. trinken. Dor. drink-able, drink-er, drink-offering; and see drunken, drunkard, dreneh, drown. ¶ Drink appears to be a nasalised form from a root drak or drag, which is possibly allied to a hasansed form from a root aray or aray, which is possibly affed to drag, to draw, from the notion of drawing in. DRIP, to fall in drops. (Scand.) 'Dryppe or drope, gutta, stilla. cadula;' Prompt. Parv. p. 132. 'Dryppyn or droppyn, stillo. gutto;' id. 'Dryppynge or droppynge, stillacio;' id. Drip is a secondary weak verb, due to the sb. drop, and is of Scand. origin. - Dan dryppe, to drip; from dryp, a drop; cf. Icel. dreypa, to let drop, from draup, pt. of the strong verb drjnipa, to drip. The Dan. dryp answers to Icel. dropi, a drop, with the usual change from o to y when an i follows. - Icel. drop-id, pp. of the strong verb drjúpa, to drip. + A. S. dreopan, strong vb., pp. dropen; see a-dreopan in Grein. + Du. druipen, to drip. + O. Sax. driopan, to drip; pt. drop. +0. H. G. triufan, G. triefen, to drip, trickle; pt. t. troff.  $\beta$ . The form of the European root is DRUP; Fick, iii. 155. See

The form of the European test is L = 1, M = L, driven (with u = Drop. DRIVE, to urge on, push forward. (E) M. E. driven (with u = v), Chaucer, C. T. 7122. – A. S. drifan, Grein, i. 206. + Du. drijven. + I.el. drifa. + Swed. drifue. + Dan. drive. + Goth. dreiban. + O. H. G. tripan, M. H. G. triben, G. treiben.  $\beta$ . Root unknown; the M = DRIVE. DRIVEL, to slaver, speak foolishly. (E.; from C. root.) M.E. drauelen (with u = v), later driuelen, to slaver. 'Drynken and dryuelen;' P. Plowman, B. x. 41. 'Thei don but dryuele peron;' id. x. 11; where the earlier A text has drauele. Drauelen stands for drabbelen, a frequentative form from drabben\*, to dirty, formed from Irish drab, a spot, stain; see Drab (1). Cf. Platt-deutsch drabbeln, to slaver; Bremen Wörterbuch.  $\P$  It is easy to see that the change of form, from dravel to drivel, was due to an assimilation of the word with dribble, a word of similar sense but different origin.

Der. drivell-ing, drivell-er. [†] DRIZZLE, to rain slightly. (E.) 'These tears, that drizzle from mine eyes; 'Marlowe, Edw. II, Act ii. sc. 4. 1. 18. The old spelling is drissel or drisel. 'Through sletie drisling day;' Drant's Horace, b. ii. Sat. 2. Dris-el means 'to fall often,' and is the frequentative of M. E. dressen, to fall, from A. S. dreésan, to fall; see Dross. DROLL, strange, odd, causing mirth (F., -Du., -Scand.) Shak. has drollery, Temp. iii. 3. 21; 2 Hen. IV, ii. 1. 156. The phr. 'to play the droll' is in Howell's Letters, b. i. s. 1. let. 18. -F. drole, 'a boon companion, merry grig, pleasant wag;' Cot. Also cf. droler, 'to play the wag,' id; drolerie, 'waggery, good roguery;' id. [The early use of drollery shews that we took the word from the French.] -Du. drollig, 'burlesk, odd;' Sewel. [The sb. drol, a droll fellow, is not noticed by Sewel.] Of Scand, origin - Dan. trold, Swed. troll, Icel. troll, a hobgoblin; a famous word in Scandinavian story, which makes continued meeting of the odd promks played by them. makes continual mention of the odd pranks played by them. DROMEDABY, a kind of camel. (F., -L., -Gk.) In early use. M. F. dromedarie, King Alisaunder, 3407.-O. F. dromedaire, 'a dromedary;' Cot.-Low Lat. dromedarius, better spelt dromedarius; Ducange. - Lat. dromad-, stem of dromas, a dromedary; with suffix -arius. - Gk. δρομαδ-, stem of δρομάs, fast running, speedy. -Gk. δραμείν, to run; used as infin. aor. of τρέχειν, to run, but from a different root. + Skt. dram, to run; akin to dra, to run, and dru, to run. – V DRA, DRAM, to run. DRONE (1), to make a deep murmuring sound. (E.) dronen, drounen; 'he drouned as a dragon, dredefull of noyes;' Ali-saunder, frag. A., ed. Skeat, l. 985. Not found in A.S., but an E. word. + Du. dreunen, to make a trembling noise; dreun, a trembling noise (Sewel). + Icel. drynja, to roar; drynr, a roaring; drunur, a thundering. + Swed. drona, to low, bellow, drone. + Dan. drone, to peal, rumble; dron, a rumbling noise. + Goth. drunjus, a sound, voice; Rom. x. 18. + Gk. Opivos, a dirge; cf. Opiopaa, I cry aloud. + Skt. dhran, to sound; cf. dhran, to sound.  $-\checkmark$  DHRAN, to make a continuous sound, an extension of  $\checkmark$  DHAR, to bear, maintain, endure ; cf. Skt. dhri, to bear, maintain, endure. See below.

DRONE (2), a non-working bee. (E.) M. E. dran, drane; pl. dranes, Piers Plowman's Crede, l. 726. – A. S. drán; A. S. Chron. an. 1127. + Dan. drone. + Swed. drönare, lit. one who makes a droning noise, from dröna, to drone. + Icel. drjóni. + M. H. G. treno, a drone; cited by Fick and Curtius. + Gk. 8pŵrat, a Laconian drone-bee (Hesychius). See Curtus. + Ck. opwat, a Laconan drout-over (Hesychius). See Curtus, i. 319, 320. From the droning sound made by the insect; see Drone (1). Der. dron-ish. DBOOP, to sink, faint, fail. (Scand.) M. E. drupen, droupen; Chaucer, C. T. 107. The pres. part. drupand is in The Cursor Mundi, l. 4457.-Icel. drúpa, to droop; different from drjúpa, to drip or drop. In mod. Icel., drúpa and drjúpa are confounded. Doublier they are from the same root. See Drop. and Drip. Doubtless they are from the same root. See Drop, and Drip.

DROP, sb. as small particle of liquid ; verb, to let fall small particles of liquid. (E.) M. E. drope, a drop; dropien, droppen, to let drop. The sb. is in Chaucer, C. T. 131; the verb in C. T. 16048 (or 12508, ed. Wright). – A. S. dropa, a drop; Grein, i. 207; dropian, to drop, Psalter, ed. Thorpe, xliv. 10; cf. also dreopian, to drop, drip, Grein, i. 205. + Du. drop, a drop. + Icel. dropi, a drop; dreppa, to drop. + Swed. droppe, a drop. + Dan. draabs, sb. a drop; dreppa, to drop. + O. H. G. tropfo, G. tropfs, a drop.  $\beta$ . Thus the vb. is formed from the sb.; and the latter is from the pp. of A. S. dreogram. see Drip. And see droop. y. Cf. Skt. drapsa, a drop; from V DRA, to run.

DROPSY, an unnatural collection of serous fluid in the body. (F., -L., -Gk.) Spelt dropsie in Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, bk. iii. c. 21. Short for ydropsie, a spelling found in Wyclif, Luke, xiv. 2. -O. F. hydropisie, 'the dropsie;' Cot. - Lat. hydropisis, spelt hydro-pisia in late Lat. (Webster). - Late Gk. blpdmiors \*, from Gk. ülpart, dropsy; a word formed from Gk. 500p, water, without any compound with  $\psi$  (Liddell and Scott). The Gk.  $i\partial \omega \rho$  is cognate with E. water, Der. drops-ic-al. q. v.

DROSKY, a kind of carriage. (Russian.) Mere Russian. - Russ. drojhi, a low four-wheeled carriage. [The j sounded as in French.] Not mentioned in the Russ. Dict. of 1844; but given by Reiff. ¶ The Russ. drojate means 'to tremble;' I do not know if there is any relation.

DROSS, dregs, scum. (E.) Properly 'what falls to the bottom :' not scum that floats on the top. M. E. dros, Ancren Riwle, p. 28s. -A.S. dros, in a copy of Ælfric's Gloss. cited by Lye; cf. A.S. drosn, answering to Lat. fax, Ps. xxxix. 2, ed. Spelman. - A. S. dreikan, to fall, Grein, i. 206. + Goth driusan, to fall. The European root is DRUS, to fall; Fick, iii. 155. Cf. Du. droesem, dregs; G. drusen, lees, dregs; G. druse, ore decayed by the weather; Dan. drysse, to fall in drops; from the same root. Der. dross-y, dross-i-ness. DROUGHT, dryness. (E.) M. E. drogte, drougte; Chaucer, C. T. I. 2. But the proper spelling of drought should be droughth, and the M. E. droughte stands for an earlier droubthe; thus in P. Plowman, B. vi. 290, we have drought, but in the earlier text (A. vii. 275) we find drouble. In the Ormulum, 1. 8626, it is spelt drubble. A. S. drugate, drugate, dryness; in two copies of Ælfric's Glossary (Lye). -A.S. drugian, to dry; dryge, dry; Grein, i. 207. So also Du. droogte, drought, from droogen, to dry, droog, dry. See Dry. The true form drowth or drougth occurs as late as in Spenser's Daphnaida, l. 333; and in Bacon's Nat. Hist. § 669; and perhaps is still found in prov. English. The same change from final it to final i has occurred in height, spelt highth in Milton's Paradise Lost. s continual mention of the odd pranks played by them. 'The en creed knew of no devil but the troll; in modern Danish, "-ludes any ghosts, goblins, imps, and puny spirits, whereas the drowe (with u = v); 'wib [h]is drowe of bestis;' Will. of Palerne, 181.-A.S. drdf; A.S. Chron. an. 1016.-A.S. drifan, to drive. See DRUNKARD, one addicted to drinking. (E.; with F. suffix.) Drive. Der. drov-er.

DROWN, to be killed by being dreached in water; to kill by drenching in water. (E.) Orig. an intransitive or passive verb, as particularly denoted by the suffixed -n; cf. the Mœso-Goth. verbs particularly denoted by the sum ded -n; cf. the Moso-Goth. Verbs in -nan, which are of a like character. 'Shall we give o'er and drown?' Tempest, i 1, 42. 'Alle... drowned [perished] berinne;' Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, ii. 372. M. E. druncnien, later druncnen, drunknen, and finally drounen; the spelling druncnen is in the Ormu-hum, 15398; drunknen is in Wyclif, Isa. lxiii. 6. - A. S. druncnian, Northumb. druncnia, to be drowned, to sink ; 'ongann druncnia' - began to sink; Matt xiv. 30 (Lindisfarme MS.). Formed, with suffix -ian, from druncen, lit. drunken, pp. of drincan, to drink. β. Similarly, we find Swed. drunkna, to be drowned, from drucken, drunken, pp. of dricka, to drink ; and Dan. drukne, to be drowned, from drukken, drunken, old pp. of drikke, to drink. See Drunken. ¶ It may be added that this will appear more plainly from the Lindisfarne MS., Luke, xii. 42; where the Lat. industriari is translated by 'druncgnia vel bætte se druncenig,' i. e. to drown or that he may be drunken.

DROWSE, DROWZE, to be sluggish. (E.) Formerly drouse; Milton, P. L. xi. 131; viii. 289; whence drousie, id. Il Penseroso, 83. Not found (as yet) in the Mid. Eng. period. A. S. druisian, drúsan, to be sluggish; 'lagu drúsade' = the lake lay sluggish; Beo-wulf, ed. Grein, 1630. Cf. dreósan, to mourn; Grein. 1. 200, which is witimately the same as A. S. dredsan, to fall; id.  $\beta$ . So, too, O. H. G. trairen, to cast down the eyes, to mourn (mod. G. trairen), is related to O. H. G. trúrig, moumful, orig. dripping with blood, and to the Grein, i. 203; drepe, drype, a blow; id. 203, 200, + Iccl. drepa, to kill, slay. + Swed. drabba, to hit; dräpa, to kill, slay. + Dan. drabe, to kill. + G. treffen, to hit. All from the European root DRAP, to strike; Fick, iii. 153. Der. drub, sb.; drubb-ing. DRUDGE, to perform menial work. (C.) Shak. has the sb. drudge, Merch. of Ven. iii. 2. 103. M. E. druggen; Chaucer has 'to drugge and drawe;' C. T. 1416 (or 1418). From a Celtic source; preserved in Irish druggire, a drudger, drudge, slave; and Irish druggireachd, drudgery, slavery. ¶ It is connected (in Chaucer) with drawe merely by alliteration; it is not to be referred to A.S. dragan, to drag; nor yet to A.S. dredgan, to endure, which is the Lowland Scotch dree. Der. drudge, sb.; drudg-er-y. DBUG, a medical ingredient. (F.) M. E. drogge, drugge; the

pl. drogges, drugges is in Chaucer, Six-text, A. 426; where the Harl. MS. has dragges, Prol. 1. 428. [But dragges and drogges cannot be the same word; the former is from O. F. dragee, discussed s. v. Drodge (2), q. v.; the latter is O. F. drogue.] = O. F. (and mod. F.) drogue, a drug; cf. Ital., Span., and Port. droga, a drug. B. Remoter origin uncertain; Diez derives it from Du. droog. dry; which seems right, because the pl. droogen, lit. dried vegetables and roots, was used in the special sense of 'drugs.' 'Droogen, gedroogde kruyden en wortels, druggs; 'Sewel's Du. Dict. See Dry. Der. drugg-ist;

Span. droguete, Ital. droghetta, a drugget; the latter is given in Meadows, in the Eng. Ital. section. A dimin., with suffix -et, from F. drogue, (1) a drug; (2) trash, rubbish, stuff; see Hamilton and Legros, French Dict. See Drug.

DBUID, a priest of the ancient Britons. (C.) 'The British Druyds;' Howell, Foreign Travel, ed. 1642, sect. 10.—Lat. pl. Druides; Caesar, De Bello Gallico, vi. 13. Of Celtic origin.—Irish draoi, druidh, an augur, magician; Gael. draoi, draoidh, druidh, a magician, sorcerer. + W. derwydd, a druid. Origin undetermined; the attempt to connect it with Irish and Gael. darach, darag, W. derw, ¶ The A.S. dry, a dár, an oak, is by no means convincing. magician, is from British.

DRUM, a cylindrical musical instrument. (E f) 'The drummes cry dub-a-dub; Gascoigne, Flowers; ed. Hazlitt, vol. i. p. 83, l. 26. Perhaps not found earlier. [Chaucer uses the term naker, a kettle-drum; Kn. Ta. 1563.] It may be an English word, and of imita-tive origin; allied to Drone, q.v. Cf. Dan. drum, a booming sound; drumme, to boom; Icel. pruma, to rattle, thunder; cf. E. to thrum. + Du. trom, trommel, a drum; trommelen, to drum. + Dan. tromme, a drum. + G. trommel, a drum. Der. drum, verb (unless this be taken as the original); drum-head, drum-major, drum-stick. See also Thrum, Trumpet.

In the A.V., Joel, i. 5; and in the Bible of 1551. Formed from the base drank of the pp. dranken, with the F. suffix -ard, of O. H. G. origin, used with an intensive force. This suffix is of the same origin with E. hard; Brachet, Etym. French Dict. introd. § 196. Cf. the phrase 'a hard drinker.' ¶ The M. E. word is dronkelnu. DRUNKEN, DRUNK, inebriated. (E.) M. E. dron

M.E. dronken, drunken ; Chaucer, C. T. 1264. - A S. druncen, pp. of drincan, to drink, but often used as an adj., Grein, i. 207; see Drink. Der. drunken-ness.

DRUPE, a fleshy fruit containing a stone. (F., -L., -Gk.) A botanical term. Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. - F. drupe, a drupe, stone-fruit. - Lat. drupa, an over-ripe, wrinkled olive (Pliny). - Gk. δρύππα, an over-ripe olive; a contraction from, or allied to, Gk. downerfy, ripened on the tree; a word which is frequently varied to, δρυπετήs, i. e. falling from the tree - Gk. δρύs, a tree; and either (1) πέπτειν, to cook, ripen, allied to E. cook, q. v.; or (2) πίπτειν, to fall, for which see feather. The Gk. opis is cognate with Tree, q. v. Der. drup-ac-e-ous, with suffix = Lat. -acevs.

DRY, free from moisture. (E.) M.E. druge, O. Eng. Hom. i. 87, l. 12; druge, dryge, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, ii. 385 and 412; draye, Chaucer, C. T. 8775. – A. S. dryge, drige, Grein, i. 207. + Du. droog, dry. + G. trocken, dry.  $\P$  Cf. Goth. ga-thaursnan, to be-come dry, to wither away, which is connected with E. thirst; simi-larly the word dry may be ultimately connected with drink; but it hardly seems possible to link dry with thirst directly. See Thirst. Der. dry, verb; dry-ly, dry-ness; dry-goods, dry-nurse, dry-rot, drysalter; see also drought, drug.

DRYAD, a nymph of the woods. (L., -Gk.) Milton has Dryad, P. L. ix. 387; and the pl. Dryades, Comus, 964. - Lat. Dryad-, stem of Dryas, a Dryad. - GK. oppur, out -woods. - GK. Spie, a tree; cognate with E. tree, q. v. DTTAT. consisting of two. (L.) 'This dualitie... is founden in. of Dryas, a Dryad. - Gk. Spuad-, stem of Spuds, a nymph of the DUAL, consisting of two. (L.) 'This dualitie . . . is founden in. euery creature; 'Test. of Love, b. ii. s. 14; ed. 1561, fol. cvi, back. – Lat. dualis, dual. – Lat. dwo, two. See Two. Der. dual-ism, dual-i-ty. DUB, to confer knighthood by a stroke on the shoulder. (E.)

M. E. dubben, Havelok, 2042. - A. S. dubban; 'dubbade his sunu . to ridere,' dubbed his son knight; A. S. Chron. an. 1086. + O. Swed. dubba, to strike (Ihre). + E. Friesic dubben, to beat, slap (Koolman). ¶ A disputed word; it is sometimes said to be from O. F. dober, to beat (Cotgrave); but then, conversely, the F. adouber is derived from A. S. dubban or from Icel. dubba, to strike; and yet again, the Icel. dubba is considered as a foreign word. It may be a mere variant. of dab, formerly most often used in the sense 'to strike.' See Dab. DUBIOUS, doubtful. (L.) In Milton, P. L. i. 104; and in Hall, Edw. IV, an. 9. - Lat. dubius, doubtful, moving in two direc-tions; formed from Lat. duo, two. See Two. Der. dubious-ly, dubions-ness.

DUCAL, belonging to a duke. F. ducal, Cot.; see Duke. DUCAT, a coin. (F..-Ital.) 'As fine as duket in Venise;'. Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 258.-O. F. ducat, 'the coyne termed a ducket, worth vis. viii d; Cot. - Ital. ducato, a ducat; a duchy. -Low Lat. ducatus, a duchy.  $\beta$ . So called because, when first coined in the duchy of Apulia (about A. D. 1140), they bore the legend 'sit tibi, Christe, datus, quem tu regis, iste ducatus.' See Duchy. DUCHESS, the wife of a duke. (F.) Chaucer wrote The Book of the Duchesse. - O. F. ducesse, later duchesse, fem. of duc, a duke ; with suffix -sss = Lat. -issa = Gk. -iora. See Duke. DUCHY, a dukedom. (F.) M. E. ducké; P. Plowman, C. iv.

245. - F. duché. - Low Lat. ducatus; formed with suffix -atus from.

dwe-, stem of dwz, a leader. See Duke. DUCK (1), a bird. (E.) M. E. doke, duke; P. Plowman, B. v. 75; xvii. 62. The word duk-e means 'diver;' the final -e = A.S. -a, suffix denoting the agent, as in hunt-a, a hunter. From M. E. duken, to dive. + Dan. duk-and, a diver (bird); from duk-=dukke, to dive. and and (=G. ente), a duck. + Swed. dyk-fågel, a diver (bird). See, Duck (2). Der. duck-ling, with double dimin. suffix -l and -ing; cf. gos-ling DUCK (2), to dive, bob the head down. (E.) M.E. duken, douken; the pres. pt. doukand, diving, occurs in Alexander, frag. C., ed. Stevenson, 4091. Not found earlier, + Du. duiken, to stoop, dive. + Dan. dukke, to duck, plunge. + Swed. dyka, to dive. + G, tauchen, to dive. Der. duck (1).

DUCK (3), a pet, darling. (O. Low G. or Scand.) 'O dainty duck !' Mids. N. D. v. 286. - E. Friesic dok, dokke. a doll + Dan. dukke, a doll, puppet. + Swed. docka, a doll, a baby. + O. H. G. tochá, M. H. G. tocke, a doll, a term of endearment to a girl. Of uncertain origin. ¶ Probably introduced from the Netherlands; cf. note to P. Plowman, C. vii. 367. This would at once account for the form doxy; for the base dok- would, in Dutch, inevitably receive the very common double dimin. suffix -et-je, giving dok-et-je,

D<sub>UNGEON.</sub>

which would be pronounced as doxy by an English mouth. The  $\mathcal{E}$  [Also as a verb; 'it dulleth me;' id. 16561. In the Ancren Riwle word occurs in E. Friesic as dokke, a doll, dokie, a small bundle | we have 'dulle neiles,' i.e. blunt nails, as a various reading of 'duke (Koolman).

DUCK (4), light canvas. (Du.) Not in early use; a nautical word. - Du. doed, linen cloth, towel, canvas. + Dan. dug, cloth. + Swed. duk. + Icel. dukr, cloth, table-cloth, towel. + G. tuch, cloth; O. H. G. tuch, M. H. G. tucch. Cf. Skt. dhvaja, a flag, banner. DUCT, a conduit-pipe. (L) Still spelt ductus in 1715. 'Ductus, a leading, guiding ; a conduit-pipe ;' Kersey's Dict. - Lat. ductus, a leading .- Lat. ductus, pp. of ducere, to lead. See Duke; and Doughe.

DUCTILE, malleable. (F.,-L.) 'Soft dispositions, which ductile be;' Donne, To the Countess of Huntingdon - F. ductile, 'easie to be hammered;' Cot. - Lat. duc:ilis, easily led. - Lat.

buctus, pp. of ducere, to lead. See Duke. Der. ducil-i-ty. DUDGEON (1), resentment. (C.) 'When civil dudgeon first grew high;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 1. l. 1. - W. dychan, a jeer; dygen, malice, resentment; cf. dygas, hatred; dueg, melancholy, spleen. And cf. Com. duckan, duwkan, grief, sorrow, lamentation. [† DUDGEON (2), the haft of a dagger. (Unknown.) A

And on thy blade and dudgeon gouts of blood;' Mach. ii. 1. 46. See Clark and Wright, notes to Macbeth; Furness, notes to ditto. The evidence goes to shew that some daggers were called dudgeos-kafted, which Gifford explains by saying that the wood was gouged out in crooked channels, like what is now, and perhaps was then, called snail-creep-ing; note on Jonson's Works, v. 221. The root of the box-tree was also called audgeon, apparently because it was curiously marked; 'the root [of box] . is dudgin and full of work;' Holland's Pliny, b. xvi. c. 16; where the context shews the sense to be ' crisped damask-wise' or 'full of waving.'  $\beta$ . Since the sense clearly has reference to the markings on the handle of the dagger, we may confidently reject the proposal to connect dudgeon with G. degen, a sword, or with the E. dagger. [†] DUE, owed as a debt. (F., -L.) M. E. dewe. 'A maner dewe dette' = a kind of debt due; P. Plowman, C. iv. 307. -O. F. deu, masc. deue, fem., 'due;' Cot.; pp. from devoir (spelt debvoir in Cot.), to owe.-Lat. debere, to owe. See Dobt. Der. du-ly (M. E. duelich, duly, Gower, C. A. iii. 245, 354); also du-ty, q. v. DUEL, a combat between two. (Ital., -L.) Formerly duello, Shak. Tw. Nt. iii. 4. 337. - Ital. duello, whence also F. duel. - Lat. duellum, lit. a combat between two. - Lat. duo, two. See Two. The Lat. bellum = duellum; see Belligerent. Der. duell-er, duell-ist, dwell ing.

DUEINNA, an old lady acting as guardian. (Span.,-L.) It occurs in Julia's letter (in Slawkenbergius' Tale), in Sterne's Tristram Shandy. - Span. dueña, a married lady, duenna. - Lat. domina, a lady.

Thus duenua is the same as donno, q. v.; or dame, q. v. DUET, a piece of music for two. (Ital.) A musical term - Ital. duetto; in Meadows, Eng-Ital. part. - Ital. due, two. - Lat. duo, two. See Two. For the suffix, cf. guart-ette, guint-ette. DUFFEL, a kind of coarse woollen cloth. (Du.) 'And let it be of duffil gray;' Wordsworth, Alice Fell - Du. duffel, duffel. So named from Duffel, a town not far from Antwerp.

DUG, a teat. (Scand.) In Shak. Romeo, i. 3. 26. The exact original is not forthcoming, but it is clearly allied to Swed. dagga, Dan. dagge, to suckle, fondle.  $\beta$ . Perhaps due to the  $\checkmark$  DHUGH, to milk; cf. Skt. duh (=dhugh), to milk; whence also daughter,

q. v. DUGONG, a swimming mammal, sea-cow. (Malay.) dwyóng, a sea-cow; Marsden's Malay Dict. p. 138. Malay

DUKE, a leader. (F., -L.) M. E. duc, duk; Layamon, l. 86. -O. F. duc. - Lat. ducem, accus. of dux, a leader (crude form duci). -Lat. ducere, to lead; cognate with E. twg, q. v. - & DUK, to pull, draw; Fick, i. 624. DULCET, sweet. (F., -L.) In Shak. Mids. N. D. ii. 1, 151; and used by Cotgrave to translate O. F. doucet, of which an older spelling must have been dolcet, or dulcet; cf. O. Ital. dolcetto, somewhat sweet (Florio). Formed, with dimin. suffix -et (with force of E. -ish), from O.F. dulce, dolce, fem. of dols, sweet; see dols in Burguy. - Lat. dulcis, sweet. See Doucour; and see below.

DULCIMER, a musical instrument. (Span, -L.) In the Bible, A. V. Dan. iii. 5; and in Baret's Alvearie. [In the index to Cotgrave, the O. F. is given as doulciné; Roquefort has doulcemer, but without any hint of date. Whether the word came through the French or not. it must in either case be a corruption of the Span. form.]-Span. dulcemele, a dulcimer; so called from its sweet sound. - Lat. dulce melos, a sweet song; dulce is neut. of dulcis (see above); and melos = Gk. µέλοs, for which see Melody.

We also find dump, to beat, strike with the feet; to dump about, to move with short steps; Jamieson. Also cf. Du. dompneue, a great nose. Perhaps connected with Icel. dumpa, to thump; Swed. dial. dumpa, to make a noise, dance awkwardly; dompa, to fall down plump, to thump. Der. dumpy. [†] DUMPLING, a kind of pudding. (E.?) 'A Norfolk dumpling: Massinger, A New Way to Pay, A. iii. sc. 2. A dumpling is properly

Massinger, A New Way to Fay, A. III. sc. 2. A dumpling is properly a small solid ball of pudding; a dimin. of dump, with double dimin. suffix -ling (w-l + -ing). See Dump. DUMPS, melancholy, sadness. (Scand.) 'As one in doleful dumps;' Chevy Chase, later version, l. 198. The sing. is dump, some-what rare. 'He's in a deep dump now;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Humourous Lieut. A. iv. sc. 6. The most closely allied word is Swed. dial. dumpin, melancholy (Rietz); which is formed as a pp. from Swed. dial. dimba, to steam, reek; cf. Dan. dump, dull, low. β. Further allied to G. dumpf, damp, Du. dompig, damp, hazy, misty, Du. dompen, to quench. extinguish, and to E. damp. Cf. the phr. 'to damp one's spirits.' See Damp. Dor. dump-ish, dumf-ishly, dump-ish-ness. [+]

DUN (1), of a dull brown colour. (C.) 'Dunne of hewe;' Rom. of Rose, 1213 .- A. S. dunn, dark; whence dunnian, to be darkened; Alfred's Boeth. lib. i. met. 5. - Irish and Gael. down, brown. + W. duen, dun, dusky, swarthy. ¶ Hence, I suppose, the river-name Don. Perhaps further related also to G. dunkel, Du. donker, dark, dim. [+]

DUN (a), to urge for payment. (Scand.) I shall be dunning thee every day; Lord Bacon, Apophthegms, no. 288. Cf. M. E. dunning, a loud noise, Prompt. Parv. p. 135. – Icel. duna, to thunder, make a hollow noise ; dynja, to rattle, make a din ; koma einum dyn fyrir dyrr, to make a din before one's door, take one by surprise. + Swed. ddna, to make a noise, to ring.  $\beta$ . These words are cognate with A. S. dynnan, to make a din; and dun is thus a doublet of din. See Din. Der. dun. sb.

DUNCE, a stupid person. (Geographical.) A proper name; originally in the phrase 'a Duns man.' 'A Duns man;' Tyndall, Works, p. 88; 'a great Duns man, so great a preacher;' Barnes, Works, p. 232; cf p. 272. The word was introduced by the Thom-ists, or disciples of Thomas Aquinas, in ridicule of the Scotists, or disciples of John Duns Scotus, schoolman, died A.D. 1308. The Scotch claim him as a native of Dunse, in Berwickshire; others derive his name from Dunston, not far from Alnwick, Northumberland. Either way, Duns is the name of a place, and the word is English. 1 Not to be confused with John Scotus Erigena, died A. D. 875. DUNE, a low sand hill. (C.) M. E. dune, A. S. dún; an older form of down, a hill, and a doublet of it. See Down (2).

DUNG, excrement. (E.) M. E. dung, dong; Chaucer, C. T. 15024. – A. S. dung (dat. dunge), Luke, xiii. 8 (Hatton MS.); the older MSS. have meoxe. + O. Fries. dung. + Swed. dynga, muck. + Dan. dynge, a heap, hoard, mass; cf. dynge, to heap, to amass. + G. dung, dunger. β. Remoter origin unknown; perhaps related to Ding, to cast, throw down, q. v. Der. dung, vb., dung-cart, dungheap dung hill; also ding-y, q. v.

DUNGEON, a keep-tower, prison.  $(F_{..}-L_{.})$  The same word as donjon, a keep-tower of a castle. Which of the castle was the chef dongeon; Chaucer, C. T. 1059: cf. P. Plowman, B. prol. 15. -O.F. donjon, the keep-tower or chief tower of a castle; Prov. dompahon (Brachet). - Low Lat. domnionem, acc. of domnio, a donjon-"ULL, stupid, foolish. (E.) M. E. dul; Chaucer, C. T. 10593. tower; cf. Low Lat. dunjo, dungo, the same. Contracted from Low Lat.

dominionem, acc. of dominio, the same as dominium, a principal possession, domain, dominion; so called because the chief tower. See M. H. G. diut-isk. Here the suffix -isk = E. -isk, and the base diut is further under Dominion, Domain.

DUODECIMO, a name applied to a book in sheets of 12 leaves. (L) "Duodecimo; a book is said to be in duodecimo, or in twelves. when it consists of 12 leaves in a sheet;' Kersey, ed. 1715 .- Lat. duodecimo, abl. case of duodecimus, twelfth. - Lat. duodecim, twelve. -Lat. duo, two; and decem, ten. See Two and Ton. From same source, duodecim-al; duodec-ennial (see decennial); and see below.

DUODENUM, the first of the small intestines. (L.) · Dwodenum, the first of the thin guts, about 12 fingers-breadth long; Kersey, ed. 1715. A late Lat. anatomical word, formed from Lat. duodeni, twelve apiece, a distributive form of duodecim, twelve. So named from its length. See above.

DUP, to undo a door. (E.) In Hamlet, iv. 5. 53. Lit. to do up, i.e. lift up the latch; and contracted from do wp. See Don, Doff. DUPER, a person easily deceived. (F.) A late word. In Pope, Dunciad, iv. 502. – F. dupe, a dupe. Origin uncertain. Webster and Littre say that it is the same as the O.F. name for a hoopoe, because the bird is easily caught. Cotgrave has : 'Dupe, f. a whoop, or hooper; a bird that hath on her head a green crest, or tuft of feathers, and loves ordure so well, that she nestles in it.' This word dupe is probably (like koror) onomatopoetic, and imitative of the bird's cry. ¶ Cf. Bret. houterik, (1) a hoopoe, (2) a dupe. We have similar ideas in gull, goose, and booby. Dor. dupe, verb.

DUPLICATE, double, two-fold. (L.) 'Though the number were duplicate; 'Hall, Hen. VII, an. 5. – Lat. duplicates, pp. of duplicare, to double. - Lat. duplic-, stem of duplex, twofold. - Lat. du- = DUPLICITY, falsehood. (F., -L.) Lit. doubleness. 'No false duplicite;' Craft of Louers, st. 22; in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 341, back. - O. F. duplicite (not recorded, but a correct form). - Lat. acc. duplicitatem, from nom. duplicitas, doubleness. -Lat. duplici-, crude form of duples, twofold. See above.

DURANCE, captivity.  $(F_{}, -L_{})$  Fabyan has durannee in the sense of 'endurance,' vol. i. c. 105. The sense 'imprisonment,' common in Shak. (Meas. iii. 1. 67, &c.), comes from that of long sufferance or long endurance of hardship. Cotgrave explains durer by ' to dure, last, continue, indure, abide, remaine, persist; also to sustaine, brook, suffer.' An O. F. durance does not appear; the suffix -ance is added by analogy with words like defiance, from O. F. desfiance. See Dure, Duress DURATION, length of time. (L.) A coined word; in Kersey, ed. 1715. – Lat. duradus, pp. of durare, to last. See Dure. DURBAR, a hall of audience. (Pers.) In Sir T.

In Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 103. A Hindustani word, but borrowed from Persian. - Pers. dar-bár, a prince's court, levee; Palmer's Dict. col. 255. Lit. 'door of admittance.' - Pers. dar, a door (= E. door), and bar, admittance; id. col. 63. ¶ The word bar alone is also sometimes used in the sense of court, congress, or tribunal; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 230.

DURE, to last, endure. (F., -L.) Once in common use, now nearly obsolete. M. E. duren, King Alisaunder, 3276. - O. F. (and mod. F.) durer, 'to dure, last;' Cot. - Lat. durare, to last. - Lat. durus, hard, lasting. + Irish dur, dull, hard, stupid, obstinate, firm, strong; Gael. dúr, the same. + W. dir, certain, sure, of force. Cf. Gk. Sivaus, force. Der. dur-ing (orig. pres. pt. of dure), dur-able, dur-abl-y, dur-able-ness, dur-abil-i-ty; and see duration, duress, durance: and cf dynamic.

DURESS, hardship, constraint. (F., -L.) M. E. duresse; Rom. of the Rose, 3547; Will. of Paleme, 1114. - O. F. duresce, hardship. -Lat. duritia, hardness, harshness, severity. - Lat. durus, hard. See Dure.

DUSK, dull, dark, dim. (E.) 'Duskede his yën two;' Chaucer, C. T. 2808. M. E. dose, dark, dim; O. Eng. Homilies, i. 2:9, l. 16. Also deose ; 'This word is deosk ' = this is a dark saying ; Ancren Riwle, p. 148. Not found in A. S., yet deose is, strictly, an older form than A.S. deore, whence the mod. E dark; see Dark. Cf. Swed. dial. duska, to drizzle; dusk, a slight shower; duskug, misty (Rietz). Der. dusk, sb., dusk-y, dusk-i-ness, dusk-i-ly.

DUST, fine powder. (E.) M. E. dust, Ancren Riwle, p. 122.-A. S. dust, Grein, i, 212. + Du. duist, meal-dust. + Icel. dust, dust. + Dan. dy:t, fine flour, meal. Closely allied words are also Swed. and Dan. dunst, steam, vapour, Goth. dawns, odour, O. H. G. tunst, G. dunst, vapour, fine dust, Lat. fumus, Skt. dhúma, smoke, Skt. dhúli, dust; shewing that dust and fume are co-radicate.  $-\sqrt{DHU}$ , to shake, blow; cf. Skt. dhú, to shake, remove, blow, shake off. See Fume. Der. dust-er, dust-y, dust-i-ness.

DUTCH, belonging to Holland. (G.) Applied in old authors to the Germans rather than to the Dutch, who were called Hollanders; see Trench, Select Glossary. However, Shak. has it in the usual of The prcfix hus- is cognate with Skt. dws-, dws-, lrish do-, Goth.

DUTY, obligatory service. (F., -L.) Chaucer has duetee in the sense of 'due debt;' C. T. 6934; cl. Gower, C. A. iii. 124, 177. The word appears to be a mere coinage, there being no corresponding form in French ; formed by analogy with words in -ty from the O.F. deu, due. See Duo. The F. word for duty is devoir (Span deber, Ital. dovere), i. e. the infin. mood used as a sb.; hence M. E. douoir, dener (with u = v), Chaucer, C. T. 2600. Der. dute-ous, -ly, -ness:

denier (with -by, -ness, [+] DWALE, deadly nightshade (E.) So called because it causes stupefaction or dulness. M. E. dwale, P. Plowman C. xxiii. 379; on which see my note. - A. S. dwala, an error; hence, stupefaction; cf. Dan. dvale, a trance, torpor, stupor, dvale-drik, a soporific, dwaledrink. See further under Dull. and see Dwell.

DWARF, a small deformed man. (E.) The final f is a substitution for a final guttural sound, written g or gk; in Will. of Palerne, 1. 362, we have the form dwerp. The pl. dwerghes is in Mandeville's Travels, ed. Halliwell, p. 20:. - A.S. dweorg, dwerg, dweorh, a dwarf; all authorised by Lye. + Dn. duerg. + Icel. duergr. + Swed. and Dan. duerg. + M. H. G. twere (also guerch), G. zwerg. Cf. Skt. (Vedic) dhuaras. a (female) evil spirit or fairy, cited by Fick (i. 121) from Roth. - / DHWAR, to rush, fell, bend; Skt. dhvri; whence also dull, dwell, dwale. ¶ The evidence tends to shew that the original sense of dwarf is not 'bent,' but 'one who rushes forth,' or 'furious;' cf. Zend. dvar, to rush forward, said of evil spirits; cf. Gk. 600,000, raging, Optioneuv, to spring, rage. Lat. furere. to rage; see Curtius, i. 317, 318. The A. S. dwellan, to hinder, is also suggestive. Der. dwarf-ish, dwarf-ish-ness.

DWELL, to delay, linger, abide. (E.) M.E. dwellen, to delay, linger; Chaucer, C. T. 2356; to which are allied M. E. dwelen, to be torpid, and dwelien, to err; see Stratmann. - A. S. dwellan (only used in the active sense), to retard, cause to delay, also, to seduce, lead astray, Grein, i. 213, 394; to which are allied gedwelan, to err, gedwelan, to lead astray. The peculiar modern use is Scandinavian. The orig. sense is to mislead, cause to err, whence the intransitive sense of to err, to wander aimlessly, linger, dwell.] - A.S. dwal, only found in the contracted form dol, dull, stupid, torpid; but certified by the derivative duala, error, in the Northumb, version of S. Matt. xxiv. 24, and by the Goth. dwals, foolish. See Dull. + Du. dwalen, to err; cf. dwaaltwin (lit. dwale-town), a labyrinth, dwaallicht (dwalelight), a will-of-the-wisp. + Icel. dvelja, to dwell, delay, tarry, abide; orig. to hinder; cf. dvöl, a short stay. + Swed. dväljas, to dwell, lit. to delay oneself. + Dan. dvale, to linger; cf. dvale, a trance. + O. H. G. twaljan, M. H. G. twellen, to hinder, delay. See Dwale. - ✓ DHWAR, to fell, bend, mislead; cf. Skt. dhvri, to fell, bend. Dor. dwell-er, dwell-ing.

DWINDLE, to waste away. (E.) In Shak. Mach. i. 3. 23. The suffix -le is a somewhat late addition, and has rather a diminutive than the usual frequentative force. The d is excressent, as common after n; cf. sound from M. E. coun. M. E. duinen; Rom. of the Rose, 360; Gower, C. A. ii. 117 .- A. S. dwinan. to dwindle, languish; Bosworth. H Icel. dvina, dvina, dvena; Swed. tvina, to dwindle, ninguisa, piosworini, + Icel. dvina, dvina, dvena; Swed. tvina, to dwindle, pine away.
 Remoter origin unknown. Cf. Skt. dhvams, to fall to pieces, perish.
 DYE, to colour. (E.) M. E. deyen, dyen; Chaucer, C. T. 11037.
 Chaucer also has deyer, dyer, a dyer, C. T. prol. 364. The sb. deh, dye, colour, hue, occurs in O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 193. 1. 20. - A.S. deágian, to dye; deág, deáh, dye, colour; all authorised forms (Lye). Remoter origin unknown. Der. dye, sb.; dy-er, dye-

ELL, a measure of length. (E.) M. E. elle, elne; Prompt. Parv. p. 138. - A. S. eln, a cubit; see Matt. vi. 27, Lu. xii. 25 (Grein, i. 225); eln-gemet, the measure of an ell (ibid.) + Du. elle, an ell; somewhat more than 3-4ths of a yard (Sewel) + Icel. alin, the arm from the elbow to the tip of the middle-finger; an ell. + Swed. alm, an ell. + Dan. alen, an ell. + Goth. aleina, a cubit. + O. H. G. elina, M. H. G. elne, G. elle, an ell. + Lat. wina, the elbow; also, a cubit.  $\beta$ . Ell = el- in el-bow; see Elbow. +Gk. ώλένη, the elbow. β. Ell = el- in el-bow; see Elbow. ELLIPSE, an oval figure. (L., -Gk.) 'Ellipsis, a defect; also, a certain crooked line coming of the byas cutting of the cone or cvlinder;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. ellipsis, a want, defect; also, an ellipse. + Gk. EAAeiyis, a leaving behind, defect, an ellipse of a word; also the figure called an ellipse, so called because its plane forms with the base of the cone a less angle than that of the parabola (Liddell). - Gk.  $\delta\lambda\lambda\delta$  (were, to leave in, leave behind. - Gk.  $\delta\lambda = \delta r$ , in; and Aciwer, to leave. See Eclipse. Der. elliptic al, from Gk. έλλειπτικόs, adj. formed from έλλειψιs.

ELM, a kind of tree. (E.) M. E. elm, Chaucer, C. T. 2024.-A.S. elm; Gloss. to Cockayne's Saxon Leechdoms. + Du. olm. + Icel. dim. + Dan. alm, alm. + Swed. alm. + G. ulme (formerly elme, ilme, but modified by Lat. ulmus). + Lat. ulmus.  $\beta$ . All from the European base AL, to grow, to nourish ; from its abundant growth.

ELOCUTION, clear utterance. (L.) In Ben Jonson, Underwoods, xxxi. 46. - Lat. elocutionem, from nom. elocutio. - Lat. elocutus, pp. of dopui, to speak out. See Eloquance, and Loquacious. Der. elocution-ar-y, elocution-ist. ELONGATE, to lengthen. (Low Lat.) Formerly 'to remove;

pp. of elongare, to remove; a verb coined from Lat. e, out, off, and longus, long. See Long. Der. elongal-ion. ELOPE, to run away. (Du.) Spelt ellope, Spenser, F. Q. v. 4. 9.

Corrupted from Du. onloopen, to evade, escape, run away, by substi-tuting the familiar prefix e- (= Lat. e, out) for the unfamiliar Du. prefix on:-. 1. The Du. prefix ont-= G. prefix ont-= A. S. and-; see 2. The verb loopen, to run, is cognate with E. leap; see Answer.

Leap. Der. elope-ment. ELOQUENT, gifted with good utterance. (F., -L.) M. E. eloquent, Chaucer, C. T. 10990. - O. F. eloquent; Cot. - Lat. eloquent.

(Ihre); whence mod. Swed. eljest, with excrescent t. + Goth. aljis,  $\Phi$  alis, adj. other, another; gen. aljis. + M. H. G. alles, elles, elljes, otherwise, an adverb of genitival form. Cf. Lat. alias, from alius, other. See Alien. Der. else-where.

ELUCIDATE, to make clear. (Low Lat.) 'Elucidate, to make bright, to manifest;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Low Lat. elucidatus, pp. of elucidare; compounded from Lat. e, out, very, and lucidus, bright. See Lucid. Der. elucidat-ion, elucidat-or, elucidat-ive.

ELUDE, to avoid slily. (L.) In Bp. Taylor, vol. i. ser. 5 (R.) - Lat. eludere, pp. elusus, to mock, deceive. - Lat. e, out; and ludere, to play. See Ludicrous. Der. elus-ive, elus-ive-ly, elus-ion, elus-or-y; from pp. elusus. ELYSIUM, a heaven. (L., - Gk.) In Shak. Two Gent. ii. 7. 38.

ELYSIUM, a heaven. (L., - Gk.) In Shak. Two Gent. ii. 7. 38. - Lat. ely-ium. - Gk. 'Ηλύσιον, short for 'Ηλύσιον πεδίον, the Elysian field; Homer, Od. 4. 563. Der. Elysi-an.

field; Homer, Od. 4. 563. Der. Elysi-an. EIMACIATE, to make thin. (L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. vii. c. 13, § 6. - Lat. emaciatus, pp. of emaciare, to make thin. - Lat. e, out, very; and maci-, base of maci-es, leanness; cf. macer, lean. See Meagre. Der. emacia-ion.

EIMANATIE, to flow from. (L.) 'In all bodily emanations;' Bp. Hall, Contemplations, b. iv. cont. 7. § 19. – Lat. emanatus, pp. of emanare, to flow out. – Lat. e, out; and manare, to flow. Manare = madnare, from the base mad- in Lat. madidus, wet, madere, to be moist. –  $\sqrt{MAD}$ , to well, flow; cf. Skt. mad, to be wet, to get drunk. Der. emanat-ion, emanat-ive.

EMANCIPATE, to set free. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. emancipatus, pp. of emancipare, to set free. - Lat. e, out; and mancipare, to transfer property. - Lat. mancip., stem of manceps, one who acquires property; lit. one who takes it in hand. - Lat. man-, base of manus, the hand; and capere, to take. See Manual and Capable. Der. emancipat-or, emancipat-ion. EMASCULATE, to deprive of virility. (L.) Which have

EMASCULATE, to deprive of virility. (L.) 'Which have emasculated [become emasculate] or turned women;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 17, § 2. - Lat. emasculatus, pp. of emasculare, to castrate. - Lat. e, out of, away; and masculau, male. See Male. Der. emasculation.

EMBALM, to anoint with balm. (F.) In Shak. Timon, iv. 3. 30. Spelt imbalm in Cotgrave. M. E. baumen (without the prefix), whence baumsy, baulmy, embalmed, in Barbour's Bruce, xx. 286. – O. F. embaumer, 'to imbalm;' Cot. – O. F. em-=en-=Lat. in; and baume, balm. See Balm.

EMBANK, to cast up a mound. (Hybrid; F. and E.) Spelt imbank in Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. Coined from F. em. (Lat. im--in), and E. bank. See Bank. Der. embank-ment.

EMBARGO, a stoppage of ships. (Span.) 'By laying an embargo upon all shipping in time of war;' Blackstone, Comment. b. i. c. 7.—Span. embargo, an embargo, seizure, arrest; cf. Span. embargare, to lay on an embargo, arrest.—Span. em- (-Lat. im--in-); and barra, a bar. Hence embargo = a putting of a bar in the way. See Bar, Barricade, Embarrass. Der. embargo, verb.

EMBARK, to put or go on board ship. (F.) In Hamlet, i. 3. I. -O. F. embarguer, 'to imbark;' Cot. - F. em. = Lat. im- = in; and F. bargue, a bark. See Bark. Der. embark-at-ion.

EMBARRASS, to perplex. (F.) 'I saw my friend a little embarrassed;' Spectator, no. 109. – F. embarrasser, 'to intricate, pester, intangle, perplex;' Cot. [Cf. Span. embarrasar, to embarrass.] – F. em-(-Lat. im-=in); and a stem barras-, formed from barre, a bar. See Bar, Embargo. Der. embarrass-ment. ¶ 1. The form barras is fairly accounted for by the Prov. barras, a bar (Raynouard); it is a sing. noun, but probably was formed from barras, pl. of Prov. barra, a bar. 2. Similarly the Span. barras, properly the pl. of barra, a bar, is used in the sense of 'prison.' The word was evidently formed in the South of France.

EMBASSY, the function of an ambassador. (Low Lat.) 1. Shak. has embassy, L. L. L. i. 1. 135; also embassage, Much Ado, i. 1. 282; and embassade (= O. F. embassade, Cotgrave), 3 Hen. VI, iv. 3. 32. 2. Latimer has ambassages, Sermon on the Ploughers, 1. 180 (in Skeat's Specimens). Chaucer has embassadrye, Six-text, B. 233. 8. Embassy is a French modification of Low Lat. ambascia, a message, made on the model of O. F. embassade from Low Lat. ambasseiata. See further under Ambassador.

EIMBATTILE (1), to furnish with battlements. (F.) M. E. embattelen, enbattelen; Chaucer, C. T. 14866. - O. F. em- or en- (= Lat. im-in), prefix; and O. F. bastiller, to embattle. See Battlement. ¶ 1. The simple verb battailer or battalen occurs early; the pp. battaily to r battalit, i. e. embattled, occurs in Barbour's Bruce, ii. 221, iv. 134; and the sb. battalyng, an embattlement, in the same, iv. 136. 2. Obviously, these words were accommodated to the spelling of M. E. battale (better bataille), a battle; and from the first a confusion battale has been common. 8. Cf. Low Lat. imbattalare, to which Migne rightly equates to an O. F. embastiller.

EMBATTLE (2), to range in order of battle. (F.) In Shale Hen. V. iv. 2. 14. A coined word, from F. prefix em- (= Lat. im., in); and E. battle, of F. origin. ¶ Probably due to a misapprehension of Embattle (1).

EMBAY, to enclose in a bay. (F.) In Shak. Oth. ii. 1. 18. A coined word; from F. em-(=Lat. im-=in); and E. bay, of F. origin. See Bay (3).

See Bay (3). EMBELLISH, to adorn. (F., -L.) M. E. embelissen, Chaucer, Good Women, 1735. - O. F. embeliss-, stem of pres. pt. &c. of O. F. embellir, 'to imbellish, beautifie: 'Cot. - O. F. em· (Lat. im--in); and bel, fair, beautiful. - Lat. bellus, well-mannered, fine, handsome, See Beauty. ¶ For the suffix -ish, see Abash. Der. embellish-ment.

EMBEB-DAYS, fast days at four seasons of the year. (E.) A corruption of M. E. ymber. 'The Wednesdai Gospel in ymber weke in Septembre monethe;' Wyclif's Works, ed. Arnold, ii. 203; cf. pp. 205, 207. 'Umbridawes' (another MS. ymbri wikes), i. e. emberdays (or ember-weeks); Ancren Riwle, p. 70. – A.S. ymbren, ymbryme. 1. 'On pére pentecostenes wucan tó pám ymbrens' = in Pentecost week according to the ymber, i. e. in due course; rubric to Luke, viii. 40. 'On selcum ymbren-fæstene,' = at every ember-fast; Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 608. 2. The full form of the word is ymb-ryme or ymbe-ryme, and the orig. sense 'a running round, 'circuit,' or 'course; ' compounded of A.S. ymbe, around, cognate with G. um:, Lat. ambi-; and ryne, a running, from rinnan, to run. See Ambi-, prefix, and Run. ¶ This is the only right explanation; for numerous examples and references, see ymbrem in Lye's A.S. Dictionary. Ihre rightly distinguishes between O. Swed. ymberdagar, borrowed from A.S. and obsolete, and the Swed. tamper-dagar, corrupted (like G. quatember) from Lat. quation tempora, the four seasons.

EIMBRIRS, ashes. (E.) The b is excrescent. The M. E. form is emmeres or ëmeres, equivalent to Lowland Scotch ammeris or ameris, used by G. Douglas to translate Lat. fauillam in Æneid, vi. 237. [Probably an E. word, though rare; else, it is Scandinavian.] – A. S. amyrian, embers (Benson); an unauthorised word, but apparently of correct form. + Icel. eimyrja, embers. + Dan. emmer, embers. + M. H. G. eimurja, embers; Bavarian aimern, emmern, pl., Schmeller, i. 76. ¶ Possibly connected with Icel. eimr, eimi, steam, vapour; but this is by no means certain. [†]

EMBEZZILE, to steal slily, filch. (F., -L.) Formerly embesyll or embesell. 'I concele, I embesyll a thynge, I kepe a thynge secret; I embesell, I hyde, fe cele; I embesyll a thynge, or put it out of the way, fe substrays; He that embesylleth a thyng intendeth to steale it if he can convoye it clenly;' Palsgrave's F. Dict. Spelt embesile in The Lament of Mary Magdalen, st. 39; pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1621, fol. 319. The orig. sense was to enfeeble, weaken; hence to diminish; see Imbeoile. Der. embezzle-ment. [+]

EMBLAZON, to adorn with heraldic designs. (F.) Shak has emblaze, 2 Hen. VI, iv. 10. 76. Spenser has emblazon, F. Q. iv. 10. 55. Formed from blazon, q. v., with F. prefix em- = Lat. im- = in. Cf. O. F. blasonner, 'to blaze arms;' Cot. Der. emblazon-ment, emblazon-ry.

EMBOUCHURE, a mouth, of a river, &c. (F., - L.) Mere

French; not in Johnson. - F. embouchure, a mouth, opening. - F. P project, excel. - Lat. e, out; and minere, to jut, project. Root unemboucher, to put to the mouth. - F. em-= Lat. im-=in; and F. boucke, the mouth, from Lat. bucca. See Debouch.

EMBOWEL, to enclose deeply. (F.) 'Deepe emboweled in the earth;' Spenser, F. Q. vi. 8. 15. [Often wrongly put for disembowel; Shak. Rich. III, v. 2. 10.] From F. em-lat. im-in; and bowel, of F. origin, q. v. Der. embowel-ment.

EMBOWER, to place in a bower. (Hybrid; F. and E.) Spenser has embowering, i. e. sheltering themselves ; tr. of Virgil's Gnat, 225. Coined from F. em- = Lat. im- = in; and E. bower.

EMBRACE, to take in the arms. (F.) In early use. M. E. enbracen, to brace on to the arm (said of a shield), King Alisaunder, 6651; cf. Chaucer, C. T. 8288. - O. F. embracer, to embrace, seize (Burguy). -O. F. em-, for en, = Lat. in; and bras, an arm, from Lat. brachium. See Brace. Der. embrace, sb.

EMBRASURE, an aperture with slant sides. (F.) 'Embrasure, an inlargement made on the inside of a gate, door, &c. to give more light; a gap or loophole, &c.; 'Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715.-F. em-brasure, orig. 'the skuing, splaying, or chamfretting of a door or window;' Cotgrave.-O. F. embraser (cf. mod. F. ebraser) 'to skue, or chamfret off the jaumbes of a door or window; 'Cot. 1. The prefix is F. em-=en = Lat. in. 2. The rest is O. F. braser, 'to skue, 1. The or chamfret ;' Cot. ; of unknown origin.

EMBROCATION, a fomenting. (F., - Low Lat., - Gk.) Spelt embrochation in Holland's Pliny, b. xx. c. 14, § 1. = 0. F. embrocation, 'an embrochation, fomenting; 'Cot. = Low Lat. embrocatus, pp. of em-brocare, to pour into a vessel, &c.; cf. Ital. embroccare, to foment. = Gk. iußpoxt, a fomentation. - Gk. iußpixeur, to soak in, to foment. - Ck.  $\ell \mu = \ell \nu$ , in; and  $\beta \rho \ell \chi \epsilon \nu \nu$ , to wet, allied to E. rain; Curtius, i. 234. See Rain.

i. 234. See Rain. EMBROIDER, to ornament with needlework. (F.) M.E. embrouden, embroyden, Chaucer, C. T. 89. [This M.E. form produced a later form embroid; the -er is a needless addition, due to the sb. embroid-er-y.] Cotgrave gives 'to imbroyder' as a translation of O. F. broder. - O. F. prefix em- = en- = Lat. in ; and O. F. broder, to embroider, or broider. See Broider. Der. embroider-er, embroider-y (rightly embroid-ery, from M.E. embroid; spelt embroud-erie, Gower, C. Assure, and bure.  $\P$  Generally spent insure, which is a con-fusion of languages; whence insur-ance. ENTABLATURE, part of a building surmounting the columns. (F.,-L.) Spelt intablature in Cotgrave. = 0. F. entablature, 'an intablature;' Cot.; an equivalent term to entablement, the mod. F. form. The O. F. entablement meant, more commonly, 'a pedestal' or 'base' of a column rather than the entablature above. Both sbs. are formed from Low Lat. intabulare, to construct an intabulatum or basis. - Lat. in, upon; and Low Lat. tabulare, due to Lat. tabulatum, board-work, a flooring. - Lat. tabula, a board, plank. See Table. ¶ Since entablature simply meant something laid flat or boardwise upon something else in the course of building, it could be applied to the part either below or above the columns.

to the part either second or above the columns. EINTAIL, to bestow as a heritage. (F., -L.) In Shak. 3 Hen. VI, i. I. 194, 235; as sb., All's Well, iv. 3, 313. [1. The legal sense is peculiar; it was originally 'to abridge, limit;' lit. 'to cut into.' 'To entayle land, addicere, adoptare hæredes;' Levins. 2. The M. E. entailen signifies 'to cut or carve,' in an ornamental Dere the Dere the D. Blowman's Code ad Share way; see Rom. of the Rose, 140; P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, II. 167, 200.] - O. See Thoism. Dor. enthusiast (Gk. irforσιαστήε); enthusiast-ic, Dryden, Abs. and Achit. 530; enthusiast-ic-al, enthusiast-ic-al-ly.

ENTICE, to tempt, allure. (F.) M. E. enticen, entisen; Rob. of Glouc., p. 235; P. Plowman, C. viii. 91. - O. F. enticer, enticher, to excite, entice (Burguy). Origin unknown. Dor. entice-ment, Chaucer, Pers. Tale, Group I, 1, 967. ¶ We cannot well connect enticher with O. F. atiser (mod. F. attiser), to stir the fire; and the suggestion of deriving -sicher from G. stechen, to stick, pierce, is out of the question. Rather from M. H. G. zicken, to push, zeeken, to drive, tease; cf. Du. tikken, to pat, touch slightly (Sewel), and E. tick-le; see Touch. [†] ENTIRE, whole, complete. (F., -L.) M. E. entyre; the adv. entyreliche, entirely, is in P. Plowman, C. xi. 188. - O. F. entire, 'intire;' Cot.; cf. Prov. enteir, Ital. intero. - Lat. integrum, acc. of integer, whole. See Integer. Der. entire-ly, entire-ness; also entire-ty, spelt entierty by Bacon (R.), from O. F. entiereté (Cot.), from Lat. acc. integritatem; whence entirety and integrity are doublets. EINTITLE, to give a title to. (F., -L.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2.822. From F. en - Lat. in; and title. See Title.

ENTITY, existence, real substance. (L.) In Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674. A coined word, with suffix -ty, from Lat. enti-, crude form of ms, being, pres. pt. of esse, to be.  $-\sqrt{AS}$ , to be. See Sooth. ENTOMB, to put in a tomb.  $(F_{..}-L_{.})$  In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 10. 46. - O. F. entomber, 'to intombe;' Cot. - Low Lat. intumulare, to entomb; from Lat. tumulus. See Tomb. Der. entomb-ment. ENTOMOLOGY, the science treating of insects. (Gk.) Modern; not in Johnson. - Gk. έντομο-, crude form of έντομον, an insect ; properly neut. of  $\ell rrouse$ , cut into; so called from their being nearly cut in two; see Insect. The ending -logy is from Gk.  $\lambda \ell \gamma \epsilon v$ , to discourse. – Gk.  $\ell v$ , in; and  $\tau o \mu$ -, base of  $\tau o \mu \delta s$ , cutting, from  $\tau \ell \mu r \epsilon v$ , to cut. See Tome. Der. entomolog-ist, entomolog-ic-al.

ENTRAILS, the inward parts of an animal. (F., -L.) The sing. entrail is rare ; but answers to M. E. entraile, King Alisaunder, 1. 3628. - O. F. entrailles, pl. ' the intrals, intestines;' Cot. - Low Lat. intralia, also spelt (more correctly) intranea, entrails. [For the change from n to l, cf. Boulogne, Bologna, from Lat. Bononia.] B. Intranea is contracted from Lat. interanea, entrails, neut. pl. of interanea, inward, an adj. formed from inter, within. See Internal... ENTRANCE (1), ingress; see Enter.

ENTRANCE (2), to put into a trance. (F.,-L.) In Shak. Per. iii. 2. 94. From F. en = Lat. in ; and E. trance = F. transe. See Trance. Der. entrance-ment.

ENTRAP, to ensnare. (F.)

ENTRAP, to ensure. (F.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 1. 4. -0. F. entraper, 'to pester ; . . also, to intrap;' Cot. -F. en = Lat. in; and O. F. trape, a trap. See Trap. EINTREAT, to treat; to beg, (F., -L.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 10. 7. The pp. entreated occurs in the Lament. of Mary Mag-dalen, st. 17. [The Chaucer passage, qu. in R., is doubtful.] -O. F. entreater to treat of the second s entraiter, to treat of; Burguy. - F. en = Lat. in; and O. F. traiter, to treat, from Lat. tractare. See Treat. Der. entreat-y, K. John, v. 2. 125; entreat-ment, Hamlet, i. 3. 122.

ENTRENCH, to cut into, fortify with a trench. (F.) · Entrenchad deepe with knife; Spenser, F. Q. iii. 12, 20; 'In stronge entrenchments;' id. ii. 11. 6. A coined word; from F. en = Lat. in; and E. trench, of F. origin. See Trench.

ENTRUST, to trust with. (Hybrid.) By analogy with enlist, enrol, enrapture, entrance, enthrone, we should have entrust. But intrust seems to have been more usual, and is the form in Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715; see Intrust. ENTWINE, ENTWIST, to twine or twist with. (Hybrid.)

Milton has entwined, P. L. iv. 174; Shak. has entwist, Mids. Nt. Dr. iv. 1. 48. Both are formed alike : from F. en (= Lat. in), and the E. words twine and twist. See Twine, Twist.

ENUMERATE, to number. (L.) Enumerative occurs in Bp.

Taylor, Holy Dying, c. 5. s. 3, 10. - Lat. enumeratus, pp. of enumerare, to reckon up. - Lat. e, out, fully; and numerare, to number. See Number. Der. enumerat-ion, enumerat-ive. ENUNCIATE, to utter. (L.) Enunciatyue occurs in Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 24.-Lat. enunciatus, pp. of enunciare, better enuntiare, to utter. - Lat. e, out, fully; and nuntiare, to announce, from nuntius, a messenger. See Announce. Der. enuncial-ion, enuncial-ive, enuncial-or-y.

ENVELOP, to wrap in, enfold. (F.) Spelt envelop in Spenser, F. Q. ii. 12. 34. M. E. envolupen, Chaucer, C. T. 12876.-O. F. envoluper, later enveloper, to wrap round, enfold. - F. en = Lat. in ; and a base volup-, of uncertain origin, but probably Old Low German. β. This base is, in fact, perfectly represented by the M.E. wlappen, to wrap up, which occurs at least twelve times in Wyclif's Bible, and is another form of wrappen, to wrap. See Wyclif, Numb. iv. 5, 7; Matt. xxvii. 59; Luke, ii. 7, 12; John, xx. 7, &c. See Wrap. Der. envelope, envelopement. ¶ The M.E. wlappen, by the loss of initial w, gave the more familiar form lap; 'lapped in proof,' Macbeth, i. 2. 54; see Lap. The word appears also in Italian; cf. Ital. inviluppare, to wrap. The insertion of e or i before l was merely Let interpret the difficulty of pronouncing ul (=wl). See Develop. [†] EIN VEINOM, to put poison into. (F., -L.) M.E. envenimen (with w = v); whence envenimed, King Alisaunder, 5436; enveniming, Chaucer, C. T. 9934. -O. F. envenimer, 'to invenome;' Cot. -O. F. en = Lat.

in ; and venim, or venin, poison, from Lat. uenenum. See Venom.

ENVIRON, to surround. (F.) Spelt envyroune in Wyclif, 1 Tim. v. 13; pt. t. envyrounede, Matt. iv. 23; cf. Gower, C. A. iii. 97.– O. F. environner, 'to inviron, encompasse;' Cot.–O. F. (and F.) environ, round about. - O. F. en = Lat. in; and virer, to turn, veer. See Veer. Der. environ-ment; also environs, from F. environ.

ENVOY, a messenger. (F.,-L.) 1. An improper use of the word; it meant 'a message;' and the F. for 'messenger' was envoye. 2. The envoy of a ballad is the 'sending' of it forth, and the word is then correctly used; the last stanza of Chaucer's Ballad to K. Richard is headed L'envoye. - O. F. envoy, 'a message, a sending; also the envoy or conclusion of a ballet [ballad] or sonnet;' Cot. Also 'envoyé, a special messenger;' id. - O. F. envoyer, to send; formerly enveier, and entweier; see Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, 22, 17. O. F. ent (10th cent.), int (A.D. 872), forms derived from Lat. inde, thence, away; and O. EQUAL, on a par with, even, just. (L.) Chaucer has both equal and inequal in his Treatise on the Astrolabe; equally is in the C. T. 7819. [We find also M. E. egal, from O. F. egal.] - Lat. equalis, equal; formed with suffix -alis from equals, equal, just. \beta. Allied to Skt. ska (= sika), one; which is formed from the pronominal bases a and ka, the former having a demonstrative and the latter an interrogative force (Benfey). Der. equal-ly, equal-ise, equal-isat-ion; equal-i-i, King Lear, i. 1. 5; and see equation, and equity. EQUANIMITY, evenness of mind. (L.) In Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3. l. 1020. Formed as if from French. - Lat. æquanimitatem, acc. of aquanimitas, evenness of mind. - Lat. aquanimis, kind, mild; hence, calm. - Lat. aqu-, for aquus, equal; and animus, mind. See Equal and Animate.

EQUATION, a statement of equality. (L.) M. E. equacion, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, prol. 71. - Lat. aquationem, acc. of aquatio, an equalising - Lat. aquatus, pp. of aquare, to equalise. - Lat. aquas, equal. See Equal. Der. equator (Low Lat. aquator, from aquare), equal. See Equal. Der. equator (Low Lat. equator, from equare), Milton, P. L. iii. 617; equa-ble (Lat. equabilis, from equare); equa-bl-y; equa-bil-i-ty, spelt equabilitie in Sir T. Elyot, Governour, b. iii. c. 20. Also ad-equate. EQUERRY, an officer who has charge of horses. (F., -Low Lat., -O. H. G.) Properly, it meant 'a stable,' and equerry really stands for equerry-man. It occurs in The Tatler, No 19 (Todd).-

F. écurie, formerly escurie, a stable; spelt escuyrie in Cotgrave. Low Lat. scuria, a stable; Ducange. - O. H.G. skiura, scura, M. H.G. schiure, a shed (mod. G. schauer); lit. a cover, shelter. -  $\checkmark$  SKU, to cover; see Sky. The spelling equery is due to an attempt to connect it with Lat. equus, a horse. There is, however, a real ultimate connection with esquire, q.v.

EQUESTRIAN, relating to horsemen. (L.) A certain equestrian order; Spectator, no. 104. Formed, with suffix -an, from Lat. equestri-, crude form of equester, belonging to horsemen. - Lat.

Lat. equesiri-, ciude iorni or equesier, belonging to horsemen. - Lat. eques, a horseman. - Lat. equus, a horse. See Equino. EQUI-, prefix, equally. (L.) Lat. equi-, from equus, equal; see Equal. In Kersey, ed. 1715.

- Lat. aquilibrium, a level position (in balancing). - Lat. aquilibris, level, balancing equally. - Lat. aqui, for aques, equal; and librare, to balance, from libra, a balance. See Equal and Librate.

EQUINE, relating to horses. (L.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. - Lat. equinus, relating to horses. (L.) modern; not in food s Johnson. - Lat. equinus, relating to horses. - Lat. equins, a horse. + Gk. (invo) (dialectally invo), a horse. + Skt.  $a_{c}va_{a}$ , 'a runner,' a horse. -  $\checkmark$  AK, to pierce, also to go swiftly; cf. Skt.  $a_{c}$ , to pervade, attain; Fick, i. 4, 5. EQUINOX, the time of equal day and night. (F., -L.) In Shak.

Oth. ii. 3. 129. Chaucer has the adj. equinoctial, C. T. 14862.-F. équinoxe, spelt equinocce in Cotgrave.-Lat. æquinoctium, the equinox. time of equal day and night. - Lat. equi, for equal; and nocti-, crude form of non, night. See Equal and Night. Der. equinocti-al, from Lat. aquinocti-um. ¶ Note that the suffix -nox is not the Lat. nom. ncz, but comes from -noctium.

EQUIP, to fit out, furnish. (F., --Scand.) In Cotgrave; and used by Dryden, tr. of Ovid, Ceyx, I. 67. [The sb. equipage is earlier, in Spenser, Sheph. Kal., Oct. 114; whence equipage as a verb, F. Q. ii. 9. 17.] = O. F. equiper, 'to equip, arm;' also spelt esquiper; Cot. = Icel. shipa, to arrange, set in order; closely related to Icel. shapa, to shape, form, mould. See Shape. Der. equip-age (O. F. equipage); equip-ment. ¶ We need not lay stress on the statement in Brachet, that equip meant 'to rig a ship. Ship and equip are from the same root; and Icel. skipa sufficiently explains the word.

EQUIPOISE, an equal weight. (F., -L.) In the Rambler, no. 95 (R.) Coined from equi-=F. equi-=Lat. aqui-, and poise. See Equi- and Poise.

EQUIPOLLENT, equally powerful. (F., -L.) 'Thou wil to kinge's be equipolent;' Lidgate, Ballad of Good Counsel, st. 3; in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 337.-O. F. equipolent; Cot.-Lat. aquipollent-, stem of aquipollens, of equal value.-Lat. aqui-, for aquus, equal; and pollens, pres. part. of pollere, to be strong, a verb of uncertain origin.

EQUITY, justice. (F., - L.) In Shak. K. John, ii. 241; M. E. equité, Gower, C.A. i. 271. - O. F. equité, 'equity;' Cot. - Lat. aqui-tatem, acc. of aquitas, equity; from aquus, equal. See Equal. Der. equit-able, O. F. equitable (Cot.); equi:-abl-y, equi:-able-ness.

ERE, before, sooner than. (E.) M. E. er, Chaucer, C. T. 1042.-A. S. ár, soon, before; prep., conj., and adv.; Grein, i. 69. [Hence A. S. ár-lic, mod. E. early.] + Du. eer, adv. sooner. + Icel. ár, adv., soon, early, + O. H. G. er, G. ever, sooner, + Goth. ar, adv., soon. soon, carly, + O. H. G. er, G. ever, sooner, + Goth. ar, adv. early, soon. orig. not a comparative, but a positive form, meaning 'soon;' whence ear-ly = soon-like, er-st = soon-est, Fick (iii. 30) connects it with the root I, to go.

ERECT, upright. (L.) M. E. erect, Chaucer, C. T. 4429.-Lat. erectus, set up, upright; pp. of erigere, to set up. - Lat. e, out, up; and regere, to rule, set. See Regal. Der. erect, vb., erect-ion. ERMLINE, an animal of the weasel tribe. (F. - O. H.G.) M. E. ermyne, Rob. of Glouc., p. 191; ermin, Old Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, 1st Ser. p. 181, l. 361. – O. F. ermine (F. hermine), 'the hate-spot ermelin;' Cot. [Cf. Span. armiño, Ital. ermellin?, ermine; Low Lat. armelinus, ermine-fur.] = 0. H. G. harmin, M. H. G. hermin, ermine-fur; cf. mod. G. ermelin.  $\beta$ . The forms hermin, hermelin, are extended from O. H. G. harmo, M. H. G. harme, an ermine, corresponding to Lithuanian szarmű, szarmonys, a weasel (Diez); cf. A.S. hearma, Wright's Vocab. i. 22, col. 2, l. 13. ¶ The derivation, suggested Wright's Vocab. i. 22, col. 2, l. 13. ¶ The derivation, suggested by Ducange, that ermine is for mus Armenius, Armenian mouse, an equivalent term to mus Ponticus, a Pontic mouse = an ermine, is adopted by Littré. [†]

ERODE, to eat away. (F., -L.) In Bacon, Nat. Hist. s. 983. -O. F. eroder, 'to gnaw off, eat into;' Cot. - Lat. erodere, pp. erosus, to gnaw off; from e, off, and rodere. See Bodent. Der. eros-ion, eros-ive; from Lat. ero:us.

EROTIC, amorous. (Gk.) 'This eroticall love;' Burton, Anat. δ Melancholy, p. 442 (R.) - Gk. ἐρωτικόε, relating to love. - Gk.
 ἐρωτι-, crude form of έρωε, love; on which see Curtius, i. 150.
 ERR, to stray. (F., - L.) M. E. erren, Chaucer, Troilus, b. iv.

1. 302. - O. F. errer, 'to erre;' Cot. - Lat. errare, to wander; which stands for an older form ers-are. + Goth. airz-jan, to make to err; a causal form. + O. H. G. irran (for irrjan), to make to err; O. H.G. irreón, irrón, M. H. G. and G. irren, to wander, go astray; O. H. G. irri, G. irre, astray.  $-\checkmark$  AR, to go, attain; cf. Skt. ri, to go, attain; whence, 'by means of a determinative, and as we may conjecture, a desiderative s, [the base] er-s was formed, with the fundamental meaning 'to go, to endeavour to arrive at, hence to err, Lat. errare, Goth. airz-jan, mod. G. irren ; ' Curtius, ii. 179. Cf. Skt. rish, to go.

Der. err-or, q. v.; errant, q. v.; erratum, q. v. ERRAND, a message. (E.) M.E. erende, erande, sometimes arende (always with one r); Layamon, 10057 .- A.S. &rende, a arende (always with one F); Layanon, 10057-A.S. arende, a message, business; Grein, i. 70. + Icel. eyrendi, örendi. + Swed. ärende; Dan. arende. + O. H. G. druwi, arandi, a message.  $\beta$ . The form is like that of a pres. participle; cf. tid-ings. The orig. sense was perhaps 'going;' from  $\checkmark$  AR, to go, move; cf. Skt. ri, to go, move. Fick (iii. 21, 30) separates this word from Goth. airus, Icel. airr, a messenger, and connects it with A.S. earu, Icel.  $\delta rr$ , swift, arendu Site arende a borne or the form of the root is plainly ready, Skt. arvant, a horse. y. The form of the root is plainly AR; but the sense remains uncertain. See Max Müller, Lect. i. 295, who takes it to be from ar, to plough, on the assumption that the sense of 'work' or 'business' was older than that of 'message'

ERRANT, wandering. (F., -L.) 'Of errant knights;' Spenser, F. Q. v. 6. 6. - O. F. errant, 'errant, wandering;' Cot. Pres. pt. of O F. errer, to wander - Low Lat. iterare, to travel. - Lat. iter, a journey. See Eyre. [+] ERRATUM, an error in writing or printing. (L.) Most common Lumby, p. 165) was displaced later by the F. escalade. -O. F. escalade, 'a scalado, a scaling;' Cot. -Span. escalado, properly escalada, an escalade; these are the masc. and fem. forms of the pp. of the verb escalar, to scale, climb. -Span. escala, a ladder. -Lat. scala, a ladder. See Scale (2).

ESCAPE, to flee away, evade. (F., -L.) M. E. escapen, Chaucer, C. T. 14650. -O. F. escaper, eschaper (F. échapper), to escape; cf. Low Lat. escapium, flight. - Lat. ex cappé, out of one's cape or cloak; to escape is to escape oneself, to slip out of one's cape, and get away. See Cape. In Italian, we not only have scappare, to escape, but also incappare, to 'in-cape,' to fall into a snare, to invest with a cape or cope; also incappucciare, to wrap up in a hood, to mask. Der. escapeate, an escape, from O. F. escapade, orig. an escape, from Ital. scappata, an escape, from for of scappare, to escape. Hence, later, the sense of 'escape from restraint.'

ESCARPMENT, a smooth and steep decline. (F.) A military term; the verb is generally scarp rather than escarp; see Scarp.

ESCHEAT, a forfeiture of property to the lord of the fee. (F., -L.) M. E. eschete, escheyte; 'I lese menye escheytes' - I (the king) lose many escheats; P. Plowman, C. v. 169. - O. F. eschet, that which falls to one, rent; a pp. form from the verb escheoir, to fall to one's share (F. échoir). - Low Lat. excadere, to fall upon, meet (any one), used A. D. 1229 (Ducange); from Lat. ex. out, and cadere, to fall. See Chance. Der. escheat, verb; and see Cheat.

EBCHEW, to shun, avoid. (F., -O. H. G.) M. E. eschewen, eschiwen; P. Plowman, C. ix. 51. -O. F. eschewer, 'to shun, eschew, avoid, bend from;' Cot. and Roquefort. -O. H. G. sciwhan, M. H. G. schiwhen, to frighten; also, intr. to fear, shy at. -O. H. G. and M. H. G. schiech, schick, mod. G. scheu, shy; cognate with E. shy. Thus eschew and shy (verb) are doublets. See Shy. [+]

EBCORT, a guide, guard. (F., - Ital., -L.) 'Escort, a convoy;' Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. -O. F. escorte, 'a guide, convoy;' Cot. - Ital. scorte, an escort, guide, aonvoy; fem. of pp. of scorgere, to see, perceive, guide. Formed as if from Lat. escorrigere, a compound of est and corrigere, to set right, correct; see Correct. Der. escort, verb. ¶ Similarly Ital. accorgere, to find out, answers to a Lat. ad-corrigere; see Diez.

ESCULEINT, eatable. (L.) 'Or any esculent, as the learned talk;' Massinger, New Way to Pay, Act iv. sc. 2. - Lat. esculentus, ht for eating - Lat. esc-are, to eat; with suffix -w len'us (cf. win-olentus from winum). - Lat. esca, food; put for ed-ca. - Lat. ed-ere, to eat, cognate with E. eat. See Eat.

ESCUTCHEON, a painted shield. (F., -L.) Spelt scutchion in Bacon, Essay 29 (ed. Wright, p. 129); scuchin, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 4. 16. - O. F. eccusson, 'a scutcheon,' Cot.; answering to a Low Lat. form scutionem, from a nom. scutio. The form scutio does not appear, but depends upon Lat. scutum, a shield, just as F. escusson does upon O. F. escu, a shield. See Esquire. Cf. Ital. scutone, a great shield, from scudoe, a shield; but note that the F. suffix on has a dimin. force, while the Ital. -one is augmentative. [+]

ESOPHAGUS, the food-passage, guilet. (L., -Gk.) Also asophagus. 'Oesophagus, the guilet; 'Kersey, ed. 1715. Oe op'agus is a Latinised form of Gk. olsophayos, the guilet. -Gk. olsophagus, I shall carry, used as a future from a base of. to carry, which is allied to Skt. vi, to go, to drive; and  $\phi a\gamma$ , base of  $\phi a\gamma civ,$  to cat. Hence asophagus = food-conveyer.

Etching, a kind 1674 .- Du. elsen, to etch (a borrowed word from German).-G. ätzen, to feed, bait, corrode, etch; this is a causal form, orig. signifying 'to make to eat' = M. H. G. azen, causal of M. H. G. ezzen, to eat, now spelt essen, which is cognate with E. eat. See Eat. ¶ The E. word may have been borrowed directly from the German, but that it passed through Holland on its way hither is far more likely. Der. etch-ing.

ETERNAL, everlasting. (F., -L.) M. E. eternal, Chaucer, C. T. 15502; also written eternel. -O. F. eternel. - Lat. æternalis, ETERNAL, everlasting. (F.,-L.) formed with suffix -alis from aternus, everlasting, contracted form of aviternus. Again, avi-ternus is formed, with suffix -ternus, indicating quality, from ævi-, put for ævo-, crude form of ævum, age. See Ago. Der. eternal-ly; from same source, eterni-ty = M. E. eternite, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. v. pr. 6, l. 4986, from F. eternité, which from Lat. acc. aternitatem; also etern-ise, from O. F. eterniser, 'to eternize;' Cotgrave. ¶ The Middle English also had eterne, Chaucer, C. T.

1992 ;= Lat. ælernus. ETHER, the clear upper air. (L.,=Gk.) In Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph. b. i. l. 86. [Milton has ethereal, ethereous, P. Der etymo-togy, spett ethimologie in The Remedie of Love, st. 60, pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 323, back (derived from F. etymologie, in Cotgrave, Lat. etymologia, Gk. ετυμολογία); etymolog-ise, spelt ethimologise, id. st. 62; etymo-log-ist; also etymo-logi-c-al-y. EU-, prefix, well. (Gk.) From Gk. ev, well; properly neut. of ties, good, put for an older form to-us, real, literally 'living' or 'being;' from AS, to be. ¶ From the same root are essence and sooth ; see Curtius, i. 460.

EUCHARIST, the Lord's supper. (L., - Gk.) Shortened from eucharistia, explained as 'thanks-geuyng' in Tyndale's Works, p. 467. col. 2. Cotgrave has: 'Eucharistia, the Eucharist.'- Lat. eucharistia. - Gk. evxapioria, a giving of thanks, the Eucharist. - Gk. eucharist-ic-al.

EULOGY, praise. (L., - Gk.) In Spenser, Tears of the Muses, 1. 372. Shortened from late Lat. eulogium, which was itself used at a later date, in the Tatler, no. 138. [Cf. O. F. euloge.] – Gk. evhor-ior, in classical Gk. evhoria, praise, lit. good speaking. – Gk. ev. well; and  $\lambda \epsilon \gamma \epsilon \nu$ , to speak. See Eu- and Logio. Der. eulog-ise, Fame. Der. euphon-ic, euphon-ic-al, euphoni-ous, euphoni-ous-ly. EUPHRASY, the plant eye bright. (Gk.) In Milton, P. L. xi. 414. [Cf. F. euphraise, eye bright; Cot] The eye-bright was called Euphrasia, and was supposed to be beneficial to the eyes. -Gk. εὐφρασία, delight. - Gk. εὐφραίνειν, to delight, cheer. - Gk. εὐ, well; and  $\phi \rho \epsilon \nu$ -, base of  $\phi \rho \eta \nu$ , the mind, orig. the midriff, heart.

EUPHUISM, affectation in speaking. (Gk.) So named from a book called Euphues, by John Lyly, first printed in 1579. – Gk.  $\epsilon \dot{\nu} \phi \nu \eta s$ , well-grown, goodly, excellent. – Gk.  $\epsilon \ddot{\nu}$ , well; and  $\phi \nu \eta$ , growth, from  $\phi \dot{\nu} \rho \mu a_i$ , I grow, from  $\checkmark$  BHU, to be. See Eu- and Be. Der. euphu-ist, euphu-ist-ic. EUROCLYDON, a tempestuous wind. (Gk.) In Acts. xxvii.

14.-Gk. εύροκλύδαν, apparently 'a storm from the East,' but there are various readings. As it stands, the word is from εύρο-s, the S. E. wind (Lat. Eurus), and albow, surge, from albseir, to surge, dash as waves. ¶ Another reading is ευρακύλων = Lat. Euro-Aquilo in the Vulgate.

EUTHANASIA, easy death. (Gk.) * Euthanasie, a happy death; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Gk. eibaraoía, an easy death; cf. eibáraros, dying well. - Gk. ev, well; and bareir, to die, on which see Curtius, ii. 163.

EVACUATE, to discharge. (L.) In Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 7.-Lat. evacuatus, pp. of evacuare, to discharge, empty out. - Lat. e, out ; and uacuus, empty. See Vacate. Der. evacuat-ion, evacuat-or.

EVADE, to shun, escape from. (F., -L.) In Shak. Oth. i. 1. 13. -F. evader, 'to evade;' Cot. - Lat. evadere, pp. evasus, to escape, get away from. - Lat. e, off; and vadere, to go. See Wade. Der. evas-ion, q. v., from pp. eurosus; also evas-ive, evas-ive-ly, evas-ive-ness. EVANESCENT, fading away. (L.) In Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731.-Lat. euanescent-, stem of pres. pt. of euanescere, to vanish away.-Lat. e, away; and uanescere, to vanish. See Vanish. Der. evanescence.

EVANGELIST, a writer of a gospel. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) In early use. Spelt ewangeliste, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 200. -O. F. evangeliste, 'an evangelist;' Cot.-Lat. evangelista.-Gk. εδαγγελιστήs. - Gk. εδαγγέλιον, a reward for good tidings; also, good tidings, gospel. - Gk. εδ, well; and ἀγγελία, tidings, from ἀγγελοs, a messenger. See Eu- and Angel. Der. (from Gk. evaγγέλ-ιον) evangel-ic, evangel-ic-al, evangel-ic-al-ly, evangel-ic-ism.

evangel-ise, evangel-is-al-ion. EVAPORATE, to fly off in vapour. (L.) The sb. evaporation is neut. of erupos, true, real, an extended form from ereos, true, real ; in Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 22. The verb is in Cotgrave, to translate F. evaporer. - Lat. evaporatus, pp. of evaporare, to dis- Helanch. p. 125 (R.) - Lat. evisceratus, pp. of eviscerare, to discussed perse in vapour. - Lat. e, away; and uapor, vapour. See Vapour. Der. evaporat-ion, evapora-ble.

EVASION, an excuse. (L.) In Sir T. More, Works, p. 693 c. -Lat. enasionem, acc. of enasio (Judith, xii. 20), an escape. - Lat. evasus, pp. of evadere ; see Evade. EVE, EVEN, the latter part of the day. (E.) Eve is short for even, by loss of final n; evening is from the same source, but is discussed below separately. M. E. eue, euen, both in Chaucer, C. T. 4993, 9890; the form eue occurs even earlier, Owl and Nightingale, 1. 41; the full form appears as efen, Ormulum, 1105; afen, Laya-mon, 26696. – A. S. afen, efen, Grein, i. 64. + O. Sax. ávand; O. Fries. avend. + Icel. aptan, aftan, + Swed. aftan; Dan. aften, + O. H. G. abant, M. H. G. abent, G. abend.  $\beta$ . Origin doubtful; yet these forms point to an early Germanic AFAN (Scand. aftan), clearly an extension from Goth. af, off (cf. O. H. G. abe, G. ab, E. of, off, Skt. apa). The Goth. afar, after, and E. after, are comparative forms from the same base. Thus even and after are related in form, and probably in meaning ; even probably meant 'decline' or 'end;' cf. Skt. apara, posterior, apara sandhya, evening twilight. The allusion is ¶ Not connected thus to the latter end of the day. See After. with even, adj. Der. even-song, Chaucer, C. T. 832; even-tide, Ancren Riwle, p. 404, = A. S. afen-tid, Grein; also even-ing, q. v.

EVEN, equal, level. (E.) M. E. even, evene; P. Plowman, C. The back, equal, level. (c.) At L. each, take, the first of the first Dor. even, adv., even-handed, &c., even-ly, even-ness.

EVENING, eve, the latter end of the day. (E.) M. E. evening, euenynge, Rob. of Glouc. p. 313. - A. S. efnung, Gen. viii. 11; put for defen-ung, and formed with suffix -ung (=mod. E. -ing) from dian, eve. See Eve. EVENT, circumstance, result. (L.) In Shak. L. L. L. i. 1. 245.-Lat. eventus, or eventum, an event.-Lat. eventus, pp. of eventure, to happen.-Lat. e, out; and uenire, to come. See Come. Der. event-ful; also event-u-al, event-u-al-ly (from eventu-s). EVER, continually. (E.) M. E. ever, evere (where u = v), Chaucer,

C. T. 834; afre, Ormulum, 206. - A. S. defre, Grein, i. 64. The ending re answers to the common A. S. ending of the dat. fem. sing. of adjectives, and has an adverbial force. The base def is clearly related to A.S. awa, ever, Goth. aiw, ever; which are based upon the sb. which appears as Goth. aiws, Lat. anum, Gk. alw, life. See Age, Aye. Der. ever-green, ever-lasting (Wyclif, Rom. vi. 22, 23), ever-lasting-ly, ever-lasting-ness; ever-more (Rob. of Glouc. p. 47);

also every, q. v.; every-where, q. v.; never, q. v. EVERY, each one. (E.) Lit. 'ever-each.' M. E. everi (with u=v) short for everich, Chaucer, C. T. 1853; other forms are evereile, Havelok, 1330; euero-il, id. 218; euer-ulc, Layamon, 2378; ever-alc, ever-sch, id. 4599. - A. S. áfre, ever; and ale, each (Scotch ilk). See Ever and Elach.

EVERYWHERE, in every place. (E.) Spelt everihwar, Ancren Riwle, p. 200; eauer ihwer, Legend of St. Katharine, 681. Com-pounded of euer (A. S. &fre), and M. E. ihwar (A. S. gehwar, everywhere, Grein, i. 415). B. Thus the word is not compounded of every and where, but of ever and ywhere, where ywhere = A.S. gekwar, a word formed by prefixing A.S. ge to hwar, where. Similarly we find ayukere = everywhere (lit. aye-where) in Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, ii. 228. ¶ Of course it has long been regarded as = every-where, though its real force is ever-where.

EVICT, to evince, to dispossess. (L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. That this deliverance might be the better evicted,' i.e. evinced; Bp. Hall, Contemplations, b. iv. c. xix. sect. 25.-Lat. evictus, pp. of evincere. See Evince. Der. evict-ion.

EVIDENT, manifest. (F., -L.) Chaucer has evidently (with w =v), Treat. on the Astrolabe, pt. ii. sect. 23, rubric; and euidences, pl. sb., id. prol. l. 2. - O. F. evident, 'evident;' Cot. - Lat. evident-, stem of euidens, visible, pres. pt. of euidere, to see clearly.-Lat. e, out, clearly; and uidere, to see; see Vision. Der. evident-ly, evidence (O. F. evidence).

EVIL, wicked, bad. (E.) M. E. evel (with u = v), evil; also ivel, Havelok, 114; ifel, Ormulum, 1742; vuel (for uvel), Ancren Riwle, p. 52. - A. S. yfel, Grein, ii. 768; whence also yfel, sb. an evil. + Du. ewel. + O. H. G. upil, M. H. G. ubel, G. ubel. + Goth. ubils. Root unknown. ¶ Related to Gk. 68pes, insult (from intep?). Der. evil, sb.; evil-ly; evil-doer, &c. Doublet, ill, which is Scandinavian; see III.

EVINCE, to prove beyond doubt. (L.) In Dryden, Hind and Panther, ii. 190, 333. - Lat. ewincere, to overcome. - Lat. e, fully; and wincere, to conquer. See Victor. ¶ Older word, evict, q. v. wincere, to conquer. See Victor. ¶ Older word, evict, q.v. exasterare, to roughen, provoke. - Lat. ex; and asper, rough. EVISCERATE, to disembowel. (L.) FAIR (1), pleasing, beautiful. (E.) M. E. fair, fayr, Chaucer, prol. 575; fayer, Ormulum, 6392 - A.S. fæger, Grein, i. 269. + lccl. fagr. + Dan. feir. + Swed. fager. + Goth. fagrs, fit; used to tr. Gk. évêror in Lu. xiv. 35. + O. H. G. fagar. + Gk. styrós, firm, strong. -  $\checkmark$  PAK, to bind, fasten; whence also E. Pact, q.v. And see Fadge, Fain, Fang. Der. fair-ly, fair-ness.

FAIR (2), a festival, holiday, market. (F., -L.) M. E. feire, feyre; Chaucer, C. T. 5803. - O. F. feire; F. foire. - Lat. feria, a holiday; in late Lat. a fair; commoner in the pl. feria. Feria is for fes ice, feast-days; from the same root as Feast and Festal.

FAIRY, a supernatural being. (F., -L.) M.E. faerie, fairye, fairy, 'enchantment;' P. Plowman, B. prol. 6; Chaucer, C. T. 6441, M. E. faerie, fairye, 6454. [The modern use of the word is improper; the right word for the elf being fay. The mistake was made long ago; and fully established before Shakespeare's time.] - O. F. faerie, enchantment.

-O. F. fae (F. fée), a fairy; see Fay. Der. fairy, adj. FAITH, belief. (F. - L.) The final -th answers to -d in O. F. feid, the change to the being made to render it analogous in form with truth, ruth, wealth, health, and other similar sbs.  $\beta$ . M. E. feib, feith, ruth, wealth, health, and other similar sbs.  $\beta$ . M. E. feib, feith, feyth; as well as fey. The earliest example of the spelling feyth is perhaps in Havelok, 1. 2853; fey occurs in the same poem, 11. 255, 1666. - O. F. fei, feid; also foi, foit. - Lat. fidem, acc. of fides, faith + Gk. wiorus, faith; weideux, to persuade; wiwowa, I trust.  $- \sqrt{BHIDH}$ , to unite; weakened from  $\sqrt{BHADH}$ , fuller form & BHANDH, to bind. See Bind. See Curtius, i. 325. Der. faith-ful, faith-ful-ly, faith-ful-ness; faith-less, faith-less-ly, faith-less-ness. From the same root are fid-el-i-ty, af-fi-ance, con-fide, de-fy, dif-fid-ent,

From the same root are parter by, approace, compute, any a grant of perfid-y. [1] FALCHION, a bent sword. (Ital., -Low Lat.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 618. [M. E. fauchon, P. Plowman, C. xvii. 169; directly from F. fauchon, 'a faulchion;' Cot.] - Ital. falcione, a scimetar. - Low Lat. falcionem, acc. of falcio, a sickle-shaped sword. -Lat. falci-, crude form of falz, a sickle. + Gk.  $\phi a \lambda m$ , the rib of a ship; polade, bow-legged; impalade, I clasp round; Curtius, i. 207. I The word may have been really taken from the F. fauchon, and afterwards altered to falchion by the influence of the Ital. or Low Lat. form. Der. from Lat. falx are also falc on, de-falc-ate.

FALCON, a bird of prey. (F, -L.) M. E. faukon, King Ali-saunder, 567; faucon, Chaucer, C. T. 10725. –O. F. faulcon, 'a fau-kon;' Cot. – Late Lat. falcourn, acc. of falco, a falcon; so called from the hooked shape of the claws. 'Falcones dicuntur, quorum digiti pollices in pedibus intro sunt curuati;' Festus, p. 88; qu. in White and Riddle. That is, falco is derived from falc-, stem of falz, a sickle; see above. Der. falcon-er; falcon-ry, from O. F. faulcon-nerie, 'a faulconry;' Cot FALDSTOOL, a folding-stool. (Low Lat., -O. H. G.) Now applied to a low desk at which the litany is said; but formerly to a folding-stool or portable seat. 'Faldstool, a stool placed at the S. side of the altar, at which the kings of England kneel at their coroy. Diez further in nation;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. He also has: 'Faldistory, the episcopal seat within the chancel." [Not E., but borrowed from Low Lat ]-Low Lat. faldistolium, also faldistorium (corruptly), a faldstool. - O. H. G. faldan (G. falten), to fold; and stual, stool (G. stukl), a chair, seat, throne. See Fold and Stool. _ ¶ Had the word been native, it would have been fold-stool. See Fauteuil.

FALL, to drop down. (E.) M. E. fallen, Chaucer, C. T. 2664. -O. Northumbrian fallan, Lu. x. 18; the A. S. form being feallan. + Du. vallon. + Icel. falla. + Dan. falde (with excrescent d). + Swed. falla + G. fallen. + Lat. fallere, to deceive : falli, to err. + Gk. σφίλ-Asur, to cause to fall, trip up ; σφάλμα, a slip. + Skt. sphal, sphul, to tremble. - & SPAL, older form SPAR, to fall. See Fick, i. 253. • The aspirate in Greek and Skt., the spirant in Lat. are developed from a p; hence spal is to be assumed as the primitive form, so that thus the f in German, after the loss of the s, is explained ;' Curtius, 1. 46<sup>6</sup>. Der. fall, sb. ; and see fell, fail. FALLACY, a deceptive appearance, error in argument. (F., -L.)

In Shak, Errors, ii. 2, 188. A manipulated word, due to the addition of -y to M. E fallace or fallas; in order to bring it near to the Lat. form. M. E. fallace, fallas; once common; see P. Plowman, C. xii. 22, and the note; also Gower, C. A. ii. 85.-F. fallace, 'a fallacy; 'Cot. = Lat. fallacia, deceit. = Lat. fallaci, crude form of fallax, deceptive. = Lat. fallare, to deceive; see Fail. Der. fallacious, Milton, P. L. ii. 568; fallaci-ous-ly, fal'aci ous-ness; see below.

FALLIBLE, liable to error. (L.) In Shak. Meas. iii. 1. 170. Low Lat. fallibilis .- Lat fallere, to deceive, falli, to err; see Fail.

Dor. fallibly; fallibli-i-ty. FALLOW, pale yellow; unsown. (E.) Sometimes applied to a reddish colour. The meaning 'unsown' is a mere E. development, and refers to the reddish colour of ploughed land. In Layamon, l. 27468, we have 'ueldes falewe wurden' = the fields became red-withblood; in the description of a battle. – A. S. fealu, fealo, yellowish; Grein, i. 286. + Du. vaal, fallow, faded. + Icel. fölr, pale. + O. H. G. valo, M. H. G. val, G. fahl, pale, faded; also G. falb, id. + Lat. *pal*lidus, pale. + Gk. nohios, gray. + Skt. palita. gray. B. The G. fal-b as compared with fal (fakl), shews that fall-ow is an extension of fal-- pal- in pale. See Pale. Der. fallow, sb. and verb; fallow-derr. FALSE, untrue, deceptive. (F., -L.) M. E. fals, Chaucer, C. T. 1580; earlier, in O. Eng. Homilies, 15t Ser. p. 185, 1, 16. - O. F. fals (F. faux) .- Lat. falsus; false; pp. of fallere, to deceive; see Fail. Der. false-ly, false-ness, false-hood (spelt falshede in Chaucer, C. T. 16519); fals-i-fy, I Hen. IV, i. 2. 235; fals-i-fic-at-ion, fals-i-fi-er, fals-i-ty; also falsetto, from Ital. falsetto, treble; also faucet, q. v.

FALTER, to totter, stammer. (F., -L.) M. E. falteren, faltren. 'Thy limmes faltren ay' = thy limbs ever tremble with weakness;' Chaucer, C. T. 5192. 'And nawber faltered ne fel' = and he neither gave way nor fell; Gawayne and the Grene Knight, 430. Formed from a base fall-, with frequentative suffix -er. = O. F. falter \*, to fail, be deficient, not recorded. Yet it occurs in Port. and Span. faltar, to be deficient, Ital. faltare, to be deficient ; and is well represented in F. by the verbal sb. falte, a fault, answering to Port., Span., and Ital. falca, want, lack, defect, fault; so that to falter is merely 'to be at fault.' See Fault. ¶ Observe that O. F. falter would only be at fault. See Fault. ¶ Observe that O. F. falter would only give a M. E. form falt-en; the -er- in M. E. falt-er-en is an E. addition, to give the word a frequentative force; cf. the -le in stumb-le, and the -er in stamm-er, stutt-er. The old sense of to 'stumble,' to 'miss one's footing,' occurs late; 'his legges hath folired' = the horse's legs have given way; Sir T. Elyot, The Gouernour, b. i. c. 17 (in fam-ous, Gower, C. A. ii. 366; fam-ous-ly. FAMILY, a household.  $(F_{.,-}L)$  In Shak. Oth. i. 1. 84. [Modified from F. so as to bring it nearer the Latin.] – F. famille, 'a family, household;' Cot. - Lat. familia, a household. - Lat. famulus, a servant; Oscan famel, a servant (White); supposed to be from Oscan faama, a house; Curtius, i. 315. Cf. Skt. dkiman, an abode, house; from  $dk\dot{a}$ , to place, set.  $-\checkmark$  DHA, to place. Der. familiar (from Lat. familiaris), also found in M. E. in the form famuler, familier (from O.F. familier), Chaucer, C.T. prol. 215; famili-ar-i-ty, famili-ar-ise.

FAMINE, severe hunger. (F., -L.) M. E. famine, famyn; Chaucer, C. T. 12385. - F. famine. - Low Lat. famina\*, unrecorded, but evidently a barbarous derivative from Lat. fames, hunger. B. The connection is probably with Skt. háni, privation, want, from há, to leave, abandon, and with Gk.  $\chi \hat{\eta} \rho o s$ , bereft, empty; from  $\checkmark$  GHA, to gape, yawn. See Curtius, i. 247. Der. fam-ish, Merch. of Ven. ii. 2. 113; formed with suffix -ish by analogy with langu-ish, demol-ish, and the like, from the base fam- in O. F. a-fam-er, later affamer, to famish. This base fam- is from Lat. fam-es, hunger (F. faim).

FAN, an instrument for blowing. (L.) Used by Chaucer to de-scribe a quintain; C. T. 16991. – A. S. fann; Matt. iii. 12. Not a native word, but borrowed from Latin (possibly through F. van).-Lat. uannus, a fan; put for ual-nus, just as penna = pel-na; cf. Skt. váta, wind, vátya, a gale, from vá, to blow. - V WA, to blow. See Wind. Der. fan, verb; fann-er, fan-light, fan-palm.

FANATIC, religiously insane. (F., - L.) 'Fanatick Egypt;' Milton, P. L. i. 480. - F. fanatique, 'mad, frantick ;' Cot. - Lat. fanaticus, (1) belonging to a temple, (2) inspired by a divinity, filled with enthusiasm. - Lat. fanum, a temple ; see Fano. Der. fanatic-al, fa-¶ On this word see a passage in Fuller, natic-al-ly, fanatic-ism. Mixt Contemplations on these Times, § 50 (Trench).

FANCY, imagination, whim. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 123; v. 50. A corruption of the fuller form fontasy, Merry Wives, v. 5, 55. M. E. fontasie, Chaucer, C. T. 6098; P. Plowman, A. prol. 36. -O. F. fontasie, 'the fancy, or fantasie;' Cot. - Low Lat. fon-tasia, or phantasia. - Gk. parraola, a making visible, imagination. -Gk. partageir, to make visible; extended from paireir, to bring to light, shine; cf. φάσε, light, φάε, he appeared. + Skt. bki, to shine. - A BHA, to shine. Der. fancy, verb; fanci-ful. Doublet, fantasy (obsolete); whence fantastic (Gk. oartastic), fantastic-al, fantasticfanfarria, bluster, loud vaunting. - Arab. farfár, loquacious; a word of onomatopoetic origin; Rich. Dict., p. 1083. Der. fanfarr-on-ade. from F. fanfarronade, which from Span. fanfarronada, bluster, boasting; from Span. fanfarron, blustering, fanfarroar, to hector, bluster, boast.

FANG, a tusk, claw, talon. (E.) In Shak. K. John, ii. 353. The M. E. fong is only used in the sense of 'a thing caught, prey;' see Stratmann. So also A. S. fang = a taking ; A.S. Chron. an. 1016. However the sb. is derived from the verb. - A. S. fangan *, to seize, only in use in the contracted form fon, of which the pt. t. is feng, and the pp. gefangen or gefongen. + Du. vangen, to catch. + Icel. fa, to pp: source of the second seco FANTASY, FANTASTIC; see Fanoy.

F. fureter, 'to ferret, search, hunt;' Cot. [†] FERRET (2), a kind of silk tape. (Ital., -L.) 'When perch-mentiers [parchment-sellers?] put in no ferret-silke;' Gascoigne, Steel Glass, 1095. [Also called floret-silk, which is the Frenck form; from O. F. fleuret, 'floret silk;' Cot.] Corrupted from Ital. foretto, 'a flowret or little flower; also course [coarse] ferret silke; also flower-work upon lace or embroidery; 'Florio. - Ital. fore, a flower; with dimin suffix -etto. - Lat. florem, acc. of flos, a flower. See Flower.  $\P$  Apparently named from some flowering-work upon it. The O. F. fleuret is, similarly, the dimin. of F. fleur, a flower. The Ital. change of l to i accounts for the E. form.

FERRUGINOUS, rusty. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.-Lat. ferruginus, shorter form of ferrugineus, rusty. - Lat. ferrugine, stem of ferrugo, rust; formed from Lat. ferrum, iron, just as ærugo, rust of brass, is formed from as (gen. ar-is), brass. See above.

FERRULE, a metal ring at the end of a stick. (F., -L.) An accommodated spelling, due to confusion with Lat. ferrum, iron. Formerly verril. 'Verrel, Verril, a little brass or iron ring at the small end of a cane; ' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. And so spelt in Sherwood's index to Cotgrave. - O. F. virole, 'an iron ring put about the end of a staff,' &c.; Cot. - Low Lat. virola, a ring to bind anything ; = Lat. wiriola, a little bracelet. - Lat. wiria, a bracelet, armlet. -Lat. viere, to twist, bind round ; cf. Lat. witta, a band, fillet .-

F. fertile, 'fertile;' Cot.-Lat. fertilis, fruitful.-Lat. ferre, to bear; cognate with E. bear. Sce Bear. Der. fertil-iey, fertil-ie.

FERULE, a rod (or bat) for punishing children. (L.) Formerly spelt ferula; misprinted ferular in the old ed. of Milton's Areopawhip. = Lat. ferire, to strike. + Icel. berja, to strike. Perhaps from ✓ BHAR, to strike (Fick).

FERVENT, heated, ardent, zealous. (F., - L.) M. E. fervent (with u=v). Chaucer has feruently, Troilus, iv. 1384.-O. F. fervent, fervent, hot ;' Cot. - Lat. fervent-, stem of pres. pt. of fervere, to boil. - Lat. base fru- (found in de-fru-tum, must boiled down), cognate with E. brew. See Brew. Der. fervent-ly, fervenc-y; also ferv-id, Milton, P. L. v. 301, from Lat. fervidus, which from fervere ; ferv-id-y, ferv-id-ness ; ferv-2ur, Wyclif, Deut. xxix. 20, from O. F. fervor, ferveur = Lat. ferworem, acc. of ferwor, heat ; also fer-ment, q. v., ef-fervesce, q. v. FESTAL, belonging to a feast. (L.) A late word. In Johnson's Dict. Apparently a mere coinage, by adding -al to stem of Lat. fest-um, a feast. Generally derived from O. F. festal, only given by Roquefort; but the word is much too late for such a borrowing.

See Feast. ¶ Or possibly a mere shortening of festival, q. v. FESTER, to rankle. (E.?) M. E. festeren. 'So festered aren hus wondes' = so festered are his wounds; P. Plowman, C. xx. 83. Etym. doubtful. In Lye's A.S. Dict. we find : 'Festrud, fostered, nutritus; festrud beon, nutriri; Scint. 81.' The reference does not seem to be right; but it is quite possible that festered is nothing but a peculiar form and use of fostered. The spelling fester for foster in A. S. is not TESTIVAL, a feast-day. (F., - Low L.) Properly an adj. 'With drapets festival;' Spenser, F. Q. ii. 9. 27. - O. F. festival, festive; also, as sb. a festival; Roquefort. - Low Lat. festivalis; formed, with suffix -alis, from Lat. festions; see below.

FESTIVE, festal. (L.) Modern ; see Todd's Johnson. - Lat. festivus, festive. - Lat. festum. See Feast. Der. festive-ly, festive-i-y. FESTOON, an ornament, garland. (F., -L.) 'The festions, friezes, and the astragals; ' Dryden. Art of Poetry, 56. - F. feston, a ferocinus ness. FERREOUS, made of iron., (L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 3. § 4. - Lat. ferreus (by change of -us to -ous, as in but a connection with Low Lat. fessies = 0. E. fecchen, pt. t. felle, pp. fel; 283, 398; pp. fetod. - A. S. feet, a pace, step, journey; Grein, i. 273. Cf. Icel. fe:a, to find one's way; Icel. fet, a step, pace. Connected with Foot, q. v.  $\rightarrow \checkmark$  PAD, to seize, go; see Fick, i. 135, iii. 171. Q Cf. also Dan. fatte, Du. vattern, to catch, take; G. fassen, to seize; from the same Teutonic base FAT; see Fit (1). The notions of 'seizing' and 'advancing' seem to be mixed up in this root. The orig. notion seems to be 'to go to find,' or 'go for.' Der. fetch, used by Shak. to mean 'a stratagem;' Hamlet, ii. 1. 38.

FETE, a festival. (F., -L.) Modern. -F. fote = O. F. feste, a feast. See Foast.

FETICH, FETISH, an object of superstitious worship. (F.,-Port., = L.) Modern; not in Johnson. = F. fétiche. = Port. feitico. sorcery; also a name given by the Portuguese to the roughly made idols of W. Africa. - Port. feitigo, artificial. - Lat. factitius. See Factitious. Der. fetick-ism.

FETID, stinking. (F.,-L.) In Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 481.-O. F. fetide, 'stinking;' Cot.-Lat. fetidus, fatidus, stinking.-Lat. faztere, to stink; cf. suffire (= sub-fire), to fumigate; fumus, smoke. From the same root as Fume, q.v. Der. feid-ness. FETLOCK, the part of the leg (in a horse) where the tuft of hair grows behind the pastern-joint. (Scand.) Orig. the tuft itself. Feilock, or fetterlock, the hair that grows behind on a horse's feet; The pl. is spelt feellakkes in Rich. Coer de Lion, 5816; and Kersey. filokes in Arthur and Merlin, 5903. Of Scand. origin; the difficulty is to determine the precise sense of the former syllable; the latter is the same as our 'lock 'of hair, viz. Icel, lokkr, A. S. locc. B. In connection with fet- we find Icel. fet, a pace, step, feti, a pacer, stepper (used of horses), feia, to step, as if the feilock were the lock displayed in stepping; cf. Swed. fjüt, Dan. fied, a foot-print, footstep, track. But there is also Icel. feii, a strand in the thread of a warp, Dan. fed, fid, a skein; as if there were an allusion to the tangled end of a skein, as suggested by Mr. Wedgwood. Again, there is also Icel. fit, the webbed foot of waterbirds, the web or skin of the feet of animals, the edge or hem of a sock. y. But all these words seem to be ultimately related, and to be further connected with both foot and fetter, the root being PAD, to seize, go : see Fetter, Fetch, Foot.

FETTER, a shackle. (E.) Orig. a shackle for the foot. M. E. feer, Chaucer, C. T. 128. - A. S. fetor, feter, Grein, i. 283. + Du. seter, lace; orig. a fetter. + Icel. fjöturr. + Swed. fjättrar, pl. fetters. +G. fessel.+Lat. pedica; also com-pes (gen. com-ped-is), a fetter.+Gk. viôn, a fetter. + Skt. páduká, a shoe. All from the base PAD, a foot. See Foot.

FETUS, offspring, the young in the womb. (L.) Modern; in Johnson's Dict.-Lat. fetus, a bringing forth, offspring.-Lat. fetus, iruitful, that has brought forth. - Lat. fewere\*, an obsolete verb, to generate, produce; related to fu- in fui, I was, and in fu-turus, future. + Gk.  $\phi v e_i v$ , to beget :  $\phi v e \sigma \sigma a_i$ , to grow ; whence  $\phi v \tau c a_i$  grown. + Skt. b h u, to become, be. + A. S. beon, to be. -  $\checkmark$  BHU, to exist. See Bo. Der. (from the same root) fe-cundity, q. v.; fe-line, q. v.; felicity, q. v.; also ef-fele, faum (2). FEUD (1), revenge, hatred. (E.) In Shak. Troil. iv. 5. 132. Modified in spelling, by confusion with the word below. M. E. fade (a Northern form), Wallace, i. 334.-A. S. fakö, enmity, hatred (very common); Grein, i. 275.-A. S. fak, hostile; whence mod. E. FOO, q. v. + G. fehde, hatred. + Goth. fijathwa, hatred. Curtius compares (but wrongly?) the Gk. wwoos, bitter, Lithuanian pyski, to be angry; Curtius, i. 201. [+]

FEUD (2), a fief; FEUDAL, pertaining to a fief. (Low L., Scand.?) In Blackstone's Commentaries, b. ii. c. 4; and see Fee in Blount's Law Dict. - Low Lat. feudum, a fief; very common, but perhaps shortened from the adj., and due to a mistake, viz. the regarding of the -al in the Icel. words as being equivalent to the Lat. adj. suffix -alis. - Low Lat. feudalis, 'a vassal,' wrongly made into an adjective, with the sense of 'feudal.' - Icel. fé-óbal (?), an obal held as a fee or fief from the king; not a true Icel. compound, but both parts are significant. - Icel. fe, a fee or fief; and 68al, patrimony, property held in allodial tenure. See further under Fief, and Allodial. Der. feudal (really the parent of feud); feudal-ism, feud-al-or-y. [*] FEVER, a kind of disease. (F., -L.) M. E. feuer (with u for

S. fivele, only in the deriv. fibelere, a fiddler, in a copy of Ælfric's Glossary (Bosworth); cf. Icel. fiðla, a fiddle, fiðlari, a fiddler; Dan. fiddel; Du. vedel; G. fiedel (O. H. G. fidula). β. Of uncertain origin, but probably the same word as Low Lat. vidula, vitula, a viol, fiddle; a word presumably of Lat. origin. See Viol. FIDELITY, faithfulness. (F., -L.) In Shak. Mer. Wives, iv. 2. 160. - F. fidelite, 'fidelity;' Cot. - Lat. fidelitarem, acc. of fidelitas. - Lat. fidelis, faithful. - Lat. fides, faith. See Faith.

FIDGET, to be restless, move uneasily. (Scand.) In Boswell's Life of Johnson (Todd's Johnson). A dimin. form of fidge. 'Fidge about, to be continually moving up and down; 'Kersey, ed. 1715. Fidge is a weakened form of the North E. fick or fike. 'Fike. fyke, feik, to be in a restless state; 'Jamieson. M.E. fiken, Prompt. 'The Sarezynes fielde, away gunne fyke' = the Saracins fled, and away did hasten ; used in contempt ; Rich. Coer de Lion, 4749 - Icel. fika, to climb up nimbly, as a spider. + Swed. fika, fikas, to hunt after; and see fika in Rietz. + Norw. fika, to take trouble; fika etter, to pursue, hasten after; Aasen. ¶ Perhaps fick-le is from this base fik-. Der. fidget, sb., fidget-y, fidget-inness. FIDUCIAL, showing trust. (L.) Rare; see Rich. Dict. 'Fidu-ciary, a feoffee in trust; 'Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Both words are from Lat. fiducia, trust. - Lat. fidere, to trust. See Faith. FIE, an interjection of disgust. (Scand.) M. E. fy, Chaucer, C. T.

FIE, an interjection of disgust. (Scand), i.e. 20, y, 4500; 'fy for shame;' id. 14807; Will. of Palerne, 481. - Icel. fy, fe; Dan. fy, also fy skam dig, fie for shame; Swed. fy, also fy skam, fie for shame. Hence perhaps O. F. fi, fy, fye; Cot. We find simifie for shame. Hence perhaps O. F. fi, fy, fye; Cot. We find similar forms in the G. pfui, Lat. phui, phy, Skt. phut, natural expressions of disgust, due to the sound of blowing away.

FIEF, land held of a superior. (F., -Low L. -Scand.?) In Dryden, On Mrs. Killigrew, 1. 98. The M. E. vb. feffen, to enfeoff, is common; see Chaucer, C. T. 9572; P. Plowman, B. ii. 78, 146. O. F. fief, spelt fied in the 11th century (Brachet). - Low Lat. feudum, property held in fee. See Foud. ¶ Feudum is generally derived from O. H. G. fiku, the same word as our fee; see Fee. Thus Littré cites O. H. G. fihu, feho, possessions, goods, cattle, without explaining the final d. Burguy looks on feu-d-um as having an intercalated d. Possibly the final f in fie-f and the d in feu-d-um are alike due to the  $\delta$  in Icel.  $\delta dal$ ; see Foud. This Icel. word certainly exists in the word allodial; and this throws some light upon feud and fief. The Scandinavian influence upon F. (and even upon O. H. G.) has been somewhat overlooked. Thus fief is not merely 'fee,' but 'paternal fee.' See Allodial. [\*]

FIELD, an open space of land. (E.) M. E. feld, Chaucer, C. T. 888.-A. S. feld; Grein. + Du. veld. + Dan felt. + Swed. fält. + G. feld. Cf. Russ. pold, a field. Root uncertain; but we may consider E. fell, a hill, as being a mere variety of the same word; see Fell (4). Der. field-day, field-marskal, &c. FIELDFARE, a kind of bird. (E.) M. E. feldefare, Chaucer, Troil. iii. tót; feldfare, Will. of Palerne, 183. - A. S. feldefare, Wright's Vocab. i. 63, l. 27. There is also an A. S. feela-for, turdus pilaris (in a gloss); Bosworth. - A. S. feld, a field; and faran, to fare, " travel over. The A. S. felo-for is, similarly, from fealo, fealu, reddish, yellowish, also fallow-land; and faran, to fare, travel. The sense is, in the latter case, 'fallow, and Fare, a traverser of the fallow-fields. See Field, Fallow, and Fare, ¶ The two names, accordingly, express much the same thing. FILEND, an enemy. (E.) M. E. fend, Chaucer, C. T. 7256; earlier foord, Layamon, 1. 237.-A. S. fedind, fiond, an enemy, the pres. pt. of fedin, form of fedgan, to bate; Grein, i. 294, 295. + Du. vijand, an enemy. + Dan. and Swed, fiende. + "to work with a sharp tool;"' Curtius, i 202. Cf. B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, iv. 4. - Lat. figmentum, a fiction; formed (with suffix -mentum) from the base FIG of fi(n)gere, to feign. See below; and see Fiction, Feign.

ef-fig-y, dis-figure, trans-figure; also dike, dough; perhaps la-dy. FILAMENT, a slender thread. (F., = L.) In Cotgrave, to translate F. filamen. = O. F. filamens, 'filaments;' Cot. [The t was added by analogy with other words in -ment.] Formed as if from Lat. filamentum (with suffix -mentum) from Low Lat. filare, to wind thread. - Lat. filum, a thread; see File (1). FILBERT, the fruit of the hazel. (F., -O. H. G.) Formerly spelt philibert or philiberd. 'The Philibert that loves the vale; Peacham's Emblems, ed. 1612 (R.) Gower has: 'That Phillis in the same throwe Was shape into a nutte-tre... And, after Phillis, philliberd This tre was cleped in the yerd; 'C. A. ii. 30. [This is an allusion to the story of Phyllis and Demophon in Ovid, and of course does not account for the word, as it takes no notice of the last syllable.] β. Philliberd is clearly put for 'philiberd nut,' and the word is a proper name. We have no sufficient evidence to shew from whom the nut was named. A common story is that it was so named after Philibert, king of France, but there was no such king. Cotgrave has: 'Philibert, a proper name for a man; and particularly the name of a certain Bourgonian [Burgundian] saint; whereof chaine de S. Philibert, a kind of counterfeit chain.' Perhaps the nut too was named after St. Philibert, whose name also passed into a proverb in another connection. St. Philibert's day is Aug. 22 (Old Style), just the nutting season. The name is Frankish.-O. H. G. fili-bert, i. e. very bright; from fili (G. viel), much, very; and bert = berht, bright, cognate with E. bright. See Hist. of Christian Names, by Miss Yonge, ii. 231; where, however, fili- is equated to wille (will) by a mistake. ¶ Similarly, a filbert is called in German Lambertsnuss = Lambert's nut ; St. Lambert's day is Sept. 17. FILCH, to steal, piller. (Scand.) Rob. of Brunne has filehid = stolen; tr. of Langtoft, p. 282. Filek stands for fil-k, (cf. smir-k, smile, stal-k from steal). where k is a formative addition. Fil- represents M. E. felen, to hide; not very uncommon, and still in use pro-vincially; see Feal in Halliwell. 'For to fele me for ferde' = to Flame.

FLAME, a blaze, warmth. (F., -L.) In Chaucer, C. T. 15983. O. F. flame, flamme; whence a secondary form flambe, flamble. - Lat. flamma, a flame; with dimin. flammula = O. F. flamble. Lat. flamma = flag-ma, from the base flag-, to burn; see Flagrant. Der. fame, verb. fam-ing; fambeau, q. v.; famingo, q. v. FILAMEIN, a priest of ancient Rome. (L.) In Mandeville's

Travels, p. 142; spelt flamyn.-Lat. flämen, a priest. ¶ Perhaps for flagmen=he who burns the sacrifice; see Flagrant. FLAMINGO, a bright red bird. (Span.,-L.) In Sir T. Her-bert's Travels, ed. 1665; p. 403.-Span. flamenco, a flamingo; so called from the colour.-Span. flama, a flame.-Lat. flamma; see Flame. [*]

FLANGE, a projecting rim. (F.,-L.) A modern form, conretrievent, a projecting rim. (r, -L.) A modern form, connected with prov. E. flarge, to project out; Halliwell. Again, flarge is a corruption of prov. E. flark, a projection; id. And again, flanch is a weakened form of flark. Cf. O. F. flanchere, 'a flanker, side peece; 'Cot. See Flank. FLANK, the side. (F, -L.) M.E. flark, King Alisaunder, 3745.-O. F. (and F.) flanc, side; lit. the 'weak part' of the body. [So G. weiche = softness; also, the flank, side.] - Lat. flaceus, soft, weak: with inserted a sin inselling from inculatorem connected [50 G. werene = sonness; also, the name, side.] - Lat. flacewa, solt, weak; with inserted n as in jongleur from joculatorem, concombre from eucomerem (Diez). See Flacotid. Der. flank, verb; flange, q. v. FLANNEL, a woollen substance. (Welsh.) 'The Welsh flannel;' Merry Wives, v. 5, 172. Prov. E. flanken, a more correct form. - W. gwlanen, flannel; from gwlan, wool. The W. gwlan is cognate with E. wool; Rhys, Lect. on W. Philology, p. 10. See Wool.

FLAP, to strike or beat with the wings, &c. (E.) M. E. flappen, P. Plowman, B. vi. 187. Also  $f_{ab}$ , sb., a blow, stroke, id. B. xiii. 67. Not found in A. S. + Du. flappen, to flap; flap, a stroke, blow, box on the ear.  $\beta$ . A variant of flack, to beat, M.E. flakken. to pal-pitate; see Flag(1). Cf. Lat. plaga, a stroke, blow; see Plague. Der. flap, sb.; flapp-er. FLARE, to burn brightly, blaze, glare. (Scand.) In Shak. Merry Wives, iv. 6. 62. Not in early use in E. (unless flayre = flame in Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 772); of Scand. origin. Cf. Norweg. flara, to blaze, flame, adom with tinsel; flar, tinsel, show; Aasen. Here (as in blare, q. v.) the r stands for an older s; and the older form appears in Swed. dial. flasa, to burn furiously, to blaze; whence Swed. dial. flora upp, to 'flare up,' blaze up suddenly; also flossa up, to blaze up, flash or flush up (Rietz). See Flash, Flush. [+] FLASH, to blaze suddenly. (Scand.) In Shak. Timon, ii. 1. 32;

The flagellation; flagellant, from Lat flagellant, base of pres. pt. of flagellare; also fail, q. v.; and perhaps flog. FLAGEOLET, a sort of flute. (F., -L.) Spelt flagellate in Hudibras, c. ii. pt. ii. l. 610. -O. F. flageolet, 'a pipe, whistle, flute;' Cot. Dimin. (with suffix -et) of O. F. flageol, with the same sense; id. -Low Lat. flawtiolus\*, not found, but a dimin. from  $\frac{1}{2}$  P. 314; but this is not the same word; cf. Swed. flakta, to flutter.

FLASE, a kind of bottle. (Low L.?) In Shak. Romeo, iii. 3.<sup>(1)</sup> 16966. – A. S. fled (the form usually given in Dictt.); spelt fleo, as a 132. – A. S. flac, whence by metathesis, the form flacs, written flax, gloss to pulex, in Somner's ed. of A:If. Gloss., Nomina Insectorum. + T his change of sc to cs or x is common in A. S.; as in ascian – assian = assian = ass 132. - A. S. flase, whence by metathesis, the form flacs, written flax. T his change of se to es or x is common in A. S. ; as in aseian - aesian - azian ; mod. E. to ask and prov. E. to ax.] 'Twe fatu, on folcisc faxon gehátene' = two vessels, vulgarly called flasks; Gregory's Dialogues, i. 9 (Bosworth). We find also Icel. flaska (an old word); Dan. flaske; Swed. flaska; G. flasche; O. H. G. flascá.  $\beta$ . But it is uncertain whether the word is really Teutonic; it seems to be rather from Low Lat. flasca, a flask, of uncertain origin; possibly from the Gk. hase daa. seen in isodaiver, to spout forth. We also from the Gk. base pha-, seen in imphainen, to spout forth.

find W. flarg, Gael. flarg. Der. flagon, q. v. FILAT, level, smooth. (Scand.) M.E. flar; 'sche fel . . flat to the grounde;' Will: of Palerne, 4414.-Icel. flar, flat. + Swed. flat. + Dan. fad. ¶ The connection with Gk. πλατύα, broad, has not been made out; Curtius, i. 346; it is more likely connected with Du. wlat, G. flack, flat, Gk. πλαξ, a flat surface, for which see Plain. Der. flat, sb.; flat-ly, flat-ness; flatt-en (coined by analogy with length-en, &c.); flat-ish, flat-wise. FLATTER, to coax, soothe. (F., - Scand.) M. E. flateren (with one 1); P. Plowman, B. xx. 109.-O. F. fater (later flatter), 'to flatter. sooth. smooth: . . also to claw. stroke, clap gently;' Cot. flatter, sooth, smooth; . . also to claw, stroke, clap gently;' β. Here, as in many cases (e.g. mate from A.S. maca) the t stands for an older k, and the base is flak. This base occurs in O. Swed. flechra, to flatter (Ihre); Swed. dial. floka, to caress (Rietz). G. flehen, to beseech; O. H. G. flehon. y. The base is probe y. The base is probably the Teutonic FLAK, to beat ; hence to pat, stroke. This base answers O.F. flater, from Icel. flatr, flat; with the notion 'to smoothe; but this appears to me unsatisfactory, and is rejected by Brachet.[+] But this appears to me unsatisfactory, and is rejeted by interacting FLATULEINT, full of wind, windy.  $(F_{\cdot,-}L_{\cdot})$  In Minsheu; also in Holland's Plutarch, p. 577 (R.) – F. flatilent, 'flatulent, windy;' Cot.-Low Lat. flatulentus; not in Ducange, but regularly formed from the base flatue, by analogy with temulentus, drunken. - Lat. flatus, a blowing, a breath. - Lat. flatus, pp. of flare, to blow; cognate with E. blow. See Blow (1). Der. flatulent-ly, flatulence, flatulenc-v

FLAUNT, to display ostentationsly. (Scand.) Shak. has flownts, s. pl. fine clothes, Winter's Ta. iv. 4, 23. 'Yield me thy flowting [showy] hood; 'Turburville, To his Friend that refused him, st. 10. 'With . . . fethers flownt-a-flownt,' i.e. showily displayed; Gascoigne, Steel Glass, 1163. It seems to have been especially used with reference to the fluttering of feathers to attract notice.  $\beta$ . Probably Scandinavian; Rietz gives Swed. dial. flanka, to be unsteady, waver, hang and wave about, ramble; whence the adj. and adv. flankt, loosely, flutteringly (which = Gascoigne's flaunt-a-flaunt). Flanka is a nasalised form of Swed. dial. flakka, to waver, which answers to M.E. Rakken, to palpitate; see Flag (1). ¶ From the same source come Dan. flink, smart, brisk, active; Bavarian flandern, to futter, flaunt, Schmeller, i. 792; Du, flikkeren, flonkeren, to sparkle. FLAVOUR, the taste, scent. (Low L., - L.) Milton, Sams. Agon., 544, says of wine 'the flavor or the smell, Or taste that cheers the hearts of Gods or men,' &c. He here distinguishes favour from both smell and taste ; and possibly intended it to mean hus.  $\beta$ . At any rate, the word is plainly the Low Lat. flavor, golden coin, taken to mean 'yellow hue' or 'bright hue.' - Lat. flavus, yellow, gold-coloured; of uncertain origin. B. It is certain fauses, yellow, gold-coloured; of uncertain origin. B. It is certain that the Lowland Scotch fleure, fleueare, used by Gawain Douglas to mean a 'stench' (as shewn by Wedgwood), could not have produced the form flavour; but it is quite possible that the sense of flavour was modified by the O. F. flairer, to exhale an odour (now used in the sense of to scent, to smell), with which Douglas's word is connected.

This O. F. fairer = Lat. fragrare, by the usual change of r to l (Diez); see Fragrant. Der. favour-less. [†] FLAW, a crack, break. (Scand.) M. E. fawe, used in the sense of 'flake;' 'fawes of fyre' = flakes of fire; Allit. Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 2556. – Swed. flaga, a flaw, crack, breach; also, a flake; see Bracks and Mage () aff the A S (comment of Comments).

Flake, and Flag (4). If The A. S. form was flow (Bosworth); FLECK, a spot. (Scand.) M.E. flek, a spot; flekka, to stain, spot. + Swed. flek, a spot. (flekka, to spot. + Du, ulek, sb.; whence the verb flekken, to spot; Chaucer, C. T. 16033. - Icel. flekkr, a spot; flekka, to stain, spot. + Swed. flek, a spot; flekka, to spot. + Du, ulek, sb.; wherken, b) + G. flock, sb.; flock, which, to spot, + Du, where, b); where  $n_{1}$ ,  $n_{2}$ ,  $n_{2}$ ,  $n_{2}$ ,  $n_{3}$ ,  $n_{$ Access are spots such as would be caused by jerking a dirty brush. FLECTION, a bending ; see Flexible.

FLEDGE, to furnish with feathers. (Scand.) Shak. has fledged, Merch. Ven. iii. 1. 32. This pp. fledged is a substitution for an older adj. fledge, meaning 'ready to fly. M.E. flegge, 'ready to fly' (Stratmann); spelt flirge in the Prompt. Parv. p. 167 (and note) .-

 Icel. fleygr, able to fly.—Icel. fleygia, to make to fly; causal of fliwica, to fly. See Fly. Der. fledge-ling.
 FLEIE, to escape, run away. (Scand.) Not the same word as fly. The M.E. verb only appears in the pt. t, fledde, and pp. fled; Chaucer, C. T. 2932; Havelok, 1431.—Icel. flyja, flaja, to flee; pt. 4 dok to ge a burn 4 Der due at the same at the same to the same at the same set. t. Asoli, pp. Asilor. + Swed. As, to flee, shun. + Dan. Ase, pt. t. Asolic, to flee. Cf. Du. wieden, to flee. B. Flee is a weak verb, corresponding to the strong verb fly, much as set corresponds to sit, except that fice is not used as a causal verb. See Fly. [+] FLEECE, a sheep's coat of wool. (E.) Here -ce stands for s, as usual. M. E. flees, Prompt. Parv. p. 166; Wyclif, Gen. xxx. 35. – A. S. flys, Ps. lxxi. 6 (ed. Spelman). + Du. vlies. + G. fliess, vliess.

FLEER, to mock, to grin. (Scand.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 109; Jul. Cass. i. 3. 117. M. E. farian, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1088, 2778. Of Scand. origin; cf. Norweg. flira, to titter, giggle, laugh et nething: Accent Alco. Norweg. flira, to titter, piggle, laugh at nothing; Aasen. Also Norweg. flisa, to titter, which is an older form, id.; Swed. flissa, to titter. B. Another variation of this verb is Swed. flina, to titter; Swed. dial. flina, to make a wry face (Rietz); see Frown. [†] FLEET (1), a number of ships. (E.) M. E. fiels, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1189; fleote, Layamon, 2155. – A. S. fleote, Morte Arhude, ed. Brock, 1189; fleote, Layamon, 2155. – A. S. fleot, a ship, Grein, i. 304; fliet, a ship (in a gloss), Lye. [It seems afterwards to have been used collectively.] – A. S. fleoten, to 'fleet,' a variant of to float.  $\beta$ . The more usual A. S. form is flota, a ship, Grein, i. 305 (= M. E. flote, Havelok, 738); which is cognate with Icel. floti, (1) a ship, in the flote bergin in the data of the flote flote bergin between the flote. (2) a fleet ; Dan. flaade, a fleet ; Swed. flotta, a fleet ; Du. vloot, G. flotte. See Fleet (4).

FLEET (2), a creek, bay. (E.) In the place-names North-fleet, Fleet Street, &c. Fleet Street was so named from the Fleet ditch ; and fast was a name given to any shallow creek, or stream or channel of water; see Halliwell. - M. E. fast, Prompt. Parv. p. 166. - A. S. fast, a bay of the sea, as in sets fast - bay of the sea; Ælfred's tr. of Beda, i. 34. Afterwards applied to any channel or stream, esp. if shallow. The orig. sense was 'a place where vessels float;' and the deriv. is from the old verb fleet, to float ; see Fleet (4). Cf. Icel. fljót, a stream; Du. vliet, a rill, a brook.

FLIGET (3), swift. (E.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 261. It does not seem to appear in M. E., but the A. S. form is fisitig (=fleet-y), Grein, i. 304. It is a derivative from the old verb to fleet, and = fleting; see Flost (4). Cf. Icel. fljdtr, fleet, swift; from the verb fljdta, below. Der. fleet-ly, fleet.ness. FLEET (4), to move swiftly. (E.) 'As seasons fleet;' 2 Hen. VI, ii. 4. 4. M. E. fleten, to swim, orig. to float; Chaucer, C. T. 1960; Havelok, 522.-A.S. flodtan, to float, to swim; Grein, i. 304. + Icel. fjóta, to float, swim; see further under Float. Der. fleet-ing, feet-ing-ly; also fleet (3), fleet-ly, fleet-ness; also fleet (1). and fleet (2), Not the same word as flit, though allied to it; see Flit.

FLESH, the soft covering of the bones of animals. (E.) M. E. viewsch, fleisch; Chaucer, C. 1. 14, - A. S. flext, orch, J. Son, J. Survey, J. S. J. Son, J. S. S. Sander, J. S. Sander, J. S. Sander, J. S. Sander, S. Sander, S. Sander, J. S. Sander, S. Sander, J. Sander, S. Sander, J. Sa

Resh. ily, Resh. iness. ¶ Perhaps related to flake and flitch. FLEUR-DE-LIS, flower of the lily. (F., - L.) M.E. flower-de-lice, Minot's Poems (Spec. of Eng. ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 131, 1. 25). -O. F. fleur de lis; whence also E. flower-de-luce, Winter's Ta. iv. 4. 127. Here lis = Lat. lillins, a corrupt form of lillium, a lilly. See Flower and Lilly. ¶ The Du. lisch, a water-flag, iris, appears to be corrupted (like E. luce) from the F. lis, in which the final s was once sounded.

FLEXIBLE, easily bent. (F., -L.) In Shak. Troil. i. 3. 50.-F. flexible, 'flexible;' Cot. - Lat. flexibilis, easily bent. - Lat. flexible, pp. of flectere, to bend.  $\beta$ . Flectere appears to be for felc-t-ere, from the same source as Lat. falx, a sickle; see Falchion. Der. from the same source as Lat. fax, a sickle, see automotif. Der. flexible-ness, flexibl-y, flexibil-i-ty; from Lat. flexus are also flex-ion (wrongly flect-ion), flex-or, flex-ile, flex-ure; from the same source, circum-flex, de-flect, in-flex-ion (wrongly in-fleet-ion), re-flect. FLICKER, to flutter, waver. (E.) M. E. flikeren, to flutter; Chaucer, Troil. iv. 1221. - A.S. flicerian, Deut. xxxii. 11. β. Here flicerian is a frequentative form from the base flic-, an attenuated form of the base FLAK, to beat; the sense is 'to beat slightly and  $\gamma$ . This is made clear by the occurrence of the stronger form often." faker in the M. E. fakeren, Ancren Riwle, p. 222; of which the later form facker occurs in Coverdale's Bible, Ezek, x. 19: 'And the cherubins fackered with their wings.' See Flag (1).  $\P$  The Icel. fökra, to flutter = E. facker; Du. fikkeren, to sparkle = E. flicker.

FLIGHT, the act of flying. (E.) M. E. flight, Chaucer, C. T. 190, 990. – A. S. flykt, Grein, i. 306; formed, with suffix -t (= Aryan -ta), from A. S. flyg-t, flight; from A. S. fleigan, to fly. Afterwards (10), from A. S. Jigge, fight; from A. S. Jigogan, to by. Attended as the verbal sb. of to flee also. B. Corresponding in use to flight (from fly) we have Icel. flug (=A. S. flyge), G. flug, Swed. flygt; corresponding to flight (from flee), we have Swed. flykt, G. flucht. The use of Dan. flugt, Du. vlugt, is less marked. Der. flight-y, flight-i-ness. See Fly, Flee. FLIMSY, weak, slight. (W.?) 'Flimsy, limber, slight; 'Kersey, ed. 1715. In Pope, Prol. to Satires, 1.94. Perhaps Welsh; cf. W. llymsi, sluggish, spiritless, flimsy (Spurrell). fl. According to Der. filmsi-ness.  $\P$  For f = W. ll, see Flummery. FLINCH, to shrink back. (F., -L.) In Shak. All's Well, ii. I. 190. A nasalised form of M. E. fleechen, to flinch, waver. Thus we find: 'For hadde the clergie harde holden togidere, And noht fleeched aboute nother hider ne thidere.' i.e. had they all best Inde : 'For hade the clergte harde holden togdere, And hold fleecked aboute nother hider ne thidere,' i.e. had they all kept together, and not wavered; Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 344. In Legends of the Holy Rood, ed. Morris, p. 137, l. 179, fleechelk occurs in the exact sense of 'flinches;' see also Ayenb. of Inwyt, p. 253.-O. F. fleechir, 'to bend, bow, plie; to go awry, or on one side;' Cot. - Lat. fleetere, to bend; see Flexible. ¶ It is probable that the form of the word was influenced by that of blenck, used in the same sense.

FLING, to throw, dart, scatter about. (Scand.) The pt. t. flong = flung, occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 17255. - Swed. flänga, to use violent action, to romp; flänga med hästarna, to ride horses too hard; fläng, sb., violent exercise, i fläng, at full speed (cf. E. to take one's fling); Swed. dial. flänga, to strip bark from trees, to hack, strike (Rietz); O. Swed. flenga, to strike, beat with rods (Ihre). + Dan. flenge, to slash; i fleng, indiscriminately. β. The orig. sense is to strike (Ihre); hence fling is a nasalised form of flick, an attenuated form of flack, from the Teutonic base FLAK, to beat. See Flicker, and Flag (1), Cf. Lat. plangere, to beat. Der. fling, sb. FLINT, a hard stone. (E.) M. E. flint, Havelok, 2667.-A.S. flint, a rock; Numb. xx. 10. + Dan. flint. + Swed. flinta. + Gk. wMw00s, a brick; Curtius, i. 46; Fick, i. 682. Der. flint-y, flint-i-ness. FLIPPANT, pert, saucy. FLOAT, to swim on a liquid surface. (E.) M. E. facton or flotten; very rare, the proper form being fleten (A. S. flettan); see Fleet (4). 'A whal... by that bot flotte' = a whale floated by the boat; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 248.  $\beta$ . This form of the verb is really a causal rather than the orig. form, and due to the sb. float = A. S. flota, a ship (Grein); allied words to which are Icel. floti, a float, raft, whence floina, to float to the top; Swed. floita, a fleet, a raft, flotta, to cause to float; Du. vlot, a raft, whence vlotten, to cause to float, to float; G. floss, a raft, whence flossen, to float; see also Fleet (1). y. Corresponding to A.S. fledian, to 'fleet,' we have Icel. fljdia, to float, to flow; Dan. flyde, to flow; Swed. flya, to flow, float; G. fliessen (O. H. G. fliozan), to flow. 8. The Teut. base is FLUT, an extended form of FLU, to flow. See Flow. Der. float, sb. (though this is rather the orig. of the verb); float-er, float-age, float-ing, float-at-ion; also flotsam, q. v. ¶ Observe that the F. flotter, to float, is from Lat. fluctuare; see Fluctuate. The FLOSS, a downy substance, untwisted silken filaments. (Ital, - & Curtius, i. 347. Der. flow, sb., flow-ing; also flood, q. v.; float, q. v. L) What is now called floss-silk was formerly called sleave-silk; see Nares. The term floss-silk is modern. Cot. gives 'soye flosche, sleave silk; ' but the word flosche is not now used, and the E. word is probably directly from the Italian original, whence O. F. flosche was also borrowed - Ital. floscio, flaccid, soft, weak; whence floscia seta, 'raveling or sleave silke;' Florio. [The Venetian form, ac-cording to Wedgwood, is flosso, which exactly agrees with the E.

fors.] = Lat. fluxus, fluid, loose, lax. See Flux. FLOTILLA, a little fleet. (Span., = L.) Merely Spanish; Bailey gives only the form flota. = Span. flotilla, a little fleet; dimin. of flota, a fleet, cognate with O. F. flota, a fleet of ships, but also a crowd of people, a group (O. F. flota de gans); see Burguy. This O. F. flota, a fleet, form, is closely connected with F. flot, masc., a wave and therefore derived as to form form Lat during a wave. wave, and therefore derived, as to form, from Lat. fluctus, a wave ; B. At the same time, the sense of F. flotte (later see Fluctuate. form of O. F. flote) and of the Span. flota has clearly been influenced by Du. vloot, a fleet, allied to (or borrowed from) Icel. floti, (1) a FLOTSAM, goods lost in shipwreck, and left floating on the waves. (Law F. - Scand.) In Blackstone's Comment. b. i. c. 8; spelt forson in Blount's Law Dict., ed. 1691. Cotgrave has: 'a fo, floating; choices a fo, flotsens or flotzams.' This is an Old Law F. term, barbarously compounded, like the allied Jetsam, q.v. B. The origin can hardly be other than Scandinavian; the former syllable is to be referred to the Icel. prefix flor- (as in flor-fundinn = found afloat), connected with flori, a float, raft, florna, to come afloat; see Float. The latter syllable is most likely the loci. suffix -same (=E. -some), as in gaman-same = E. gama-some. The radical sense of -same is 'together' or 'like;' hence flotsam = floating together or float-like, i.e. in a floating manner. See Same.

FLOUNCE (1), to plunge about, (Swed.) 'After his horse had fowneed and floundered with his heeles;' Holland, tr. of Ammianus, p. 77 (R.)-Swed. dial. flunsa, to dip, plunge, to fall into water with p. 77 (K.) - Swed. disk. punse, to dip, pring., so that have been a plunge (Rietz); O. Swed. flunsa, to plunge, particularly used of the dipping of a piece of bread into gravy (Ihre). See Flounder (1).

FLOUNCE (2), a plaited border on a dress. (F., -L.?) 'To change a flownce; 'Pope, Rape of the Lock, ii. 100. 'Farthingales and flownces,' Beaum. and Fletcher, Mons. Thomas, iii. 2.3. Made, by change of r to l, from M. E. frownce, a plait, wrinkle; P. Plowman, B. xili. 318; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 2, 1. 147. We also have frounced = frizzled and curled, in Milton, Il Pens. 123; cf. Spenser, F. Q. i. 1.14. = 0. F. froncer, fronser, 'to gather, plait, fold, wrinkle; fronser le front, to frown or knit the brows;' Cot.  $\beta$ . Perhaps from Low Lat. frontiare\*, to wrinkle the forehead; not found, but regularly formed from from , crude form of froms, the forehead. See Front, and Frounce. [†] FLOUNDER (1), to flounce about. (O. Low G.) See quotation under Flounce (1); also in Beaum. and Fletcher, Woman's Prize, ii. 6. 30. A nasalised form of Du. flodderen, to dangle, flap, splash through the mire; as suggested by Wedgwood. Cf. Swed. fladdra, to flutter. Formed from a base FLAD, with much the same sense as FLAK, to flutter; see Flag(1). FLOUNDER (2), the name of a fish. (Swed.)

Flounder-like occurs in Massinger, Renegado, Act iii. sc. 1 (Mustapha's 5th speech). Flounder is in Beaum. and Fletcher, Mons. Thomas, ii. 3; and in John Dennis, Secrets of Angling (ab. A.D. 1613), in Arber's Eng. Garner, p. 171. – Swed. flundra, a flounder. + Dan. flynder. + Icel. flyora. Prob. named from flapping about, and formed similarly to Flounder (1). Cf. 'To foist, feist, fizzle, are all originally to break wind in a noiseless manner, and thus to foist is to introduce something, the obnoxious effects of which are only learned by disagreeable ex-perience;' Wedgwood. - O. Du. vysten, 'to fizzle,' Sewel; closely connected with O. Du. vesst, 'a fizzle;' id. A shorter form occurs in Dan. fiis, sb., fise, verb; the latter of which is E. Fizz, q. v.

FOLD, to double together, wrap up. (E.) M. E. folden; P. Plow-man, B. xvii. 145, 176. – A. S. fealdan, Grein, i. 286. + Dan. folde. + Swed. fälla. + Icel. falda. + Goth. falthan. + G. falten. B. The base is FALTH, closely allied to Goth. fakto, a plaiting (I Tim. ii. 9), of which the base is FLAHT = Lat. plectere, to weave, plait. -VPLAK, to weave; whence Gk. πλέκειν, to plait; Curtius, i. 202; Fick, i. 681. See Plait. Der. fold, sb., M. E. fold, a plait; -fold, in composition (cf. plex in complex, duplex, from the same root). FOLLAGE, a cluster of leaves.  $(F_{..}-L)$  'Foliage, branching work in painting or tapestry; also leafiness;' Blount's Gloss.. ed. 1674. A F. word, but modified by the form foliation, borrowed directly from Latin, and in earlier use, viz. in Sir T. Browne, Cyrus Garden c. 3. § 11. = 0. F. fueillage, 'b ranched work, in painting or tapestry;' Cot. = 0. F. fueillage, a leaf. = Lat. folia, pl. of folium, a leaf. + Gk.  $\phi b \lambda \lambda o \nu$ , a leaf. See Curtius, i. 380. Der. foliag-ed; also (from Lat. folium) foli-ate, foli-at-ed, foli-at-ion, foli-fer-ous; also folio, from the phr. in folio, where folio is the ablative case.

FOLK, a crowd of people. (E.) M.E. folk; Chaucer, C. T. 2830. - A. S. fole; Grein. + Icel. folk. + Dan. and Swed. folk. + Du. volk. + G. volk. + Lithuan. pùlkas, a crowd. + Russ. polk', an army. Cf. Lat. plebs, people.  $\beta$ . Particularly used orig. of a crowd of people, so that flock is probably the same word; both may be related to Full. Der. folk-lore.

FOILICLE, a gland, seed-vessel. (F., -L.) 'Follicle, a little bag, purse, or bladder; 'Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. -O. F. follicule, bag, purse, or bladder; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1074.-O.F. follicule, 'a little bag, powch, husk; 'Cot.-Lat. folliculus, dimin. of follis, a bag; prob. connected with E. bag; see Curtius, ii. 102. See Bag. FOLLOW, to go after. (E.) M. E. foluen, folowen, Chaucer, C. T. 3260; P. Plowman, B. vi. 2. [The w is due to the A.S. g.] -A.S. fylegan, fylgian, fyligan; Grein, i. 360.+ Du. volgen.+ Icel. fylgia.+ Dan. folge.+ Swed. folja.+ G. folgen; O.H.G. folken. B. The A.S. fylegan is perhaps a derivative from A.S. folken. Gue a folk on a convert of percent fole, a folk, orig. a crowd of people; thus to 'follow' is to 'accom-July, a tota, ong, a clowed of people; that to indow is to second pany in a troop.' Similarly we may compare Icel. fylgie with Icel. fulk; and so of the rest. See Folk. Der. follow-ing, follow-er. FOLLY, foolishness. (F., -L.) M. E. folye (with one l); Laya-mon, later text, 3024. -O. F. fole, folly. -O. F. fol, a fool; see Fool. ENDWINT to be been with the second sec

The use of for as a conj. is due to such phrases as A.S. for pam-pe, for py = on account of; the orig. use is prepositional. = A.S. for, for; also, before that; the same word as A. S. fore, before that, for. + Du. voor, for, before, from. + Icel. fyrir, before, for. + Dan. for, for ; för, adv. before. + Swed. för, before, for. + G. vor, before; für, for. + Goth. faura, before, for. + Lat. pro, before; not the same as (but related to) pra. + Gk.  $\pi\rho\phi$ ; related to  $\pi\alpha\rho d$ . + Skt. pra, before, away.  $\P$  The orig. sense is 'beyond,' then 'before,' lastly 'in place of;' from the same root as far, fore, and fare. See Far, Fare, Fore; and see below. Der. for-as-much, for-ever.

FOR- (2), only in composition. (E.) For-, as a prefix to verbs, has usually an intensive force, or preserves the sense of from, to which it is nearly related. The forms are : A.S. for-, Icel. for- (sometimes it is nearly related. The forms are: A. S. for-, 1ccl. for- (sometimes fyrir-), Dan. for-, Swed. för-, Du. and G. ver-, Goth. fra- (rarely fair-), Skt. pará. The Skt. pará is an old instrumental sing. of para, far; see Far, From; and see above. B. The derived verbs are for-bear, for-bid, for-fend, for-go (spelt forego), for-get, for-give, for-lorn, for-sake, for-swear. ¶ It is distinct from fore-; see Fore. FOR-(3), only in composition. (F., -L.) In forclase (misspelt foreclase) and forfeit, the prefix is French. See those words. FOR-AGE: fodder. chiefly as obtained by pillage. (F. -Low Lat.

FORAGE, fodder, chiefy as obtained by pillage. (F., - Low Lat., -Scand.) M.E. forage, Chaucer, C. T. 9396. - O.F. fourage, forage, pillage. - O. F. forrer, to forage. - O. F. forre, fuerre (F. feurre), fodder, straw. - Low Lat. fodrum, a Latinised form of O. Dan. foder, the same as E. fodder; see Fodder. Der. forage, verb; forager; also foray, sometimes spelt forray, a Lowland Scotch form of forage, occurring in Barbour's Bruce both as sb. and verb; see bk. ii. l. 281, is uncommon; but we find fore fet = fore feet, in Will. of Palerne, 3284. The word is properly a prep. or adv., and in the former case is only another form of for. - A. S. fore, for, before, prep.; fore, foran, adv. See For (1). Der. for-m-er, q. v.; fore-m-ost, q. v.; and used as a prefix in numerous compounds, for which see below. Also in for-ward (=fore-ward), q. v. ¶ The old comparative Also in for-ward (=fore-ward), q. v.

FORAMINATED, having small perforations. (L.) Modern and scientific. - Lat. foramin-, stem of foramen, a hole bored. - Lat. forare, cognate with E. Bore, q. v. FORAY, FORRAY, a raid for foraging; see Forage.

of fore is fur-ther, q. v. FORE-ARM (i, the fore part of the arm. (E.) A compara-tively modern expression; I find no good example of it. Merely made up from fore and arm. See Arm (1)

FORE-ARM (2), to arm beforehand. (Hybrid; E. and F.) In Dryden, tr. of Virgil's Æneid, vi. 1233. Compounded of fore and the verb to arm; see Arms.

FORE-BODE, to bode beforehand. (E.) In Dryden, tr. of Virgil's Alneid, iii. 470. Compounded of fore and bode ; see Bode. Cf. Icel. fyrirboda; Swed. förebåda. Der. fore-bod-er, fore-bod-ing, fore-bode-ment.

FORECAST, to contrive beforehand. (E. and Scand.) See Chaucer, C. T. 15223. Compounded of fore and cast; see Cast. Der. forecast, sb., forecast-er. FORECASTLE, the fore part of a ship. (Hybrid; E. and L.)

<sup>1</sup> Forecasile of a ship, that part where the foremast stands; 'Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Also in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. A short deck placed in front of a ship, above the upper deck, is so called, because it used in former times to be much elevated, for the accommodation of archers and crossbowmen. From fore and castle; see Castle. ¶ Commonly corrupted to foc'sle or foxle.

FORECLOSE, to preclude, exclude. (F., -L.) 'Foreelosed, barred, shut out, or excluded for ever; Blount's Law Dict., ed. 1691; with a reference to 33 Hen. VIII. c. 39. It should rather be spelt forclosed. - O. F. forclos, pp. of forclorre, to exclude (Roquefort). -O. F. for., from Lat. foris, outside; and clorre = Lat. claudere, to shut. See Forfeit and Close. Der. forclos-ure.

FOREDATE, to date beforehand. (Hybrid; E. and F.) Merely a compound of fore and date. Todd gives an example from Milton, Reason of Church Government, b. ii. See Date.

FOREFATHER, an ancestor. (E.) The pl. forfadres is in P. Plowman, C. viii. 134, where two MSS. have forme faderes, the fuller form. The M.E. forme is the superlative of fore; see fuller form. The M.E. forme is the superlative of Former. Cf. Du. voorvader; G. vorvater; Icel. forfabir.

FOREFEIND, to avert ; see Forfend. FORE-FINGER, the first of the four fingers. (E.) In Shak. All's Well, ii. 2. 24. It is not improbable that the orig. expression was forme finger (= first finger) rather than fore-finger. See Forefather.

FOREFOOT, a front foot of a quadruped. (E.) From fore and foot; see reference under Fore.

FOREFRONT, the front part. (Hybrid; E. and F.) In the Bible (A. V.), 2 Sam. xi. 15. And in Hall's Chron., Rich. III (de-scription of preparations for the battle of Bosworth); see Eastwood and Wright, Bible Word-book. See Fore and Front.

FOREGO (1), to relinquish; see Forgo. FOREGO (2), to go before. (E.) Chi Chiefly in the pres. part. foregoing and the pp. foregone = gone before, previous; Othello, iii. 3. 428. Cf. A.S. foregangan, to go before; Grein, i. 321. Der. forego-er; see P. Plowman, B ii 187.

FOREHAND, preference, advantage. (E.) Used in several senses, and both as adj. and sb.; see Shak. Hen. V, iv. 1. 297; Also fort, fort-i-ude, fort-ress, &c. FORCE (2), to stuff fowls, &c. (F.,-L.) A corruption of difficult word; but the etymology is clearly from fore and hand. and Fletcher, Scornful Lady, ii. 3 (last speech but 6).

FOREHEAD, the front part of the head above the eyes. (E.) M. E. forheed; Chaucer, C. T. 154. Older form forheued (with u =v); spelt vorheaued, Ancren Riwle, p. 18. From fore and head. Cf. Du. voorhoofd ; G. vorhaupt.

FOREIGN, out of doors, strange. (F., -L.) The insertion of the g is unmeaning. M. E. foreine, foreyne, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 2, l. 851. - O. F. forain, 'forraine, strange, alien;' Cot. -Low Lat. for an end, applied to a canon who is not in residence. or to a travelling pedlar. - Lat. foras, out of doors; adv. with an acc. pl. form, from Lat. pl. fores, doors, related to Lat. forum, a marketplace, and cognate with E. door. See Door. Der. foreign-er, Shak. K. John, iv. 2. 172.

FOREJUDGE, to judge beforehand. (Hybrid; E. and F.) In Levins. [The pp. foringed, cited from Fabyan, vol. ii. an. 1400 (R.), has the prefix for, not fore.] Spenser has forejudgement; Muiopotmos, I. 320. From fore and judge. Der. for ejudge-ment. FOREKNOW, to know beforehand. (E.) Shak. has for

FOREKNOW, to know beforehand. (E.) Shak. has fore-knowing, Hamlet, i. 1. 134; also foreknowledge, Tw. Night, i. 5. 151. Chaucer has forknowyng; tr. of Boethius, b. v. pr. 6, l. 5187. From FORELLAND, a headland, cape. (E.) In Milton, P.L. ix. 514. From fore and land. Cf. Dan. forland; Du. woorland; G. worland; Icel. forlendi, the land between the sea and hills.

FORELOCK, the lock of hair on the forehead. (E.) In Milton, P. L. iv. 302; P. R. iii. 173; Spenser, son. 70. From fore and lock.

FOREMAN, a chief man, an overseer. (E.) The expression foreman of the petty jury occurs in The Spectator, No. 122. From fore and man. Cf. Du. voorman, G. vorman, the leader of a file of men; Icel. fyrirmaðr, formaðr.

FOREMOST, most in front. (E.) A double superlative, due to the fact that the old form was misunderstood. a. From the base fore was formed the A.S. superlative adj. forma, in the sense of first; a word in common use; see Grein, i. 329. Hence the M. E. forme, also meaning 'first;' see Stratmann. B. A double superlative formest was hence formed, usually modified to fyrmest; as in 'pat fyrmeste bebdd'= the first commandment; Matt. xxii. 38. This became the M. E. formest, both adj. and adv. ; as in Will. of Palerne, 939. See examples in Stratmann.  $\gamma$ . Lastly, this was corrupted to foremost, by misdividing the word as formest instead of formest. Spenser has formout, F. Q. v. 7. 35. See Former.  $\P$  The Moeso-Gothic also has frumists, a double superlative; the single superlative being fruma, cognate with Skt. parama, Lat. primus. Thus foremost is a mere doublet of prime; see Prime. FORENOON, the part of the day before noon. (Hybrid; E.

and L.) In Shak. Cor. ii. 1. 78. From fore and noon; see Noon. FORENSIC, legal, belonging to law-courts. (L.) ' Forensal, ertaining to the common-place used in pleading or in the judgmenthall; Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674. Forens-ic and forens-al are coined words, formed (with suffixes -ic and -al) from Lat. forens-is, of or belonging to the forum or market-place or place of public meeting. -Lat. forum, a market-place, orig. a vestibule ; connected with Lat. fores, doors. See Foreign.

F. forfait, a crime punishable by fine, a fine ; also pp. of forfaire, orig. forsfaire, to trespass, transgress. - Low Lat. forisfactum, a trespass, a fine; also pp. of forisfacere, to transgress, do amiss, lit. 'to act beyond.'- Lat. foris facere, lit. to do or act abroad or beyond. - Lat. foris, out of doors; and facere, to do. See Foreign; and see Fact. Der.

FORFEIND, FOREFEIND, to avert, forfielde; E. and F. Justification of the second xxxiv. 31. An extraordinary compound, due to E. for- (as in for-bid), and fend, a familiar abbreviation of defend, just as fence (still in use) is a familiar abbreviation of defence. See For- (2) and Fence.

The spelling forefond is bad. FORGE, a smith's workshop. (F., -L.) In Gower, C. A. i. 78; hence M. E. forgen, to forge, Chaucer, C. T. 11951.-O. F. forge, a forge ; whence forgier, to forge. - Lat. fabrica, a workshop, also a fabric; whence, by usual letter-changes, we have fabrica, faurca, iabric; whence, by usual letter-changes, we have fabrica, faurca, faurga, forga, and finally forge; see Brachet. Cf. Span. forja, a forge, forjar, to forge. Thus forge is a doublet of fabric. Der. forge, vb., forg-er, forg-er-y. See further under Fabric. [+] FORGET, to lose remembrance of, neglect. (E.) M. E. for-geten, forgeten; Chaucer, C. T. 1916. - A. S. forgitan; Grein, i. 324. - A. S. for-, prefix; and gitan, to get. See For- (2) and Get. Cf. Du. vergeten; Dan. forgiete; Swed. forgüta; G. vergessen. Der. forget-ful (which has supplanted A. S. forgitol); forget-ful-ly, forget-ful-ness. forget-me-not. forget-ful-ness, forget-me-not.

FORGIVE, to give away, remit. (E.) M. E. forgiuen (with # = v), forziuen, forzeuen; Chaucer, C. T. 8402. - A. S. forgifan; Grein, i. 333. - A. S. for, prefix; and gifan, to give. See For- (2) and Give. Cf. Du. vergeven; Icel. fyrirgefa; Swed. förgifva, to give away, forgive; G. vergeben; Goth. fragiban, to give, grant; Dan. tilgive, to forgive, pardon (with prefix til in place of for). Der. forgiv-ing, forgive-ness. FORGO, FOREGO, to give up. (E.) The spelling forego is as absurd as it is general; it is due to confusion with foregone, in the sense of 'gone before,' from a verb forego of which the infinitive is not in use. M. E. forgon, Chaucer, C. T. 8047.-A. S. forgin, to pass over ; 'he forgæð þæs húses duru '=he will pass over the door of the house; Exod. xii. 23.-A.S. for-, prefix; and gan, to go.

is in King Alisaunder, 1191. Chaucer has 'a forked berd'= beard, C. T. 272. - A. S. fore ; Ælfric's Homilies, i. 430.-Lat. furca, a fork; of uncertain origin. Der. fork, vb., fork-ed, fork-ed-ness; fork-y, fork-i-ness; also car-fax, q. v. ¶ The Du. work, Icel. fork-y, fork-i-ness; also car-fax, q. v. forkr, F. fourche, are all from Lat. furca.

FORLORN, quite lost, desolate, wretched. (E.) M. E. forlorn, used by Chaucer in an active sense – quite lost; C. T. 11861. It is the pp. of M.E. forlessen, to lose entirely .- A.S. forloren, pp. of forlaissan, to destroy, lose utterly; Grein, i. 328. – A. S. for-, pr. d. forlaissan, to destroy, lose utterly; Grein, i. 328. – A. S. for-, prefix; and loren, pp. of laissan, to lose, whence M. E. lorn, Chaucer, C. T. 3536. Cf. Dan. forloren, lost, used as an adj.; Swed. förlorad, pp. of förlora, to lose wholly; Du. verloren, pp. of verliezen, to lose; G. verloren, pp. of verlieren, to lose; Goth. fraliusan, to lose. See For- (2) and Loss. Der. forlorn kope, in North's Plutarch, p. 309 (R.), or p. 372, ed. 1631, a vanguard; a military phrase borrowed from Du. de verloren koop van een leger = the forlorn hope of an army. Cotgrave has: 'Perdu, lost, forlorn, past hope of recovery. Enfans perdus, perdus, or the forlorne hope of a camp, are commonly gentlemen of companies.' 'Forlors kope, a body of soldiers selected for some service of uncommon danger, the hope of whose safety is a forlorn one; Chambers (wrongly); see Hope (2). FORM, figure, appearance, shape. (F., -L.) M. E. forme, King Alisaunder, 388; whence formen, fourmen, to form, id. 5687.-O.F. forme. - Lat. forma, shape. - V DHAR, to hold, maintain; cf. Skt. dhri, to bear, maintain, support; dharma, virtue, right, law, duty, character, resemblance. Der. form, vb.; form al, Sir T. More, Works, p. 125 f; form-al-ly, form-al-ism, form-al-ist, form-al-i-ty; form-at-ion, form-at-ive, from Lat. formatus, pp. of formare, to form; form-er, sb.; form-ul-a, from Lat. formula, dimin. of forma; form-ular-y. Also con-form, de-form, in-form, re-form, trans-form, uni-form, &c. (But not per-form). ¶ Form, a bench, is the same word. See F. forme in Cotgrave.

FORMER, more in front, past. (E.) Not in very early use. In Shak. Jul. Cæs. v. 1. 80. Spenser has formerly, F. Q. ii. 12. 67. a. The word is really of false formation, and due to the mistake of supposing the M.E. formest (now foremost) to be a single superlative instead of a double one; see this explained under Foremost. β. Just as M.E. form-est was formed from A.S. forma by adding -est to the base form-, so form-er was made by adding -er to the same base; hence form-er is a comparative made from the old superlative forma, which is cognate with the Lat. primus. Y. We may therefore resolve for-m-er into for- (= fore), -m-, superlative suffix, and -er, comparative suffix. Der. former-ly.

FORMIC, pertaining to ants. (L.) Modern; chiefly used of 'formic acid.' - Lat. formica, an ant. Prob. related to Gk. µbpµnf, an ant, and to the latter syllable of E. pis-mire; see Curtius, i. 421. Der. chloro-form.

FORMIDABLE, causing fear. (F., -L.) In Milton, P.L. ii. 649. - F. formidable, 'fearfull;' Cot. - Lat. formidabilis, terrible. -Lat. formidare, to dread; Lat. formido, fear; of uncertain origin. Der. formidabl-y, formidable-ness. [+] is of late use, appearing in the Works of Bp. Hall (R.) It was certainly developed from the sbs. fornication and fornicator, both in early Chaucer has fornicatioun, C. T. 6886; and fornicatour is in P. Plowman, C. iii. 191 (footnote). These are, respectively, O. F. fornication and fornicateur; Cot. - Lat. fornicatus, pp. of fornicari. -Lat. formic-, base of formix, (1) a vault, an arch, (2) a brothel. Perhaps so named from the firmness of an arch, from  $\checkmark$  DHAR, to hold, maintain, whence also firm and form. Der. fornicat-ion, fornicat-or, explained above.

FORMULA, a prescribed form. (L.) In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. - Lat. formula, dimin. of forma, a form; see Form. Der. formulate, formul-ar-y. FORNICATE, to commit lewdness. (L.) The E. verb formicate

FORSAKE, to give up, neglect. (E.) M. E. forsaken, Chaucer, C. T. 14247. - A. S. forsacan, Ælfred's tr. of Orosius, i. 12. sect. 3. The orig. sense seems to be ' to contend strongly against,' to ' oppose.' - A. S. for-, intensive prefix; and sacan, to contend, Exod. ii. 13. β. This verb sacan is a strong verb, cognate with Goth. sakan, to strive, dispute; and is represented in E. by the derived sb. sake. Cf. Dan. forsage, to forsake; Swed. försaka; Du. verzagen, to deny, revoke, forsake; G. versagen, to deny, renounce. See For- (2) and Sake. FORSOOTH, in truth, verily. (E.) M. E. for sothe = for the truth, verily; P. Plowman, B. iv. 2. - A. S. for, for; and sobe, dat.

of son, truth. See Sooth.

FORSWEAR, to deny on oath, esp. falsely. (E.) M. E. forsweren, Prompt. Parv. p. 173; earlier forswerien, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 13, L 11. - A. S. forswerian; Grein, i. 332. - A. S. for-, prefix; and swerian, to swear. See For- (2) and Swear.

FORK, a pronged instrument. (L.) M. E. forke; the pl. forkis<sup>4</sup> a fort, hold;' Cot. A peculiar use of O. F. fort, strong.-Lat. fortis, strong. See Force. Der. fort-al-ice, q.v.; fort-i-fy, q.v.; fort-i-tude, q.v.; fort-r-ess, q.v. From Lat. fortis we have also Ital. forte, loud (in music), with its superl. fortissimo.

FORTALICE, a small outwork of a fort. (F., -L.) Rare; see Jamieson's Scottish Dict. - O. F. fortelesce, a fortress. Cf. Span. fortaleza. - Low Lat. fortalitia, fortalitium. See Fortress. FORTIFY, to make strong. (F., - L.) In Shak. K. John, iii. 4.

10.-O. F. fortifier, 'to fortifie, strengthen ;' Cot.-Low Lat. fortificare. - Lat. forti-, crude form of fortis, strong; and fic-, from facere, to make. See Fort, Force. Der. fortifier; fortific-at-ion, from Low Lat. pp. forificatus. FORTITUDE, strength. (L.) In Shak. Temp. i. 2. 154. Borrowed from Lat. fortitudo, strength; see 'spiritus fortitudinis' in

P. Plowman, B. xix 184. – Lat. fortis, strong. See Fort, Force. FORTH, forward, in advance. (E.) M. E. forth, Chaucer, C. 7 858.-A.S. ford, adv. (common); extended from fore, before. + Du. voort, forward : from voor, before. + G. fort, M. H. G. vort : from vor, before. See Fore. Der. forth-coming, Shak. Tam. Shrew, v. 1.96. Also forth-with, in a poem of the 15th century called Chaucer's Dream, l. 1109; a strange formation, and prob. corrupted from M. E. forthwithall, Gower, C. A. iii. 262; see Withal.

FORTNIGHT, a period of two weeks. (E.) M. E. fourtenight, (trisyllable), Chaucer, C. T. 931. Written fourten niz, Rob. of Glouc. p. 533, l. 17. From M. E. fourten = fourteen; and niz, old pl = nights. The A.S. form would be feavertyne nint. B. Similarly, we have sennight = seven night; the phr. seofon nikt (= a week) occurs in Cædmon, ed. Grein, l. 1349. It was usual to reckon by nights and winters, not by days and years; see Tacitus, Germania, c. xi. Der. fortnigkt-ly. [†] FORTRESS, a small fort. (F., -L.) M. E. fortresse, King Alisaunder, 2668. - O. F. forteresce, a variant of fortelesce, a small fort (Burguy). - Low Lat. fortalitia, a small fort. - Low Lat. fortis, a fort. - Lat. fortis, strong; see Fort, Fortalice.

FORTUTOUS, depending on chance. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. [The M. E. fortuit, borrowed from O. F. fortuit, occurs in Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. v. pr. 1. l. 4355, in the Camb. MS.; see the footnote.] Englished, by change of -us to -ous (as in arduous, strenuous, &c.) from Lat. fortuitus, casual.-Lat. fortu-, related to forti-, crude form of fors, chance; see Fortune. Der. fortuitous-ly, fortuitous-ness.

FORTUNE, chance, hap. (F., -L.) In Chaucer, C. T. 1254.-F. fortune. - Lat. fortuna. - Lat. fortu-, allied to forti-, crude form of fors, chance, orig. 'that which is produced;' allied to Lat. ferre, and to E. bear.  $-\checkmark$  BHAR. to bear; see Boar. See Curtius i. 373. Der. fortun-ate, M. E. fortunat, Chaucer, C. T. 14782, from Lat. pp. fortunatus; fortun-ate-ly, fortun-ate-ness; fortune-less, fortune-humier, fortune-teller ; from the same source, fortu-it-ous, q. v.

FORTY, four times ten. (E.) M. E. fourty, Chaucer, C. T. 16829. – A. S. feówerlig; Grein, i. 296. – A. S. feówer, four; and -tig, a suffix formed from the base TEHAN, ten ; see Four and Ton.+ Du. veerlig. + Icel. fjörutiu. + Dan. fyretyve. + Swed. fyratio. + G. vierlig. + Goth. fidworligjus. Der. fortieth, from A. S. feówerligöða. FORUM, the Roman market-place. (L.) In Pope's Homer's Odyssey, vi. 318.-Lat. forum; allied to fores, doors; see Door.

Der. for-ensie, q. v. FORWARD, adj. towards the front. (E.) M. E. forward, adj. and adv.; but rare, as the form forthward was preferred. Forward, adv. occurs in Chaucer, C. T. Six-text, Group B, 263. in the Camb. MS., where the other 5 MSS. have forthward. – A. S. foreweard, adj.; Grein, i. 322. - A. S. fore, before; and -weard, suffix; see Toward. Der. forwards, M. E. forwardes, Maundeville, p. 61, where -es is an adv. suffix, orig. the sign of the gen. case (cf. Du. voorwaarts, G. vorwarts); forward, verb, Shak. 1 Hen. IV, i. 1. 33; forward-ly; forward ness, Cymb. iv. 2. 342. FOSSE, a ditch. (F., -L.) In Holland, tr. of Suetonius, p. 185 (R.); Pope, Homer's Iliad, xv. 410.-O. F. fosse, 'any pit or hole; Cot. - Lat. fossa, a ditch. - Lat. fossa, fem. of fossus, pp. of fodere, to dig. Allied to Gk. Boopos, a ditch, but (perhaps) not to Badie, See Curtius, ii. 75. Der. fossil, q. v. deep FOSSIL, petrified remains of an animal, obtained by digging. (F.,-L.) Formerly used in a more general sense; see Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715.-O. F. fossile, 'that may be digged;' Cot.-Lat. fossilis, dug up. - Lat. fossus, pp. of fodere, to dig; see above. Der. fossil-ise, fossili-ferous.

FOSTER (1), to nourish. (E.) M. E. fostren, Chaucer, C. T. 8098. – A. S. fostrian, in a gloss; Leo. – A. S. fostor, foster, nourishment; Leo, p. 23; Grein i. 335; standing for fid-stor (cf. Du. voedster, a nurse). - A. S. fida, food; see Food, Fodder. + Icel. fostr, nursing; fostra, to nurse, foster. + Dan. foster, offspring; FORT, a stronghold. (F., -L.) In Hamlet, i. 4. 28. - O. F. fort, & fostre, opfostre, to rear, bring up. + Swed. foster, embryo; fostra, to child, foster-parent; and cf. fester. FOSTER (2), a forester; see Forest.

FOUL, dirty, unclean. (E.) M. E. foul, P. Plowman, C. xix. 54. A. S. full, Grein, i. 358. + Du. will. + Icel. full. + Dan. fuel. + Swed. ful. + Goth. fuls. + G. faul. - & PU, to stink; see Putrid.

Fouldy, foul-uses, foul-mouth-ed; also foul, vb.; de-file, q v. FOUMART, a polecat. (Hybrid; E. and F.) Lowland Sc. fourmart; Jamieson. M. E. folmart, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. fourmart; jamieson. M. E. formart, Allit. Foems, ed. Morris, B. 534; also fulmart, fulmard, as in Stratmann, s.v. ful = foul. A bybrid compound. – M. E. ful = A.S. ful, foul, stinking; and O.F. marte, martre, a marten. Thus it means 'foul marten;' see Foul see Foul and Marton. ¶ Sometimes derived from F. fouine, the beech-marten, but the O. F. form was foine or faine, so that the slight resemblance thus vanishes.

FOUND (1), to lay the foundation of. (F., -L.) M. E. founden, Wyclif, Heb. i. 10; P. Plowman, B. i. 64.-O. F. fonder, to found.-Lat. fundare .- Lat. fundus, foundation, base, bottom; cognate with E. bottom; see Bottom. Der. found-er, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of FOUND (2), to cast metals. (F., -L.) The verb is rare. In Holland, tr. of Pliny, we find 'famous for metal-founding,' b. xxxiv. c. 2; 'the excellent founders and imageurs of old time,' id. c. 8 (of Dædalus); 'the art of founderie or casting mettals for images;' id. c. 7. - O. F. fondre, 'to melt, or cast, as metals;' Cot. - Lat. fundere, to pour, cast metals; see Fuse. Der. found-er, found-r-y (= found-

FOUNDER, to go to the bottom. (F., -L.) M. E. founder, said of a horse falling; 'and foundred as he leep;' Chaucer, C. T. 2680. - O. F. fondrer, only recorded in the comp. afondrer (obsolete) and effondrer, to fall in (still in use), as well as in the sb. fondrière, a place to founder in, a slough, bog; see fond in Burguy, and fondridre in Brachet. The sense seems to have been 'to sink in,' and the deriv. is from F. fond, the bottom of anything. - Lat. fundus, ¶ The form of the O.F. verb the bottom; see Found (1). should rather have been fonder; the r is intercalated, as in chanvre = chanve, hemp, from Lat. cannabis. We have instances in E. partr-idge, t-r-casure, cart-r-idge, &cc.

FOUNDLING, a deserted child. (E.) M. E. fundeling, Will. of Paleme, 481; fundling, King Horn, 226. - M. E. fund, base of funden, pp. of finden, to find; and -ling = -l-ing, double dimin. suffix. + Du. vondeling; similarly formed. FOUNT (1), a spring, fountain. (F., = L.) In Shak. iv. 3. 102; and probably earlier. = O. F. funt, font, a fountain. - Lat. fontem, acc.

of fons, a spring; cf. Gk. xéorra, acc. of xéar, pres. pt. of xéer, to pour. - A GHU, to pour; see Found (2), and Fuse. Der. foun-tain, Spenser, F.Q. ii. 12. 60, from O.F. fundains (F. fontains). which from Low Lat. fontona; fountain-head; and see font (1). [+] FOUR, twice two. (E.) M.E. feourur, four, four, four, Layamon, 25, 194, 1902, 2092, 35395. Chaucer adds a final e, and treats it as a pl. adj. 'With four's white boles in the trays;' C. T. 2141. – A. S. feduer, Grein, i. 296. + O. wertyne); four-teen-th; also for-ty, q. v. FOWL, a kind of bird. (E.) In M.E. it signifies ' bird,' generally. M. E. foul, Chaucer, C. T. 190; earlier, fuzel, fowel, Layamon, 2832. -A.S. fugol; Grein, i. 355. + Du. vogel. + Icel. fugl, fogl. + Dan. fugl. + Swed. fågel. + Goth. fugls. + O. H. G. fugal; G. vogel. All from a Teut. base FUGLA, of unknown origin. There is not any evidence to connect it with the Teut. base FLUG, to fly, by imagined loss of l. Der. fowl-er = M. E. foulere, Wyclif, Prov. vi. 5; foul-ing-piece. FOX, a cu

FOX, a cunning animal. (E.) M. E. fox, also (Southern M. E.) oox; P. Plowman, C. xxiii. 44; Owl and Nightingale, 813, 819. – A. S. fox; Grein, i. 334. + Du. vos. + Icel. fox, also fóa, + Goth. fauko. + O. H. G. foka; M. H. G. woks; also M. H. G. wuks, G. fuchs. B. Hence we obtain Teut. base FUHAN (whence Icel. foa, Goth. fauko, O. H. G. foko), which was afterwards extended to FUHSI (whence M. H. G. vuhs, G. fucks, E. fox). Similarly, we have LUHAN, a lynx (whence Swed. lo), extended to LUHSI (whence G. luchs); see Fick, iii. 187. Root unknown. Der. fox-hound, fox y; also fox-glove, a flower = A. S. foxes glofa, Cockayne's A. S. Leech-doms, iii. 327 (cf. Norwegian revhandshje = foxglove, from rev, a fox, Chambers ; also prov. E fox-fingers, a fox-glove). And see vix-en.

FRACAS, an uproar. (F., -Ital., -L.) Not in Johnson; borrowed from mod. F. fracas, a crash, din. -F. fracasser, to shatter; foster. Der. foster-er; also (from A. S. fostor) foster-brother, foster-& break in pieces; whence fracasso, a crash. - Ital. fra-, prefix, from fra, prep. amongst, within, amidst; and cassare, to break. Imitated (or translated) from Lat. interrumpere, to break in amongst, destroy (Diez). The vb. cassare is from Lat. quassare, to shatter, intensive of quatere, to shake. See Quash.

FRACTION, a portion, fragment. (F., -L.) M. E. fraction, fraccion; Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, ed. Skeat, prol. 1. 51.-O. F. (and F.) fraction, 'a fraction, fracture;' Cot.-Lat. acc. fractionem, from nom. fractio, a breaking. - Lat. fractus, pp. of frangere, to break (base frag-), cognate with E. break; see Break. Der. fraction-al; also (from pp. fractus) fracture; also (from base frag-), frag-ile, q.v., frag-ment, q.v.; and (from frangere) frang-ible, q.v.
 FRACTIOUS, peevish. (E.) Not found in early literature; it is given in Todd's Johnson, without a quotation. A prov. E. word, from the North. E. fratch, to squabble, quarrel, chide with another ; see Atkinson's Cleveland Glossary. Cf. M. E. fracchen, to creak as a cart; 'Fracchyn, as newe cartys;' Prompt Parv. p. 175. ¶ This seems better than to connect it with North. E. frack, forward, bold, impudent. It is certainly unconnected with Lat. frangere.

FRACTURE, a breakage. (F., -L.) In Minsheu; and G. Herbert's Poems, Repentance, last line. -O. F. fracture, 'a fracture, breach ; ' Cot. - Lat. fractura, a breach ; orig. fem. of fracturus, fut.

part. of frangers. to break; see Fraction. Der. fracture, vb. FRAGILE, frail. (F.,-L.) In Shak. Timon, v. 1. 204. – F. fragils, 'fraile;' Cot. - Lat. fragilis, easily broken; from the base frag-, to break ; see Fraction. Der. fragil-i-ty. Doublet, frail. q.v. FRAGMENT, a piece broken off. (F., -L.) In Shak. Much Ado, i. 1. 288. - F. fragment, 'a fragment:' Cot. - Lat. fragmentum, a piece; formed with suffix -mentum from the base frag-, to break; see Fraction. Der. fragment-ar-, fragment-al. FRAGRANT, sweet-smelling. (F., -L.) 'The fragrant odor; Sir T. More, Works, p. 1366 c. - F. fragrant, 'fragrant;' Cot. - Lat. fragraniem, acc, of fragrans, pres. pt. of fragrare, to emit an odour; cf. fragum, a strawberry, named from its smell. Root uncertain. Der. fragrant-ly, fragrance.

FRAIL, easily broken. (F.,-L.) M. E. freel, frele, Wyclif, Rom. viji. 3. Chaucer has freeltee, frailty; C. T. 12012.-O. F. fraile, 'fraile, brittle;' Cot.-Lat. fragilis; see Fragile. Der. frail-y, frail-ness.

FRAME, to form, construct. (E.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 8. 5. M. E. fremen, Havelok, 441. - A. S. fremman, to promote, effect. do; Grein, i. 339. Lit. 'to further.' - A. S. fram, from, strong, excellent; lit. 'surpassing,' or 'forward.' - A. S. fram, prep. from, away; see From. + Icel. fremja, to further; from framr, adj. forward; which from fram, adv. forward; and closely related to frd, from. B. The A. S. adj. fram, excellent, is cognate with Icel. framr, Du. wroom, G. fromm, and closely related to Goth. fruma, first, Skt. parama, most excellent, Lat. primus, first. See Former, Foremost, Fore, Prime. Der. frame, sb. = M. E. frame, a fabric (Prompt. Parv.), also profit, Ormulum, 961 ; cf. Icel. frami, advancement ; also fram-er, fram-ing, frame-work. FRAMPOLD, quarrelsome. (C.) Obsolete. In Shak. Merry Wives, ii. 2. 94. Spelt frampald, frampard, and explained as 'fretful, peevish, cross, forward ' in Ray, Gloss. of South-Country Words. W. ffromfol, passionate; from ffromi, to fume, fret; from, testy. Cf. Gael. frionas, fretfulness; freoine, fury, rage. [†]

FRANC, a French coin, worth about 10d. (F.) M.E. front, Chaucer, C. T. 13117.-O. F. (and F.) frame; see Cotgrave. Named from its being French; see Frank.

FRANCHISE, freedom. (F.) M. E. franchise, freedom; Chaucer, C. T. 9861, 11828. Hence the verb franchisen, fraunchisen, to render free, endow with the privileges of a free man; P. Plowman, C. iv. 114.-O. F. franchise, privileged liberty.-O. F. franchiss-, stem of parts of the verb franchir, to frank, render free - O. F. franc, free; see Frank.

The Franks were a Germanic people; the origin of their name is obscure. Der. frank, vb., frank-ly, rank-ness: frank-incense, q. v. ; franchise, q. v., frank-lin, q. v. FRANKINCENSE, an odorous resin. (F.) In Holland's tr.

of Pliny, b. xii. c. 14.-O.F. franc encens, pure incense. See franc in Cotgrave, who gives the example : 'Terre franche, mould, pure soyle, soyle of it selfe; a soyle without sand, gravell, or stones.' See Frank and Incense. [+]

FRANKLIN, a freeholder. (F.) M.E. frankelein, Chaucer, C.T. 333; shortened to franklen, P. Plowman, C. vi. 64.=O.F. borrowed from Ital. in 16th cent. (Brachet).- Ital. fracassare, to frankeleyn = francheleyn; see quotation in Tyrwhitt's note to Chaucer,

C. T. 333.-Low Lat. franchilanus; Ducange.-Low Lat. franchire, to render free. - Low Lat. franchins, francus, free; see Frank.  $\beta$ . The suffix is from O.H.G. -line = G. and E. -ling, as in G. fremdling, a stranger, and E. dor-ling; see Darling. FRANTIC, full of rage or madness. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. frenstik, contr. form frentik. Chaucer has frenstik, Troilus, v. 206; frentik is in P. Plowman, C. xii. 6. - O. F. frenatique (better frenetique), frantick ; ' Cot. - Lat. phreneticus, phreniticus, mad. - Gk. opernrinde, rightly operations, mad, suffering from operation, or inflammation of the brain. - Gk. oper-, base of optiv, the heart, mind, senses. See Fronsy. FRATERNAL, brotherly. (F., -L.) In Milton, P. L. xii. 26; Minsheu, ed. 1627; and in Cotgrave. Altered to the Lat. spelling. -O. F. fraternel, 'fraternall;' Cot. - Low Lat. fraternalis, substituted for Lat. fraternus, brotherly. - Lat. frater, cognate with E. brother; see Brother. Der. fraternal-ly; from the same source, fraternity,

q. v.; fratricide, q. v. FRATERNITY, brotherhood. (F., -L.) M. E. fraternité, Chaucer, C. T. 366. - O. F. fraternite. - Lat. fraternitatem, acc. of bethady - Lat. fraternitatem, abrother; see fraternitas. - Lat. fraternus, brotherly. - Lat. frater, a brother; see above. Der. fratern-ise = O. F. fraterniser, 'to fraternize,' Cot.; fratern-is-er, fratern-is-at-ion (from fraternus).

FRATRICIDE (1), a murderer of a brother. (F., -L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. This is the true sense ; see below. - O. F. fratricide, 'a murtherer of his own brother;' Cot. - Lat. fratricida, a fratricide. -Lat. fratri-, crude form of frater, a brother; and -cida, a slayer, from cædere (pt. t. ce-cidi), to slay. See Fraternal and Ocessura. FRATRICIDE (2), murder of a brother. (L.) 'Fratricide, brother-slaughter;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. fratricidium, a brother-shaughter; "blount's Gloss., ed. 1074. – Lat. frairiciaism, a brother's murder. – Lat. frairi-; and -cidium, a slaying; see above. FRAUD, deceit. (F., – L.) M. E. fraude; Chaucer, tr. of Boe-thius, b. i. pr. 4, l. 340. – O. F. fraude, 'fraud, guile;' Cot. – Lat. fraudem, acc. of fraus (old form frus), guile. Cf. Skt. dhurta, fraudu-lent, knavish. –  $\checkmark$ DHWAR, DHRU, to bend; cf. Skt. dhurt, to bend; whence also E. dull, dwell, q.v. Der. fraud-ful. fraud-ful-ly, fraud-less; fraud-w-lent, from O. F. fraudulent, 'fraudulent,' Cot. = Lat. fraudulentus; fraud-w-lent-ly, fraud-w-lence. FRAUGHT, to lade a ship. (Scand.)

'If after this command thou fraught the court; 'Cymb. 1. 126; 'The fraughting souls within her;' Temp. i. 2. 13. M. E. frahten, fragten, only used in the pp. fraught, Will. of Paleme, 2732, Chaucer, C. T. Group B, 1. 171 (see my note on the line). β. At a later period, fraught though used most often as a pp., was also accepted as an infin. mood, as shewn by the quotations above. The form freight was also used; see Freight. Neither form is quite close to the original; fraght would have done better. Cf. Mätzner, Eng. Gram. i. 344.-Swed. frakta, to fraught, freight; Dan. fragte; from Swed. frakt, Dan. fragt, a cargo. + Du. bewrachten, to freight; from wrackt, a cargo. + G. frackten, to freight, load, carry goods; from frackt, a cargo, load, carriage of goods. B. The change of vowel from an to si was due to the influence of O.F. (and F.) fret, which Cotgrave explains as 'the fraught, or freight of a ship; also the hire that's paid for a ship, or for the freight thereof.' [We actually find fret for fraught in old edd. of Chaucer, pr. in 1532 and 1561.] This F for i form O.H.C. failed of this the the strength of the second states of the F. fret is from O. H. G. frekt, of which the proper meaning is 'service;' whence the senses of 'use, hire' would easily result ; and, in fact, it is thought to be the same word as G. fracht, though the sense has changed. Of unknown origin. The connection with prov. G.

FRAY (1), an affray.  $(F_{.,-}L_{.})$  'There began a great fraye between some of the gromes and pages;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, v. i. c. 16 (R). Short for affray (also effray), of which an older sense was 'terror.' See this proved by comparing fray, terror, in Barbour's was terror. See this proved by comparing jray, terror, in Barcour's Bruce, xv. 255, with effray, id. xi. 250; and again compare effrait, id. xiii. 173, with mod. E. afraid. Thus jray is a doublet of M. E. affray, terror; see Affray. And see below. [†] FRAY (2), to terrify. (F.,=L.) In the Bible, Deut. xxviii. 26, Jer. vii. 33, Zech. i. 21. Short for affray, to terrify, whence the mod. E. afraid. See above; and see Affray. [†]

FRAY (3), to wear away by rubbing. (F., -L.) Ben Jonson, Sad Shepherd, i. 2. 13, has frayings, in the sense of peel rubbed off a stag's horn. 'A deer was said to fray her head, when she rubbed it against a tree to renew it; 'Halliwell. = O. F. frayer, 'to grate upon, rub,' Cot. An older form was froir; also frier (Burguy). = Lat. frieare, to rub. See Friction. ¶ Wholly unconnected with the words above, with which Richardson confuses it.

FREAK (1), a whim caprice. (E.) 'The fickle freaks... Of fortune false;' Spenser, F. Q. i. 4. 50. This use as a sb., though now common, is unknown in M. E. in the same sense. Yet the word can hardly be other than the once common adj. frek or frik, in the sense of 'vigorous.' 'Fryle, or craske, or yn grete helthe, crasses;' Prompt. Parv. p. 179. Thus the lit. sense is 'a vigorous or quick greedy. + Swed. frück, impudent, audacious. + Dan. fræk, audacious. + G. freeh, saucy; O. H. G. freh, greedy. Cf. Goth. faihufriks, lit. fee-greedy. avaricious. Der freak-ish, Pope, Wife of Bath, 91. FREAK (2), to streak, variegate. (E.) 'The pansy freak'd with jet;' Milton, Lycidas, 144. Freak, as sb., is the word of which freckle is the diminutive ; see Freckle. FRECKLE, a small spot. (Scand.) Spelt frekell in Sir T. More, Works, p. 7. From a base frek-, whence frek-el and frek-en are diminutives. The latter is used by Chaucer, who has the pl. freknes, fraknes, C. T. 2171.-Icel. freknur, pl. freckles : Swed. fräkne, pl. frähnar, freckles; Dan. fregne, pl. fregner, freckles. Cf. Gael. breae, spotted, speckled; Gk. reparos, sprinkled with dark spots; Skt.

nected with Skt. priya, beloved, dear, agreeable. - & PRI, to love, rejoice. See Friend. Der. free, vb., free-ly, free-ness; free-dom = A.S. free-dom; free-booter (see Booty); free-hold, free-hold-er; free-man = A. S. freoman; free-mason, free-mason-ry; free-stone (a stone that can be freely cut); free-think-er, free-will. FREEZE, to harden with cold, to be very cold. (E.) M.E. freesen, fresen; P. Plowman, C. xiii. 192. - A. S. freosan, Grein, i. 347. + Icel. fridea. + Swed. frysa. + Dan. fryse. + Du. vriezen. + G. frieren; O. H. G. freesan. + Lat. prwrire, to itch, orig. to burn; cf. pruina, hoar-frost, pruna, a burning coal. + Skt. plush, to burn. -✓ PRUS, to burn ; whence the Teutonic base FRUS, appearing in Goth. frius, frost, as well as in the words above. Der. frost, q. v., frore, q. v.

FREIGHT, a cargo. (F., -O.H.G.) A later form of fraught, and better spelt fret, being borrowed from the O.F. fret. Freighted occurs in North's Plutarch; see Shakespeare's Plutarch, ed. Skeat, p. 16,

. 3. See further under Fraught. Dor. freight, vb., freight-age. FREINZY, madness, fury. (F., = L., = Gk.) M. E. frenesye [not frenseys as in Tyrwhitt], Chaucer, Troil. i. 728; P. Plowman, C. XXIII. 85.-O.F. frensise [better frenssis], 'frenzis; 'Cot.-Lat. phrenesis.-Late Gk. operross, equivalent to Gk. operrors, inflammation of the brain.-Gk. oper. base of oppir, the midriff, heart, senses; of uncertain origin. Der. frantic, q. v. FREQUENT, occurring often, familiar. (F.,-L.)

'How frequent and famyliar a thynge;' Sir T. Elyot, Governour, b. iii. c. 7 (R.) : Frequently in his mouthe; ' id. b. i. c. 23 (R.) = O. F. frequent, omitted by Cotgrave, but given in Sherwood's Index.=Lat. frequentern, acc. of frequens, crowded, crammed, frequent ; pres. part. of a lost verb frequere, to cram, closely allied to farcire, to cram, and from the same root. See Farce. Der. frequent-ly, frequent-ness, frequenc-y; also frequent, vb. = O. F. frequenter, 'to frequent,' Cot. =

Lat. frequentare; frequent-at-ion, frequent-at-ive. FRESCO, a painting executed on plaster while fresh. (Ital., – O. H. G.) See Freeco in Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. – Ital. fresco, cool, fresh. = O. H. G. frisg, frise (G. frisch), fresh. See Fresh. See Max Müller, Lectures, ii. 298 (8th ed.)

FRESH, new. recent, vigorous. (E.) M. E. fresh, fresch. 'Ful freshe and newe ;' Chaucer, C. T. 367. Also spelt fersch, fersh, by the shifting of the r so common in English ; cf. bride, bird, brimstone. Spelt fersse (=fershe), Rob. of Glouc. p. 397; also werse (=ferse), O. Eng. Homilies, i. 175, l. 248. - A. S. ferse; 'ne ferse ne mens,' = neither fresh water nor marsh; Ancient Laws, ed. Thorpe, i. 184, l. 8. + Icel. ferskr, fresh ; friskr, frisky, brisk, vigorous. + Swed. frisk. + Dan. fersh, frish. + Du. wrsch. +G. frisch; M.H.G. vrisch, virsch; O.H.G. frisg. B. The base of A.S. ferse (for far-ise) is FAR, to travel; the same vowel-change appears in E. ferry, from the same  $\checkmark$  PAR; see Fare. Thus the orig. sense would be 'moving,' esp. used of water.

Der. fresh-ly, fresh-ness, fresh-en, fresh-man; also fresh-et, a small stream of flowing water, Milton, P. R. ii, 345. See Frisk, Fresoo. FRET (1), to eat away. (E.) M. E. freten, a strong verb; Chaucer, C. T. 2070. - A.S. fretan, pt. t. fret, Grein, i. 340. Con-tracted from for-stan, as is clearly shewn by the Gothic form; from for-, intensive prefix, and etan, to eat. + Swed fräta, to corrode = för-äla, to eat entirely. + Du. vreten = ver-sten. + G. fressen = ver-essen. + Goth. fraitan ; from fra-, intensive prefix, and itas, to eat. See For (a) and Eat. Der. fret-ful. Shak. a Hen. VI, iii. 2. 403; fret-ful-ly, fret-ful-ness, frett-ing. ¶ The strong pp. occurs in Levit. xiii. 55 in the form fret; contr. from the M. E. strong pp. freten, frete; see Chaucer, C. T. 4895.

fyue fyngres were freiled with rynges' = all her five fingers were ta kinsman; from frid, to love. + Dan frande, Swed. fründe, a kinsadorned with rings; P. Plowman, A. ii. 11. - A. S. fratwan, fratwian, to adom; Grein, i. 338. Cf. A.S. frætuwe, frætwe, ornament; id. 337. + O. Sax. fratakon, to adom; frataki, ornament. It seems to have been particularly used of carved work. Of unknown origin. Der. fret-work (unless it belong to the word below).

FRET (3), a kind of grating (F.,-L.) A term in heraldry, meaning 'a bearing composed of bars crossed and interlaced.' See explanation in Minsheu, ed. 1627. Kersey, ed. 1715, has: 'in heraldry, a bearing wherein several lines run crossing one another.' - O. F. frete, 'a verrill [ferrule], the iron band or hoop that keeps a woodden tool from riving; 'Cot. a. The mod. F. freiter means 'to hoop,' or 'to put a ferrule on a tool.' Cotgrave also gives 'fretté, fretty, a term of blazon' [heraldry]. According to Diez, frettes, pl., means an iron grating. Roquefort gives: 'freter, to cross, interlace.' All these words seem to be related; and may be resolved into a verb fretter, freter, to hoop, bar, interlace, and a sb. frette, frete, a hoop, bar. B. We may, I suppose, connect these with O. F. ferret, 'a tag of a point,' and the verb ferrer, to shoe, hoop with iron ; making the sb. frette = ferrette, a dimin. of ferret. In the same way, fretter would mean 'to provide with a small hoop or ferrule,' while ferrer means, generally, 'to bind with iron;' Cot.  $\gamma$ . Cf. Span. frets, 'frets, narrow bands of a shield, a term in heraldry' (Meadows); from a sing. frete. Also Ital. ferriata, 'a grate of iron for any window, a port-cullise; 'Florio. Also ferretta, 'little irons, as tags for points; ' id. -Low Lat. ferrata, an iron grating. - Low Lat. ferrare, to bind with iron. - Lat ferrum, iron. Ferrum = fersum ; from the same root as E. bristle ; see Bristle. Fick, i. 698. Der. fret-work, frett-ed, frett-y. ¶ It is sometimes difficult to separate this word from the preceding, owing to the use of fret in architecture to signify 'an ornament con-sisting of small fillets intersecting each other at right angles;' Webster. Littre accounts for our word differently.

FRET (4), a stop on a musical instrument. (F., -L.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, ii. 150. A fret was a stop such as is seen on a guitar, to regulate the fingering; formed by thin pieces of metal or wires running like bars across the neck of the instrument; see Levins. I take it to be a particular use of O. F. frete, a ferrule; and therefore the same word as the above.

FRIABLE, easily crumbled. (F., -L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 23. § 5. -O. F. friable, 'bruizeable, easie to be broken;' Cot. - Lat. friabilis, easily crumbled. - Lat. friare, to rub, crumble. Cf. Skt. ghrish, to grind; Curtius, i. 251. Der. friableness, friabil-i-ty.

FRIAR, a member of a religious order. (F., -L.) M. E. frere, Chaucer, C. T. 208; Rob. of Glouc. p. 530. -O. F. frere, freire. -Lat. frairem, acc. of frairer, cognate with E. brother; see Brother. Der. friar-FRIBBLE, to trifle. (F.?) 'Than those who with the stars do aliance of the second fribler, to flutter, flit to and fro without fixed purpose like a butterfly; barivoler, to flutter in the wind; Jaubert:' Wedgwood. It is more likely to stand for fripple, from O. F. fripper; see Frippery.

FRICASSEE, a dish made of fowls. (F., -L.?) 'A dish made by cutting chickens or other small things in pieces, and dressing them with strong sauce; Todd's Johnson. 'Soups, and olios, fricassees, and ragouts ; ' Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 7; id. - F. fricassee, a fricassee; fem. pp. of fricasser, to fricassee, also, to squander money. Of unknown origin (Brachet). T he orig. sense seems to have Of unknown origin (Brachet). ¶ The orig, sense seems to have been to 'mince,' rather than to 'fry' (see fricasses in Cot.); I should refer it to Lat. fricare, to rub, not to frigere, to fry; and I suppose it to have been prepared from pounded meat; cf. Chaucer, C. T. 12472. We once had fricasy in the sense of rubbing; as in 'fricasyes Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 32. [+] or rubbings;

FRICTION, rubbing, attrition. (F.,-L.) 'Hard and vehement friction; 'Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxviii, c. 4. = F. friction, 'a friction, or frication; 'Cot. = Lat. frictionem, acc. of frictio, a rubbing. = Lat. frictus, contr. pp. of fricare, to rub; an extended form of friare, to crumble. Cf. Skt. ghrish, to grind; Curtius, i. 251. Der. frictionwheel; cf. friable.

FRIDAY, the sixth day of the week. (E.) M. E. Friday, Chaucer, C. T. 1536. - A. S. frige-dag, rubric to S. Mark, xi. 11. - A. S. frige, gen. case of frigu, love, also the goddess of love (the word frigu being feminine); and dag, a day; see Grein, i. 349. -  $\checkmark$  PRI, to love; see Friend. Cf. Icel. friddagr, Friday, O. H. G. Friddag, Frigetag; words not quite exactly equivalent in form, but from the same root.

FRIEND, an intimate acquaintance. (E.) M. E. frend, freond; Ormulum, 443, 1609, 17960. - A. S. freond; Grein, i. 346. Orig. pres. pt. of freon, freogan, to love; so that the sense is 'loving;' id.

a kinsman; from fride, a friend; Dan frande, Swed. fründe, a kins-man. + Goth. frijonds, a friend; pres. pt. of frijon, to love. + G. freund, a friend; O. H. G. friunt. - A PRI, to love; cf. Skt. pri, to love. Der. friend-ly (A.S. adv. freondlice), friend-li-ness, friend-less (A. S. freondleis), friend-less ness, friend-ship (A. S. freondleis), FRIEZE (1), a coarse woollen cloth. (F., = Du.) 'Woven after the manner of deep, frieze rugges; 'Holland's tr. of Pliny, b. viii. c. 48.-F. frise, frize, 'frise; 'Cot.' He also gives drap de frise as 40. If the second secon first used in defensive warfare. But the etymology of the word is much disputed. [†]

FRIEZE (2), part of the entablature of a column. (F.) In Shak. Macb. i. 6. 6. - O. F. frize, ' the cloth called frise ; also (in architecture) the broad and flat band, or member, that's next below the cornish [cornice], or between it and the architrave; called also by our workman the frize;' Cot. Cf. F. frese, fraise, a ruff (Cot.), Span. friso, a frieze, Ital. fregio, 'a fringe, lace, border, ornament; also, a wreath, crowne, or chaplet; 'Florio. β. Brachet derives F. frise (O. F. frize) from the Ital. fregio; but see Diez. The source of the word is much disputed ; perhaps there is a reference to the 'curling' nature of the ornamentation (?); see Friz.

FRIGATE, a large ship. (F., - Ital.) In Cotgrave. - O. F. fre-gate, 'a frigate, a swift pinnace;' Cot. - Ital. fregata, 'a frigate, a spiall ship; Florio. ¶ Of uncertain origin; Diez supposes it to stand for fargata, a supposed contracted form of fabricata, i. e. constructed, from Lat. fabricatus, pp. of fabricare, to build; see Fabric. Cf. Span. fragata, a frigate, with Span. fraguar (= Lat. fabricare), to forge; see Forge. We know that F. båtiment, a building, also BRIGHT, terror. (E.) M. E. frigat-on (Ital. frigatore), frigate-bird. FRIGHT, terror. (E.) M. E. frigst; Seven Sages, ed. Wright, 984. It stands for fyrst, by the shifting of r so common in English, as in bride, bird, brimstone, &c. – A. S. fyrkto, fyrktu, fright; Grein, i. 362. Cf. fyrht, timid ; afyrhtan, to terrify. + O. Sax. foroht, foraht, forht, fright. + Dan. frygt, fright; frygte, to fear. + Swed. fruktan, fright; frukta, to fear. + Goth. faurhiei, fright; faurhijan, to fear; faurhit, fearful. + G. furchi, O. H. G. forhia, forchia, forahia, fright; G. furchien, to fear. ¶ The root is not known. I should suppose the Goth. faurhts to be possibly due to the prefix faur- and the Goth. base agan, seen in ogan, to fear; see Awe. The O. H. G. for-ohta points in the same direction. Der. fright, verb (later form fright-en); Shak. uses the form fright only; fright-ful, Rich. III, iv. 4. 169; fright-ful-ly, fright-ful ness. Gr The change from fyrktu to M. E. fryst may have been due to Scand. influence; observe the Swed. and Dan. forms.

FRIGID, cold, chilly. (L.) In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. Frigidity is in Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 1. § 4. – Lat. frigidus, cold. – Lat. frigëre, to be cold. – Lat. frigus, sb. cold. + Gk. pryos, cold; pryosur, to freeze; see Curtins, i. 438. Der.

FRILL, a ruffle on a shirt. (F., -L.) In Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. It orig. was a term in hawking; 'Frill, to quake as with cold;' the hawk frills;' id. And see frill in Halliwell. It seems to have been used of the ruffling of a hawk's feathers, due to its feeling chilly; and thence to have been transferred to the frill or ruffle of a shirt.-O. F. friller, ' to shiver, chatter, or didder for colde;' Cot.=O. F. frilleux, ' chill, cold of nature;' id.=Low Lat. frigidulosus*, a word formula: the form Lat. frigidulus, chilly, which is formed, as a dimin, from Lat. frigidulus, cold. See above. Dar. frill, to furnish with a frill. FRINGE, a border of loose threads. (F., -L.) In Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 228 .- O. F. fringe*, supposed older form of F. frange (see Brachet, and frange in Burguy). Cot. has: 'Frange, fringe.' The Wallachian form (according to Diez) is frimble, which stands for fimbrie, by a transposition of r, for greater ease of pro-nunciation; cf. F. brebis from Lat. ueruicem. – Lat. fimbria, fringe; chiefly in the pl. fimbria, curled ends of threads, fibres. Fimbria is a strengthened form of fibra, a fibre, filament. See Fibre. Der.

fringe, verb, fringed, Tempest, i. 2. 408; fringey. [†] FRIPPERY, worn out clothes, trifles. (F.) 'Some frippery to hide nakedness; 'Ford, Fancies Chaste and Noble, A. i. sc. 1 (R.) Shak. has it in the sense of an old-clothes' shop; Temp. iv. 225.-O. F. friperie, 'a friperie, broker's shop, street of brokers, or of fripiers;' Cot. - O. F. fripier, 'a fripier, or broker; a mender or trimmer up of old garments, and a seller of them so mended; ' id. -O. F. fripper, 'to rub up and downe, to weare unto rags;' id. Of unknown origin.

FRISK, to skip about. (F., -Scand.) In Shak. Wint. Ta. i. 2. Ormulum, 443, 1609, 17960. - A. S. frednd; Grein, i. 346. Orig. pres. pt. of fredn, fredgan, to love; so that the sense is 'loving;' id. 345. + Du. vriend, a friend; cf. vrijen, to court, woo. + Icel. frændi, Der. frisk-y, equivalent to the old adj. frisk ; frisk-i-ly, frisk-i-ness, frish-et, a printer's term for a light frame often in motion. FRITH, FIRTH, an estuary. (Scand.) M. E. firth, Barbour's Bruce, xvi. 543, 547. - Icel. first, pl. first, a firth, bay; Dan. fiord; Swed. fjärd. Allied to Lat. portus, a haven, Gk.  $\pi o \rho \mu \phi s$ , a ferry. - $\checkmark$  PAR, to cross, pass through; whence Skt. par, to carry over, and E. fare, to travel. See Fare. ¶ The orig. sense was 'ferry;' cf. ford. Not connected with Lat. fretum.

FRITTER, a kind of pancake. (F.,-L.) FRITTER, a kind of pancake. (F., -L.) Spelt frytoure in Prompt. Parv. Cotgrave has: 'Friteau, a fritter.' But the E. word rather answers to O.F. friture, a frying, a dish of fried fish; and, because esp. used of thin slices ready to be fried, it came to mean a fragment, shred; as in 'one that makes fritters of English;' Merry Wives, v. 5. 151. Both fritteau and fritters of English;' O. F. frit, fried. - Lat. frictus, fried, pp. of frigëre, to fry. See Fry. Der. fritter, vb., to reduce to slices, waste.

FRIVOLOUS, trifling. (L.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, v. 1. 28. Cotgrave translates F. frivole by 'frivolous, vain.'-Lat. friuolus, silly, trifling; by direct change of Lat. -us to E. ous, as in abstemious, arduous, &c. The orig. sense of frivolus seems to have been 'rabbed away;' also applied to refuse, broken sherds, &c. 'Friuola sunt proprie uasa fictilia quassa;' Festus. - Lat. friare, fricare, to rub; see Friction. Der. frivolous-ly, frivolous-ness ; also frivol-i-ty, from F. frivolite.

FRIZ, FRIZZ, to curl, render rough. (F., - Du.?) Rarely used except in the frequentative form frizzle. 'Mæcenas, if I meete with thee without my frisled top;' Drant, tr. of Horace, Epist. i. 1. 94 (Lat. text). - O. F. frizer, 'to frizle, crispe, curle;' Cot.  $\beta$ . The orig. sense perhaps was to roughen the nap of a cloth, to make it look like frieze. This is rendered probable by Span frisar, to frizzle, to raise the nap on frieze; from Span. frisa, frieze. = 0. F. frize, to raise the nap on frieze; from Span. frisa, frieze. = 0. F. frize, 'the cloth called frise;' Cot. See Frieze (1). Der. frizz-le. [†] FRO, adv. from. (Scand.) M. E. fra, fro, also used as a prep. FUNNEL, an instrument for pouring in liquids into vessels; an air-tube. (W.?) In Ben Jonson, Discoveries, sect. headed Pracipiendi modi. And in Levins' Dict., ed. 1570. Perhaps borrowed from W. ffynel, an air-hole, vent, allied to W. ffyned, respiration, breathing; fun, breath. We find also Breton founil, a funnel for pouring in liquids. [\*] ¶ The etymology is uncertain; the Lat. word for the same thing is infundibulum, but it is a long way from this form to E. funnel. Infundibulum is derived from Lat. in, in; and fundere, to pour. FUR, short hair of animals. (F., -O. Low G.) The orig. sense is 'protection.' M. E. forre; whence forred (or furred) kodes = furred hoods; P. Plowman, B. vi. 271. Spelt for in King Alisaunder, 3295. = O. F. forre, furre, a sheath, case; cf. Span. forro, lining of clothes; Ital. fodero, lining, fur, scabbard.  $\beta$ . From an O. Low G. source, preserved in Goth. fodr, a scabbard, sheath (John, xviii. 11); and in Icel. fidr, lining. The cognate High German word is futter. y. Both G. futter and Icel. foor also have the sense of fodder, and are cognate with E. fodder; so that fur and fodder are doublets. The connecting sense is seen in the  $\checkmark$  PA, to cherish, protect, feed; (Goldsmith, Animated Nature, b. iv. c. 3), furr-i-ery. [†] FURBELOW, a flounce. (Dialectal F.) FURLONG, one-eighth of a mile. (E.) M. E. furlong, four-long; P. Plowman, B. v. 5; Chaucer, C. T. 11484. – A.S. furlang, Luke, xxiv. 13. The lit. sense is 'furrow-long,' or the length of a furrow. It thus came to mean the length of a field, and to be used as a measure of length. Cf. 'And wolde nat neyhle him by nyne londes lengthe ' = and would not approach him by the length of nine lands (i.e. fields); P. Plowman, B. xx. 58. = A.S. furk, a furrow; and lang, long. S. fyrs, Ælfred's tr. of Boethius, lib. iii. met. 1; c. xxiii. + Gael. press, a briar, bush, shrub. ¶ As the E. f answers to Celtic p, I have little hesitation in linking the above words. It follows that furze and briar are doublets; see Briar. [\*] FUSCOUS, brown, dingy. (L.) 'Sad and fuscous colours;' Burke, On the Sublime, s. 16. – Lat. fuscus, dark, dusky; by change of -us into -ous, as in arduous, strenuous. β. Most likely fuscus stands for fur-scus, and is allied to furuus, brown, and to E. brown. See Brown. See Curtius, i. 378.

FUSE (1), to melt by heat. (L.) In Johnson; but the verb is quite modern, and really due to the far older words (in E.), viz. fus-ible (Chaucer, C. T. 16325), fus-il, i. e. capable of being melted (Milton, P. L. xi. 573), fus-ion (Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 1. § 11); all founded upon Lat, fusus. – Lat. fusus, pp. of fundere, to pour, melt; from the base FUD. + Gk.  $\chi \neq \omega$ , for  $\chi \neq \omega$  (base  $\chi \psi$ ), to pour, + Goth. giutan, to pour (base GUT). All from  $\checkmark$  GHU, to pour; of which the extended form GHUD (= Goth. GUT) appears in Latin. Der. fus-ible, from O. F. fusible, 'fusible' (Cot.), from Late Lat. fusibilis\*, not recorded in Ducange; fus-i-bili-ty; fus-ion, from F. form of Lat. fusionem, acc. of fusio, a melting; fus-il (Milton, as ¶ From the same root above), from Lat. fusilis, molten, fluid. are found (2), con-found, con-fuse, dif-fuse, ef-fus-ion, in-fuse, pro-fus-ion, re-fund. suf-fuse, trans-fuse ; fut-ile ; also chyme, chyle, gush, gut.

FUSE (2), a tube with combustible materials for discharging shells, &c. (F., -L.) Also spelt fusee, and even fusel. Fuse is short for fusee, and fusee is a corruption of fusel, or (more correctly) fusil, which is the oldest form of the word. In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715, we find: 'Fuse, Fuse, or Fuse, a pipe filled with wild fire, and put into the touch-hole of a bomb.' Also: 'Fusee or Fusi, a kind of short musket.' See further under Fusil (1).

FUSEE (1), a fuse or match. (F., -L.) A corruption of Fusil (1), See the quotation under Fuse (2). q. v.

FUSEE (2), a spindle in a watch. (F., -L.) 'Fusee or Fuzy of a watch, that part about which the chain or string is wound; Kersey, ed. 1715. - O. F. fusée, 'a spoole-ful or spindle-full of thread, yarn, &c.; Cot. - Low Lat. fusata, a spindle-ful of thread; orig. fem. pp. of Low Lat. fusare, to use a spindle. - Lat. fusus, a spindle.  $\beta$ . Prob. allied to Lat. funda, Gk.  $\sigma\phi\epsilon\nu\delta\sigma\eta$ , a sling; and, further, to Skt. spandana, a quivering, throbbing (whence the sense of jerking), and to Skt. spand, to throb.  $-\checkmark$  SPAD, to tremble, vibrate, swing. See Curtius, i. 306; Fick, i. 831. ¶ Observe the change in meaning, which has reverted from the 'spindle-ful' to the spindle itself. Der. fusil (2), q. v.

FUSIL (1), a light musket.  $(F_{.,-}L_{.})$  The name has been transferred from the steel or fire-lock to the gun itself. In Kersey's Dict.; see Fuse (2).-O. F. fusil, 'a fire-steele for a tinder-box; Cot.; the same word as Ital. focile, a steel for striking fire.-Low Lat. focile, a steel for kindling fire.-Lat. focus, a hearth. See Focus. Der. fusil-ier, fusil-eer Explained in Blount's FUSIL (2), a spindle, in heraldry. (L.) Gloss., ed. 1674.-Lat. fusillus *, not found, but formed as a dimin. from fusus, a spindle ; spelt fusellus in Ducange. See Fusee (2).

FUSIL (3), easily molten. (L.) See Fuse (1). FUSS, haste, flurry. (E.) The sb. corresponding to M. E. fus, anxious, willing, ready, eager. And fus to follshenn heore wille' = and ready to follow their wish; Ormulum, 9065. - A. S. fus [for funs], prompt, quick; Cædmon, ed. Thorpe, p. 10, l. 10, + Icel. fuss, eager for, willing. + O. H. A. S. findan, to find. Find. <sup>11</sup>ii. 173. ¶ Thus fuss is really 'anxiety to find.' See Find. Der. fuss.y. fuss-i-ness. [†] FUST (1), to become mouldy or rusty. (F., -L.) 'To fust in us unused; 'Hamlet, iv. 4. 39. 'I mowld or fust as come or bread does, je moisis; 'Palsgrave. Made from the form fusted, which is a lit. translation of O. F. fuste, 'fusty, tasting of the cask, smelling of the vessel; ' Cot. - O. F. fuste, 'a cask,' Cot.; the same word as O.F. fust, 'any staffe, stake, stocke, stump, trunke, or log; . . . also fusti-ness;' id. [The cask was so named from its resemblance to the trunk of a tree.] - Lat. fustem, acc. of fustis, a thick knobbed stick, cudgel; connected with Lat. fendere •, to strike, used in the compounds defendere, offendere; cf. infensus, infestus. - & DHAN, to strike; whence also Gk. Ochrew, to strike. ¶ From the same root we have de fend, of-fend, in-fest; also dint, dent. Der. fus-ty, fust-iness; and see below.

FUST (2), the shaft of a column.  $(F_{.,-}L_{.})$  'Fust, the shaft, or body of a pillar; 'Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715.-O.F. fust, a stump, trunk; Cot.-Lat. fustem; as in the case of the word above. Der.

fust-ig-ate, q. v. FUSTIAN, a kind of coarse cloth. (F., - Ital., - Low L., -Egypt.) In early use. M. E. Justane. 'The mes-hakele of medeme fustane' = the mass-cloth [made] of common fustian; O. E. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 162. Also fustion, Chaucer, C.T. 75. - O.F. fustaine; Roque-fort, Cot. - Ital. fustagno. - Low Lat. fustaneum, fustanium. - Arab. fustait, another name of Cairo, in Egypt; whence the stuff first came. The Arab. fustait also means 'a tent made of goat's hair.' See Rich. Arab. Dict. p. 1090. ¶ Introduced into French in the middle ages, through Genoese commerce, from Ital. fustagno (Brachet).

FUSTIGATE, to cudgel. (L.) 'Fustigating him for his faults;' Fuller's Worthies, Westmorland (R.) 'Six fustigations;' Fox, Martyrs, p. 609 (R.) - Late Lat. fustigare, to cudgel (White and Riddle).-Lat. fust-, base of fustis, a cudgel; and -ig-, weakened form from agere, to drive. See Fust (2). Der. fustigat-ion.

FUSTY, mouldy. In Shak. Cor. i. 9. 7. See Fust (1). FUTILE, trifling, vain. (F, -L.) Orig. signifying 'pouring forth,' esp. pouring forth vain talk, talkative. 'As for talkers and futile persons, they are commonly vain;' Bacon, Essay VI. -O. F. futile, 'light, vain;' Cot.-Lat. futilis, that which easily pours forth; also, vain, empty, futile. The u is long, because futilis stands for fud-tilis, formed with suffix -tilis from the base fud-; cf. fudi, pt. t. of fundere, to pour. The base fud is an extension of the base fu-to pour. - (GHU, to pour; see Fuse. Der. futile-ly, futil-i-ty. FUTTOCKS, certain timbers in a ship. (E.) 'Futtocks, the compassing timbers in a ship, that make the breadth of it : ' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. Origin uncertain; it is thought to be a corruption of foot-hooks. The first syllable is, no doubt, the prov. E. fut, a foot. ¶ Called foot-stocks in Florio's Ital. Dict., s. v. stamine. If hence corrupted, the corruption is considerable.

FUTURE, about to be. (F., -L.) M. E. future; Chaucer, C. T. to be; future part, from base fu-, to be; cf. fu-i, I was. - & BHU, to be; See Bo. Der. future i-ty, Shak. Oth. iii. 4. 117; future-ly,

Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 1. 174 (Leopold Shakspere). FUZZ-BALL, a spongy fungus. (E.) Spelt fusseballe in Min-sheu, ed. 1627. A fuzz-ball is a light, spongy ball resembling (at first sight) a mushroom. Cf. prov. E. fuzzy, light and spongy; fozy, spongy (Halliwell). Of English origin. Cf. Du. 1005, spongy. Perhaps also allied to Icel. fauskr, a rotten dry log. ¶ Also called puckfiste, as in Cotgrave (s. v. vesse de loup); but this is from foist.

GABARDINE, GABERDINE, a coarse frock for men. (Span., -C.) In Shak. Merch. i. 3. 113. - Span. gabardina, a coarse frock. Cf. Ital. gavardina (Florio); and O. F. galvardine, 'a gaberdine; 'Cot. An extended form from Span, gaban, a great coat with hood and close sleeves; cf. Ital. gabanio, 'a shepheards cloake' (Florio), Ital. gabanella, 'a gaberdine, or shepheards cloake' (id.); O. F. gaban, 'a cloake of felt for rainy weather, a gaberdine;' Cot. Connected with Span. cabaza, a large cloak with hood and sleeves, and Span. cabaña, a cabin, hut; and of Celtic origin. See Cabin, and Cape (1). GABBLE, to chatter, prattle. (Scand.) In Shak. Temp. i. 2. 356. Formed, as a frequentative, with suffix -le, from M. E. gabben, to talk idly, once in common use; see Chaucer, C. T. 15072; P. Plowman, B. iii. 179. The M. E. gabben is esp. used in the sense 'to lie,' or 'to delude.' Of Scand. origin; the A. S. gabban, due to fuss, eager for, willing, + 0. H. G. funs, ready, willing.  $\beta$ . Hence futs, eager for, willing, + 0. H. G. funs, ready, willing.  $\beta$ . Hence the true form is funs; and this again is for funds, from A. S. fundian, to strive after, Grein, i. 357. And again, fundian is a derivative of and probably allied to Irish cab, gob, the mouth; cf. Irish cabaca, Gael. goback, garrulous. See Gape, Gobble; and compare Babble. ¶ Otherwise in Fick, iii. 101. Der. gabbl-er, gabbl-ing. Doublet, jabber.

GABION, a bottomless basket filled with earth, as a defence against the fire of an enemy. (F., - Ital., - L.) ' Gabions, great baskets 5 or 6 foot high, which being filled with earth, are placed upon batteries; Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. Also found in Minsheu. -O. F. gabion, 'a gabion; 'Cot.-Ital. gabbione, a gabion, large cage; augmentative form of gabbia, a cage. The Ital. gabbia also means 'the cage or top of the mast of a ship whereunto the shrouds are fastened ' (Florio); the Span. gavia is used in the same sense. The Ital. gabbia, in the latter sense, is also spelt gaggia, which is the same word with F. cage and E. cage.  $\beta$ . All from Lat. cauea, a hollow place, cage, den, coop. - Lat. cauus, hollow. See Cage, Cave, and Gaol. ¶ Thus gabion is the augmentative of cage. Der. gabionn-ade (F. gabionnade, Cot.; from Ital. gab-bionata, an intrenchment formed of gabions).

CABLE, a peak of a house-top. (F., -M. H. G., -C.) M. E. gable, Chaucer, C. T. 3573; P. Plowman, B. iii. 49. -O. F. gable, gable, Chaucer, C. 1. 3573; F. Flowman, B. III. 49.-05. F. gable, a rare word cited by Stratmann; cf. Low Lat. gabulum, a gable, front of a building; Ducange.-M. H. G. gabele, gabel (G. gabel), a fork; cf. M. H. G. gebel, gibel (G. gibbel), a gable; O. H. G, kapala, kabala, a fork; gipil, gibil, a gable. + Icel. gafl, a gable. + Dan. gavl, a gable. + Swed. gafvel, a gable; gaffel, a fork. + Mceso-Goth. gibla, a gable, pinnacle; Luke, iv. 9. + Du. gevel, a gable. 6. The Travonic form is CABALA (Fick, iii 100): concernently a dimin form Teutonic form is GABALA (Fick, iii. 100); apparently a dimin. form from a base GAB; but the whole word appears to be borrowed from Celtic. Irish gabkal, a fork, gable; Gael. gobkal, W. gafl, a fork. See Gaff. Der. gable-end; and see gaff.

GABY, a simpleton. (Scand.) A dialectal word; see Halliwell. - Icel. gapi, a rash, reckless man: cf. gapamuor (lit. gape-mouthed), a gaping, heedless fellow. - Icel. gapa, to gape; cf. Dan. gabe, to

GAD (1), a wedge of steel, goad. (Scand.) 'A gad of steel; Titus Andron. iv. I. 103. Also 'upon the gad,' i. e. upon the goad, suddenly; K. Lear, i. 2. 26. Der. gad-fly, i. e. sting-fly; and see gad (2). GAD (2), to ramble idly. (Scand.) 'Where have you been gadding?' Romeo, iv. 2. 16. 'Gadde abrode, vagari;' Levins, 7.

47. The orig, sense was to drive, or drive about. - Icel. gadda, to goad. - Icel. gaddr, a goad. See above. ¶ I see no connection with M. E. gadeling, an associate, for which see Gather. [†] GAFF, a light fishing-spear; also, a sort of boom. (F.,-C.) The gaff of a ship takes its name from the fork-shaped end which rests against the mast. 'Gaff, an iron hook to pull great fishes into a ship; also, an artificial spur for a cock;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. -O. F. gaffe, 'an iron hook wherewith sea-men pull great fishes into their ships;' Cot. Cf. Span. and Port. gafa, a hook, gaff. R. Of Celtic origin. - Irish gaf, gafa, a hook; with which cf. Irish gaokal, a fork, gabhla, a spear, lance ; Welsh caff, a grasp, grapple, a sort of Gable.  $\beta$ . The root appears in Gael. and Irish gable, to take, receive, Welsh cafael, to hold, get, grasp; cf. Lat. capere, to take, which is cognate with E. have -4 KAP, to take, grasp. Der.

GAFFEB, an old man, grandfather. (Hybrid; F. and E.) 'And gaffer madman;' Beaum. and Fletcher, The Ceptain, iii. 5. Simi-larly, gammer is a familiar name for an old woman, as in the old play of 'Gammer Gurton's Needle.' The words are corruptions of gramfer and grammer, which are the West of England forms of grandfather and grandmother; see Halliwell. T Compare gomman and gommer, which are similar corruptions of good man and good mother; also given in Halliwell. See Grandfather and Grandmother. For loss of r, see Gooseberry.

GAG, to stop the mouth forcibly, to silence. (C.?) In Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 5. 94; v. 384. M. E. gaggen, to suffocate; Prompt. Parv.-W. cegio, to mouth, to choke ; ceg, the mouth, throat, an opening. Possibly related to Irish gaggack, stammering; but this is not clear.

GAIN (1), profit, advantage. (Scand.) M. E. gain, gein; spelt gain, Chaucer, C. T. 536, ed. Tyrwhitt (but the reading is bad, not agreeing with the best MSS.); gein, St. Marherete. ed. Cockayne, p. 18, l. 3; gazhen, Ormulum, 13923. - Icel. gagn, gain, advantage, u-e. + Swed. gagn, benefit, profit. + Dan. gavn, gain. β. Not found B. Not found in German; but the root-verb ga-geigan, to gain, occurs in Mœso-Gothic, Mk. viii. 36, Lu. ix. 25, 1 Cor. ix. 19; suggesting a base GAG, not found elsewhere. Y. Hence was formed the (obsolete) M. E. verb gainen, to profit, be of use, avail, gen. used impersonally; see Chancer, C. T. 1178, &c. This answers to Icel. and Swed. gagna, to help, avail, Dan. gavne, to benefit. See further below. Der.

gain ful. gain-ful-ly, gain-ful ness, gain-less, gain-less-ness. GAIN (2), to acquire, get, win. (Scand.) Really a derivative of the sb. above, and independent of the F. gagner, with which it was easily confused, owing to the striking similarity in form and sense. [Thus Cotgrave gives 'gaigner, to gain.'] Not in early use. 'Yea, though he gaine and cram his purse with crounes;' Gascoigne, Fruites of Warre, st. 69. That Gascoigne took the verb from the sb. is evident; for he has just above, in st. 66: 'To get a gaine by any trace or kinde.' See Gain (1). β. Still, the F. word probably influenced the use of the pre-existing E. one; and superseded the old use of the M. E. gainen, to profit. ¶ The etymology of F. gagner, O. F. gaigner (Cotgrave), gaagnier, gaaignier (Burguy) = Ital. guadagnare, is from the O. H. G. weidanjan*, not found, but equivalent to O. H. G. weidenon, to pasture, which was the orig. sense, and is still preserved in the F. sb. gagnage, pasturage, pasture-land. -O. H.G. weida (G. weide), pasturage, pasture-ground; cf. M. H. G. weiden ; to pasture, hunt. + Icel. weidr, hunting, fishing, the chase ; veida, to catch, to hunt. + A.S. wάδu, a wandering, journey, a hunt ; Grein, ii. 636. Cf. Lat. uenari (=uetnari), to hunt. Perhaps from WI, to go, drive; cf. Skt. vi, to go, approach, sometimes used as a substitute for aj, to drive. See Fick, iii. 302; i. 430. GAINLY, suitable, gracious. (Scand.) Obsolete, except in un-

GAINLY, suitable, gracious. (Scand.) Obsolete, except in un-gainly, now meaning awkward. In Allit. Poems, ed. Murris, C. 83; B. 728. Formed, with suffix -ly, from Icel. gegn, ready, serviceable, kind, good. See Ungainly

GAINSAY, to speak against. (E.) In the A. V. Luke, xxi. 15. M. E. geinseien, a rare word. 'That thei not zein-seye my sonde'= that they may not gainsay my message; Cursor Mundi, 5769 (Trinity MS.). The Cotton MS. reads: 'bat bai noght sai agains mi (Trinity MS.). The Cotton MS. reads: 'bat pai noght sai agains mi sand.'  $\beta$ . The latter part of the word is E. say, q. v. The prefix is the A. S. gegn, against, as occurring in the sb. gegnewide, a speech against anything; better known in the comp. ongegn, ongedn, signifying again or against. See Again. Der. gainsay-er, A. V. Titus, i. 9; gainsay-ing. A. V. Acts, x. 29. GAIRISH, GARISH, gaudy; see Garish.

GAIT, manner of walking. (Scand.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 102. A particular use of M. E. gate, a way. And goth him forth, and in his gate' = and goes forth, and in his way; Gower, C. A. iii. 196.-Icel. geta, a way, path, road; Swed. gata, a street; Dan. gade, a street. + Goth. gatwo, a street. + G. gasse, a street. See Gate. ¶ It is clear that the word was thus used, because popularly connected with the verb to go; at the same time, the word is not really derived from that verb, but from the verb to get.

GAITER, a covering for the ancle. (F., -M. H. G.) Modern. Not in Johnson's Dict. -F. guêtre, a gaiter ; formerly spelt guestre. Guestres, startups, high shooes, or gamashes for countrey folkes; Cot. Marked by Brachet as 'of unknown origin.' β. However, the form of the word shews it to be of Teutonic origin; and prob. from the same source as M. H. G. wester, a child's chrisom-cloth (G. westerhend) and the Goth. wasti, clothing; from & WAS, to clothe; see Vesture, Vest.

see Vesture, Vest. GALA, pomp, festivity. (F.,-Ital.) Perhaps only in the phrase 'a gala-day.' Modern; not in Johnson.-F. gala, borrowed from Ital. gala, ornament, finery, festive attire. Cf. Ital. di gala, merrily; closely connected with Ital. galante, gay, lively. See Gallant. Der. gala-day; = F. jour de gala, Span. and Port. dia de gala. GALAXY, the 'milky way' in the sky; a splendid assemblage. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) 'See yonder, lo, the galaxie Which that men clepe the milky way;' Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, ii. 428.-O.F. galaxie, 'the milky way:' Cot - Lat. galaxian acc. of galaxias.-GK. yadafias. the GALE, a strong wind. (Scand.?) In Shak. Temp. v. 314. To be explained from Dan. gal, mad, furious; the Norweg. galen is particularly used of storm and wind, as ein galen storm, eit galet veer, particularly used of storm and wind, as the game definition of the storm (Aasen). We say, 'it blows a gale.' Cf. Icel. gola, a breeze findle gale a breeze from the fells.  $\beta$ . The Icel. gr' a breeze, fjall-gola, a breeze from the fells.

GALEATED.

meted. - Lat. galea, a helmet. GALIOF, a small galley; see Galliot.

GALL (1), bile, bitterness. (Ε.) M. E. galle; P. Plowman, B. xvi. 155.-O. Northumb. galla, A S. gealla; Matt. xxvii. 34. + Du. gal. + Icel. gall. + Swed. galla. + Dan. galde (with excrescent d). + G. galle. + Lat. fel. + Gk. χολή. β. From the same root as Gk. Xhapo's, greenish, Lat. helunis, yellowish, and E. yellow and green; so that gall was named from its yellowish colour; Curtius, i. 250. See Green, Gold, and Yellow. Der. gall bladder.

GALL (2), to rub a sore place, to vex. (F.,-L.) 'Let the galled jade wince;' Hamlet, iii. 2. 253. M.E. gallen. 'The hors ... was ... galled upon the bak;' Gower, C. A. ii. 46.-O. F. galler, of the skin; ' id. = mod. F. gale, a scab on fruit, properly a hardness of skin, and thence a cutaneous disorder which makes the skin hard.-Lat. callus, hard thick skin; 'found in sense of the itch in medieval Latin;' Brachet. See Callous. Der. gall, sb., Chaucer, C. T. 6522.

GALL (3), GALL-NUT, a vegetable excrescence produced by insects. (F., -L.) In Shak.; 'Though ink be made of gall;' Cymb. i. 1. 101.-O. F. galle, 'the fruit called a gall;' Cot.-Lat.

cymo. 1. 1. 101. -0. F. gaile, 'the truit called a gall;' Cot. - Lat. galla, an oak-apple, gall nut. GALLLANT, gay, splendid, brave, courteous. (F., - M. H. G.) 'Good and gallant ship;' Shak. Temp. v. 237. 'Like young lusty galantes;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 105 (R). -0. F. gallant; Cotgrave gives 'gallant homme, a gallant, goodly fellow;' properly spelt galant (with one I), as in mod. F.  $\beta$ . Galant is the pres. part, of O. F. galer, to rejoice; Cotgrave has: 'galler le bon temps, to make merry, to pass the time pleasantly.' = O. F. gale, show, mirth, festivity; the same word as Ital., Span., and Port. gala, ornament,  $\gamma$ . Of Teutonic origin; from a base GAL, which festive attire. appears in Goth. gailjan, to make to rejoice, 2 Cor. ii. 2; A.S. gál, Du. geil, lascivious, luxurious; O. Sax. gél, mirthful; I.cl. geil, a fit of gaiety; M. H. G. geil, mirthful, mirth; M. H. G. geilen, to make merry. It is a little difficult to tell the exact source of the F. word; it is gen. referred to the M. H.G. δ. The Icel. galinn, enchanted, mad, voluptuous, is pp. of gala. to crow, sing; and leads us to the Toutonic base GAL, to sing, as in the E. nightingale, q.v. See Galo. Der. gallant, sb., whence also gallant, vb.; gallant-ly, gallant-ness; also gallant-r-y (Spectator, no. 4) from O. F. gallanterie, 'gallant-ness,' Cot. Also see gala, gall-oon, gall-ery. [+] GALLEON, a large galley. (Span.) Cotgrave explains O. F.

gallion as 'a gallion, an armada, a great ship of warre;' but the word is Spanish.-Span. galeon, a galleon, Spanish armed ship of burden ; formed, with augmentative suffix -on, from Low Lat. galea, a galley. See Galley.

GALLERY, a balcony, long covered passage. (F., - Ital.) 'The long galleries;' Surrey, tr. of Virgil's Æneid, b. ii. l. 691. - O. F. gallerie, galerie, 'a gallerie, or long roome to walke in; also mirth, glee, good sport;' Cot. - Ital. galleria, a gallery (Brachet). - Low Lat. galeria, a long portico, gallery; Ducange. β. Uncertain; perhaps from Low Lat. galare, to rejoice, amuse oneself; the orig. sense of Low Lat. galeria being, probably, a place of amusement, according to Cotgrave's definition. See Gallant, and Gala.

GALLEY, a long, low-built ship. (F.) In early use. M. E. galeie; King Horn, ed. Lumby, 185. – O. F. galie (Burguy); gallée (Cotgrave). – Low Lat. galea, a galley. Of unknown origin; see Diez. Dor. galley-slave; see galle-on, galli-as, galli-ol. GALLIARD, a lively dance. (Span. - C.?) In Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 3. 127, 137. - Span. gallarda [in which ll is pronounced as ly], a kind of lively Spanish dance. - Span. gallardo, pleasant, gay, lively. β. Of uncertain origin; Diez rejects a connection with gala and gallant (Span. galante) on account of the double l and the F. form gailland. The O. F. gaillard meant 'valiant' or 'bold;' perhaps of Celtic origin. Cf. Bret. galloud, power, galloudek, strong; Com. gal-liudoc, able; Irish and Gael. galack, valiant, brave; W. gallad, able, gall, energy. Cf. Lith. galà, I am able. GALLIAS, a sort of galley. (F., -It.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, ii. 380.-O. F. galeace, 'a galleass;' Cot.-Ital. galeazza, a heavy, low-built galley. - Ital. and Low Lat. galea, a galley. See Galley. ¶ On the termination -ace, see Cutlass. GALLIGASKINS, large hose or trousers. (F., - Ital.) a. Cot-

GALEATED, helmeted. (L.) Botanical.-Lat. galeatus, hel-Greguesque. Y. And further, Greguesque is borrowed from Ital. Greekesco, Greekish, a form given by Florio; which is derived (with suffix -esco = E. -iek) from Ital. Greco, Greek. 8. Finally, it seems probable that gallogascoin is nothing but a derivative of Ital. Greehesco, a name given (as shewn by the evidence) to a particular kind of hose or breeches originally worn at Venice. The corruption seems to have been due to a mistaken notion on the part of some of the wearers of galligaskins, that they came, not from Venice, ¶ This suggestion is due to Wedgwood; it but from Gascony. would seem that galliga kins = garisgascans = garguesquans; where the suffix -an is the same as in Greci-an, &cc.

GALLINACEOUS, pertaining to a certain order of birds. (L.) Modern. Englished from Lat. gallinaceus, belonging to poultry. Formed, with suffix -ac-, from Lat. gallina, a hen. - Lat. gallus, a cock. Root uncertain; possibly from & GAR, to cry aloud; Curtius, i. 218

GALLIOT, a small galley. (F.) M. E. galiote, Minot's Poems, Expedition of Edw. III to Brabant, l. 81 (Spec. of Eng. ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 129). - O. F. galiote, 'a galliot;' Cot. - Low Lat. galeota, a small galley; dimin. of Low Lat. galea, a galley. Cf. Ital. galeotta, a galliot. See Galley. GALLIPOT, a small glazed earthen pot. (Du.)

In Beaum. and Fletcher, Nice Valour, iii. 1. 43. A corruption of O. Du, gleypot. Gleywerk, glazed work; een gleypot, a gallipot; 'Sewel's Du. Dict. Similarly earthen tiles were called galley-tiles. Wedgwood quotes from Stow: 'About the year 1570, I. Andries and I. Janson, potters, came from Antwerp and settled in Norwich, where they followed their trade, making galley-tiles and apothecaries vessels ' [gallipots].  $\beta$ . Again, Du, gley (O. Du, gleye, shining potter's clay, Hexham)

B. Again, Du. giay (O. Du. giaye, siming potters citay, Freatman) appears to be N. Friesic gläy, shining (Outzen), cognate with G. glau, polished, smooth, and with E. glad. See Glad and Pot. GALLION, a measure holding 4 quarts. (F.) M. E. galon, galun, galoun; P. Plowman, B. v. 224, 343; Chaucer, C. T. 10973. Spelt galun in King Horn, ed. Lumby, 1123.–O. F. gallon, jalon, jalon, a gallon; Roquefort:=Low Lat. galona (also galo), an English measure for liveride. Ducanga A The suffix and is augmenta. β. The suffix -on is augmentameasure for liquids; Ducange. tive; and a shorter form appears in mod. F. jale, a bowl, which evidently stands for an older form gale, just as jalon is for galon. Thus the sense is 'a large bowl.' γ. Of unknown origin; the Lat. gaulus (itself from Gk. γαῦλος, a milk-pail, a bucket) has been y. Of unknown origin; the suggested; but the diphthong is against it. See also Gill (3).

GALLOON, a kind of lace or narrow ribbon. (F., - Span.) The compound galloon-laces occurs in Beaum, and Fletcher, Philaster, v. 4.46. Cotgrave has: 'Galon, galloon-lace.' - F. galon, as in Cotgrave (like E. balloon from F. ballon). - Span. galon, galloon, lace; orig. any kind of finery for festive occasions. - Span. gala, parade, finery, court-dress; the suffix -on being augmentative, as in balloon. See Gala. ¶ We find also Ital. gallone, galloon; but it does not seem to be an old word, being omitted in Florio's Dict.

GALLOP, to ride very fast. (F., -O. Flemish.) M. E. galopen (with one l); King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 461. 'Styll he galoped forth right;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 140. We also find the form walopen, in the Romance of Partenay, ed. Skeat, 4827 (and note on p. 259); and the pres. pt. walopande, Morte Arthur, ed. Brock, 2827. – O. F. galoper, to gallop; of which an older form must have been waloper, as shewn by the derivative walopin in Roquefort, spelt galopia in mod. F. Of Flemish origin. = O. Flemish walop, a gallop. Delfortrie, in his Analogie des Langues Flamande, Alle-mande, et Anglaise, p. 379, cites the line: 'Ende loopen enen hoghen walop'= and run at a fast gallop, from the Roman van Walewein, l. 1517.  $\beta$ . Mr. Wedgwood is certainly right in saying that the original signification of wallop is the boiling of a pot; it is retained in the familiar E. potwalloper, a pot-boiler, for which see Webster's Dict. The name is taken from the sound made by a horse gallop-ing compared to the walloping or boiling of a pot; Wedgwood. y. The explanation of the suffix is not quite clear, but perhaps it may be the Flem. and Du. op, E. up. 8. However, the word is a mere extension from the O. Low G. wallen, to boil, amply vouched for by the A.S. weallan, O. Friesic walla, O. Sax. wallan, to boil; cf. Du. wellen, E. well, to spout up, spring up (as water). From the Teut. base WAL, to turn; and the Aryan & WAR, to wind, turn; whence also Lat. wol-uere, to roll, Skt. wara, a turn; E. wal-k (q.v.); and esp. note Skt. valg, to gallop, to go by leaps, to bounce, to move in different ways, to fluctuate; and Skt. val, to move to and fro. ¶ The existence of Skt. valg, to gallop, suggests that the final -op may be a mere corruption of a final guttural added to the base, just as in E. wal-k. The usual derivation of gallop from Goth. ga-to astonish; 'ba weard ic agælwed' - then was I astonished; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxiv. § 5; lib. iii. pr. 10. GALLOWAY, a nag, pony. (Scotland.)

So called from Galloway in Scotland; the word occurs in Drayton's Polyolbion, s. 3. See the quotation in Richardson establishing the etymology GALLOW-GLASS, a heavy-armed foot-soldier. (Irish.) In Macbeth, i. 2. 13. - Irish galloglack, a servant, a heavy-armed soldier. -Irish giola, a man-servant, lacquey; and gleac-aim, I wrestle, struggle. (Mahn.) See Gillie. GALLOWS, an instrument for hanging criminals. (E.) M. E.

galwes, Chancer, C. T. 6240. – A. S. galga, gealga, a cross, gibbet, gallows; Grein, i. 492. Hence was formed M. E. galwe, by the usual change from -ga to -we (and later still to -ow); and it became usual to employ the word in the plural galwes, so that the mod. E. gallows is also, strictly speaking, a plural form. + Icel. galgi, the gallows, a gibbet. + Dan. and Swed. galge, a gibbet. + Du. galg. + Goth. galga, a cross. + G. galgen. Root unknown. GALOCHE, a kind of shoe or slipper. (F., -Low L., -Gk.) M. E. galocke, Chaucer, C. T. 10869; P. Plowman, B. xviii. 14. - F.

galocke, 'a woodden shoee or patten, made all of a piece, without any latchet\_or tie of leather, and worne by the poor clowne in winter;' Cot.-Low Lat. calopedia, a clog, wooden shoe; see the letter-changes explained in Brachet.-Gk. καλοπόδιον, dimin. of καλόπου», ακλάπουν, a shoe-maker's last. – Gk. κάλο-, stem of κάλον, wood; and πούν (gen. ποδ-όν), a foot.  $\beta$ . The orig. sense of κάλον is fuel, wood for burning; from Gk. καίεν, to burn. The Gk. πούν is cognate with E. foot.

GALVANISM, a kind of electricity. (Ital.) Named from Galvani, of Bologna in Italy, inventor of the galvanic battery in A. v. 1791. Der. Hence also galvani-c, galvani-se GAMBADO, a kind of legging. (Span. ?-L.) 'Gambadoes, much wome in the west, whereby, while one rides on horseback, his leggs are in a coach, clean and warme;' Fuller's Worthies, Cornwall (R.) - Span. (or Ital.) gamba, the leg; see Gambol, of which it is nearly a doublet. The form of the suffix is rather Span. than Italian.

GAMBLE, to play for money. (E.) Comparatively a modern word. It occurs in Cowper, Tirocinium, 246. Formed, by suffix -le (which has a frequentative force), from the verb to game, the b being merely excrescent; so that gamble = gamm-le. This form, gamm-le or gam-le, has taken the place of the M. E. gamenien or gamenen, to play at games, to gamble, which occurs in King Ali-saunder, ed. Weber, 5461. – A. S. gamenian, to play at a game, in the Liber Scintillarum (unprinted); Bosworth. – A. S. gamen, a game. See Game. Der. gambl-er.

GAMBOGE, a gum-resin, of a bright yellow colour. (Asiatic.) In Johnson's Dict. 'Brought from India by the Dutch, about A. D. 1600; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. The word is a corruption of Cambodia, the name of the district where it is found. Cambodia is in the Anamese territory, not far from the gulf of Siam. GAMBOL, a frisk, caper. (F., -Ital., -L.) In Shak. Hamlet, v. 1. 209. Older spellings are gambold, Phaer, tr. of Virgil, Æn. vi. (1. 643 of Lat. text); gambaud, or gambaud, Fnaer, tr. of Virgli, Azh. vi. (l. 643 of Lat. text); gambaud, or gambaud, Skelton, Ware the Hawk, 65; gambauld, Udal, Flowers of Lat. Speaking, fol. 72 (R.)=O. F. gambade, 'a gamboll;' Cot.=Ital. gambata, a kick (Brachet).=Ital. gamba, the leg; the same word as F. jambe, O. F. gambe. β. Re-formed in Brachet to late 1 at the state of the same word as F. jambe, O. F. gambe. β. Referred in Brachet to late Lat. gamba, a hoof, or perhaps a joint of the leg (Vegetius), which is no doubt the same word ; but the true Lat. form of the base is rather camp. (as suggested in Diez), corresponding to Gk. xaµwf, a bending; with reference to the flexure of the leg. Cf. Gael. cam, crooked; W. cam. crooked, also a step, stride, pace. – KAMP, to move to and fro, to bend; cf. Skt. kamp, to move to  $\P$  The spelling with and fro. See Fick, i. 519; Curtius, ii. 70. I seems to have been due to the confusion of the F. suffix -ade with F. suffix -aude, the latter of which stands for an older -alde. Hence gambade was first corrupted to gambaude (Skelton); then written gambauld (Udal) or gambold (Phaer); and lastly gambol (Shake-speare), with loss of final d. Der. gambol, vb., Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 1. Ger Brachet translates gamba in Vegetius by 'thigh,' and 168. quotes the passage ; it rather means ' a joint,' either of the thigh or of the pastern of a horse.

GAME, sport, amusement. (E.) In Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. i. 1. 240. M. E. game, Chaucer, C. T. 1808; older form gamen, spelt gammyn and gamyn in Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat, iii. 465, ix. 466, &c. - A. S. gamen, gomen, a game, sport; Grein, i. 366. + O. Sax. gaman. + Icel. gaman. + Dan. gammen, mirth, merriment. + O. Swed. gamman, joy (Ihre). + O. H. G. gaman, M. H. G. gamen, joy. Root unknown. Der. game, vb., gam-ing ; game-some, M. E. gamsum (= gamen-sum), Will. of Palerne, 4193; game-ster (Merry Wives, iii. 1. 37), where the suffix -ster, orig. feminine, has a sinister sense, Koch, Engl. really the M. E. gamen preserved; see Backgammon and Game. GAMUT, the musical scale. (Hybrid; F.,-Gk., and L.) In In Shak. Tam. Shrew, iii. 1. 67, 71. A compound word, made up from O. F. game or gamme, and ut. 1. Gower has gamme in the sense of a musical scale; C. A. iii. 90.–0. F. game, gamme, 'gamut, in musick;' Cot.–Gk.  $\gamma \dot{\alpha} \mu \mu a$ , the name of the third letter of the alphabet. - Heb. gimel, the third letter of the alphabet, so named from its supposed resemblance to a camel, called in Hebrew gamai (Farrar, Chapters on Language, 136). Brachet says: 'Guy of Arezzo [born about A. D. 900] used to end the series of seven notes of the musical scale by this mark,  $\gamma$  [gamma]. He named the notes a, b, c, d, e, f, g, and the last of the series has given its name to the whole scale.' 2. The word ut is Latin, and is the old name for the first note in singing, now called do. The same Guy of Arezzo is said to have named the notes after certain syllables of a monkish hymn to S. John, in a stanza written in sapphic metre. The lines are : 'Ut queant laxis resonare fibris Mira gestorum famuli tuorum Solue pollutis labiis reatum Sancte Iohannes;' the last term si being

E. in the sense of 'a going,' or 'a course.' The peculiar use of gang in the sense of a 'crew' is late, and is rather Scand. than E. In Skinner, ed. 1671. 'Gang, a company, a crew; 'Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. He adds that 'in sea-affairs, gaugs are the several companies of mariners belonging to a ship;' so that the term arose amongst our sailors. – Icel. gangr, a going; also, collectively, a gang, as musagangr, a gang of mice, biofagangr, a gang of thieves + Swed. gang. gang, a gang of mice, yojagangy, a gang of mices + Sweet, gang, a going, a time. + Dan. gang, walk, gait. + Du. gang, course, pace, gait, tack, way, alley, passage. + Goth. gaggs (= gangs), a way, street.  $\beta$ . The M. E. gang, a course, way, is from A. S. gang, a journey (Bosworth); which is from A. S. gangan, to go; Grein, i. 367, 368. So also Icel. gangr, is from Icel. ganga. See Go. Der. gang-way, from M. E. gang, a way, with the word way unnecessarily added, after the sense of the word became obscured; gang-board, a Dutch term, from Du. gangboord, a gangway. [†]

GANGLION, a tumour on a tendon. (L.,-Gk.) Medical. In Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715 - Lat. ganglion (Vegetius.) - Gk. γάγγλιον, a tumour near a tendon. Perhaps allied to Gk. γογγύλος, round.

Der. ganglion-ic. GANGRENE, a mortification of the flesh, in its first stage. (F., -L.,-Gk.) Shak. has the pp. gangrened, Cor. iii. 1. 307. The sb. is in Cotgrave. = O. F. gangreene, 'a gangreen, the rotting or mortify-ing of a member;' Cot. = Lat. gangræna. = Gk. γάγγραινα, an eating sore. A reduplicated form. = Gk. γράνειν, γράειν, to gnaw. = &GAR, to devour; cf. Skt. gri, to devour; gras, to devour. Der. gangrene, vb.; gangren-ous. GANNET, a sea-fowl, Solan goose. (E.) M. E. gante (contracted from ganet); Prompt. Parv. p. 186; see Way's note. - A. S. ganot; 'ofer ganotes bæd' = over the sea-fowl's bath, i. e. over the sea; A. S. Chron. an. 975. + Du. gent, a gander. + O. H. G. ganazo, M. H. G. ganze, a gander. β. Formed with dimin. suffix -of (=-at, -et), from the base gan-; for which see Gander, Goose.

GANTLET (1), a spelling of Gauntlet, q. v. GANTLET (2), also GANTLOPE, a military punishment. (Swed.) In Skinner, ed. 1671. Formerly written gantlope, but corrupted to gantlet or gauntlet by confusion with gauntlet, a glove. 'To run the gantlope, an usual punishment among soldiers;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Again, the n is inserted, being no part of the orig. word, which should be gatlope. - Swed. gatlopp, lit. 'a running down a lane,' because the offender has to run between two files of soldiers, who strike him as he passes. - Swed. gata, a street, lane (see Gate); and lopp, a course, career, running, from lopa, to run, cognate with É. Leap. ¶ Prob. due to the wars of Gustavus Adolphus (died. 632). GAOL, JAIL, a cage, prison. (F., -L.) Spelt gayols in Fabyan's Chron. an. 1293; gaybol in An Old Eng. Miscellany, ed.

Morris, p. 153, l. 219. The peculiar spelling gool is due to the <sup>the</sup> since Florio has 'garabullare, to rave.' Yet the source is probably O. F. goole (Burguy), and has been preserved in Law French. | the same either way; see Jar, to Creak. Chancer has gailer, C. T. 1476; whence jailer and jail. -O. F. gailer, gaole, mod. F. geole, a gaol. prison, cage for birds. In the 13th cent. people spoke of the geole d'un oiseau as well as of the geole d'un prisonnier;' Brachet. [But it must be remembered that the 13th cent. spelling was not geole, but gaiole.] - Low Lat. gabiola, a cage, in a charter of a. D. 1229, cited by Brachet. A dimin. of Low Lat. gabia, a cage; Ducange. B. The Low Lat. gabia is a corruption of Lat. cause, a cage, coop, lit. a hollow place, cavity. - Lat. cause, hollow. See Cage, Cave, and Gabion. Der. gaoler or jailer.

GAPE, to yawn, open the mouth for wonder. M. E. gapen, P. Plowman, B. x. 41. - A. S. geapan, to gape (Bosworth, Lyc); per-haps better spelt geapian, as it seems to be a derivative of A. S geap, haps better speit genjan, as it seems to be a derivative of A. S geop, wide, which see in Grein, i. 496. + Du. gaten, to gape, yawn. + Icel. gapa. + Swed. gapa. + Dan. gabe. + G. gaffen. Cf. Skt. jabk, jambh, to gape, yawn. Der. gap-er; and gaby, q.v. Also gap, sb., M. E. gapte (dat.) in Chaucer, C. T. 1639; a word which is rather Scand. than E.; cf. Icel. and Swed. gap, a gap, breach, abyss, Dan. gab, mouth, throat, gap, chasm. See Gabble. GAB (1). GARFIBH, a kind of pike. (E.) A fish with a long chadae body and pointed back.

slender body and pointed head. Prob. named from A. S. gár, a spear, from its shape; see Garlio. Cp. Icel. geirsíl, a kind of herring, Icel. geirr, a spear; and observe the names pike and ged. GAR (2), to cause. (Scand.) Common in Lowland Scotch; and see

P. Plowman, B. i. 121; v. 130; vi. 303. – Icel. göra; Dan. gjöre; Swed. göra, to cause, make, do. A causal verb, lit. 'to make Garbard (1), dress, maner, fashion. (F.,-O.H.G.) Used by Shak. to mean 'form, manner, mode of doing a thing' (Schmidt); Hamlet, ii. 2. 390; K. Lear, ii. 2. 103. – O. F. garbe, 'a garbe, comelinesse, handsomenesse, gracefulnesse, good fashion;' Cot. comelinesse, handsomenesse, gracefulnesse, good fashion; Cot. Cf. Ital. garbo, 'grace, handsomeness, garbe; 'Florio. -O.H.G. garawi, preparation, getting ready, dress, gear; M.H.G. gerwe, garwe.-O.H.G. garawen, M.H.G. gerwen, to get ready.-O.H.G. garo, M.H.G. gar, gare, ready; cognate with E. yare. See Gear. GARB (2), a sheaf. (F., -O.H.G.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. An heraldic term.-F. garbe, a sheaf.-O.H.G. garba, a sheaf. GARBAGE, oftal, refuse. (F.?) In Shak. Hamlet, i. 5. 57. 'The garbage, aluus, intestina;' Levins, 11. 13. Florio translates the Ital (orge by 'the targe waste or garbith of any waste or merchan

the Ital. tara by 'the tare, waste, or garbish of any ware or merchandise;' and doubtless, the orig. sense was merely 'refuse.' We may, therefore, readily suppose it to have been a coined word from the base garb- of the verb to garble; the sense being 'garble-age.' See Garble. Cf. F. grabeau, refuse of drugs (Littre).

GARBLE, to select for a purpose, to mutilate or corrupt an account. (F., - Span, - Arab.) The old sense was 'to pick out,' or 'sort,' so as to get the best of a collection of things. The statute I Rich. III, c. 11, was made ' for the remedie of the excessive price and badnesse of bowstaues, which partly is growen because the merchants will not suffer any garbeling or sorting of them to be made.' There was an officer called the Garbler of spices, whose business was to visit the shops, examine the spices, and garble, or make clean the same; men-tioned an. 21 Jacob. c. 1. See Blount's Nomolexicon, where it is further explained that 'garbling of spice, drugs, &c. (1 Jacob. cap. 19) is nothing but to purifie it from the dross and dirt that is mixed with it.'-O.F. garbeler*, not recorded, but a mere variant of the O.F. grabeller, 'to garbell spices, also to examine precisely, sift nearly;' Cot. The same word as Span. garbillar, to sift, garble; Ital. garbellare, ' to garbell wares' (Florio); and Low Lat. garbellare, to sift, a word which occurs A.D. 1269 (Ducange). - Span. garbillo, a coarse sieve, sifter. - Pers. gharbll, a sieve; Arab. ghirbal, a large sieve. The word seems to be Arab. rather than Pers.; cf. Arab. gkarbalat, sifting, searching; Rich. Dict. 1046. ¶ We can hardly identify Span. garbillo with Span. cribillo, a small sieve, which is a corruption of Lat. cribillum, a small sieve; cf. Lat. cribellare, to sift. Cribellum is a dimin. of cribrum, a sieve. - Lat. base cri-, a variant of cre-, as seen in cre-tum, supine of cernere, to separate; see Discreet, Discern - V SKAR. to separate; Fick, Ger Perhaps garbage is from the same i. 811. Der. garbl-er. source; or resulted from a confusion of garble with O.F. garber, to collect (Roquefort). See above.

GARBOIL, a disturbance, commotion. (F., -L.) In Shak. Antony, i. 3. 61; ii. 2.67. - O.F. garbouil, 'a garboile, hurliburly, great stirre; Cot. Cf. Span. garbullo, a crowd, multitude; Ital. garbullo, 'a trouble, a garboil, a disorder;' Florio.  $\beta$ . Of uncertain origin. Referred by Diez to Lat. garr-ire, to prattle, chatter; in conjunction "re, to boil, bubble, boil with rage.

to boil, bubble, boil with rage. Y. The latter part is thus well accounted for; see Boil. The former part the same either way; see of the same either way; to creak. GARDEN, a yard, enclosure. (F., -0. H. G.) M.E. gardin, Chaucer, C.T. 1053; King Alissunder, ed. Weber, 1028.-0.F. gardin (Burguy); whence F. jardin.-0. H.G. gartin, gen. and dat. of O. H. G. garto, a yard, garden (Diez); cf. mod. G. garten, a gar-den. This gen. form was retained in compounds, such as O. H. G. gartin-are, a gardener, M. H. G. garten-maysterin, the num in a con-vent who took care of the garden  $\beta$ . The O. H. G. garto is vent who took care of the garden.  $\beta$ . The O. H. G. garlo is cognate with A. S. geard, whence E. yard; see Yard.  $\gamma$ . For the change from O. H. G. t to F. d see Brachet, Introd. § 117.

Der. garden, vb.; garden-ing, garden-er. [†] GARGLE, to rinse the throat. (F.) In Cotgrave. Modified from O. F. gargowiller, just as the M. E. gargyll (a gargoyle) is from O. F. gargowille. – O. F. gargowiller, 'to gargle, or gargarize;' Cot. – O. F. gargowille; for which see Grargoyle. The M. E. gargowille. gargarise, used by Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iv. c. 2 (R.), is from O. F. gargarizer, to gargle (Cot.), borrowed (through Lat. gargarizare) from Gk.  $\gamma a \rho \gamma o \rho i \langle \epsilon v$ , to gargle. This is a reduplicated form from the  $\checkmark$  GAR, to swallow, devour; as explained in Curtius, ii. No. The words were probably confused. Der. gargle, sb.

GARGOYLE, in architecture, a projecting spout. (F., -L.) M.E. gargoyle, also spelt gargyll. The spelling gargoyle is in Lidgate's Troybook (R.); we read of 'gargylles of golde fiersly faced with spoutes running' in Hall's Chron. Henry VIII, an 19. = 0. F. gargowile, 'the weesle or weason [weazand] of the throat; also, the mouth of a spout, a gutter; 'Cot. Cf. Span. gargola, a gargoyle.  $\beta$ . We find, in Ital., not only gargatta, gargazza, the throat, wind-pipe, but also gargazza, the throat, gullet, dimin. of garga, the throat. Thus gargoyle is merely the dimin. of F. gorge, the throat; see Gorge.  $\gamma$ . The change of vowel was due to confusion with Lat. gargarizare; just as gargle (q. v.) was confused with M.E. gargarize (explained under Gargle).

GARISH, GAIRISH, glaring, staring, showy. (Scand). 'The garish sun; Romeo, iii 2.25. 'Day's garish eye;' Milton, Il Penseroso, 141. From the verb to gare. Chaucer uses the slightly different form gauren, to stare; C. T. 5332, 14375. B. By the frequent change of s to r, we see that gare, to stare, is a variant of M. E. gasen, to gaze. (For an example of the change, see Frore.) See Gase. GARIAND, a wreath. (F.) In early use. M.E. gerland, Chaucer, C.T. 668. The form gerlaundesche occurs in Hali Meid-enhad, ed. Cockayne, p. 23.-O.F. garlande, 'a garland;' Cot. [The mod. F. guirlande is borrowed from Ital. ghirlanda.] Cf. Span. guirnalda, Ital. ghirlanda, a garland. β. Of uncertain origin; see the discussion of the word in Diez. It seems as if formed with a suffix -ande from an M. H. G. wierelen \*, a supposed frequen-tative of wieren, to adom; from O. H. G. wiara, M. H. G. wiere, refined gold, fine ornament.  $\P$  Mr. Wedgwood's explanation, that the r is intrusive, and that it belongs to the sb. gala, wholly fails for the Ital. and Span. forms. Der. garland, vb.

GARLIC, a plant of the genus Allium. (E.) Lit. 'spear-plant;' from the shape of the leaves. M. E. garlik; Chaucer, C. T. 636.-A.S. garleác, used to translate Lat. allium in Ælfric's Glossary. ed. Somner, Nomina Herbarum. - A. S. gár, a spear; and leác, a leek, plant. + Iccl. geirlaukr, sim. formed. See Gar (1), Gore, and Leek. ¶ The W. garlleg is borrowed from E. See Barley. GARMENT, a robe, coat. (F., = O. Low G.) A corruption of M. E. garnement, P. Plowman, C. x. 119. = O. F. garnement, garniment, a robe; formed (with suffix -ment = Lat. -mentum) from O. F. garnir, to garnish, adorn, fortify. See Garnish.

GARNER, a granary, store for grain. (F., -L.) M. E. garner; Chaucer, C. T. 595.-O. F. gernier, a variant of grenier, a granary (Burguy).-Lat. granaria, a granary. Doublet, granary, q.v.

GARNET, a kind of precious stone. (F.,-L.) • And gode garnettes bytwene;' Romance of Emare, ed. Ritson, l. 156. A corruption of granat, a form also used in E., and found in Cotgrave. - O. F. grenat (older form prob. granat), 'a precious stone called a granat, or garnet;' Cot. Cf. Span. granate, Ital. granato, a garnet. - Low Lat. granatus, a garnet. 'So called from its resemblance in colour and shape to the grains or seeds of the pomegranate;' Webster. - Lat. granatus, having many grains or seeds; granatum (for malum granatum), a pomegranate. Lat. grannm, a grain; see Grain. [+] GARNISH, to embellish, decorate. (F., = O. Low G.) In Spenser, Verses addressed to Lord Ch. Howard, l. 2; Prompt. Parv. p. 188. Also spelt warnish in M. E.; the pp. warnished is in Will. of Paleme, 1. 1c83. = O.F. garnir, guarnir, older form warnir, to avert, warn, defend, fortify, garnish (Burguy); pres. part. garnis-ant, warnis-ant, whence E. garn-ish, warn-ish. Of O. Low G. origin; the form of the original is best shewn by A.S. warnian (also warnian), to nd seems to be more directly from the Ital. gara, strife, i beware of; cf. O. Sax. wernion, to refuse, O. Friesic wernia, to give a pledge; all from the notion of 'wariness.' See further under Warn.  $\mathcal{E}$  lips (Cotgrave). - Low Lat. garsa, scarification, or the making of numerous small incisions in the skin and flesh; an operation called grave), from F. garniture, 'garniture, garnishment' (Cot.), formed from Low Lat. garsa, represented to the skin and flesh; an operation called by the Greeks  $i\gamma\chi\alpha\beta\alpha\beta$  is; Ducange.  $\beta$ . Origin obscure; it is possible that garsa may be a mere corruption of  $\chi\alpha\beta\alpha\beta$ , an incision; wire, to adorn, which is merely the F. word Latinised; also garnishmet. = 'the party in whose hands another man's money is attached' (Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715), barbarously formed on the model of a F. pass. part. as opposed to garnish-er considered as an agent; also garment, q v., and garrison, q. v. GARRET, a room at the top of a house. (F.,-G.) M.E. garite (with one r), Prompt. Parv. p. 187; P. Plowman's Creed, ed. Skeat, 214. It properly means 'a place of look out,' or 'watch-tower.'-O.F. garite, a place of refuge, place of look-out, watchtower. - O. F. garir, older spelling warir, to preserve, save, keep. -O. H. G. warjan, to defend; cf. A. S. warjan, to hold, defend. The latter is derived from A. S. war, wary. See Wary and Warn. ¶ The O. F. garir is perhaps rather of Low G. than of High G. origin, which seems to be also the case with the O. F. garnir; see Garnish.

GARRISON, a supply of soldiers for defending a fort. (F., -O. Low G.) M. E. garnison, provision, in La Belle Dame sans Mercy, l. 175, pr. in Political, Religious, and Love Poems, ed. Fur-nivall, p. 57; Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat, xvii. 294 (footnote), where another spelling is warnyson, and other reading is varnysing. - O. F. garnison, store, provision, supply. = O. F. garnison, pres. part. of garnir, to supply, garnish; see Garnish. Thus garrison nearly is a doublet of garniture; also (nearly) of garment. ¶ Not quite the same word as M. E. garison or warison, on which see note to Warysoun in Gloss. to Bruce GÁRROTE, GARROTTE, a method of effecting strangulation. (Span., -C.) Garrotte, a machine for strangling criminals, used in Spain. Many attempts to strangle were made by thieves called garrotters, in the winter of 1862-63. An act was passed in 1863 to punish these acts by flogging .' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. [See garrot and garroter in Colgrave.] - Span. garrote, a cudgel, tying a rope tight, strangling by means of an iron collar. Formed, with dimin. suffix -ote, from Span. garra, a claw, a talon, clutch, whence also the phrase echarle a uno la garra, to grasp, imprison. Of Celtic origin; connected with Breton gar, garr, W. and Corn. gar, the shank of the leg (Diez); cognate with Irish cara, the leg.  $-\checkmark$  KAR, to run, move. See Car. Der. garrotte, verb; garrotter; and see garter. GARRULOUS, talkative. (L.) 1. Milton has garrulity, Sams.

Agonistes, 491; and it occurs in Cotgrave, to translate F. garrulité, 2. The adj. garrulous from Lat. acc. garrulitatem, talkativeness. occurs in Chapman's Homer, Comment. on Iliad, b. iii; note 2. It is borrowed from Lat. directly, by change of -us to -ous, as in arduons, strenu-ous, &c. - Lat. garrulus, talkative. Formed, with suffix -(w)lu-, from garr-ire, to prattle. - VGAR, to shout, call; whence also E. Call, q. v. Der. garrulous-ness, also garrul-i-ty, as above. GARTER, a band round the leg, for fastening the hose. (F., -C.) 'Eke ther be knightes old of the garter;' The Flower and the Leaf (15th cent.), l. 519. The order was instituted by Edw. III, 23 April, 1349.-O. F. gartier, in dialects of N. France (Hécart), spelt jartier in Cotgrave, and explained by him as 'a garter;' mod. F. jarretière. Closely connected with O. F. garret (Burguy), mod. F. jarret, the ham of the leg; both words being alike formed from an O. F. garret (herguy), mod. F. garret (equivalent to Span. garra, a claw, talon). - Bret. gar, garr, the shank of the leg; cf. W. gar, the shank; see Garrote. Dor. garter, verb, All's Well, ii. 3. 265. [†] GAS, an aeriform fluid. (Dutch.) The term is known to have been a pure invention. The Belgian chemist Van Helmont (died

A.D. 1644) invented two corresponding terms, gas and blas; the former came into use, the latter was forgotten. We may call it a Dutch word, as gas is the Du. spelling. ¶ As the word is thus known to have been an invention, it is absurd to find an origin for it. The utmost that can be said is that Van Helmont may have had in his mind the Du. geest, spirit, ghost, volatile fluid, as a foundation for gas; and the verb blazen, to blow, as a foundation for blas. Der. gas-e-ous, gas-o-meter. [+]

GASCONADE, boasting, bragging. (Gascony.) 'That figure of speech which is commonly distinguished by the name of Gasconade;' The Tatler, no. 115 (part 2). - F. gasconnade, boasting; said to be a vice of the Gascons. - F. Gascon, an inhabitant of Gascony, formerly Vasconia. Der. gasconade, verb, gasconad-ing, gasconad-er. GASH, to hack cut deeply. (F., - Low Lat.) 'His ga: hed stabs; ' Macbeth, ii. 3. 119. A corruption of an older form garsh or garse. 'A garse or gashe, incisura;' Levins, 33. 14. 'Garsshe in wode or in a knife, hoche;' Palsgrave. The pl. sb. garcen (another MS. has garses) occurs in the Ancren Riwle, p. 258, in the sense of 'gashes caused by a scourge'-O. F. garser, to scarify, pierce with a lancet (Roquefort); garacher, to chap, as the hands or Ray's South- and East-Country Words, ed. 1691. Also mentioned in Shear. ¶ Not connected with Du. gat, a hole, as suggested in Wedgwood. Der. gash, sb.

GASP, to gape for breath. (Scand.) M.E. gaspen. Gower, C. A. ii. 260. - Icel. geista, to yawn. + Swed. gäspa. + Dan. gispe. β. It is well known that sp commonly represents an earlier ps; thus clasp is M. E. clapsen, hasp was formerly haps, and aspen is from aps. Hence gaspa (the old form) stands for gap-sa, an extension of early Scand. and Icel. gapa, to gape; and we may consider gasp as a fre-quentative of gape; see Gape. Dor. gasp, sb. GASTRIC, belonging to the belly. (L., - Gk.) Kersey, ed. 1715, has only the Lat. gastricus succus, which becomes gastrick juice in Bailey's Dict., ed. 17,11, vol. ii. - Lat. gastricus, gastric; formed with suffix -c- from a crude form gastri- = gastro-. - Gk. yaorpo-, crude form β. Cognate with Skt. jathara, of  $\gamma a \sigma \tau \eta \rho$ , the belly (stem  $\gamma a \sigma \tau \epsilon \rho$ ). the belly, and prob. with Lat. uenter, though the letter-changes present difficulty. Prob. the orig. form was gatara, whence Gk. ya-othe and Lat. (g)ue-n-ter. Der. from the same root, gastro-nomy; from Gk. yaorpo-, and vouía, derivative of vouos, usage.

GATE, a door, opening, way. (E.) [In prov. E. and M. E. we often find gate = a street ; this use is Scand.] M. E. gate, jate, yate. Spelt gate, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 237, l. 31; sate, Will. of Palerne, 3757; set, Ancren Riwle, p. 74. - A. S. geat, a gate, opening; Matt. vii. 13. + Du. gat, a hole, opening, gap, mouth. + I cel. gat, an opening; gata, a way, path, street. + Swed. gata, a street, lane. + Dan. gade, a street. + Goth. gatwo, a street. + G. gasse, a street.  $\beta$ . The root is seen in A. S. gitan, to get, hence, to arrive at, reach; so that gate = a way to get at a thing, a passage, lane, opening; Fick, iii. 98. See Got. (So also O. H. G. gazza, a street, is from hezzan, to get.) ¶ Not from the verb to go. Dor. gat-ed, gate-way. [†] GATHER, to draw into a heap, collect. (E.) Just as father corresponds to M. E. fader, so gather corresponds to M. E. gaderen or gaderien, to gather; as also mod. E. together corresponds to M. E. togideres. And gadred hem alle togideres '= and gathered them all together; P. Plowman, B. xvi. 80. – A. S. gædrian, gaderian; Luke, vi. 44; Grein, i. 366, 373. β. Formed, with causal suffix -ian, from A. S. gader, together, preserved in the compound gader-tang, associated with (Grein, i. 365), and also as gador or geador, together (Grein, i. 491); see Together. Y. Again, the suffix -r or -or (orig. -ar) has a frequentative force, and is a mere addition. A (Grein, i. 491); see Together. shorter form appears in the A. S. ged, society, fellowship, company; whence also the A S. gad-el-ing, an associate, comrade; cf Goth. gad-il-iggs (= gad-il-ings), a sister's son, Col. iv. 10. According to Fick (iii. 98) the Teutonic base GAD means to fit, to suit, and is also the origin of E. good; see Good. + Du. gaderen, to collect, from gader, together; the base GAD appears in gade, a spouse, consort; with which cf. G. gatte, a husband, gattin, a wife. Dor. gather, sb.; gather-ing, gather-er.

GAUD, a show, ornament. (L.) Also spelt gawd, Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. i. 1. 33. Chaucer uses gaude in the sense of 'specious trick :' C.T. 12323. - Lat. gaudium, gladness, joy; used in Low Lat. of 'a large bead on a rosary;' whence M. E. gauded, furnished with large beads. 'A peire of bedes gauded al with grene;' Chaucer, C. T. 159 (see note in Clarendon Press edition); or see Gaudees in Halliwell. Cf. Lat. gaudere, to rejoice, pt. t. gauisus sum ; from a base gau-. + Gk. yaisur, to rejoice ; yaupos, proud ; see Curtius, i. 211. Der. gaud-y. i. e. show-y; 'In gaudy grene,' Chaucer, C. T. 2081; gaud-i-ly, gaud-

Frees. Doublet, joy, q. v. GAUGE, GAGE, to measure the content of a vessel. (F., - Low L.) In Shak. Merch. of Ven. ii. 2. 208 (where the old edd, have gage). 'Or bore or gage the hollow caues uncouth;' Surrey, tr. of Virgil, Æneid, ii. 52.–O. F. gauger (printed gaugir in Roquefort), later jauger, 'to gage, or measure a piece of [or?] cask;' Cot.– O. F. gauge\* (not found), old form of jauge, 'a gage, the instrument wherewith a cask is measured, also an iron leaver; ' Cot. - Low Lat. gaugia, the standard measure of a wine-cask (A.D. 1446); Ducange. Also spelt gauja; and cf. Low Lat. gaugatum, the gauging of a winecask; gaugetium, a tribute paid for guaging, a guage; gaugiator, a gauger.  $\beta$ . All these words are probably further allied to Low Lat. jalagium, the right of gauging wine-casks; jalea, a gallon, F. jalle, a bowl; and hence related also to E. gallon; see Gallon.

The orig, sense seems to have been 'to test the capacity of a gallon. The orig, sense seems to have been 'to test the capacity of a gallon measure.' Der. guage or gage, sb., gaug-ing, gaug-er. [†] GAUNT, thin, lean. (Scand.) In Shak. Rich. II. ii. 1, 74. 'His own gaunt eagle; 'Ben Jonson, Catiline, iii. 1. 'Gaunt, or lene;' also 'Gaunte, or slendyr;' Prompt. Parv. p. 189. Forby as a Norfolk, and in Moor as a Suffolk word. an East-Anglian word, it is presumably Scandinavian. It corresponds to Norweg. gand [=gant], a thin pointed stick, a tall and thin man, an overgrown stripping (Aasen); we also find Swed. dial. gank, a lean and nearly starved horse (Rietz). Cf. 'arm-gaunt steed,' Shak. Ant. and Cleop. i. 5. 48. Der. gaunt-ly, gaunt-ness. [†] GAUNTLET, an iron glove. (F., -Scand.) In Spenser, F. Q.

i. 4. 33. - O. F. gantelet, 'a gantlet, or arming-glove;' Cot. Formed, with dimin. suffixes -el- and -et, from O. F. gant, a glove. Of Scand. origin -O. Swed. wante, a glove (Ihre); whence O. F. gant by the usual change of w to g in French; see Garnish. + Dan. vante, a mitten. + Icel. vöttr (stem vatt = vant), a glove. + Du. want, a mitten.  $\beta$ . The most probable source is O. Swed. winda, to wind, hence to involve, wrap, cognate with E. wind, verb. See Wind. [+] GAUZE, a thin silken fabric. (F., - Palestine.) 'Gauz, ' Gauz, a thin sort of silk-stuff;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715 .- O. F. gaze, ' cushion canvas, the thin canvas that serves women for a ground unto their cushions or pursework; also, the sleight stuffe tiffany;' Cot. Of historical origin; so called because first brought from Gaza, in Palestine. Cf. Low Lat. gazetum, wine brought from Gaza; gazzatum, gauze. ¶ Several kinds of stuffs are named from places; e.g. damask from Damascus, calico from Calicut, &c.

GAVELLKIND, a peculiar sort of tenure. (C.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. 'Gavelkind, a tenure, or custom, whereby the lands of the father are equally divided at his death among all his sons;' Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691. a. The word has clearly taken its present form owing to a supposed derivation from M. E. gauel (with u = v), tribute, occurring in Ancren Riwle, p. 202, &c., and derived from A.S. gafol, tribute (Leo, Bosworth); with the E. suffix kind (as in man-kind).  $\beta$ . Yet this is a mere adaptation, the word being really of Celtic origin, and the custom a remnant from O. British. - Irish gabhailcine, the ancient law of gavelkind; where gabhail signifies a receiving, a tenure, from gabhaim, I take, receive; and eine signifies a race, tribe, family; so that the word means 'family-tenure.' Cf. W. gafael, Corn. gavel, a hold, holding, tenure; and cenedl, a tribe. [†] GAVOTTE, a kind of dance. (F.) Spelt gavot in Arbuthnot GAVOTTE, a kind of dance. (F.) Spelt gavot in Arbuthot and Pope's Martinus Scriblerus, as quoted in Todd's Johnson. – O. F. gavote, 'a kind of brawle [dance], danced, commonly, by one alone;' Cot. Of historical origin; 'orig. a dance of the Gavotes, i. e. people of Gap;' Brachet. Gap is in the department of the Upper Alps, and in the old province of Dauphine.

GAWK, a simpleton, awkward fellow. (E.) The orig. sense is a 'cuckoo.' M. E. gowke, a cuckoo, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 927. The dimin. form goby is used in the sense of 'simpleton;' P. Plowman, B. xi. 299. – A. S. geác, a cuckoo; Grein, i. 495. + Icel. gaukr, a cuckoo. + Dan. giög, a cuckoo; + Swed. gök, a cuckoo; en otack-sam gök, an unthankful fellow. + O. H. G. couch, M. H. G. gouch, G. gauch, a cuckoo, a simpleton. Cf. also Lat. cucus, a cuckoo, a fool; used as a term of reproach. An imitative word; see Cuokoo.

Der. gawk-y, awkward, ungainly. GAY, lively, merry, sportive. (F., -M.H.G.) M.E. gay, Chaucer, C. T. 3213; Will. of Palerne, 816; King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 3204.-O. F. gai, merry; spelt gay in Cotgrave.-M. H.G. gake, O. H.G. gaki (older form kaki), G. jäke, quick, sudden, rash, and hence, lively; we also find M. H. G. gake, with the same sense.-M. H. G. gán, G. gehen, to go; cognate with E. go; see Go. Cf. the E. slang phrase 'to be full of go.' Der. gai-ly, Will. of Palerne, 1625; gai-s-ty, used by Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, c. 5. s. 5 [not 15] (R.), from O. F. gayeté, 'mirth,' Cot. Also jay, g. v.

GAZE, to behold fixedly, stare at. (Scand.) M. E. gasen. 'When that the peple gased up and down;' Chaucer, C. T. 8879. Of Scand. origin, and periectly preserved in Swed. dial. gasa, to gaze, stare, as in the phrase gasa diving se, to gaze or stare about one (Rietz).  $\beta$ . The original notion is 'to stare in terror,' or 'to stick to the spot in terror;' from the Goth. base gais-, which occurs in us-gaisian, to make utterly afraid, and us-geis-nan, to be amazed.  $\checkmark$  GHAIS, to stick fast (esp. with terror); see this root discussed s.v. Aghast, sect. B.  $\P$  By the change of s to r, we have the form gauren, to stare, Chaucer, C. T. 10504, 14375. Dor. gaze, sb., gaz-ing-stock ; also gar-isk. GAZELLE, a kind of antelope. (F., - Arab.)

Formerly gazel. Gazel, a kind of Arabian deer, or the antilope of Barbary; ' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. - O. F. gazel, gazelle, 'a kind of wild goat;' Cot. 'Of Oriental origin; introduced from Africa by St. Louis' crusaders;' Brachet. - Arab. ghazal, 'a fawn just able to walk; a wild goat;' Richardson's Dict. p. 1050. Explained as 'a gazelle' in Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 440.

GAZETTE, a small newspaper. (F., -Ital.) 'As we read a gazett; 'Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. ser. I (R.) -O. F. gazette, 'a certain n coin scarce worth our farthing; also, a bill of news, or a tion of the generall occurrences of the time, forged most form of Engender, q.v.

β. Being commonly at Venice, and thence dispersed, every month, into most It corre parts of Christendom; here B. The word is contained. parts of Christendom, B. The word is certainly from Ital. gazzetta, but that word has two meanings, viz. (1) 'a yoong piot or magot a pie' [mag-pie]; and (2) 'a small coine in Italie; 'Florio. Now the value of the latter (less than a farthing) was so small, that Mr. Wedgwood's objection is sound, viz. 'that it never could have been the price either of a written or a printed sheet ; ' so that this (the usual) explanation is to be doubted. C. We may rather suppose that the word gazzetta in the sense of magpie (and hence tittle-tattle) may have given name to the original Venetian gazette, first published about 1536 (Haydn); and hence came the Ital. gazzettare, to chatter as a magpie, to write gazettes (Florio). D. Gazzetta, a magpie, is a dimin. from Ital. gazza, a magpie (Florio). E. Gazzetta, a small coin, is prob. a dimin. from Lat. gaza, treasure, wealth, a word borrowed from Gk.  $\gamma \alpha \langle \alpha, wealth, a$  treasury; which, again, is said to be from the Persian. ¶ 1. The word gazet, meaning a small coin, occurs in Massinger, Maid of Honour, iii. 1 (speech by facomo), and in Ben Jonson, The Fox, ii. 1 (speech by Peregrine). 2. In Chambers' Etym. Dict. it is suggested that the coin gazzetta was paid, not for the gazette itself, but for the privilege of reading it; and it is added that it was 'a written sheet, which appeared about the middle of the 16th century, during the war with Soliman II.' The reader can take his choice. Der. gazett-eer, orig. a writer for a gazette, now used to denote a geographical dictionary. GEAR, dress, harness, tackle. (E.) The orig. sense is 'preparation." M. E. gere, Chaucer, C. T. 354. - A. S. gearwe, pl. fem., pre-paration, dress, ornament; Grein, i. 495; whence was formed the verb gearwian, to prepare, cognate with Icel. göra, to cause; see Gar (2).+ O.Sax. garuwi, gear. + Icel. görvi, gjörvi, gear. + O.H.G. garawi, M. H. G. garuw, gear; whence O. F. garbe, and E. garb; see Garb (1). B. These sbs. are derived from an older adjective, pre-GED, the fish called a pike: (Scand.) A North. E. word. - Icel. gedda, a pike; Swed. gadde; allied to Icel. gaddr, a goad; see Gad, Goad. Named from the sharp thin head; whence also the name 'pike.' So also gar-fish, q. v. GELATINE, a substance which dissolves in hot water and cools as a jelly. (F.,-L.) Gilatina, any sort of clear gummy juice; Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. The mod form is French.-F. gélatine.-Low Lat. gelatina, as cited by Kersey; formed from Lat. gelates, pp. of gelare, to congeal. - Lat. gelu, frost; allied to E. cool, cold; see Cool. GERMEN, GERMINAL, GERMINATE ; see Gorm.

GERUND, a part of a Latin verb. (L.) The derivative gerun-dine is used as a coined word in Beaum. and Fletcher, Wit at Several Weapons, i. I (speech of Wittypate). - Lat. gerundium, a gerund. - Lat. gerundus, that which is to be done or carried on ; fut. part. pass. of genere, to carry on, perform.  $-\checkmark$  GAS, to bring, cause to go; an extension of  $\checkmark$  GA, to go, come; allied to E. come.

Der. gerund-i-al (from gerundi-um). See also below. GESTATION, the carrying of young in the womb. (F.,-L.) It occurs in the Index to Holland's tr. of Pliny.-O. F. gestation, 'a

At occurs in the index to rionand's it. of ring. = O. r. getation, a bearing, or carrying; ' Cot. = Lat. acc. gestationem, from nom. gest-atio, a carrying. = Lat. gestatus, pp. of gestare, to carry; intensive form of gerere, to carry. See above. Der. gestat-or-y. GESTICULATE, to make gestures. (L.) 'Or what their servile apes gesticulate;' Ben Jonson, Poetaster, To the Reader (an Epilogue). = Lat. gesticulatus, pp. of gesticulari, to make mimic ges-tures. = Lat. gesticulatus, a mimic gesture; formed, with suffixes -cu-end -L form getting = gratering and the suffixes -cuand -1-, from gesti- = gestu-, crude form of gestus, a gesture. = Lat. gestus, pp. of gerere, to carry; reflexively, to behave. See Gorund. Der. gesticulat-ion, gesticulat-or, gesticulat-or-y. GESTURE, a movement of the body. (L.) In Shak. Temp. iii.

3. 37. - Low Lat. gestura, a mode of action. - Lat. gesturus, fut. part. act. of gerere, to carry; reflexively, to behave oneself. See Gorund and Gesticulate.

GLET, to seize, obtain, acquire. (E.) M. E. geten, pt. t. gat, pp. geten; Chaucer, C. T. 5792, 293. – A. S. gitan, also gytan, gietan, geotan; pt. t. gat, pp. giten; rarely used in the simple form, but georar; p. t. ger, pp. given; rarry used in the simple form, but common in the compounds on-gitan, and-gitan, for-gitan, be-gitan, in the compounds on-gitan, and-gitan, in the comp. bi-gitan, to find, obtain. + Lat. -hendere (base ked), in the comp. pre-kendere, to seize. + Gk.  $\chi$ arðáreir (base  $\chi$ að), to seize. -  $\checkmark$  GHAD, to seize; Fick, i. 576. Der. gett-er, gett-ing; be-get, for-get; from the same root are appre-kend, com-pre-kend, re-pre-kend, &c.; also obtains comparison independent and the same root are appre-kend, com-pre-kend, ke.; also apprise, comprise, enterprise, surprise; impregnable, &c.

GEWGAW, a plaything, specious trifle. (E.) Geugaus and gilded puppets; Beaum. and Fletcher, Four Plays in One, Triumph of Time, sc. 1. Spelt gewgaudes, id. Woman's Prize, i. 4 (Rowland). Also gugawes, Holinshed, Descr. of Ireland, c. 4. 'He counteth them for gygawes; Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Court, 1060. Cotgrave explains babiole as 'a trifle, whimwham, gugaw, or small toy; and fariboles as ' trifles, nifles, film-flams, why-whaws, idle dis-courses.' The latter form why-whaw is a mere imitation of the older courses.' The latter form why-whow is a mere imitation of the older gugaw. The form gugaw is a corruption of M. E. giuegoue (= givegove); 'worldes weole, ant wunne, ant wurschipe, and over swuche giuegouen' = the world's wealth and joy and worship, and other such gewgaws; Ancren Riwle, p. 196.  $\beta$ . The hard sound of g, and the pl. ending in -en, shew the word to be E. Also u between two the pi. ending in -m, shew the word to be E. Also u between two vowels = v = older f; so that ginegoue = gifegofe. Here gife is the dat. of gifu, a gift, and signifies ' for a gift;' or it may simply stand for the nom. gifu. And gofe may be A. S. geafe. a gift, Grein, i. 401; cf. A. S. gefe, the dat. case of a sb. signifying 'grace' or 'favour;' Diplomatarium Anglicum Ævi Saxonici, ed. Thorpe, p. 459, l. 2.  $\gamma$ . In any case, the word is clearly a reduplicated form 459. 1. 2.  $\gamma$ . In any case, the word is clearly a reduplicated form from the verb gi/an, to give; and the sense is 'given as a gift,' a trifling present, favour, trinket.  $\delta$ . It is preserved in North E. 'giffgaff, interchange of discourse, mutual donation and reception; hence the proverb—giffgaff makes good fellowship; Brockett's Glossary of Northern Words. The derivation from A.S. gegaf, base, vile, is impossible. In that word, the ge- is a mere unaccented prefix; yet the latter syllable may be from the same root.

if, gewgaws, showy gifts; where -gjöf = E. -gaw.

GEYSIR, a hot <sup>Spring</sup> in Iceland. (Icelandic.) " Genir, the name of a famous hot spring in Iceland. . . . The word geysir = " a gusher," must be old, as the inflexive-ir is hardly used but in obsolete words;' Cleasby and Vigfusson. - Icel. geysa, to gush; a secondary form from giosa, to gush; see Gush. GHASTLY, terrible. (E.) The k has been inserted, for no very good reason. M. E. gastly; 'gastly for to see;' Chaucer, C. T. 1986. = A. S. gastlic, terrible; Grein, i. 374. Formed, with suffix -lic (= like, -ly), from a base gaist (from an older gist), which is an extension of the base gais (from an older gis) seen in the Goth. se-gais-jan, to terrify, and in the Goth. se-gais-nan, to be astonished. See further under Aghast. ¶ Not to be confused with ghostly, Q. v. Der. gkastli-ness; cf. also gasted, K. Lear, ii. 1. 57; gastness, Oth. v. 1. 106. [†] GHERKIN, a small cucumber. (Du., = Pers.) The k is inserted to keep the g hard. 'Gherkins or Guerkins, a sort of pickled cucumbers;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Spelt gherkin in Skinner, ed. 1671. Shortened for agherkin. - Du. agurhje, a gherkin; cf. 'Gherkins, agurkes ' in Sewel's Eng.-Du. Dict. ed. 1754. B. Note that the Du. dimin. suffix -ken was formerly used (as explained by Ten Kate) where the dimin. suffix -je now occurs; so that agurkje stands for an older form agurkken, whence the E. gherkin must have been borrowed, with the loss merely of initial a. The form agurkken or agurken presupposes the older form agurke, cited from Sewel. y. Of Oriental origin; the a- is due to the Arab, article al; -gur-ky. Of Oriental origin, the a is due to the Ariab, and the at; gardenis due to Pers. Mayar, a cucumber; Rich. Dict., p. 641.

 GHOST, a spirit. (E.) The h has been inserted. M. E. goost, goot; Chaucer, C. T. 2770.-A.S. gást, a spirit; Grein, i. 371. + Du. geest. + Dan. geist, genius, a spirit (perhaps borrowed from G.).
 + G. geist, a spirit. β. The root is the Teutonic GIS = Aryan GHIS, to terrify; as seen in Goth. ns-gais jan, to terrify. It seems to have been given as denoting an object of terror, much as in mod. E. Closely allied to ghastly, from which it differs, however, in the vowelsound. See Ghastly, Yoant, Der. ghost-ly, ghost-li-ness. [†] GHOUL, a kind of demon. (Pers.) Pron. gool, to rime with cool. – Pers. ghól, an imaginary sylvan demon; supposed to devour men and animals; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1062.

GIAOUR, an infidel. (Ital., - Pers.) 'In Dr. Clarke's Travels. this word, which means infidel, is always written djour. Lord Byron adopted the Ital. spelling usual among the Franks of the Levant; note 14 to Lord Byron's poem of The Giaour. - Pers. gaur. an infidel : Rich. Dict. p. 1227. An Aryan word (Max Müller). [†] GIANT, a man of great size. (F., -L., -Gk.) The i was formerly e; but i has been substituted to make the word look more like the Lat. and Gk. forms. M. E. geant, geannt; Chaucer, C. T. 13738; King Alisaunder, 3465. - O. F. geant, 'a giant;' Cot. - Lat. acc. gigantem, from nom. gigas, a giant. - Gk. yiyas, a giant (stem yiyar.). β. From the √GAN, to beget, as if the word meant 'produced; the prefix y- seeming to be no more than a reduplication, though sometimes explained from Gk.  $\gamma \hat{\eta}$ , the earth, as if the word meant carth-born.' But this is merely a specimen of popular etymology.

 Cf. Gk. γί-γ(ε)ν-ομοι, I am born. Dor. gigant-ic, q. v.; giant-ess.
 GIBBERISH, nonsensical talk. (E.) Holinshed speaks of gibberisking Irish; 'Descr. of Ireland, c. 1. 'All kinds of gibberisk he had learnt to know;' Drayton, The Mooncalf (R.) Formed from The suffix er is frequentative, and the base gib- is a weak form of gab. See Gabble, Jabber. [+]

GIBBET, a gallows. (F.) M. E. gibbet, gibet, Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, i. 105; 'hangen on a gibet;' Ancren Riwle, p. 116. = O. F. gibbet, 'a gibbet;' Cot. (mod. F. gibet).  $\beta$ . Of unknown origin; Littré suggests a comparison with O. F. gibet, a large stick (Roquefort); apparently a dimin. of O. F. gibbe, a sort of arm, an implement for stirring the earth and rooting up plants, apparently a hoe (Roque-fort). In this case, the old sense of gibbet was prob. 'an instrument of torture.' Y. Perhaps of Celtic origin; cf. Irish giob-aim, of torture.' Y. Perhaps of Celtic origin; ct. Irish guod-aum, I tear, tug, pull; gibin, a jag. But this a mere guess. [†] GIBBON, a kind of ape. (?) Cf. F. gibbon, in Buffon. GIBBOSE, swelling. (L.) The Lat. form of the word below. GIBBOUS, humped, swelling. (F., -L.) 'Its round and gibbons back;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors. b, iii. c. 26. § 5. The suffix -ous is put for F. -eux, by analogy with other words in which -ous represents O. F. -ou (later -eux). - F. gibbens, 'hulch, bunched, much swelling;' Cot. - Lat. gibbosus, hunched. Formed, with suffix -ous, form Lat. gibbosus, hunch: cf. gibbus. bent: gibbor, a hump. from Lat. gibba, a hump, hunch; cf. gibbus, bent; gibber, a hump. Cf. Skt. kubja, hump-backed, kumbh, kubh, to be crooked, a lost verb seen in the deriv. kumbha, a pot (Benfey). See Cubit and Hump.

Der. gibbous-ness. GIBE, to mock, taunt. (Scand.) And common courtiers love to gybe and fleare ;' Spenser, Mother Hubberd's Tale, 716. Of Scand.

GIBLETS, the internal eatable parts of a fowl, removed before cooking. (F.) 'And set the hare's head against the goose gyblets; Harrington's tr. of Orlando Furioso, b. xliii. st. 136 (R.); the date of the 1st edition is 1591. 'May feed on giblet-pie;' Dryden, tr. of Persius, vi. 172. 'Sliced beef, giblets, and pettitoes;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Woman-hater, i. 2. M. E. giblets; see Wright's Vocab. i. 179. - O. F. gibelet, which, according to Littré, is the old form of F. gibelotte, stewed rabbit. Of unknown origin; not necessarily related gibelolle, stewed rabbit. Of unknown origin; not necessarily related to F. gibier, game. Cf. Gael. giaban, a fowl's gizzard. GIDDY, unsteady, dizzy. (E.) M. E. gidi, gydi; Rob. of Glouc. p. 68, 1. 3. [The A. S. gidig is unauthorised, being only found in Sommer's Dict.] Formed from A. S. gyddian, giddian, gyddigan, to sing, be merry; whence the orig. sense of giddy was 'mirthful.' It is said of Nebuchadnezzar, when his heart was elate with pride, that 'ongan ba gyddigan burh gylp micel '= he began then to sing (or, to be merry or giddy) through great pride; Cædmon, ed. Thorpe, p. 253; see Grein, i. 505. The verb giddian is a derivative from gid, gidd, gied, gyd, a song, poem, saying; Grein, i. 504; a common sb., but of obscure origin. Der. giddi-ly, giddi-ness. (B) Perhaps the base gid stands for an older gig; see Gig, Jig. GIER-EAGLE, a kind of eagle. (Du. and F.) In Levit. xi. 18.

The nrst syllable is Dutch, from Du. gier, a vulture ; cognate with G. geier, M. H. G. gir, a vulture. The word eagle is F. See Eagle. GIFT, a thing given, present. (E.) M.E. gift, commonly jift, sett; Rob. of Glouc. p. 122; P. Plowman, A. iii. 90; B. iii. 99. [The word is perhaps rather Scand. than E.] – A.S. gift, gyft, rare in the sing., but common in the pl. (when it often has the sense of 'nuptials,' with reference to the marriage dowry). In Bosworth's Dict., we find the form gylta, with a note that there is no singular, but immediately below is given a passage from the Laws of Ine, no. 31, in which the word gyft appears as a fem. sing., with the fem. sing. art. sió; see Thorpe's Ancient Laws, i. 122, sect. 31. In this obscure passage, sid gyft may mean either ' the dowry ' or ' the marriage. + Icel. gift, gift (pron. gift), a gift. + Du. gift, a gift, present. + Goth. -gibts, -gifts, only in comp. fragibts, fragifts, promise, gift, espousal. + G. gift, chiefly used in comp. mitgift, a dowry.  $\beta$ . All from the corresponding verb, with the suffix -t (for -ti, weak form of -ta). See Give. Der. gift-ed; heaven-gifted, Milton, Samson Agon. 36. [†] GIG, a light carriage, a light boat. (Scand.) The orig. idea is that of anything that easily whirls or twirls about. In Shak, gig means a boy's top; L. L. L. iv. 3. 167; v. 1. 70, 73. In Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 852, we have: 'This hous was also ful of gigges;' where the sense is uncertain; it may be 'full of whirling things;' since we find 'ful . . of other werkings' = full of other movements, immediately below. Dr. Stratmann interprets gigges by 'fiddles;' but this is another sense of the same word.  $\beta$ . The hard g shews it to be of Scand. origin, as distinguished from jig, the French form. The mod. Icel. gigja only means ' fiddle,' but the name seems to have been given to the instrument from the rapid motion of the player; cf. Icel. geiga, to take a wrong direction, to rove at random, to look askance; the orig. sense being perhaps 'to keep going.' Some translate Icel. geiga by 'to vibrate, tremble;' cf. Icel. gjögra, to reel, stagger; Prov. E. jigger, a swaggerer; Halliwell. Y. Possibly reel, stagger; Prov. E. jigger, a swaggerer; Halliwell. from Teut. GA, to go, which seems to be reduplicated. See Jig.

GIGANTIC, giant-like. (L., -Gk.) In Milton, P. L. xi. 659; Sams. Agon. 1249. A coined word, from the crude form giganti- of

Lat. gigas, a giant; see Glant. GIGGLE, to laugh lightly, titter. (E.) 'Giggle, to laugh out, laugh wantonly;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. 'A set of gigglers;' Spectator, no. 158. An attenuated form of M.E. gagelen, to 'gaggle,' Speciator, no. 155. An attenuated form of M. E. gageten, to gaggie, or make a noise like a goose; where again gaggle is a weaker form of cachle. 'Gagelin, or cryyn as gees, clingo;' Prompt. Parv. p. 184. Cf. Icel. gagl, a goose; G. kichern, O. Du. ghichelen (Kilian). to giggle. A frequentative form, from an imitative root. See Cackle. Dor. giggle, sb., giggler. GIGLET, GIGLOT, a wanton woman. (Scand.; with F. suffix.) I. Shah More, for More a state to the VI in a state Earling in

In Shak. Meas. for Meas. v. 353; I Hen. VI. iv. 7. 41. Earlier, in Prompt. Parv. p. 194; and see the note. Cf. geglotrye, giddiness; How the Good Wife taught her Daughter, l. 159 (in Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat). A dimin, with suffix et or -ot, from an older giggle or gigle. Cotgrave has: 'Gadrouillette, a minx, gigle, flirt, callet, gizie.' Here again, gig-le and gizie (= gig-sy) are connected with Icel. gikkr, a pert per: on, Dan. giek, a wag ; and perhaps with the base gig, applied to rapid motion, and thence to lightness of behaviour. See Gig.

GILD, to overlay with gold. (E.) M. E. gilden, Wyclif, Exod.

origin; cf. Swed. dial. gipa, to gape, also, to talk rashly and foolishly Wright's Voc. i. 41, col. 2. The y is substituted, by vowel change, (Rietz); Icel. geipa, to talk nonsense; Icel. geip, idle talk. See for o, as appearing in A.S. gold, gold; cf. Goth. gulth, gold. Cf. Jape, Jabber. ¶ Also spelt jibe. Der. gibt, sb. Icel. gylla (for gylda), to gild. See Gold. Der. gilt, contracted form of gild-ed; gild-er, gild-ing. GILL (1), an organ of respiration in fishes. (Scand.) 'Gylle of a fische, branchia;' Prompt. Parv. Spelt gile, Wyclif, Tobit, vi. 4.-" Gulla of Dan. gialle, a gill; Swed.  $gil. + 1c. gill, ar, sb. pl., the gills of a fish. Cf. Icel. gin, the mouth of a beast. <math>-\checkmark$  GHI, to gape, yawn. See Yawn, and see below.

GILL (2), a ravine, yawning chasm. (Scand.) Also spelt ghyll; common in place-names, as Dungeon Ghyll. - Icel. gil, a deep narrow glen with a stream at the bottom; geil, a ravine. - & GHI, to yawn; see above.

GILL (3), with g soft; a quarter of a pint. (F.) M.E. gille, gylle; P. Plowman, B. v. 346 (where it is written lille = jille). = O.F. gelle, a sort of measure for wine; Roquefort. Cf. Low Lat. gillo, a wine-vessel; gella, a wine-vessel, wine-measure; Ducange. Allied to F. jale, a large bowl; also to E. gallon, which is the augmen-tative form, since a gallon contains 32 gills. See Gallon.

GILL (4), with g soft; a woman's name; ground-ivy. (L.) The name Gill is short for Gillian, which is in Shak. Com. Errors, iii. 1. 31. And Gillian is a softened form of Lat. Iuliana, due to F. pronunciation. This personal fem. name is formed from Lat. Iulius; see July.  $\beta$ . The ground-ivy was hence called *Gill-creep-by-the*ground (Halliwell); or briefly Gill. Hence also Gill-ale, the herb ale-hoof (Hall.); Gill-burnt-tail, an ignis fatuus; Gill hooter, an owl; Gill-flirt, a wanton girl; flirt-gill, the same, Romeo, ii. 4. 162. GILLILE, a boy, page, menial. (Gael. and Irish.) Used by Sir W. Scott; but Spenser also speaks of 'the Irish horse-boyes or cuilles, as they call them ;' View of the State of Ireland, Globe ed., p. 64, col. 2. – Gael. gille, giolla, Irish giolla, a boy, lad, youth, man-servant, lacquey. But Irish ceile, a spouse, companion, servant, whence Culdee, is a different word.

GILLYFLOWER, a kind of flower, a stock. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) Spelt gelliflowres in Spenser, Shep. Kal. April, 137. Spelt gilloflower by Cotgrave. By the common change of r to l, gilloflower stands for giroflower, spelt geraflour in Baret's Dict. (Halliwell); where the ending flower is a mere E. corruption, like the fish in crayfish, q. v. -O. F. giroftee, 'a gilloflower; and most properly, the clove gilloflower;' Cot. B. Here we have clove-gilloftower as the full form of the name, which is Chaucer's cloue gilofre, C. T. 13692; thus confirming the above derivation. C. From F. clou de girofle, where clou is from Lat. clauus, a nail (see Clove); and girofle is corrupted from Low Lat. caryot hyllum, a Latinised form of Gk. καρυόφυλλον, strictly 'nut-leaf,' a clove-tree. (Hence the name means 'nut leaf,' or 'nut-leaved clove.') - Gk. kápun-, crude form of kápun, a nut; and φύλλον, a leaf (= Lat. folium, whence E. foli-age). GIMBALS, a contrivance for suspending a ship's compass so as to keep it always horizontal. (F, -L) The contrivance is one which admits of a double movement. The name gimbals is a corruption (with excressent b) of the older word gimmals, also called a gemmow or gemmow-ring. See also gimbol and gimmal in Halliwell; and the excellent remarks in Nares. 'Gemme, or Gemmouring, a double ring, with two or more links;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. In Shak. 'a gimmal bit' is a horse's bit made with linked rings; Hen. V, ii. chor. 26. The forms gemmow and gimmal correspond to O. F. geneau, masc., and gemelle, fem., a twin. - Lat. gemellus, a twin; a dimin. form from Lat. geminus, double. See Gomini.

GIMCRACK, a piece of trivial mechanism, slight device, toy. (F.? and C.) Formerly also ginerack. 'This is a ginerack; 'Beaum. and Fletcher, Elder Brother, iii. 3; where it is applied to a young man, and signifies 'a fop,' or 'a spruce-looking simpleton.' 1. The former syllable may either be gin, an engine. contrivance see Gin (3); or, as would rather appear, is the prov. E. gim or jim, signifying 'neat, spruce, smart ;' Halliwell, and Kersey. In the latter case, the spelling ginerack is erroneous. 2. The latter syllable is the sb. crack, 'an arch, lively boy,' a common sense of the word in old plays; see Halliwell and Nares. It is derived from the prov. E. crack, to boast, also spelt crake, well exemplified by Nares under the latter form. Hence a gimcrack = a spruce arch lad; or, as a term of contempt, an upstart or fop. Later, it was used of anything showy but slight; esp. of any kind of light machinery or easily broken toy.

but shift; esp. of any kind of high machinery of easily blocker toy. Cf. Gael. eracaire, a talker. See Crack. GIMLET, GIMBLET, a tool for boring holes. (F, -G.)'And see there the gimblets, how they make their entry;' Ben Jonson, The Devil is an Ass, i. I - O. F. gimbelet, 'a gimlet or piercer;' Cot. = mod. F. gibelet (by loss of m). Formerly (better) spelt guimbelet or guibelet; as seen by quotations in Littré.  $\beta$ . As we also have the form wimble in English with the same sense, the O E M U.C. O. F. gu = M. H. G. w. Hence the word is formed (with a frequentaxxvi. 29.- A. S. gyldan, to gild; only in the derivative ge gyld, gilded, tive suffix -el, and a dimin. suffix -el) from a Teutonic base WIMB on WIMP, which is a substitution (for greater ease of pronunciation) tor the base WIND. y. Of M. H. G. origin; the base wind and frequentative suffix -el produced a form windelen or wendelen, to turn repeatedly, preserved in mod G. wendel-bohrer, a wimble or gimlet, wendel-baum, an axle-tree, and wendel-treppe, a winding staircase. See Wimble and Wind. ¶ There are Celtic forms for gimlet, but they seem to have been borrowed. The word is plainly Teutonic; cf. Icel. vindla, to wind up, vindill, a wisp. GIMMAL, GIMMAI-RING; see Gimbals. GIMP, with hard g, a kind of trimming, made of silk, woollen. or cotton twist. (F., -O. H G.) 'Gimp, a sort of mohair thread covered with the same, or a twist for several works formerly in use;' Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. Named from a resemblance to the folds of a pup's wired or neck baseling a sure rate it is the to the folds of a nun's wimple, or neck-kerchief; at any rate, it is the same word. - F. guimpe, a nun's wimple, or lower part of the hood, gathered in folds round the neck; a shortened form of guimple; thus the index to Cotgrave has: 'the crepin [wimple] of a French hood, guimple, guimple, guimple. - O. H. G. wimpal, which (according to Littre) meant a summer-dress or light robe; G. wimpel, a pennon, pendant, streamer. See Wimple. (IF It looks as if there has been confusion between the F. guimpe, a wimple, and the F. guipure, a thread of silk lace; since gimp (while answering to the former in form) certainly answers better to the latter in sense. The F. guipure is also of Teutonic origin, from the base WIP, to twist or bind round, appearing in Goth. weipan, to crown, wipja, a crown, waips, a crown = E. wisp, formerly wips. See Wisp. Note further, that wimple and wisp are both, probably, from the same root; which may account for the confusion above noted.

GIN (1), to begin. (E.; pron. with g hard.) Obsolete; or only used as a supposed contraction of begin, though really the orig. word whence begin is formed. It should therefore never be denoted by whence begin is formed. It should therefore never be denoted by 'gin; but the apostrophe should be omitted. Common in Shak. Macb. i. 2. 25, &c. M. E. ginnen; Chaucer, C. T. 3020. - A. S. ginnan, to begin; only used in the compounds on ginnan, to begin, Matt. iv. 7; and be-ginnan, to begin. + Du. be-ginnen; the simple ginnen being unused. + O. H. G. bi-ginnan; G. be-ginnen. + Goth. ginnan, only in the comp. dw-ginnan, to begin. B. Fick (iii. 98) connects it with Icel. gunnr, war; as if the orig. sense was 'to strike.' C. Skt. Ann, to strike. He also cites the Lithuanian ginù, I defend (connected with genu, I drive), Ch. Slavonic źena, I drive; i. 79, 577. - V GHAN, to strike. See Begin.

GIN (2), a trap, snare. (1. Scand.; 2. F., -L.) 1. M. E. gin: 'uele ginnes hep be dyeuel uor to nime bet uolk '- many snares hath the devil for to catch the people ; Ayenbite of Inwyt, ed. Morris, p. 54. In this particular sense of 'trap' or 'snare,' the word is really Scanfinavian. - Icel. ginna, to dupe, deceive; whence ginning, imposture, fraud; and ginnungr, a juggler. 2. But the M.E. gin was also used in a far wider sense, and was (in many cases) certainly a contraction of F. engin = Lat. ingenium, a contrivance or piece of ingenuity. Thus, in describing the mechanism by which the horse of brass (in the Squieres Tale) was moved, we are told that 'therein lieth theffect of al the gin'-therein is the pith of all the contrivance; C. T. 10636. For this word, see Engline. ¶. Particularly note the use of the word gin' = therein is the pith of all the contrivance, 0. 1. society this word, see Engline. 4. Particularly note the use of the word in P. Plowman, B. xviii. z50; 'For gygas the geaunt with a gymme engymed' = for Gigas the giant contrived by a contrivance. GIN (3), a kind of spirit. (F., -L.) Formerly called geneva, GIN (3), a kind of spirit. (F., -L.) Formerly called geneva, whence gin was formed by contraction. Pope has gin-shops; Dunciad, iii. 148. 'Geneva, a kind of strong water;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. So called by confusion with the town in Switzerland of that name; but really a corruption. - O. F. genevre, 'juniper;' Cot. [It is well known that gin is flavoured with berries of the juniper.] - Lat. iuniperus, a juniper; for letter-changes, see Brachet. See Juniper. [+]

GINGER, the root of a certain plant. (F.,-L.,-Gk.,-Skt.) (F., Span, - Arab., - Egyptian.) 'Giraffa, an Asian beast, the same with Camelopardus;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. Here giraffa = Span. girafa. We now use the F. form. - F. giraffe. -Span, girafa. - Arab. zaráf or zaráfat, a camelopard; Rich. Dict. p. 772, col. 2. See Dozy, who gives the forms as zaráfa, zorúfa, and notes that it is also called joráfa. [†]

GIRD (1), to enclose, bind round, surround, clothe. (E.) M. E. gurden, girden, gerden; the pp. girt is in Chaucer, C. T. 331. – A. S. gyrdan, to gird, surround; Grein, i. 536. + Du. gorden. + Icel. gyrda, to gird (a kindred word to gerda, to fence in). + Dan. giorde. + G. gürten.  $\beta$ . These are weak verbs; an allied strong verb occurs in the Goth. comp. bi-gairdan, to begird; from a base GARD, to enclose, an extension of the Teut. base GAR, to seize. - & GHAR, to seize (Fick, i. 580); whence also Gk. xeip, the hand; Skt. har, to seize, and Lat. Aortus, an enclosure. Y. Fick (iii. 102) gives the old base GARD, to enclose, as the Teutonic form, whence were formed the Teutonic garda, a hedge, yard, garden; gerda, a girth, girdle; and gordja, to gird. Der. gird-er; gird-le, q.v.; girth, q.v. From the same root we also have garden, yard; and even chirography, horticulture, cohort, court, and surgeon. [+]

From the Teutonic base GAKD, to enclose (Fick, iii. 102); see Gird.

GIRL, a female child, young woman. (O. Low G.) M. E. gerl, girl, gurl, formerly used of either sex, and signifying either a boy or girl. In Chaucer, C. T. 3767, girl is a young woman; but in C. T. 666 the net works means the formerly of the thermal of the sex. 666, the pl. girles means young people of both sexes. In Will. of Palerne, 816, and King Alisaunder, 2802, it means 'young women;' in P. Plowman, B. i. 33, it means 'boys;' cf. B. x. 175. Both boy and girl are of O. Low German origin; see Boy. 3. Formed as a dimin., with suffix -{ (= -la), from O. Low G. gür, a child; see Bremen Wörterbuch, ii. 528. Cf. F. giste, a lodging, resting-tion of the state of the s place) occurs in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, and in Kersey. The latter has: 'Giste, a couch, or resting-place.' But the use of the word is really due to an old F. proverb, given by Cotgrave. s. v. lievre. 'Ie scay bien on gist le lievre, I know well which is the very point, or knot of the matter,' lit. I know well where the hare lies. This gist is the mod. F. git, and similarly we have, in modern French, the phrase 'tout git en cela,' the whole turns upon that; and again, 'c'est là que git le lièvre,' there lies the difficulty, lit. that's where the hare lies; Hamilton's F. Dict. β. The O. F. sb. giste (F. gite) is derived from the vb. gesir, to lie, of which the 3 pers. pres. was gist (mod. F. git). - Lat. iacere, to lie; an intransitive verb formed from Lat. iacere, to throw. See Jet, verb.

GIVE, to bestow, impart, deliver over. (E.) M. E. yeuen, yium, genen, sinen (with a for v); Chaucer, C. T. 230. In old Southern and Midland English, the g almost always appears as y (often written y); the modern hard sound of the g is due to the influence of Northern English. 'Gifand and takand woundis wyd;' Barbour's Bruce, xiii. 160. GLABROUS, smooth. (L.) Rare. 'French elm, whose leaves are thicker, and more florid, glabrous, and smooth;' Evelyn, i. iv. § 1 (Todd's Johnson). Coined, by adding suffix ous, from Lat. glabr-, base of glaber, smooth. Akin to Lat. glubere, to peel, and gluma, a husk; the orig. sense being 'peeled.' Akin to Gk. yhapupo's, hollowed, smoothed, from ylápeir, to hew, carve, dig, a variant of ypápeir, to See Grave, verb.

GLAD, pleased, cheerful, happy. (E.) M. E. glad, Chaucer, C. T. 310; also gled, Ancren Riwle, p. 282. – A. S. glæd, shining, bright, cheerful, glad; Grein, i. 512. + Du. glad, bright, smooth, bright, cheeriul, giad; Grein, 1. 512. + Du. guad, origin, smooth, sleek; O. Du. glad, glowing (Kilian). + Icel. gladr, bright, glad. + Dan. glad, joyous. + Swed. glad, joyous. + G. glatt, smooth, even, polished. + Russ. gladkie, even, smooth, polished, spruce. B. Ac-cording to Fick, iii. 112, the base is GAL, equivalent to Aryan GHAL or GHAR. The orig. sense was 'shining;' hence it is from  $\checkmark$  GHAR, to shine, Fick, i. 31; cf Skt. ghri, to shine, gharma, heat; Gk. Xluapos, warm. See Glide, Glow. Der. glad-ly, glad-ness; also gladsome = M E. gladsum, Wyclif, Psalm, ciii. 15, Chaucer, C. T. 14784; glad-some-ly, glad-some-ness; also gladd-en, in which the suffix en is modern and due to analogy; cf. 'gladeth himself'=gladdens

GLADE, an open space in a wood. (Scand.) 'Farre in the forrest, by a hollow glade;' Spenser, F. Q. vi. 5. 13. Of Scand. origin, and closely connected with Icel. gladr, bright, shining (see Closely connected with Icel. gladr.) Glad), the orig. sense being an opening for light, a bright track, hence an open track in a wood (Nares), or a passage cut through reeds and rushes, as in Two Noble Kinsmen, ed. Skeat, iv. 1. 64. Cf. Swed. dial. glad-yppen, completely open, said of a lake from which the ice has all melted away (Rietz); Swed. dial. glatt (= gladt), completely, as in glatt öppet, completely open; id. Mr. Wedgwood also cites the Norwegian glette, 'a clear spot among clouds, a little taking up of the weather ; gletta, to peep ; glott, an opening, a clear spot among clouds,' see Aasen. These are exactly similar formations from Icel. glita. to shine; see Glitter, a word which is from the same root as Glad. And see Glow.

GLADIATOR, a swordsman. (L.) 'Two hundred gladiators;' Dryden, tr. of Persius, vi. 115.-Lat. gladiator, a swordsman.-Lat. gladius, a sword. See Glaive. Der. gladiator-i-al; also, from the same source, gladi-ole, a plant like the lily, from Lat. gladi-ol-us, a small sword, dimin. of gladius. GLADSOMCE, glad, cheerful; see Glad.

GLAIR, the white of an egg. (F, -L.) Little used now. M. E. glayre of an ey = white of an egg; Chaucer, C. T. 16274; and Prompt. Parv. - O. F. glaire; 'la glaire d'vn œuf, the white of an egge;' Cot. β. Here glaire is a corruption of claire, as evidenced by related words, esp. by Ital. chiara d'un ovo, 'the white of an egge,' Florio (where Ital. chi=Lat. cl, as usual); and by Span. clara de huevo, glair, white of an egg. - Lat. clarus, clear, bright; whence Low Lat. clara out, the white of an egg (Ducange). See Clear, Clarify. to be confused with Glare. ¶ Not

GLAIVE, a sword. (F., -L.) M. E. gleiue (with u = v); Havelok, 1770; glayue, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, i. 653 (or 654). - O. F. glaine, 'a gleave, or sword, also, a launce, or horseman's staffe;' glaive, 'a gleave, or sword, also, a laund Cot.-Lat. gladius, a sword; see Brachet.  $\beta$ . The form gladius stands for cladius, as shewn by the Irish claidheamh, a sword; see Claymore. Cf. Lat. clades, destruction, slaughter. Y. The form of the base is kla, for kal, leading to  $\checkmark$  KAR. The sense of the root seems to be 'to strike;' cf. Skt. gri, to hurt, to wound, break. Terhaps allied to Hilt, q. v.

GLANCE, a swift dart of light, a glimpse, hasty look. (Scand.) Not in early use. Spencer has glaunce as a verb: 'The glauncing sparkles through her bever glared;' F. Q. v. 6. 38. It occurs often m Shak., both as vb. and sb.; Two Gent. i. 1. 4; Mids. Nt. Dr. v. come, spicilegus;' Huloet.

13. Either borrowed from O. Dutch, or of Scand. origin; it is better to take it as the latter, since the Swedish and Danish account for it more completely. Also note that the sb. is older than the verb, contrary to what might (at first) be expected - Swed. glans, lustre, gloss, brightness, splendour; O. Swed. glans, splendour; whence the derived verb glänsa, to shine. + Dan. glands, lustre, brightness, splendour, gloss; whence the verb glandse, to gloss, glaze. + Du. glans, lustre, brightness, splendour, gloss; whence glanzen, to put a gloss upon. + G. glanz, splendour; whence glänzen, to glitter. B. But this sb. glans is formed from an older verb, preserved in Dan. glindse, to shine, and in the Swed. dial. glinta, glanta, to slip, slide, glance aside (as when we speak of an arrow glancing against a tree); Rietz. Rietz makes the important and interesting remark, that Grimm (Gramm. iii. 59) supposes the existence of a strong verb glintan, to shine, with a pt. t. glant, and pp. gluntun, 'which is pre-cisely the very form which survives among us [Swedes] still.' Y. It γ. It is further evident that glint is a nasalised form from the Teutonic base GLIT, to shine, glance (Fick, iii. 112); whence Icel. glit, a glitter, glita, glittra, to glitter, Goth. glitterunjan, to shine, glitter; also (with inserted n), Swed. dial. glinta, M. E. glinten; we may also compare Du. glinster, a glittering, glinsteren, to glitter. See Glint, Glitter, Glisten, Glass, and Glow.

GLAND, a cell or fleshy organ in the body which secretes animal luid. (F., - L.) 'Gland, a flesh-kernel;' Kersey, ed. 1715. - O. F. fluid. (F., -L.) fluid. (F., -L.) 'Gland, a flesh kernel; Kersey, cu. 1115.-C... glande, 'a kernell, a flesh substance filled with pores, and growing between the flesh and skin;' Cot.-O.F. gland, an acom.-Lat. elandem, acc. of glans, an acom.  $\beta$ . Lat. glans stands for galans, and is cognate with Gk. Bha-av-os, an acorn, lit. the 'dropped' or 'shed' fruit, from Gk.  $\beta \dot{a} \lambda \lambda \epsilon v$ , to cast. -  $\checkmark$  GAL, older form GAR, to fall, to let fall, cast; cf. Skt. gal, to fall, to drop. ¶ The change to Gk.  $\beta$  occurs also in Gk.  $\beta v \hat{v} s = Skt. g o = E. cow$ ; &c. Der. glandi-form, from Lat. glandi-, crude form of glans; glandi-fer-ous (from Lat. -fer, bearing); gland-ule, a dimin. form, whence glandul-ar, glandul-ous; gland-ers, a disease of the glands of horses, Taming of the Shrew, iii. 2. 51.

GLARE, to shine brightly, to stare with piercing sight. (E.) M. E. glaren. 'Swiche glaring eyen hadde he, as an hare;' Chau-cer, C. T. 686 (or 684). 'It is not al gold that glareth;' id. House of Fame, i. 272. 'Thet gold thet is bricht and glareth;' Kentish Sermons, in An Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 27, l. 31. Probably a true E. word; cf. A.S. glær, a pellucid substance, amber (Bosworth, Leo). + Du. gloren, to glimmer. + Icel. glóra, to gleam, glare like a cat's eyes. + M. H. G. glosen, to shine. glow. B. The r stands for an older s, as shewn by the M. H. G. form. Hence glars is closely connected with Glass, q. v. Der. glar-ing-ly, glar-ing-ness. GLASS, a well-known hard, brittle, transparent substance. (E.) Named from its transparency. M. E. glas, Chaucer, C. T. 198.-A S. glas, glas; Grein, i. 513. + Du. glas. + Dan. glas, glar, Swed. glas; O. Swed. glas, glar (Ihre). + Icel. glar, sometimes glas. + G. glas, O. H. G. clas. β. One of the numerous derivatives of the old European base GAL, to shine (Fick, iii. 103). -  $\sqrt{GHAR}$ , to shine; cf. Skt. ghri, to shine; gharma, warmth. See Glow. Der. glass-blow-er, glass-wort, glass-y, glass-i-ness; also glaze = M. E. glasen, P. Plowman, B. iii. 49, 61; whence glaz-ing, glaz-i-er (= laz-er, like bow-y-er, law-y-er = bow-er, law-er).

GLAUCOUS, grayish blue. (L.,-Gk.) A botanical word; see Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731.-Lat. glawcus, blueish.-Gk. γλαυκόs, gleaming, glancing, silvery, blueish; whence γλαύσσειν (yhaveyein), to shine.

GLAZE, to furnish a window with glass. (E.) See Glass. GLEAM, a beam of light, glow. (E.) M. E. gleam, gleam, glem; Havelok, 2122; Ancren Riwle, p. 94. – A. S. glam, [with long de. due to i], splendour, gleam, brightness, Grein, i. 513; Leo. Cf. gliomu, glimu, brightness, ornament; Grein, i. 515. + O. Sax. glimo, brightness; in 'glitandi glimo'= glittering splendour; Helind, 3146. + O. H. G. glimo, a glow worm.  $\beta$ . The exact formation of the word is a little obscure; but the final m is merely suffixed (as in doo-m), the Teutonic base being gli- or gla-, put for an older base GAL.  $\gamma$ . Related words further appear in the Gk.  $\chi\lambda\iota$ -após, warm,  $\chi\lambda\iota$ -a, I become warm; Skt. gkri, to shine (base ghar). S. Thus the Teutonic base GAL = Aryan GHAR; so that the root is GHAR, to shine. Fick, i. 578, 579. See Glow, Glimmer. Der. gleam, vb., gleam-y. GLIEAN, to gather small quantities of corn after harvest. (E.; modified by F.) M.E. glenen, P. Plowman, C. ix. 67. - O. F. glener, glaner, to glean; mod. F. glaner. - Low Lat. glenare, found in a document dated A. D. 561 (Brachet). - Low Lat. glena, glenna, gelina, gelima, a handful; a word ultimately of E. origin. B. We must notice the by-form gleam or gleme. 'To gleame corne, spicilegere;' Levins, 208. 20. 'To gleme corne, spicilegium facere; Gleamer of y. The form gleme is also found, by metathesis, as gelm, which was weakened, as usual, to yelm. 'Yelm,  $\frac{2}{3}$ v. to place straw ready for the thatcher, lit. to place handfuls ready. Women sometimes yeim, but they do not thatch;' Oxfordshire Glossary, E. D. S. Gl. C. 5. 8. The original of gelm, or yeim, is Glossary, E. D. S. Gl. C. 5. 8. The original of gelm, or yelm, is the A. Dict. or is CHAP to a size a size a store of the gelm. root is GHAR, to seize, whence, by the usual and regular gradations, would be formed a Teutonic base GAL or GIL, giving the sb. gil-m, a handful; cf. Gk. xup, the hand, Skt. harana, the hand, also a seizing, a carrying away, Skt. hary, to take, Ari, to seize, carry away. ¶ In this view, the O.F. glener was really derived from E., and not vice versa. In fact, the Low Lat. form cannot be clearly traced to any other source. The better form is gleam. Der. glean-er. [+]

The comp. globe-land is in Gascoigne, Fruits of War, st. 21.-O. F. globe, 'glebe, land belonging to a parsonage;' Cot.-Lat. globa, soil, a clod of earth; closely allied to Lat. globus. See Globe. Der. gleb-ous, gleb-y; glebe-land. GLEDE (1), the bird called a kite. (E.)

GLEDE (1), the bird called a kite. (E.) M. E. glede, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, ii. 1696. – A. S. glida, a kite, lit. 'the glider,' from the sailing motion of the bird; Grein, i. 56; allied to A. S. glidas, to glide. See Glide. ¶ Strictly, glida is from a base glidan, to glide. See Glide. GLID, whence also glidan.

A. S. glen is unauthorised. GLLB (1), smooth, slippery, voluble. (Dutch.) The orig. sense is 'slippery;' Shak. has 'glib and oily;' K. Lear, i. 1. 227; 'glib and slip pery;' Timon, i. 1. 53. We also find glibbery. 'What, shall thy lubri-cal and glibbery muse,' &c.; Ben Jonson, Poetaster, Act v (Tibullus). These are forms borrowed from Dutch. - Du. glibberig, slippery; glibbern, to slide; related to glippen, to slip away, glijden, to glide, glad, smooth, slippery. B. This Du. glibbery (of which glib is, apparently, a familiar contraction) prob. superseded the M. E. glider, a form not found in books, but preserved in Devonshire glidder, slippery (Halliwell), of which the more original glid occurs as a translation of lubricum in the A.S. version of Psalm, xxxiv. 7, ed. Spelman. This form glid, with its extension glider, is from A.S. glidan, to glide. [In exactly the same way we find M. E. slider, slippery (Chaucer, C. T. 1366), from the verb to slide.] See Glide. ¶ I find 'glib, slippery' in O'Reilly's Irish Dictionary, but this is doubtful; it seems due to Irish glibslamkain, slippery with sleet, in which it is really the latter half of the word that means 'slippery.' The Gael. glib, gliob really means 'sleet,' and orig. 'moisture;' cf. Corn. gleb, wet, moist, glibor, moisture. These words give no satis-factory explanation of Du. glibberig, which must not be separated from Du. glippen, to slip, steal away, glissen, to slide, and glijden, to glide. Dor. glib-ly, glib-ness. GLIB (2), a lock of hair. (C.) 'Long glibbes, which is a thick curled bush of heare, hanging downe over their eyes;' Spenser, View of State of Ireland; Globe ed. p. 630, col. 2. - Irish and Gael. glib, a lock of hair; also, a slut.

GLIB (3), to castrate; obsolete. (E.) In Shak. Wint. Tale, ii. 1. 149. The g is merely prefixed, and stands for the A. S. prefix ge-(Goth. ga-). The orig. form is lib. 'Accaponare, to capon, to gelde, to lib, to splaie;' Florio, ed. 1612. Of E. origin, as shewn by the prefixed g; lib would answer to an A. S. lybban, where y would stand for an older u. Clearly cognate with Du. lubben, to castrate; and prob. allied to lop. See Lop.

GLIDE, to slide, flow smoothly. (E.) M. E. gliden, pt. t. glod or glood; Chaucer, C. T. 10707. - A.S. glidan, Grein, i. 516. + Du. glijden. + Dan. glide. + Swed. glida. + G. gleiten. Cf. Russ. gladkie, smooth; gladile, to make smooth; also goluii, naked, bare, bald.  $\beta$ . Closely connected with Glad, q. v. Fick suggests for the latter Dan. glimere, to glimmer; glimmer, glitter, also mica; Swed. dial. glimmer, to glitter. glimmer, a glimmer, glitter; Swed. glimmer, mica (from its glitter). + G. glimmer, a glimmer, mica; glimmern, to glimmer. B. These are frequentative forms with suffix -er-; shorter forms appear in Dan. glimme, to shine, Swed. glimma, to glitter, Du. glimmen, G. glimmen, to shine. Y. Even these shorter forms are unoriginal; cf. prov. G. to some. Y. Even the source in the source of the source (Rietz); words glimm, a spark (Flügel); Swed. dial. glim, a glance (Rietz); words charles also the E. sh. sleam. See Gleam, Glow. We even closely related to the E. sb. gleam. See Gleam, Glow. We even find the sb. glim, brightness, in Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, i. 1087; this is borrowed from the Scandinavian rather than taken from A.S.

Der. glimmer, sb.; and see below. GLIMPSE, a short gleam, weak light; hurried glance or view. (Scand.) The p is excrescent; the old word was glimse. M.E. glimson, to glimpse; whence the sb. glimsing, a glimpse. 'Ye have som glimsing, and no parfit sight;' Chaucer, C. T. 10257. The word is a mere variant of glimmer, and formed by suffixing -s to the base glim-. See above.

GLINT, to glance, to shine. (Scand.) Obsolete : but important as being the word whence glance was formed; see Glance. 'Her eye glent Aside; 'Chaucer, Troil. iv. 1223; cf. Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 70, 114, 671, 1026; B. 218. A nasalised form from the base GLIT, to shine; see Glitter, Glow. [†]

GLISTEN, GLISTER, to glitter, shine. (E.) These are mere extensions from the E. base glis-, to shine; which appears in M. E. glisien, to shine; 'in glysyinde wede = in glistening garment; An Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 91, l. 21. – A. S. glisian *, only in the deriv. glisnian, to gleam; Grein, i. 516. B. Glisnian is formed from the base glis- by the addition of the n so often used to extend such bases; and hence we had M. E. glisnien, with pres. part. glisnande, glittering; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 165. This M. E. glisnien would give a later E. glisen, but the word is always spelt glis-t-en, with an excrescent t, which is frequently, however, not sounded. B. Similarly, from the base glie-, with suffixed -t and the frequentative er, was formed M.E. glisteren or glistren. 'The water glistred over al ;' Gower, C. A. ii. 252. Cf. O. Du. glisteren (Oude-

'Gloting [peeping] round her rock;' Chapman, tr. of Homer, Odyssey, xii. 150.-Icel. glotta, to grin, Simile sconfully. + Swed. dial. glota, glutta, to peep (Rietz); connected with Swed. dial. glota, glutta, to peep (Rietz); connected with Swed. dial. gloa, (1) to glow, (2) to stare. Cf. Swed. glo, to stare; Dan. glow, to glow, to stare.  $\beta$ . Hence glota is a more extension of glow. See Glow.

a mere extension of glow. See Glow. GLOBE, a ball, round body. (F., -L.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 153. -O. F. globe, 'a globe, ball;' Cot. - Lat. globum, acc. of globus, a ball; allied to glomus, a ball, clue (E. clue or clew), and to globa, a clod of earth (E. globe). See Globe and Clow. Root uncertain. Der. globate (Lat. globatus, globe-shaped); glob-ous (Lat. globosus), Milton, P. E. glommen, glomben, to look gloomy, frown; Rom. of the Rose, 4356; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 94; Halliwell's Dict., p. 404. - Swed. dial. glomma, to stare; from Swed. dial. gloa, to stare; connected with Swed. glomug, gloomy, and E. gloom; see Gloom.

GLUME, a husk or floral covering of grasses. (L.) A botanical term. Borrowed, like F. glume, from Lat. gluma, a husk, hull. -Lat. glubere, to peel, take off the husk; whence glubma = gluma. ¶ Fick (i. 574) suggests a connection with E. cleave, to split asunder. See Cleave (1). Der. glum-ac-e-ous (Lat. glumaceus). GLUT, to swallow greedily, gorge. (L.) In Shak, Temp. i. 1.

liquorice, q. v. GLYPTIC, relating to carving in stone. (Gk.) Mere Greek. -Gk. γλυπτικόε, carving ; γλυπτόε, carved, fit for carving. - Gk. γλόφ-ειν, to hollow out, engrave. Allied to Gk. γλάφειν, to hew, γράφειν, to grave. See Grave, verb.

GNARL, to snarl, to growl. (E.) Perhaps obsolete. Shak. has 'gnarling sorrow hath less power to bite;' Rich. II, i. 3. 292; 'Wolves are gnarling;' 2 Hen. VI, iii. 1. 192. Gnar-1 (with the usual added -1) is the frequentative of gnar, to snarl. 'For and this curre do gnar' = for if this cur doth snarl; Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Courte, 297. This word is imitative; the alleged A.S. gnyrran rests only on the authority of Somner. But the word may be called E. + Du. knorren, to grumble, snarl. + Dan. knurre, to growl, snarl; cf. knarre, knarke, to creak, grate; knur, a growl, the purring of a cat. + Swed. knorra, to murmur, growl; knorr, a murmur. + G. knurren, to growl, snarl; knarren, knirren, to creak. Allied to Gnash. [†] GNARLED, twisted, knotty. (E.) 'Gnarled oak; 'Meas. for Meas. ii. 2. 116. Gnarled means 'full of gnarls,' where gnar-l is a dimin. form of gnar or knar, a knot in wood. M. E. knarre, a knot in wood; Wyclif, Wisdom, xiii. 13; whence the adj. knarry, full of knots. 'With knotty knarry barein trees olde;' Chaucer, C. T. 1979. 8. The spelling knur or knurr (for knar) also occurs; 'A bounche [bunch] or knur in a tree;' Elyot's Dict., ed. 1559. s. v. Bruscum. This word has also a dimin. form knurl, with the same sense of ' hard knot.' These words may be considered E., though not found in A.S. + O. Du. knor, 'a knurl;' Sewel's Du. Dict. ; cf. Du. knorf, a knot. + Dan. knort, a knot, gnarl, knag; knortet, knotty, gnarled. + Swed. knoria, a curl, ringlet; knorig, curled. + Icel. gnerr, a knot, knob. + G. knorren, an excrescence, lump; knorrig, gnarled. Remoter origin unknown. See Knurr.

GNASH, to grind the teeth, to bite fiercely. (Scand.) A modi-fication of M. E. gnasten, to gnash the teeth; Wyclif, Isaiah, v. 29; viii. 19.-Swed. knastra, to crash (between the teeth). + Dan. knaske, to crush between the teeth, to gnash. + Icel. gnastan, sb. a gnashing; gnista, to gnash the teeth, to snarl; gnesta, to crack. + G. knastern, to gnash, crackle.  $\beta$ . Cf. also Du. knarsen, to gnash; G. knirschen, to gnash, crash, grate. The word seems to be a mere variant of Crash, and ultimately related to Crack. The same substitution of π for r is seen in Gael. cnac, to crack, break, crash, split, splinter.

Note also Norweg. knetta (Aasen), Dan. knittre, Du. gaitsa.+Lat. haedus.  $\beta$ . All from an Aryan form GHAIDA, knitteren, to crackle. ¶ It should, however, be noted that Swed. which from  $\sqrt{GHID}$ , prob. meaning 'to play sport of Lithuraite gnet means 'a nit;' this suggests a possible connection between the two words; yet the A.S. form of nit is knit, which does not seem to be quite the same thing.

GNAW, to bite furiously or roughly. (E.) M. E. gnawen; the pt. t. gnow occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 14758; and gnew in Rich. Coer de Lion, ed. Weber, 3089. – A. S. gnagan; the compound for-gnagan, to devour entirely, occurs in Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 194, l. 1. + Du. knagen. + O. Icel. gnaga, mod. Icel. naga. + Dan. gnave. + Swed. where  $\beta$  is a mere prefix, standing for gnaga.  $\beta$ . In this word the g is a mere prefix, standing for A. S. ge = Goth. ga. The simple verb appears in Icel. naga, Dan. nage, G. nagen, to gnaw, Swed. nagga, to nibble; and in the prov. E. nag, to tease, worry, irritate, scold. See Nail.

GNEISS, a species of stratified rock. (G.) Modern. A term in geology. Borrowed from G. gneiss, a name given to a certain kind of rock. Der. gneiss-o-id, with a Gk. suffix, as in Astoroid, q.v. GNOME, a kind of sprite. (F.,-Gk.) In Pope, Rape of the Lock, i. 63. - F. gnome, a gnome. Littré traces the word back to Dere in the second state of the second seco Paracelsus; it seems to be an adaptation of Gk. yrwun, intelligence, from the notion that the intelligence of these spirits could reveal the secret treasures of the earth. The gnomes were spirits of earth, the sylphs of air, the salamanders of fire, and the nymphs of water.  $\beta$ . Others regard the word as a briefer form of gnomon, but the result is much the same. The Gk, yrwun is from yrwrai, to know. See Gnomon.

GNOMON, the index of a dial, &c. (L., -Gk.) 'The style in the dial called the gnomon;' Holland's Pliny, b. ii. c. 72. - Lat. gno-mon, which is merely the Gk. word. - Gk. γνώμων, an interpreter, lit. 'one who knows;' an index of a dial. - Gk. γνώναι, to know. - VGAN, to know; whence also E. Know, q.v. Der. gnomon-ic, gnomon-ics, gnomon-ic-al.

GNOSTIC, one of a certain sect in the second Christian century. (Gk.) 'The vain science of the Gnosticks;' Gibbon, Rom. Empire, c. 14. And see Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Ck. γνωστικώ, good at knowing. - Gk. yrwords, longer form of yrwrds, known. - Gk. yrŵrai, to know. See Gnomon. Der. Gnostic-ism.

GNU, a kind of antelope. (Hottentot.) Found The word is said to belong to the Hottentot language. Found in S. Africa.

GO, to move about, proceed, advance. (E.) M.E. gon, goon, go; GO, to move about, proceed, advance. (E.) M.E. gon, goon, go; Chaucer, C. GOAD, a sharp pointed stick for driving oxen. M. E. gode. Wip a longe gode; P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, 1. 433. – A. S. gad, not common; but we find 'ongean ha gade' a against the goad (cf. Acts, ix. 5); Ælfric's Hom. 1. 386. 1. 9 (where the accent seems to be that of the MS. itself). We find also gadu, a goad; Grein, i. 366.  $\beta$ . The appearance of the word under two forms is puzzling. Perhaps gadu was borrowed from Icel. gaddr, a goad ; see Grad (1). The form gad answers to gasd, the s being dropped before d in this instance. Similarly, the Icel. gaddr = gasdr, by assimilation. These words are cognate with Goth. gazds, a goad, prick, sting (Gk. névrpov); I Cor. xv. 55. y. Again, by the common change of s to r, the form gasd also passed into an A. S. gard \*, a rod, written gierd, gyrd, Grein, i. 536; whence E. yard. See Yard, in the sense of 'rod' or 'stick.' S. Again, the Goth. gazds is 8. Again, the Goth. gazds is cognate with Lat. hasta, a spear; and the collation of all the forms leads us to infer an Aryan form ghasta, from a supposed & GHAS, to strike, pierce, wound ; cf. Skt. Aims, to strike, kill.

GOAL, the winning-post in a race.  $(F_{n,}-O, Low G.)$  A term in running races. 'As, in rennynge, passynge the gole is accounted but rasshenesse; Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 20. l. 4. 'No person... should have won the ryng or gott the gole before me; 'Hall's Chron. Rich. III, an. 2. The 'gole' was a pole set up to mark the winning-place, and is now called the 'post.' - F. gaule, 'a pole, big rod;' Cot. In O. F., spelt wauls (Roquefort). β. Of O. Low G. origin; O. Friesic wals, a staff; North Friesic waal (Outzen). + Icel. völr, a round stick, staff. + Goth. walus, a staff; Luke, ix. 3. Cf. prov. E. wallop, in the sense 'to beat;' and see Wale, in the sense of 'a stripe made by a blow.'  $\gamma$ . The staff was named walus from its roundness; cf. Russ. val', a cylinder, from valiate, to roll; also Goth. walwjan, to roll; Lat. wolwere. See Voluble. [+] Gota well-known quadruped. (E.) M. E. goot, M. E. goot, 590 (or 688). - A. źaid-źu, I play (base ghid-). Fick, i. 584. Der. goats-beard, goat-moth, goat-sucker.

goal-succer. GOBBET, a mouthful, a little lump, small piece. (F., -C.) The short form gob is rare. 'Gob or Gobbet, a great piece of meat;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. M. E. gobet, a small piece; P. Plowman, C. vi. 100; Chaucer, C. T. 698. 'Thei tooken the relifs of brokun gobetis, twelue cofyns ful;' Wyclif, Matt. xiv. 20. -O. F. gobet, a morsel of food, not given in Burguy or Cotgrave, but preserved in the modern F. gobet, given as a popular word in Littre. A dimin form, with suffix -et, from O.F. gob, a gulp, as used in the phrase 'l'avalla tout de gob = at one gulpe, or, as one gobbet, he swallowed it all; Cot. - O. F. gober, to ravine, devour, feed greedily; Cot.  $\beta$ . Of Celtic origin; cf. Gael. gob, the beak or bill of a bird, or (ludicrously) the mouth; Irish gob, mouth, beak, snout; W. gwp, the head and neck of a bird. ¶ The prov. E. gob, the mouth, is borrowed from Celtic directly. And see Gobble.

GOBBLE, to swallow greedily. (F. ; with E. suffix.) . Gabble we, to eat gobs, or swallow greedily. (F.; WIM E. suffat.) 'Gobbe we, to eat gobs, or swallow down greedily; 'Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. Not in early use. A frequentative, formed by adding -le, of O. F. gober, 'to ravine, devour, feed greedily, swallow great morsels, let downe whole gobbets; 'Cot. See Gobbet. B. At a late period, the word gobble was adopted as being a suitable imitative word, to represent the sound made by turkeys. In this sense, it occurs in Goldsmith's Animated Nature.

GOBELIN, a rich French tapestry. (F.) 'So named from a house at Paris, formerly possessed by wooldyers, whereof the chief (Giles Gobelin) in the reign of Francis I. [1515-1547] is said to have found the secret of dyeing scarlet; ' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. GOBLET, a large drinking-cup.  $(F_{..}-L.)$  'A goblet of sylner;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, v. ii. c. 87. - F. gobelet, 'a goblet, bole, or wide-mouthed cup;' Cot. Dimin. (with suffix -el) of O. F. gobel, (later form gobeau) which Cot. explains by 'a mazer or great goblet." -Low Lat. cupellum, acc. of cupellus, a cup; a variant of Lat. eupella, a kind of vat, dimin. of eupa, a tub, cask, vat. See Coop. Cup. For the change from e to g, cf. Bret. kop, gop, a cup.

GOBLIN, a kind of mischievous sprite, fairy. (F., = L., = Gk.) Formerly gobeline, in 3 syllables. 'The wicked gobbelines;' Spen-ser, F. Q. ii. 10. 73. = O. F. gobelin, 'a goblin, or hob-goblin;' Cot. -Low Lat. gobelinus, an extension of Low Lat. cobalus, a goblin, demon = Gk wifeline an immediate sponse acurity service. demon. - Gk. κόβαλοs, an impudent rogue, a sprite, goblin. See Cobalt

GOBY, a kind of sea-fish. (L., -Gk.) Gobio or Gobius, the gudgeon or pink, a fish; Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. The goby is a mere corruption of Lat. gobius (cf. F. gobis), orig. applied to the gudgeon. -Gk. κωβιών, a kind of fish, gudgeon, tench. See Gudgeon.

GOD, the Supreme Being. (E.) M. E. god (written in MSS. with small initial letter); Chaucer, C. T. 535. – A. S. god; Grein, i. 517. + Du. god. + Icel. gud. + Dan. gud. + Swed. gud. + Goth.guith. + G. gott. $<math>\beta$ . All from a Teutonic base GUTHA. God; Fick, iii. 107. Of unknown origin; quite distinct and separate from good, with which it has often been conjecturally connected. See Max Müller, Lectures, ii. 316, 8th ed. Der. godd-ess, q.v.; godchild; god-father, q. v.; god-head, q. v.; god-less, god-like, god-ly, god-send. god-son; also god-bye, q. v.; gospell, q. v.; gossip, q. v. GODDESS, a female divinity. (E.; with F. suffix.) M. E. god-desse (better godesse), a hybrid compound, used by Chaucer, C. T. 1103; Gower, C. A. i. 91. Made by adding to God the O. F. suffix -esse (=Lat. -issa=Gk. -iσσa). ¶ The A. S. word was gyden (Grein, i. 536); correctly formed by vowel-change and with the addition of GODFATHER, a male sponsor in baptism. (E.) M. E. god-

Godba A Theorem, a male sponsor in baptism. (E.) M. E. god-fader, Rob. of Glouc. p. 69. Earlier, in William of Shoreham's Poems, ed. Wright, p. 69 (temp. Edw. 11). From god, God; and fader, father. B. Other similar words are god-kild, Ancren Riwle, p. 210; M. E. goddogter = god-daughter, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 48; M. E. godmoder = god-mother, id. same page; M. E. godsnae = god-son, Wright's Vocab. i. 214, col. 2. And see Goseff GODHEAD, divinity, divine nature. (E.) M. E. godsnae, C. T. 2383; soelt godkod, Ancren Riwle, p. 112. The suffix is cer, C. T. 2383; spelt godkod, Ancren Riwle, p. 112. The suffix is wholly different from E. Acad, being the same suffix as that which is commonly written -kood. The etymology is from the A. S. kid, office, state, dignity; as in 'bri on kidum' = three in (their) Persons; Ælfric's Hom. ii. 42. ¶ This A.S. kid properly passed into -kood, as in E. man-kood; but in M. E. was often represented by -kede or -ked. so that we also find manhede, Will. of Palerne, 431. This accounts for the double form maiden-hood and maiden-head.

GODWIT, the name of a bird. (E.) 'Th' Ionian godwit;' Ben

Jonson, tr. of Horace's Odes, lib. v. od. 2, l. 53. The supposed ety-<sup>2</sup> good-Friday (M. E. gode fridaye, P. Plowman, B. x. 414); good ly-mology is from A. S. god wikt = good creature, good animal. The A. S. wikt, a wight, was applied to creatures of every kind, in-of Bible, Isaiah, xl. 6, and by Fairfax, tr. of Tasso, b. xx. st. 107); mology is from A. S. god wikt = good creature, good animal. The A.S. wikt, a wight, was applied to creature, good animal. The A.S. wikt, a wight, was applied to creatures of every kind, in-cluding birds. 'Ponne wikta gehwylce deóra and fugla deávlég mimed' = then the death-fire consumes every creature, animals and birds; Cynewulf's Crist, 1. 982. ¶ The form is even closer to A.S. gód wit = good wit, intelligence; but the sense is too abstract. GOGGLEI-EYAD, having rolling and staring eyes. (Of C. origin?). 'They gogle with their eyes hither and thither;' Holin-shed, Descr. of Ireland, c. I. 'Glyare, or gogul-eye, limus, strabo;' Prompt. Parv. p. 199. 'Gogyl-eyid, gogelere, limus, strabo;' id. p. 301. Wyclif translates Lat. lucum by 'gogil-iged' = goggle-eyed; Mark, iz. 46. 'Goggle-eyed man. louchs;' Palsgrave. The suffix -le is, as usual, frequentative: the base appears to be Celtic. = Irish and is, as usual, frequentative; the base appears to be Celtic - Irish and Gael. gog, a nod, slight motion; Irish gogaim, I nod, gesticulate; gogach, wavering, reeling; gogor, light (in demeanour); Gael. gogach, nodding, fickle; gogaill, a silly female, coquette. The special application of the word appears clearly in Irish and Gael. gog: Assileack, goggle-eyed, having wandering eyes: from gog, to move slightly, and swil, the eye, look, glance.  $\beta$ . The original sense is clearly having roving, unsteady, or rolling eyes: a fiterwards used of ugly or staring eyes. The use of the word by Wyclif, in the sense of 'one-eyed,' suggests that he was thinking of the Lat. cocles, which is probably not connected. Der. goggle, verb, to roll the eyes (Butler): goggles, i.e. a facetious name for spectacles. GOITRE, a swelling in the throat. (F., -L.) M

Modern. Used

GOITRE, a swelling in the throat. (F., -L.) Modern. Used in speaking of the Swiss peasants who are afflicted with it. -F. foitre, a swelled neck. - Lat. guttur, the throat (through a debased form gutter); see Juvenal, Sat. xiii. 162. GOLD, a precious metal. (E.) M.E. gold, Chaucer, C.T. 12704. - A.S. gold; Grein, i. 519. + Du. goud [for gold]. + Icel. gull. + Swed. and Dan. guld. + G. gold. + Goth. gullk; I Tim. ii. 9. + Russ. zlato. + Gk. xpvods. + Zend. zaranu, zaranya, gold. + Skt. See Fick, i. 579. And see Green, Yellow, Chlorine; all from the same source. Der. gold-en (A. S. gyld-en, by the usual letter change, but altered in M.E. to gold-en); gold-beater, gold-dust, gold-finck (Chaucer, C. T. 4365), gold-fish, gold-leaf, gold-smith (Prompt. Parv. p. 202); mary-gold or maximud mari-gold.

GOLF, the name of a game. (Du.) Mentioned in Acts of James II. See Jamieson's Dict., where the earliest mention of it is said to be in 1538. The name is taken from that of a Du. game played with a mall and ball. - Du. kolf, 'a club to strike little bouls or balls with, a mall-stick ; ' Sewel's Du. Dict. + Icel. kolfr, the (rounded) clapper of a bell, a bulb, a bolt for a crossbow; kylfa, a club. + Dan. kolbe, the butt-end of a weapon; kolv, a bolt, shaft, arrow. + Swed. kolf, a buttend, bolt, retort (in chemistry). + G. kolbe, a club, mace, knob, butt-end of a gun; retort (in chemistry).  $\beta$ . The original sense seems to have been 'rounded end.' Of uncertain origin ; see Fick, iii. 45. GOLOSH, a waterproof overshoe. (F.,-L.) The same as

Galoche, q. v. GONDOLA, a Venetian pleasure-boat. (Ital., -Gk.) Shak. has gondola, Merch. of Ven. ii. 8. 8; and gondolier, Oth. i. 1. 26.-Ital. gondola, a boat used (says Florio) only at Venice; a dimin. of gonda, used with the same meaning. - Gk. Kóvov, a drinking-vessel; which the gondol 1 was supposed to resemble. Said to be a word of Pers. origin. Perhaps from Pers. kandú, an earthen vessel, butt, vat; GONFANON, GONFALON, a kind of standard or banner. (F., – M. H. G.) M. E. gonfanon, Rom. of the Rose. 1201, 2018. (F.,-M. H. G.) M. E. gon/anon, Kom. of the Kose. 1201, 2010. The form gonfalon is a corruption. The sb. gunfaneur - banner-bearer, occurs in the Ancren Riwle, p. 300. - O. F. gonfanon, gun-faron. - M. H. G. gundfano, a banner, lit. battle-standard. - M. H. G. gund, gund, battle (chiefly preserved in female names, as *Rhade-*gund); and fano, vano (mod. G. fahne), a standard, banner. β. The W. H. G. encod is economic with A. S. with (for gund), war, battle: gend); and fano, vano (mou. G. janne), a statutate, balance. p. and M. H. G. gund is cognate with A. S. guñ (for gund), war, battle; Icel. gunnr, guðr, battle; from  $\checkmark$  GHAN, to strike; cf. Skt. han, to strike, kill; Russ. gnate, goniate, to chase; Pers. jang, war.  $\gamma$  G. fahne is cognate with E. vane; see Vano.

GONG, a circular disc, used as a bell. (Malay). Modern. In GONG, a circular disc, used as a ben, (statay). model. In Douce, Illustrations of Shakespeare, i. 29. - Malay aging or gong, the gong a sonorous instrument; Marsden's Malay Dict., p. 12, col. 1.

GOOD, virtuous, excellent, kind. (E.) M. E. good, gode, Chaucer, C. T. 479. - A. S. god; Grein, i. 520. + Du. goed. + Icel. gódr. + Dan. and Swed. god. + Goth. gods. + G. gut. β. According to Fick, i. 98, the Teutonic base is GAD, to suit, fit; for which see Gathar. Cf. Russ. godno. suitably: rodunii, suitable. Der. good. Gather. Cf. Russ. godno, suitably; godnuii, suitable. Der. good, sb., pl. goods (M. E. goods, P. Plowman, C. ix. 251); good day; Gore (1). And see above.

good-natured; good-ness = A.S. godnes, Grein, i. 523; good-will. Also good-man, q. v. ¶ But not good-bye. GOOD-BYE, farewell. (E.) A familiar (but meaningless) con-traction of God be with you, the old form of farewell. Very common in Shak., where old edd. often have God buy you. 'God buy you, good Sir Topas;' Tw. Nt. iv. 2. 108 (first folio). 'God be with you; I have done;' Oth. i. 3. 189 (first folio). GOODMAN, the master of the house. (E.) In the Bible. A. V. Luke, xii. 39, &c. See Eastwood and Wright's Bible Wordbook (where, however, a wrong suggestion is made as to the etymology). M.E. godeman, in the Seven Sages, Thornton Romances, Introd. xliv, 1. 5. Observe especially the occurrence of godeman, as a tr. of Lat. pater-familias, in An O Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 33. the good wyse of the house; 'Sir T. More's Utopia (E. version), ed.

Arber, p. 75. Compounded of good and man. Cf. Lowland Scotch gude man, the master of a family; Jamieson.
GOOSE, the name of a bird. (E.) M. E. gos, goos, pl. gees; Chaucer, C. T. 4135, 15397. - A. S. gós, pl. gés; Grein, i. 523 (where gós stands for an older gans, the long ó being due to loss of m). + Du. gans. + Dan. gaas (for gans), pl. ges. + Swed. gds (for gans).
+ Icel. gás (for gans). + G. gans. + Lat. ans-er. + Gk. xήν. + Skt. kamsa. + Russ. gus'. + Lithuan. źā.is.
β. 'Kuhn (Zeitschrift, ii. 261) is doubtless right in referring the stem xην to a form xeve... The oft-repeated etymology from xaireer, to gape, does very well so far as the meaning goes, but the s, which is found in the word in all languages, is against it. It seems to be an addition to the root; Curtius, i. 200. ¶ From the same base GHAN we have also gann-et and gan-d-er. See Gannet, Gander. The occurrence of these words favours the theory that, in the primary form GHANSI (goose), the s is a mere addition; thus making the derivation from ✓ GHA, to gape, yawn, very probable. See Yawn. Der. goose-grass (so called because geese are fond of it), goos-quill, gos-hawk,

GOOSEBEERRY, the berry of a certain shrub. (Hybrid; F.,-M. H. G.; and E.) 'Not worth a gooseberry;' 2 Hen. IV, i. 2. 196. 'A gooseberrie, and Lib, Not world a gooseberrie, y, 2 11ch, 10, 12 ending berry is E. A. As in groom, q. v., an r has been inserted, so in gaffer and gooseberry an r has been lost. It is retained in North E. grosers, gooseberries (Halliwell, Brockett). Burns has grozet, a gooseberry; To a Louse, st. 5. B. Thus gooseberry is equivalent to groise-berry or grose berry, where groise or grose is an ab-breviated (or more likely an original, but unrecorded) form of O.F. groisele, groselle, or groiselle, a gooseberry. The spellings groiselle and grosselle are in Cotgrave; the spelling groisel occurs in a poem of the 13th century; see Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, col. 3/8, l. 33. Cf. groiselier, grosselier, 'a gooseberry shrub;' Cotgrave. O. We have further proof; for the same Shrub; Corgrave. O. we have further proof; for the same O. F. groise (= groisele) has found its way into Irish, Gaelic, and Welsh; cf. Irish groisaid, Gael. groiseld, a gooseberry; W. grwys, a wild gooseberry. D. The O. F. groisele is a dimin. of groise *, obviously of Teutonic origin; viz. from M. H. G. krús, curling, crisped; whence mod. G. krausberre, a cranberry, rough gooseberry. Cf. Swed. krusbär, a gooseberry; Du. kruisbezie (lit. a cross-berry), a singular corruption of kroesbezie, by confusion between kruis. a cross, and kroes. crisp, frizzled. Thus, the orig. form of the first syllable is traced back, with great probability, to M. H. G. krús, Swed. krus, Du. kross, crisp, curled, frizzled; with reference to the short crisp curling hairs upon the rougher kinds of the fruit; cf. the Lat. name use crispe in Levins, given above. ¶ Add, that the F. grossillier was Latinised as grossularia, with a further tendency to confusion with Lat. grossus, thick; so that if the name had been turned into gross-berry, it would not have been surprising. The sug-gestion (in Webster) of a connection with E. gore (formerly gorst) is quite out of the question, and entirely unsupported. [†] GOPHER, a kind of wood. (Heb.) In A. V. Gen. vi. 14.-

GOPHER, a kind of wood. (Heb.) Heb. gopher, a kind of wood ; supposed to be pine or fir.

GORBELLIED, having a fat belly. (E.) In Shak. 1 Hen. IV, ii. 2. 93. Compounded of E. gore, lit. filth, dirt (here used of the β. All doubt contents of the stomach and intestines); and belly. as to the origin is removed by comparing Swed. dial. gar-baig, a fat paunch, which is certainly compounded of Swed. dial. gar (Swed. gorr), dit, the contents of the intestines, and baig, the belly. See Rietz, p. 225. See Gore (1). And see below. GOBCROW, the carrion-crow. (E.) 'Raven and gorcrow, all my birds of prey;' Ben Jonson, The Fox, Act i. Compounded of E. gore, filth, dirt, carrion (a former sense of the word); and crow. See GORDIAN.

GORDIAN, intricate. (Gk.) Only in the phr. 'Gordian knot;' Cymb. ii. 2. 34. Named from the Phrygian king Gordius (Gk. Fóp-bios), father of Midas, who, on being declared king, 'dedicated his chariot to Zeus, in the Acropolis of Gandium. The pole was fastened to the yoke by a knot of bark; and an oracle declared that whosoever should untie the knot should reign over all Asia. Alexander, on his arrival at Gordium, cut the knot with his sword, and applied the oracle to himself;' Smith's Classical Dict.

GORE (1), clotted blood, blood, (E.) It formerly meant also dirt or filth. It occurs in the sense of 'filthiness' in Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, ii. 306. – A. S. gor, dirt, filth; Grein, i. 520. + Icel. gor, It formerly meant also gore, the cud in animals, the chyme in men. + Swed. gorr, dirt, matter.  $\beta$ . Allied to Icel. garnir, görn, the guts; Gk.  $\chi op \delta n$ , a string of gut, cord; Lat. hira, gut, hernia, hernia. See Fick, i. 580; iii. 102; Curtius, i. 250.  $-\sqrt{2}$  GHAR, of uncertain meaning. Hence Cord, Chord, Yarn, and Hernia are all related words. Der. gor-belly, q. v., gor-crow, q. v. Also gor-y, Macbeth, iii. 4. 51.

GORE (a), a triangular piece let into a garment; a triangular slip of land. (E.) M. E. gore, Chaucer, C. T. 3237. – A. S. gara, a projecting point of land; Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, i. 1. 27. – A.S. gar, a spear; see Gore (3). β. Similarly we have Icel. geiri, a triangular piece of land; from geirr, a spear. Also O. H. G. kero, M. H. G. gere, a promontory; G. gekre, a wedge, gusset; Du. geer, a gusset, gore. GOBLE (3), to pierce, bore through. (E.) In Shak. As You Like It, ii. 1. 25. Formed, as a verb, from M. E. gare, gore, gar, a spear. 'Brennes...lette glide his gar' = Brennus let fall his spear; Layamon, 50; 9. - A.S. gár, a spear; Grein, i. 370. (The vowel-change is perfectly regular; cf. bone, stone, loaf, from A.S. bán, stán, kláf). + Icel. geirr, a spear. + M. H. G. ger, O. H. G. ker, a spear. B. We know that r here stands for an older s, because the Lat. gaesum, a javelin. is a borrowed word from the Teutonic. Hence the theoretical Teutonic form is gaisa, a spear; Fick, iii. 96. Der. gore (2); see above.

GORGE, the throat; a narrow pass. (F.,-L.) M.E. gorge, the throat ; Allit. Morte Arthur, ed. Brock, 3760. - O. F. gorge, the throat, gullet. - Low Lat. gorgia, the throat, a narrow pass; gorga, gurga, the same as Lat. gurges (Ducange). - Lat. gurges, a whiri-pool, abyss; hence applied, in late times, to the gullet, from its voracity. Cf. Lat. gurguio, the gullet. + Skt. gargara, a whirlpool; a reduplicated form, from & GAR, to swallow, devour; cf. Skt. gri, to devour. Der. gorge, verb. Romeo, v. 3. 46; gorget, a piece of armour to protect the throat, Troilus, i. 3. 174; Spenser, F. Q. iv. 3. And see gorgeous.

GORGEOUS, showy, splendid. (F., -L.) 'In gorgeous aray Sir T. More, Works, p. 808c; 'they go gorgeously arayed;' id. 808 a. A corruption of the singular O.F. gorgias, 'gorgeous, gaudy, flaunting, brave, gallant, gay, fine, trimme, quaintly clothed; Cot. Cf. se gorgiaser, 'to flaunt, brave, or gallantise it;' id.  $\beta$ . Perhaps formed from O. F. gorgias, 'a gorget;' id.; as though to wear a gorget were a fine thing; or from the swelling of the threat corridored as a sumbal of raids. throat considered as a symbol of pride. Y. Either way, the word depends upon F. gorge, the throat; and much light is thrown upon the word by another entry in Cotgrave, viz. 'se rengorger, to hold down [let sink down] the head, or thrust the chin into the neck, as some do in pride, or to make their faces look the fuller; we say, to bridle it." 8. Note also Span. gorja, the throat; gorjal, a gorget, the collar of a doublet; gorguera, a gorget; gorguero, a kind of neckcloth, of ladies of fashion; gorguerin, a ruft round the neck. See Gorge. Der. gorgeous-ly, gorgeous-ness. GOBGON, a terrible monster. (L., - Gk.) In Shak. Macb. ii. 3. 77.

- Lat. Gorgon, Gorgo. - Gk. Fopyto, the Gorgon, a monster of fearful aspect. - Gk. yopytos, fearful, terrible. Root unknown; perhaps related to Skt. gar, to roar. Der. Gorgon-ian, Milton, P.L. ii. 611. GOBILLIA, a kind of large ape. (O. African.) The word is an old one, lately revived. It occurs just at the end of a treatise called the Periplus (mepinhous), i.e. 'circumnavigation,' written by a Carthaginian navigator named Hanno. This was originally written in the Punic language, and afterwards translated into Greek. He there describes some creatures 'which the interpreters called Gorillas."

GORMANDIZE, to eat like a glutton. (F.) In Shak. Merch. of Ven. ii. 5. 3. Cotgrave has: 'Gourmander, to ravine, devour, glut, gormandize or gluttonize it.' The addition of -ize was no doubt suggested by the previous existence in E. of the sb. gourmand-yss, as in 'they eate withoute gourmandy:e;' Sir T. Elyot, Castle of Halth b iii of the D. K. gourmandy:e cluttonut Cat of Helth, b. ii. c. 1. This is from O. F. gourmandise, gluttony; Cot. Both the sb. gourmandise and the vb. gourmander are from the O.F.

44; A.V. 'of a bramble bash; 'Vulgate, 'de rubo.' β. Re-moter origin unknown. By some compared with O. Du. gors, grass (Oudemans); Wedgwood refers it to W. gores, gorest, waste, open. But gores is neither 'grass' nor 'an open space.' γ. I should rather suppose gorst = grost [Cf. frost = A.S. for:f]; and refer it to A. S. growan, to grow, with the sense of 'growth.' Cf. bla-st from blow = A.S. blawan; blo-ssom (A.S. blo-sl-ma) from blow = A.S. blówan, ¶ In this way, gorse is related to grass indirectly. See blowan. In this way, gorse is related to grass inducedly. Grass, Grow. GOSHAWK, a kind of hawk. (E.) Lit. a 'goose-hawk.' M. E. go. hauk, Wyclif, Job, xxxix. 13. The connection with goose is proved by two successive entries in Wright's Vocab. i. 29, col. 1, viz. 'Auea, gos;' and 'Aucarius, gos-hafuc.' Here gos = A. S. gos, a goose; and hafwe = a hawk. The Vocabulary is ascribed to the tenth cen-tury. + Icel. gás-haukr, similarly formed. And see below. GOSLING, a young goose. (E.) In Shak. Cor. v. 3, 35. Here gos. = M. E. gos = A. S. gos, a goose. The suffix -ling is a double di-minutive, = l-ing. Cf. duck-ling, from duck. See Goose. GOSPEIL. the life of Christ. (E.) M. E. gospel, Chaucer, C. T.

GOSPEIL, the life of Christ. (E.) M. E. gospel, Chaucer, C. T. 483. Also godspel, P. Plowman, C. xiii. 100. – A. S. godspell, Grein, i. 519. – A. S. god, God; and spell, a story, history, narrative; see Grein, ii. 469.  $\beta$ . Thus the lit. sense is the 'narrative of God,' i. e. the life of Christ. It is constantly derived from A.S. god, good, and spell, story, as though god spell were a translation of Gk. evayγίλιον; and it was no doubt sometimes so understood, as, e. g. in the Ormulum, l. 157 of the Introduction, where we read: Goddspell onn Ennglissh nemmnedd iss god word and god tibennde'= Gospel is named in English good word and good tiding. Y. This deriva-tion gives an excellent sense, and would have served well for a trans-lation of the Greek word. Yet it is not a little remarkable that, y. This derivawhen the A.S. word was introduced into I celand, it took the form gudspjall = God-story, and not god-spjall = good story. And the O.H.G. word was likewise gotspel (= God story), and not guot spel. We must accept the fact, without being prejudiced ; remembering that, in compound substantives, the former element is much more often a sb. than an adjective. ¶ Some have conjectured that the word may have been altered from godspil. If so, the O. H. G. word requires a similar conjecture. And we have no proof of it. [†]

GOSSAMER, fine spider-threads seen in fine weather. (E.) M.E. gossomer, Chaucer, C. T. 10573. Spelt gossomer by W. de Bibles-worth (13th cent.); Wright's Vocab. i. 147, last line. Of disputed origin; but M. E. gossomer is lit. goose-summer, and the prov. E. (Craven) name for gossamer is summer-goose; see Craven Gloss. The word is probably nothing but a corruption of 'goose-summer' or 'summer goose,' from the downy appearance of the film. Thus the Gael. name is cleit lusan, lit. down on plants ; and the Du. Dict. gives dons der planten, with the same sense, as an equivalent for gossamer. B. We may note, further, that Jamieson's Scottish Dict. gives summercout, i.e. summer-colt, as the name of exhalations seen rising from the ground in hot weather; and the Yorkshire expression for the same is very similar. 'When the air is seen on a warm day to undulate, and seems to rise as from hot embers, it is said, "see how the summer-colt rides!" Whitby Glossary, by F. K. Robinson; quoted from Marshall.  $\gamma$ . In the same Whitby Glossary, the word for 'gos-samer' is entered as summer-gauge. This may be confidently pronounced to be an ingenious corruption, as the word gauze is quite unknown to Middle-English and to the peasants of Craven, who say summer-goose ; see Carr's Craven Glossary, where the summercolt and summer-goose are, however, confounded together. A homely derivation of this kind is likely to be the true one; the only real difficulty is in the transposition of the words. 8. But here we are helped out by the German, which shews that the difficulty really lies in the double sense of the word summer. The G. sommer means not only 'summer,' but also 'gossamer,' in certain compounds. The G. name for 'gossamer' is not only sommerfüden (summer-threads), but also müdchen-sommer (Maiden-summer), der-alte-Weibersommer (the old women's summer), or Mechtildesommer; see E. Müller. This makes G. sommer = summer-film; and gives to gossa-mer the possible sense of 'goose-summer-film.' The connection of the word with summer is further illustrated by the Du. zomerdraden, gossamer, lit. 'summer-threads,' and the Swed. sommertrad, gossamer, lit. 'summer-thread.' ¶ Such guesses as 'God-summer,' 'gorse-¶ Such guesses as 'God-summer,' 'gorsesummer,' and the like, have little to support them. It may be observed that the spelling gossamer (with a) is certainly corrupt. It should rather be gossomer or gossummer.

GOSSIP, a sponsor in baptism, a crony. (E.) The old sense was 'sponsor in baptism,' lit. 'god-relative.' The final p stands for b, and ss for ds. M.E. gossib, Chaucer, C. T. 5825; earlier, spelt godsib. See Poems of Will. of Shoreham, ed. Wright, pp 68-70, where one work the with a conductive interview. gourmand, 'a glutton, gormand, belly-god;' Cot. See Gourmand. Der. gormandiz-er, gormandiz-ing. GORSE, a prickly shrub, furze. (E.) For gorst. M. E. gorst, where occur the works gossibbe, sibbe, and gossibrede (also spelt god-furze; Wyclif, Isaiah, lv. 13. – A. S. gorst. 'On gorste;' Luke, vi. sibrede), a derivative from godsib by suffixing M. E. -rede (-A. S.

ráden, E. -red in kind-red).  $\beta$ . Thus gossip stands for god-sib,  $\phi$  - Lat. gradus, a step, degree. - Lat. gradi (pp. gressus), to step, i.e. related in God, as said above. The word sib in A.S. means | walk, go.  $\beta$ . Supposed to be cognate with Gk.  $\gamma\lambda(\chi)$  and  $\gamma\lambda($ 'peace,' but there was a derived word meaning 'relative' of which there are some traces. Thus, in Luke, xiv. 12, the Northumb. glosses to Latin cognatos are (in one MS.) sibbo and (in the other) ginbbs; and again, in the Ormulum, 1. 310, it is said of Elizabeth that she was 'Sante Marge sibb,' i. e. Saint Mary's relative. Cf. Icel. zif, affinity; zifi, a relative; G. sippe, affinity; pl. sippen, kinsmen; Goth. sibja, relationship, adoption as sons, Gal. iv. 5; unsibis, lit. unpeaceful, hence, lawless, wicked, Mark, xv. 28 ; unsibja, iniquity, Matt. vii. 23. These are further related to Skt. sabkya, relating to an assembly, fit for an assembly, trusty, faithful; from sabka, an assembly.

GOUGE, a chisel with a hollowed blade. (F., - Low Lat.) Formerly googe. 'By googing of them out; Ben Jonson, The Devil is an Ass, A. ii. ac. 1 (Meercraft) - F. gouge, 'a joyners googe;' Cot. GRAIL (2), the Holy Dish at the Last Supper.  $(F_{.,-}L_{.,-}Gk_{.})$ In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 10, 53. A much disputed word; but the history has been thoroughly traced out in my Pref. to Joseph of Arimathie, published for the Early Eng. Text Society. Some of my remarks are copied into the article on Grail in the Supplement to the Eng. Cyclopædia. It is there shewn that the true etymology was, at an early period, deliberately falsified by a change of San Greal (Holy Dish) into Sang Real (Royal Blood, but perversely made to mean Real Blood). = O. F. graal, greal, greasl, a flat dish. = Low Lat. gradale, grasale, a flat dish, a shallow vessel. [The various forms in O. F. and Low Lat. are very numerous; see the articles in Roquefort, β. The Ducange, and Charpentier's Supplement to Ducange.] word would appear to have been corrupted in various ways from Low Lat. cratella, a dimin. of crater, a bowl. See Crater. y. The sense of grail was, in course of time, changed from 'dish' to cup.' It was, originally, the dish in which Joseph of Arimathea is said to have collected Our Lord's blood; but this was forgotten, and the Cup at the Last Supper was substituted to explain it.

GRAIL (3), fine sand, (F., -L.) Spenser uses the word in a way peculiarly his own; he seems to have meant 'fine particles;' he speaks of 'sandie graile,' and of 'golden grayle;' F. Q. i. 7. 6; Visions of Bellay, st. 12. - O. F. graile, fine, small; Burguy (mod. F. grêle). - Lat. gracilis, slender. + Skt. kriga, thin, emaciated. -KARK, to be thin or lean; cf. GRASP, to seize, hold fast. (E.) M.E. graspen, used in the sense of 'grope,' to feel one's way; as in 'And graspet by the walles to and fro; 'Chaucer, C. T. 4291 (or 4293); also in Wyclif, Job, v. 14, xii. 25 (earlier version), where the later version has grope. Just as clasp was formerly claps, so grasp stands for graps. The M. E. graspen stands for grap-sen, an extension of M. E. grapen = gropen, to grope. Thus grasp = grap-s is a mere extension of grope. See Grope. ¶ Similarly transpositions of sp are seen in the prov. E. wops for wasp, in A. S. haps, a hasp, A. S. aps, an aspen-tree; &c. The extension of the stem by the addition of s is common in A.S., and remains in E. clean-se from clean.

GRAVEL, fine small stones. (F., - C.) M. E. gravel (with u for v), in early use; in King Horn, ed. Lumby, l. 1465. - O. F. gravele, later gravelle (Burguy, Cot.); dimin. of O. F. grave (spelt greve in Burguy), rough sand mixed with stones (Brachet). β. Prob. of Celtic origin; the original is also the base of the Bret. grouan, gravel, Corn. grow, gravel, sand, W. gro, pebbles; cf. also Gael. grothlach, gravelly, and Skt. gravan, a stone, rock. Der. gravelly. GRAVY, juice from cooked meat. (Scand.?) In Shak. 2 Hen.

IV, i. 2. 184. Also spelt greavy, or greavy (with w for v). 'In fat and greavy;' Chapman, tr. of Homer, Odyss. xviii. 166. 'With all their fat and greavie;' id. xviii. 62. Origin uncertain; but prob. originally the adjective formed from greave or greaves, calso grave, graves), tallow-drippings. Thus gravy would signify (1) tallow-y, fat; and (2) fat, gravy. Observe that the word fat has suffered the very same change, from adj. to sb. See Greaves (1).

GRAY, ash-coloured; white mixed with black. (E.) M. E. gray, gray. 'Hire eyen gray as glas;' Chaucer. C. T. 152. – A. S. grag; Grein, i. 525. [The final g passes into y by rule, as in E. day from A. S. dag.] + Du. graanw. + Icel. grár. + Dan. graa. + Swed. grå. + G. graw. + Lat. ranus, gray (put for kranus, according to Fick, iii. 110). Cf. Skt. gkúr, to become old; also spelt júr. The Gk. ypaios, aged, gray, is also related. Dor. gray-isk, gray beard ; grayling (with double dimin. suffix)

GRAZE (1), to scrape slightly, rub lightly. (F.?) ' With the grasing of a bullet upon the face of one of the servants;' Ludlow, Memoirs, vol. i. p. 51 (R.) Apparently a coined word, founded on rase, i.e. to scrape lightly, the initial g having been suggested by the verb to grate.  $\beta$ . Rase is from F. raser, 'to touch or grate on a thing in passing by it;' Cot. See Base. ¶ The form of ¶ The form of the word may be due to some confusion with graze (2). [+]

GRAZE (2), to feed cattle. (E.) Merely formed from grass. M. E. grassn. 'And lich an oxe, under the fote, He grasst as he nedes mote;' said of Nebuchadnezzar; Gower, C. A. i. 142. See Grass. Der. graz-i-er.

GREY, the same as Gray, q. v. GREYHOUND, a swift slender hound. (Scand.) Greihoundes he hadde as swift as foul of flight;' Chaucer, C. T. 190. Also spelt greaking, Ancren Riwle, p. 333. last line - Icel. greykindr, a grey-hound; composed of grey, a dog, and kundr, a hound. The Icel. grey is also used alone in the sense of greyhound or dog; and the Icel. greybaka means a bitch. Cf. also Icel. greyligr, paltry. ¶ Whatever be the source of Icel. grey, there is no pretence for connecting it with E. gray, for which the Icel. word is grar.

connecting it with E. gray, for which the Icel. word is grai. GRIDDLE, a pan for baking cakes. (C.) M. E. gradil, a grid-iron (in the story of St. Lawrence), Ancren Riwle, p. 121. Called, a girdle (= gridle) in North. E. – W. gradyll, greidell, gradell, a circular iron plate to bake on, a griddle, grate; from greidio, to scorch, singe. + Irish greideal, greideil, a griddle, gridle, greidio, to scorch, singe. dle; from greadaim, I scorch, parch, burn. (The Swed, grädda, to bake, is prob. of Celtic origin.) Der. From the same base, by a slight change, was made the M. E. gredire, a griddle, P. Plowman, C. iii. 130. Very likely, this was at first a mere change of l to r, but the latter part of the word thus because similarity the M. E. ira the latter part of the word thus became significant, the M.E. ire meaning 'iron;' hence our grid-iron, spelt gyrdiron in Levins, 163. ¶ Not related to grill. [+]

GBLDE, to pierce, cut through. (E.) A favourite word with Spenser; see F. Q. ii. 8. 36; Sheph. Kal. February, I. 4; Virgil's Gnat, 254. And cf. 'griding sword;' Milton, P. L. vi. 329. A mere metathesis of gird, M. E. girden, to strike, pierce, cut through, used by Chaucer, and borrowed from him by later poets. 'Thurgh gird [pierced through] with many a grevous blody wound;' Chaucer, C 1012.  $\beta$ . This verb girden means to strike with a rod, from M. E. gerde, generally softened to 3erde, a rod (mod. E. yard); cf. 'Or if men smot it with a 3erde;' Chaucer, C. T. 149. Cf. G. gerte, a switch; and see Yard. Y. The same word is used metaphorically in the phrase 'to gird at,' i.e. to strike at, try to injure; see Shak. 2 Hen. IV, i. 2. 7; so also a gird is a cut, a sarcasm, Tam. Shrew, v. 2. 48.  $\P$  The same metathesis of r takes place in bride, q v. The usual derivation of gride from Ital. gridare, to cry aloud, is absurd, and explains nothing. GRIEF, great sorrow. (F., -L.) In early use. M. E. grief, gref; spelt gref, Floriz and Blancheflur, ed. Lumby, 187. - O. F. gref, grief, adj. burdensome, heavy, sad. - Lat. grauis, heavy, sad, grave. See Grave. Der. grieve, &c. See below.

GRIEVE, to afflict; to mourn. (F., -L.) M. E. greven (with u=v), Rob. of Glouc. p. 41; P. Plowman, C. v. 95.-O. F. grever, to grieve, burden, afflict.-Lat. grauare, to burden.-Lat. grauis, heavy. See Grave. Der. griev-ous (M. E. greuous, P. Plowman, C. xvii. 77); griev-ous-ly, griev-ous-ness; griev-ance, M. E. grewaunce, Gower, C. A. i. 289; and see above. GRIFFIN, GRIFFON, an imaginary animal. (F., -L., -Gk.)

Griffin is a weakened spelling; a better spelling is griffon. M.E. griffon, Chaucer, C. T. 2135. – F. griffon, 'a gripe, or griffon; 'Cot. Formed, with suffix -on, from Low Lat. griffus, a griffin. – Lat. gryphus, an extended form of gryps, a griffin. – Gk.  $\gamma \rho i \psi$  (stem  $\gamma \rho v \pi$ -), a griffin, a fabulous creature named from its hooked beak. – Gk. ypunos, curved; also, hook-nosed, hook-beaked. Root unknown.

GRIG, a small lively eel; a cricket. (Scand.) 'A grigge, a young cele. A merie grigge'; Minsheu, ed. 1627. The final g must be due to an older k, and the word is easily deducible from crick, the word of which erick-st is the diminutive. Cf. Lowland Sc. crike, crick, a tick, a louse (Jamieson). It is certainly of O. Low G. origin, and probably Scandinavian. - Scand. dial. kräk, also krik, a little creature, esp. a crawling creature; Rietz. (Cf. Du. kriek, a cricket; krokel, a cricket.) - Swed. dial. kräka, to creep (Rietz); Icel. kraika, to crouch. Cf. G. kriechen, to creep. See Cricket. (1). The phrase as merry as a grig is either due to this word, or an easy corruption of the (apparently) older phrase as merry as a Greek; see quotations in Nares, amongst which we may note 'she's a merry Greek indeed;' Troilus, i. a. 118; 'the merry Greeks,' Merygreek is a character in Udall's Roister Doister; id. iv. 4. 58. Id. 19. 4. 55. Intergraves is a character in order is a construct, A.D. 1553. Cf. Lat. graveri, to live like Greeks, i.e. effeminately, luxuriously; Horat. Sat. ii. 2, 11. [†] GRILL, to broil on a gridiron. (F., -L.) Extended to grilly by Butler. 'Than have them grilling on the embers; Hudibras, pt. iii.

c. 2. l. 15 from end. – F. griller, 'to broile on a gridiron, to scorch;' Cot. – F. gril, 'a gridiron;' id. Formerly spelt greil, grail (Brachet). – Lat. acc. eraticulum, a masc. form of craticula, a small gridiron; Mart. xi. 221 (whence F. grille, a grating). These are dimin. forms from Lat. crates, a hurdle. See Grate (1), Crate.

A grimace is so called from the disguised appearance due to it. + A. S. grima, a mask, helmet. B. Origin obscure; Fick connects it with the verb to grin; iii. 111. This relationship is rendered very probable by the Du. grijns, a mask,

GRIMALKIN, a cat. (E.; parily O. H. G.) See Nares, who suggests that it stands for gray malkin, 'a name for a fiend, supposed to resemble a grey cat.' He is probably right. In this view, Malkin is for Maud-kin, dimin. of Maud (Matilda), with suffix -kin, The name Maud is O. H. G. The M. E. Malkin, as a dimin. of Maud, was in very common use; see Chaucer, C. T. 4450. It was a name for a slut or loose woman. [†] GRIME, dirt that soils deeply, smut. (Scand.) In Shak. Com. of Errors, iii. 2. 106. As a verb, K. Lear, ii. 3. 9. M. E. grim; 'grim. or gore; 'Havelok, 2497. [The A. GRIN, to snarl, grimace. (E.) M. E. gronnen, Ancren Riwle, 212; Layamon, 29550. - A.S. grennian, to grin; Grein, i. 525. + Du. grijnen, to weep, cry, fret, grumble; whence grijnsen, to grumble, to grin. + Icel. grenja, to howl. + Dan. grine, to grin, simper. + Swed. grina, to distort the face, grimace, grin. + G. greinen, to grin, grimace, weep, cry, growl. B. A mere variant of Groan, q. v. Also further related to Grim, q. v. From & GHARN, an extension of & GHAR, to make a noise, discussed under Grim. Der. grin, sb. GRIND, to reduce to powder by rubbing. (E.) M. E. grinden, Chaucer, C. T. 14080; Ancren Riwle, p. 70. – A. S. grindan, Grein, i. 528. β. The base is GHRI, whence also Lat. fri-are, to rub, crumble to pieces; cf. Gk. xpiew, to graze, Skt. ghrish, to grind, from a base GHARS, in which the s is additional, as noted by Curtins, i. 251. These analogies are quite clear, though not pointed out in Fick or Curtius. All from A GHAR, to grind. The Lat. frice ore, to rub, also shews an addition to the base. Der. grind-er, grindstone; also grist, q. v. From the same base, fri-able, fri-c-tion.

GRIPE, to grasp, hold fast, seize forcibly. (E.) Also grip; but the form with long i is the original. 1. Grip is a very late form, the form with long i is the original. 1. Grip is a very late form, altogether unnoticed in Todd's Johnson; it is French, from F. gripper, a word of Scand. origin, from Icel. gripa. 2. Gripe is gripper, a word of scand. origin, from icer. gripa. 2. Scripe is the common old form, both as sb. and verb; see Shak. Macb. iii. 1. 62; K. John, iv. 2. 190. M.E. gripen, P. GRISKIN, the spine of a hog; prov. E. (Scand.) The lit. sense is 'a little pig;' it is formed by the dimin. suffix -kin from the once common word gris or grice, a pig. 'Bothe my gees and my grys' = both my geese and pigs; P. Plowman, B. iv. 51. 'Gryce, swyne, or pygge, porcellus,' Prompt. Parv. p. 211; and see Way's

The root is clearly GHARS, to grind, rub; though the reason for the sense of the sb. is not clear; it may refer to the use of the animal's snout. See Grind.

GRISLY, hideous, horrible. (E.) M. E. grisly, Chaucer, C. T. 1973. 14115. – A. S. gryslic, in the compound an-gryslic, horrible, terrible; Grein, i. 8. By the common change of s to r, we also find A.S. gryrelic, terrible; Grein, i. 532. Allied to A.S. grysan*, to feel terror, shudder (base grus), only found in the comp. agrican, put for agrysan. 'And for helle agrice' = and shudder at the thought of hell; Laws of Cnut, i. 25; see Ancient Laws, ed. Thorpe, vol. i. P. 374. Cf. The A.S. á answers to Goth. ai, strengthened form of i, and gra-tan (like gri-st) is from the base of the verb to grind; see Grist, Grind.

GROOER, a dealer in tea and sugar. (F., -L.) Formerly spelt grosser, as in Holinshed's Chron. Rich. II, an. 1382; Hackluyt's Voyages, vol. i. p. 193 (R.) A. In olden times, those whom we not call grocers were called spicers. Dealers were of two kinds, as now; there were wholesale dealers, called grossers or engrossers, and retail dealers, called regrators; see Liber Albus, ed. Riley, p. 547, note 1. Thus the word grosser, properly 'a whole-sale dealer,' is now spelt grocer, and means 'a spicer.' B. Borrowed from O. F. grossier, 'a grocer; marchant grossier, that sels only by the great, or utters his commodities wholesale;' Cot. - O. F. gros, fem. grosse, great. See Gross. Plowman, C. ix. 227; Havelok, B. Of uncertain origin; Stratmann cites 790; King Horn, 971. the O. Du. grom and O. Iccl. gromr, a boy, as parallel forms; but neither of these forms have any obvious etymology, and may be no more than corruptions of Du. gom (only used in the comp. bruidegom, a bridegroom) and Icel. gumi, a man, respectively. Y. In our word bridegroom, q. v., the r is well known to be an insertion, and the same may be the case when the word is used alone. Though the insertion of r is very remarkable, there are other instances, as in cart-r-idge for cartouche, part-r-idge, co-r-poral for F. caporal, vag-r-ant, hon-r-se, &c.; see Mätzner, Engl. Gramm. i. 175.  $\delta$ . A remarkable example shewing the probability of this insertion occurs in P. Plowman. In the A-text, vii. 205, the text has gomes, but three MSS. have gromes. In the B-text, vi. 219, at least seven MSS. have gomes. In the C-text, ix. 227, the MSS. have gromes. e. If the r can thus be disposed of, the etymology becomes extremely simple, viz. from A.S. guma, a man, Grein, i. 532; which is cognate with Du. gom (in bruid-gom), G. gam (in brüutigam), O.H.G. gumo, Icel. gumi, Goth. guma, Lat. homo, a man. See Human. GBOOVE, a trench, furrow, channel. (Du.) In Skinner; rare in early books. 'Groove, a channel cut out in wood, iron, or stone;'

Kersey, ed. 1715. Also: ' Groove or Grove, a deep hole or pit sunk in the ground, to search for minerals; ' id.  $\beta$ . The proper spelling (E. D. S. Glos. B. 8, 11, 18, 22, and the Glossary), printed A. D. 1653. We certainly ought to distinguish between the two forms. 1. The form groove, as a joiner's term, is Dutch, and borrowed from Du. groef (pron. groof) or groeve, a grave, channel, groove. 2. Grove, a mine, is the real E. form, and merely a peculiar use of the word grove, usually applied to trees. See Grove. GBOPE, to feel one's way. (E.) M. E. gropen, C. T. 646 (or 644); used in the sense of 'grasp,' King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 1957. - A. S. grápian, to seize, handle, Grein, i. 524; a weak verb, and unoriginal. - A. S. gráp, the grip of the fingers, grasp of the hand; id. - A. S. grápan, to gripe. See Gripe.  $\beta$ . Similarly the Icel. greip, grip, grasp, is from Icel. grápa, to gripe; and the O. H. G. greifa, a two-pronged fork (cited by Fick, iii. 111) is from O. H. G.

grifan, to gripe. And see Grasp. Der. grof-ing. ly. GROSS, fat, large. (F., -L.) Very common in Shak.; Merry Wives, iii. 3. 43, &c. 'This grosse imagination;' Frith's Works, p. 140, col. 2. - O. The common supposi-tion that the orig. sense was 'dust' or 'earth,' so the word meant tion that the org. sense was 'dust' or 'earth, so the word meant 'ground small,' is very plausible. Certainly it appears as if con-nected with the verb to grind. See Grind. We also find Gael. grunnd, Irish grunni, ground, bottom, base. Der. ground, verb (Chaucer, C. There is also a fish called the groundling, so called because it keeps near the bottom of the water. grounding, so called because it keeps near the bottom of the water. GROUNDS, dregs. (C.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. 'Grounds, the settling or dregs of drink;' Kersey, ed. 1715. This peculiar use of the word is Celtic. - Gael. gruundas, lees, dregs; from Gael. grunnda, ground, cognate with E. ground. + Irish gruntas, dregs, grunndas, lees, dross; from grunnt, the ground, bottom. See Ground. GROUNDSHL, a small plant. (E.) Corruptly written grene-ued in Largies. Butter ground as in Hollands. Pliny by ar-swel in Levins. Better groundswell, as in Holland's Pliny, b. xxv. c. 13. – A.S. grundeswellge, grundeswelge, grundeswile, with nu-merous references; Cockayne's Leechdoms, iii. 329. Prof. Newton has kindly sent me a much earlier instance of the word. 'Attagen, perdix Asclepica, the Heath-cock or Grouss. . . . Hujus in Anglia duas habemus species, quarum major vulgo dicitur, the black game, . . minor vero, the grey game;' Charleton, Onomasticon Zoicon, london 1668 n. . London, 1668, p. 73.  $\beta$ . Grouse appears to be a false form, evolved as a supposed sing. from the older word grice (cf. mouse, mice). Grice was used (according to Cotgrave) in the same sense. He gives: 'Griesche, gray, or peckled [speckled?] as a stare [star-ling]; Perdriz griesche, the ordinary, or gray partridge; Poule griesche, a moorhen, the hen of the grice or moorgame.' Y. Grice is merely borrowed from this O.F. griesche; cf. also O. F. greoche, a 13th cent. form given by Littré, s. v. grièche. He quotes as follows: 'Contornix est uns oisiaus que li François claiment greoches, parce que ele fu premiers trovee en Grece, i.e. Cotorniz is a bird which the French call grooches, because it was first found in Greece; Brunetto Latini, Trés. p. 211. 8. The stinging-nettle was called ortie griesche even in the 13th cent.; see Wright, Vocab. i. 140, col. 2. Of unknown origin; it can hardly be from Lat. Græciscus, Greekish.  $\P$  1. That our E. grouse can be in any way re-lated to Pers. hhurás, a dung-hill cock (Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 221), is, I think, out of the question. The suggestion appears in lated to Pers. Huardis, a dung-hill cock (Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 221), is, I think, out of the question. The suggestion appears in Webster.

 2. Another suggestion is to connect gross with W. grugiar, a moor-hen (from grug, heath, and iar, a hen), but the grugiar, a moor-hen (from grug, heath, and iar, a hen), but the grugiar.

ii. 305. The formation of the verb to grovel was perhaps due to a singular grammatical mistake. Groveling was in use as an adverb with the sutfix -ling, but this was readily mistaken for the pres. part. of a between the standard endlesse mone; 'F.Q. iii. 1. 38. 'Downe on the ground his carkas groweling fell; 'F.Q. iii. 5. 23. In the last instance, the sense is 'flatly' or 'flat.'  $\gamma$ . The M. E. groweling or growelings is a mere adverb. Suppinus, resupinus;' shewing that, in A. D. 1440, the word was beginning to be considered as being sometimes a nom. pres. part. Note also: 'Therfor groftynges thou shall be layde;' Towneley Myst. p. 40. Way notes that in Norf. and Suff. the phrase 'to lie grubblins,' or with the face downwards, is still in use. 8. The grubblins, or with the face downwards, is still in use. 8. The correct M. E. form is grofling or groflinges, where the -ling or -lings is the adv. suffix that appears in other words, such as dark-ling, flatling; see Darkling, Headlong. The former part of the word could be used alone, with exactly the same adverbial sense; as ' they fallen grof;' Chaucer, C. T. 951. The phrase is of Scand. origin. -Icel. grúfa, in the phr. liggja á grúfu, to lie grovelling, to lie on one's face, symja a grufu, to swim on one's belly. Cf. also grufa, verb, to grovel, couch, or cower down. Hence was formed grufa, to grovel, which justifies the E. verb, though clear proof of direct connection between the words is wanting. + Swed. dial. gruva. flat on one's face; ligga & gruve, to lie on one's face; Rietz. GRUB, to grope in the dirt. (E.) M. E. grubben, grobben. 'To grobbe vp metal;' Chaucer, Ætas Prima, I. 29. 'So depe thei grubbed and so fast; ' Legends of the Holy Rood, ed. Morris, p. 94, I. 268. Of obscure origin; but probably a mere variant of grope. The M. E. grobben may stand for grobien = grobien, from A.S. grapian, to grope. The orig. sense of grub would thus be 'to grope,' hence to feel for ' or ' search for,' esp. in the earth. See Grope. ¶ It cannot well be from the Teutonic base GRAB, to dig, because the A. S. form of this verb was grafan, whence E. grave and grove. The connection of grub is rather with grab, gripe, grope, and grasp. Der. rub, sb., an insect; grubb-er, grubb-y.

p. 67; grucchen, Ancren Riwle, p. 186. The earliest spelling was 70; guardant, Cor. v. 2. 67; guardian, Macb. ii. 4. 35. But the Grucchen, then gruggen, and finally grudge. Tempest, i. 2. 249.– O. F. grocer, groucer, groucher, to murmur (Burguy); later gruger, 'to grudge, repine;' Cot. Cf. Low Lat. groussare, to murmur, found in a passage written A. D. 1358 (Ducange).  $\beta$ . Of somewhat uncertain origin, but prob. Scandinavian; cf. Icel. krytja (pt. t. krutti), to murmur, krutr, a murmur; Swed. dial. kruttla, to murmur (Rietz). Y. Burguy refers O. F. grocer to M. H. G. grunzen, to grunt, but it comes to much the same thing. The orig. source is clearly the imitative sound kru or gru, as seen in Gk. ypu, from mod. F. gruger, to crumble. Der. grudge, sb., grudg-ing-ly. GRUEL, liquid food, made from meal. (F., -O.Low G.) 'Or casten al the gruel in the fyr;' Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 711. -O. F. gruel (Burguy) = mod. F. gruau. - Low Lat. grutellum, a dimin. of grutum, meal, in a Carolingian text (Brachet). - O. Low G. grut (evidenced by Du. grut), groats, cognate with A. S. grut, groats, grout, coarse meal. See Grout.

GRUIESOME, horrible, fearful. (Scand.) Also grewsome, rewsome, grousum. 'Death, that grusome carl; Burns, Verses to J. grucome, grousum. Death, that grucome carl; Burns, Verses to J. Rankine. 'Such an one the tall, ... such an one the gruff;' Spectator, no. 433. – Du. gryf, coarse, plump, loud, blunt, great, heavy. + Swed. gryf, coarse, big, rude. gross. + Dan. grov, the same. + G. grob, coarse; M.H.G. gercb, grop.  $\beta$ . The M.H.G. form shews that the initial g stands for ge (=A.S. ge-=Goth. ga-), a mere prefix. The prob. root is the Teutonic RUB, to break, violate, break through; whence A.S. griffer Led midfer to break compate with Lat mumbers to Foot is the feationic KOD, to break, violate, break through; whence A.S. resign, Icel. rjuja, to break, cognate with Lat. rumpere, to break. See Rupture. If this be right, the orig. sense was 'broken,' hence rough, coarse, &c. Der. gruff-ly, gruff-ness. GRUMBLE, to growl, murmur. (F., -G.) In Shak. Temp. i. 2. 249; &c. -F. grommeler, 'to grumble, repine;' Cot. -O. and prov. G. grummelen, used by E. Müller to translate E. grumble; a frequentative of the verb grummen, grumen, or grommen; cf. Bavarian sich grumen, to be vexed, fret oneself, Schmeller, 997; Du. grommen,  $\beta$ . The orig. sense is 'to be angry,' and the to grumble, growl. word is closely connected with G. gram, vexation, grimmen, to rage. Cf. Russ. grome, thunder.  $-\checkmark$  GHARM, to make a loud noise; see

Cr. Russ. grome, hunder. - φ GrIARM, to make a rout noise; see further under Grim. Der. grumbl-ing-ly. GRUME, a clot, as of blood. (F., -L.) Very rare, but used by De Quincey (Webster). Commoner in the adj. grum-ous. 'Grumous, full of clots or lumps;' Kersey, ed. 1715.-O. F. grume, 'a knot, bunch, cluster;' Cot. Cf. O. F. grumeau, a clot of blood; id.-Lat. grumus, a little heap or hillock of earth. + Gk. κρωμαξ, κλωμαξ, how of struct Bootunestein. a heap of stones. Root uncertain. Der. grum-ous. GRUNT, to make a sound like a pig. (E.) M. E. grunten, Ancren Riwle, p. 326. An extension of A. S. grunan, to grunt, found Ancren Riwie, p. 320. An extension of A. S. grunda, to grunt, jound in Ælfric's Grammar (Bosworth). + Dan. grynte, to grunt. + Swed. grymta, to grunt. + G. grwnzen. + Lat. grundire, O. Lat. grundire, + Gk. γρώζειν. β. All of imitative origin; cf. Gk. γρώ, the noise made by a pig. See Grudge. Der. grunt-er. [†] GUAIACUM, a genus of trees in the W. Indies; also, the resin of the lignum vitæ. (Span., - Hayti.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627, and in Kersey, ed. 1715. Latinised from Span. guayaco or guayacan, lignum vita. 'From the language of Hayti;' Webster.

GUANO, the dung of a certain sea-fowl of S. America, used for manure. (Span., - Peruvian.) See Prescott, Conq. of Peru, c. 5.-Span. gwano or Auano. - Peruvian Auanu, dung (Webster). GUARANTEE, GUARANTY, a warrant, surety. (F., -O. H. G.) Guarantee appears to be a later spelling of guaranty, garan'y, or garranty, probably due to the use of words such as lessee, feoffee, and the like; but the final -ee is (in the present case) incorrect. Blount's Nomo-lexicon gives the spellings garanty and waranty. Cotgrave has garrantie and warrantie. - O. F. garrantie (better garantie), 'garrantie, warrantie, or warrantise,' Cot.; fem. form of garanti, warranted, pp. of garantir, to warrant. - O. F. garant, also spelt guarant, warant (Burguy), and explained by Cotgrave as 'a vouchee. warrant, warranter, supporter, maintainer.' See further under Warrant. ¶ The O. H. G. w became in O. F. first w, then gw, and finally g. Thus O. F. garant and E. warrant are the same word. Der. guarantee, vb. [+]

Parv. - F. goujon, 'a gudgeon-fish, also the pin which the truckle of a pully runneth on; also, the gudgeon of the spindle of a wheele; any gudgeon;' Cot. - Lat. gebionem, acc. of gobio, a by-form of gebius, a gudgeon. - Gk. wwBios, a kind of fish, gudgeon, tench. The Sicilian name was κῶθοs (Liddell and Scott).

GUELDER-BOSE, a species of Viburnum, bearing large white ball-shaped flowers. (Dutch.) So named from some resemblance of the flower to a white rose. The word rose is of Latin origin; see Rose. The word guelder stands for Gueldre, the F. spelling of the province of Gelderland in Holland.

GUERDON, a reward, recompense. (F., -O. H. G. and L.) In Chaucer, C. T. 7460, 8759. He also has the verb guerdonen = to reward; Pers. Tale, Group I, l. 283, Six-text ed.; but this is derived from the sb. Guerdonless occurs in Lydgate, Complaint of Black Knight, l. 400. - O. F. guerdon, 'guerdon, recompence, meed ;' Cot. Equivalent to Ital. guidardone, a guerdon. - Low Lat. widerdonum, which, according to Littré, is found in the time of Charles the Bald. β. This is a singular hybrid compound from O. H. G. wider (G. uieder), against, back again, and the Lat. donum, a gift; and the (Graff, ii. 220).  $\gamma$ . The O.H.G. word has its exact cognate in the A. S. wiber-lean, a recompence, Grein, ii. 697; which is compounded of the prefix wider, against, back again (connected with E. with in the word with stand) and the sb. lean = mod. E. lcan. See With, Donation, and Loan. ¶ The same notion of 'back' occurs in the synonymous words re-ward, re-compence, re-muneration.

GUERILLA, GUERRILLA, an irregular warfare carried on by small bands of men. (Span., -O. H. G.) We speak of 'guerilla warfare,' making the word an adj., but it is properly a sb.-Span. guerrilla, a skirnish, lit. a petty war; dimin. of guerra, war (= F. guerre). = O.H.G. werra, discord, the same word as E. war. See War. GUESS, to form an opinion at hazard, to conjecture. (Scand. or O. Low G.) The insertion of u was merely for the purpose of preserving the g as hard. M. E. gessen; Chaucer, C. T. 82. - Dan. N. Friesic gezze, gedse (Outzen).  $\beta$ . Closely related to Dan. N. Friesic gezze, gedse (Outzen). β. Closely related to Dan. gjette, to guess; the Icel. giska = git-ska, formed from Icel. geta (1), to get. (2) to guess. The latter word is cognate with A. S. gitan, and mod. E. get; and it is highly probable that guess meant originally ' to See Get. Der guess, sb.; guess-work. GUEST, a stranger who is entertained. (E.) The u is inserted to preserve the g as hard. M. The orig. sense appears to be that of 'enemy, whence the senses of 'stranger' and 'guest' arose. The lit. sense is 'striker.' –  $\checkmark$  GHAS, GHANS, to strike; an extension of  $\checkmark$  GHAN, to strike of the time of the basis of the sense of to strike. Cf. E. form gyen is also common (C. T. 1952); see Guy.] The sb. is gyde, C. T. 806. - O. F. guider; f. Ital guidare, Span. guiar. β. The etymology has not been that the word is of Teutonic origin.  $\gamma$ . The obscurity is merely due to the want of a connecting link; the ultimate origin is doubtless, as suggested by Diez, to be found in the Mœso Goth. witan, to watch, observe; cf. A.S. witan, to know. The original sense of guide was, probably, 'to make to know,' to shew; cf. Icel. viti, a leader, also a signal; A.S. witan, to observe; A.S. adj. wis, wise, GUARD, to ward, watch, keep, protect. (F. - O., H.G.) Com-mon in Shak. both as verb and sb. [He also has guardage, Oth. i. 2. way. See Wit, Wise. Der. guide, sb., guide. post.

GUILD. GUILD. GUILD aid. (E.) The insertion of u, though common, is quite unnecessary, and is unoriginal. See English Gilds, ed. Toulmin Smith, Early Eng. Text Soc., 1870. M. E. gilde, yilde; the pl. yilden = guilds, occurs in Layamon, 32001. Cf. A. S. gegyldscipe, a guild, gegilda, a member of a guild, in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, Æthelst. v. 8. 6; vol. i. p. 236. These words are formed from A. S. gilda, a payment, also spelt gield, gyld, Grein, i. 507; from the A. S. gildan, to pay, whence also mod. T. 5057; commonly also gull, as in Ancren Riwle, p. 258. – A. S. gyll, a crime; Grein, i. 536. B. The orig. sense was probably 'a fine' or 'a payment,' by way of recompense for a trespass; and the word is to be connected with A. S. gyld, a recompense. Both words are from the Teutonic base GALD, to pay, whence A. S. gyldan, to pay, yield. See Guild, Yield. Der. guilt-less = M. E. gilteles, Chaucer, C. [The gu stands for an older w.] = O. H. G. wisa, M. H. G. wise (G. weise), a way, wise, guise; cognate with A. S. wise, whence E. wise, sb. See Wise, sb. Doublet, wise.

GUITAR, a musical stringed instrument. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Skinner, ed. 1671. - F. guilare (Littré). - Lat. cithara. - Gk. sıbápa, a kind of lyre. ¶ The M. E. form of the word is giterne, Chaucer, a kind of lyre. ¶ The M. E. form of the word is guerne, Cuauco, C. T. 3333. This also is of F. origin; Cotgrave gives 'Guiterne, or Guilerre, a gitterne. GULLES, the heraldic name for red. (F., -L.) M. E. goules. Richardson cites: 'And to bere armes than are ye able Of gold and Retrical Romances, vol. iii. At p. 484 of Rob. of Glouc., ed. Hearne, is a footnote in which we find: 'that bere the armes of goules with a white croys." - F. gueules, 'gules, red, or sanguine, in blazon,' Cot.; answering to Low Lat. gulæ, pl. of gula (1) the mouth, (2) gules.  $\beta$ . This word is nothing but the pl. of F. gueule, the mouth (just as Low Lat. gulæ is the pl. of gula), though the reason for the name is not very clear, unless the reference be (as is probable) to the colour of the open mouth of the (heraldic) lion. - Lat. gula, the throat. Gullet. [†] GULF, a hollow in the sea-coast, a bay, a deep place, whirlpool. (F., -Gk.) Formerly spelt goulfe, gulpk. 'Hast thou not read in books Of fell Charybdis goulfe?' Turberville, Pyndara's Answer to Tymetes. Milton has the adj. gulpky, Vacation Exercise, 1.92; Spenser has gulpking, Virgil's Gnat, 542. - F. golfe (formerly also goulfe), 'a gulph, whirlepool;' Cot. Cf. Port., Span., and Ital. golfo, a gulf bay - J ast Gk gulphas. a gulf, bay. - Late Gk. κόλφου, variant of Gk. κόλπου, the bosom, lap, a deep hollow, bay, creek. GUILA, a gull (Williams); W. gwylan; Bret. gwelan. See below. GUILL (2), a dupe. (C.) 'Yond gull Malvolio;' Tw. Nt. iii. 2. 73. So called from an untrue notion that the gull was a stupid bird. Thus a person who entraps dupes is called a gull-calcher, Tw. Nt. ii.

Skt. gri, to devour, gal, to eat. From the same source we have Guiles, q. v. Doublet, guily, q. v. GULLY, a channel worn by water. (F., -L.) In Capt. Cook's Third Voyage, b. iv. c. 4 (R.) Formerly written guiltet. 'It meeteth afterward with another gullet, i.e. small stream; Holinshed, Desc. of Britain, c. 11 (R.) – F. goulet, 'a gullet, ... a narrow brook or deep gutter of water; 'Cot.' Thus the word is the same as Gullet, q. v. GULP, to swallow greedily and quickly. (Du.) 'He has guiped me down, Lance;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Wit without Money, A. i. sc. 2. - Du. guipen, to swallow eagerly; O. Du. golpen, guipen, to quaff (Hexham). – Du. gulp, a great billow, wave, draught, gulp; O. Du. golpe, a gulf (Hexham).  $\beta$ . Remoter origin obscure; the Dan. gulpe has an almost opposite meaning, viz. to disgorge. There is a remarkable similarity in meaning to Du. gol/, a billow, wave, gulf, which is a word merely borrowed from the French; and perhaps gulp is a mere variant of gulfh or gulf. See Gulf. Der. gulp, sb. GUM (1), the flesh of the jaws. (E.) M. E. gome. In Legends of the Holy Rood, ed. Morris, p. 213, l. 230, where it means 'palate.' Compounded of gun and wale; see Wale. So called because the upper guns used to be pointed from it. The sense of wale is 'stick' or 'beam,' and secondly, 'the mark of a blow with a stick.

GURGLE, to flow irregularly, with a slight noise. (Ital., -L.) 'To gurgling sound Of Liffy's tumbling streams;' Spenser, Mourn-ing Muse of Thestylis, l. 3. Imitated from Ital. gorgogliare, to gargle, purl, bubble, boil; cf. gorgoglio, a warbling, the gurgling of a stream.-Ital. gorgo, a whirlpool, gulf.-Lat. gurges, a whirlpool; cf. Lat. gurgulio, the gullet. See Gorge. ¶ To be distinguished from gargle, though both are from the same root GAR, to devour. Der. guggle, a corrupted form (Skinner).

GURNARD, GURNET, a kind of fish. (F. -L.; with Teut. suffix.) 'Gurnard, fysche;' Prompt. Parv. 'Gurnarde, a fysshe, gournault;' Palsgrave. See Levins. Shak. has gurnet, I Hen. IV. iv. 2. 13. Cotgrave has: 'Gournauld, a gurnard fish ;' but the E. word answers rather to a F. gournard (the suffixes ard, -ald, -auld being convertible); and this again stands, by the not uncommon shifting of r, for grounard. The latter form is represented in Cotgrave by 'Grougnaut, a gurnard,' marked as being a Languedoc word.  $\beta$ . Again, we find another form of the word in O. F. grongnard (mod. F. grognard), explained by Cotyrave as 'grunting;' and, in fact, the word gurnard means 'grunter.' 'The gurnards.. derive their popular appellation from a grunting noise which they make when taken out of the water;' Eng. Cyclop. s.v. Trigla. y. Formed by the suffix and (=0. H. GUT, the intestinal canal. (E.) [The same word as prov. E. gut, a water-course, wide ditch; M. E. gote, Prompt. Parv. p. 205; see Way's note.] M. E. gutte, gotte; P. Plowman, B. i. 36; Rob. of Glouc. p. 289. – A. S. gut, 'receptaculum viscerum,' A. S. Gloss. in Haupt's Zeitschrift, ix. 408; A. S. Gloss. in Mone's Quellen und For-Haupt's Zeitschrift, ix. 408; A. S. Gloss. in Mone's Quellen und For-schungen, i. 1830, 198 (Leo). Ettmüller gives the pl. as guttas.  $\beta$ . The orig. sense is 'channel;' cf. Swed. gjuta, a mill-leat (Rietz); Dan. gyde, a lane; O. Du. gote, a channel (Hexham); G. gosse, a drain; M. E. gote, prov. E. gut, a drain, water-course.  $\gamma$ . All from  $\checkmark$  GHUD, to pour; see Gush, Fuse.  $\Leftrightarrow$  Not connected with gutter, which is of Latin origin. Der. gut, verb. [†] GUTTA-PERCHA, a solidified juice of certain trees. (Malay.) 'Made known in England in 1843;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. The trees yielding, it abound in the Malayan peninsula and in Borneo.

Malay gatak, guttak, gum, balsam (Marsden's Malay Dict., p. 283); and percha, said to be the name of the tree producing it. Hence the sense is 'gum of the Percha-tree.' B. The spelling gutta is obviously due to confusion with the Lat. gutta, a drop, with which it has nothing whatever to do. 'Gutta in Malay means gum, percha is the name of the tree (Isonandra gutta), or of an island from which the tree was first imported (Pulo-percha);' Max Müller, Lect. on Language, 8th ed. i. 231. Marsden (p. 218) gives Pulan parcha as another name for the island of Sumatra. Pulan means 'island,' id. p. 238; percha is explained in Marsden as meaning 'a remnant, small piece of cloth, tatters, rags;' and from this he takes Pulau-percha to be named. without further explanation.

GUTTER, a channel for water. (F., -L.) M. E. gotere; Prompt. Parv. The pl. goteres is in Trevisa, i. 181. - O. F. gutiere, [gotiere?], goutiers; see quotations in Littre, s. v. gouttièrs, a gutter; cf. Span. gotera, a gutter.  $\beta$ . Esp. used of the duct for catching the govera, a gutter.  $\beta$ . Esp. used of the duct for catching the drippings of the eaves of a roof; hence the deriv. from O. F. gover, gowle (mod. F. gowle), a drop. - Lat. gwlta, a drop. Root uncertain. Der. guller, verb. See below. [+] GUTTURAL, pertaining to the throat. (F., -L.) In Cotgrave.

GUY, GUY-BOPE, a rope used to steady a weight. (Span., -Teut.) A nautical term. In Skinner, ed. 1671. 'Guy, a rope made use of to keep anything from falling or bearing against a ship's side, when it is to be hoised in ; ' Kersey's Dict., ed. 171:.-Span. guia, a guide, leader, guy. - Span. guiar, to guide; the same word as F. guider, to guide. See Guide. GUZZLE, to swallow greedily. (F.) Guzzle, to drink greedily.

to tipple; 'Kersey, ed. 1715. Cotgrave explains O. F. martiner by 'to quaffe, swill, guzzle' - O. F. gouziller, given by Cotgrave only in 'the comp. desgonziller, 'to gulp, or swill up, to swallow down;' but Littre gives gosiller, saying that brandy is said gosiller, when, in dis-tillation, it passes over mixed with wine. Cf. also F. s'egosiller, to make one's throat sore with shouting; clearly connected with F. gosier, the throat.

HABERDASHER.

In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. gymnasium. - Gk. yuurdotor, an athletic school; so called because the athletes were naked when practising their exercises. - Gk. yuurá (eur, to train naked, to exercise. -Gk. yuurds, more commonly yuurds, naked. Root unknown. Der. From the same source are gymnast = Gk. yuuraoths, a trainer of Alletes; gymast-ic, gymast-ics; also gymaick, a coined word, Milton, Samson Agon. 1324. GYNARCHY, government by a woman. (Gk.) Spelt gunarchy by Lord Chesterfield (Todd). Coined from Gk. yur, a woman, and apxeir, to rule; cf. olig-archy, tetr-archy, &c. See Queen.

GYPSUM, a mineral containing sulphate of lime and water. (L., -Gk., -Pers.) 'Gypsum, parget, white-lime, plaister; also, the parget-stone;' Kersey, ed. 1715. - Lat. gypsum, chalk. - Gk. γώψω*, not found, a by form of γώψω, chalk; Herod. vii. 69. β. Prob. of Eastern origin ; cf. Pers. jabsin, lime ; Arab. jibs, plaster, mortar ; Rich. Dict. p. 494

GYPSY, one of a certain nomad race. ((F., -L., -Gk., -Egypt.) Spelt gipsen by Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale, l. 86. This is a mere corruption of M.E. Egypeien, an Egyptian. Chaucer calls St. Mary of Egypt 'the Egiptien Marie; 'C. T. Group B. 500 (1. 4920): and Skiton, swearing by the same saint, says 'By Mary Gipeyl' Garland of Laurell, 1455.-O.F. 'Gyrfalcon, a bird of prey;' Kersey, ed. 1715; spelt gerfaulcon in Cotgrave; girefaucoun in Trevisa, i. 323, to translate Lat. gyrofolco. a. The prefix is French, the word being modified from O. F. gerfault, 'a gerfaulcon, the greatest of hawks, called also falcon gerfault; Cot. Cf. Ital. gerfalco, girfalco, girifalco, a gerfalcon. - Low Lat. W. gefyn, a fetter, gyve; Gael. geimheal [with mk = v], a fetter, chain; Irish geimheal, geibheal, geibhionn, chains, gyves, fetters, restraint, bondage, captivity.  $\beta$ . The source of these sbs. appears in the Irish geibhim, I get, obtain, find, receive; gabhaim, I take, receive; Gael. gabh, to take, accept, receive.

H.

HA, an exclamation. (E.) 'A hal the fox !' Chaucer, C. T. 15387. When reduplicated, it signifies laughter. 'Hal hal hal' Temp. ii. 1. 36. Common in Shak. as an exclamation of surprise. Of onomatopoetic origin; see also Ah.+O. Fries kaka, to denote laughter.

+ M. H. G. ka, G. ke; M. H. G. kaká, to denote laughter. HABERDASHER, a seller of small wares (F., - Scand.) 'An Abberdasher; 'Chaucer, C. T. 363. 'The haberdasher heapeth wealth by hattes; 'Gascoigne, Fruits of War, st. 64. 'Haberdasher, a hatter, or seller of hats; also, a dealer in small wares;' Kersey. 'A haberdasher, mercier; a poore, petty haberdasher of small wares, mercerot; Sherwood, index to Cotgrave. a. So named from their selling a stuff called hapertas in Old French, of which (possibly) hats were sometimes made. In the Liber Albus, ed. Riley, p. 225, is mentioned 'la charge de hapertas;' in the E. version by Riley, 'the load of hapertas.' And again, at p. 231, we find 'les feez de leyne d'Espagne, wadmal, mercerie, canevas, . . feutre, lormerie, peil, haberdashrie, esquireux, ... et les autres choses qe l'em acustument par fee, vi.d; thus Englished by Riley: 'the fixed charge upon wool of Spain, wadmal, mercery, canvas, . . . felt, lynere, pile, kaberdasskerie, r mixed with wine. Cf. also F. s'égosiller, to e with shouting; clearly connected with F. β. Littré connects gosier with Lorraine gosse, word cites from an old Icel. lexicon (by Gudmundus Andrez) the Icel. Lapurtask, which he explains by 'trumpery, things of trifling  $\stackrel{\mathcal{R}}{\underset{\text{value, scruta frivola, ripsraps.}}^{\mathcal{R}}$  But this throws no light on the Icel. word itself.  $\gamma$ . I suspect that the true sense of the word hapertas was, originally, 'pedlars' wares,' and that they were named from the bag in which they were carried; cf. Icel. hapriask, hafriask, a haversack (Cleasby and Vigfusson). 8. In this case, the primary use of the bag was to carry oats or provisions in; and the former part of the word is the same as the former part of the word Haversack, q.v. e. The syllable task is from Icel. taska, a trunk, chest, pouch, pocket; cognate with G. lasche, a pouch, scrip. Thus the orig. sense of haberdasher was 'one who bears an oat-bag,'hence, a pedlar.

Der. haberdasker-y. [†] HABERGEON, a piece of armour to defend the neck and breast. (F., -O. H. G.) M. E. habergeon, Chaucer, C. T. 76; how-berioum, Wyclif, 1 Kings, xvii, 5. -O. F. haubergon, hauberjon, a small hauberk (Burguy); dimin. of O. F. haubere; see Hauberk. HABILIMENT, dress, attire. (F., -L.) 'The whiche furnysshynge his people with all kabylymentys of warre; 'Fabyan's Chron., Charles VII. (of France); ed. Ellis, p. 553.-F. kabillement, 'ap-parell, clothing;' Cot. Formed with suffix -ment from kabiller, 'to cloth, dresse, apparell;' Cot. β. The verb kabiller signified orig. 'to get ready,' and is a clumsy formation from the F. habile, able, ready; which is from the Lat. Aabilis, manageable, fit. See Able. Der. from the same source, dis-habile, q. v. HABIT, practice, custom, dress. (F., -L.) M.E. habit, abit; the latter spelling being common. Spelt habit, P. Plowman, B. prol. 3; abit, id. C. prol. 3; Ancren Riwle, p. 12, l. 8.-O.F. habit, 'a garment, raiment... also, an habit, a fashion settled, a use or custom gotten; 'Cot.-Lat. kabitum, acc. of kabitus, condition, habit, dress, attire.-Lat. kabitus, held in a certain condition, pp. of kabere, to have, hold, keep. β. The origin of Lat. habere remains quite uncertain; it is not the same word with E have, which = Lat. capere; see Have. Der. habit. verb, pp. habited, i. e. dressed, Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 557; habit-u-al, from O. F. habitual (mod. F. habituel), explained 'habituall' by Cotgrave, and from Low Lat. habitu-alis, formed with suffix -alis from habitu-, crude form of habitus, habit; habit-u-al-ly; habitu-ate, from Lat. habituatus, pp. of habituare, to bring into a certain habit or condition. Also, from the same source, habit-ude, q. v., habit-able, q. v., habit-at, q. v., habit-at-ion, q. v., hab-ili-ment, q. v. From the Lat. habere are also numerous derivatives, as ex-hibit, in-hibit, in-habit, pro-hibit; ab-le, ab-ili-ty, dis-hab-ille; debt; prebend; binnacle, malady.

HABITABLE, that can be dwelt in. (F., -L.) In Milton, P.L. viii. 157; earlier, in Gower, C. A. iii. 104. - F. kabitable, 'inhabit-able;' Cot. - Lat. kabitabilis, habitable; formed with suffix -bilis from habita-re, to dwell, frequentative form of Lat. habere, to have (supine habit-um). HABITANT, an inhabitant. (F., -L.) Perhaps obsolete. In Milton, P. L. viii. 99; x. 588. - F. kabitant, 'an inhabitant;' Cot.; pres. part. of F. kabiter, to dwell. - Lat. kabitare, to dwell. See Habitable. Der. in-habitant. HABITAT, the natural abode of an animal or plant. (L.) word coined for use in works on natural history. It means 'it dwells (there).'-Lat. habitat, 3 pers. s. pres. of habitare, to dwell. See Habitable.

HABITATION, a dwelling. (F., -L.) In Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 17. M. E. Aabitacioum, Chaucer, C. T. 2028. - F. Aabitation, 'a habitation;' Cot. - Lat. habitationem, acc. of habitatio, a dwelling. -Lat. habitatus, pp. of habitare, to dwell. See Habitable.

HABITUDE, usual manner, quality. (F., -L.) In Shak. Com-plaint, 114.-F. Aabitude, 'custom, use;' Cot.-Lat. Aabitudo, con-dition; formed with suffix -do from kabitu-, crude form of Kabitus, a habit; see Habit.

HACK (1), to cut, chop, mangle. (E.) M. E. hakken. 'To hakke and hewe; 'Chaucer, C. T. 2867. 'Hackets of his heaued' = hacks of his head; Ancren Riwle, p. 298. – A.S. baccan, to hack (Bosworth); for which I can find no authority. + Du. kakhen, to hack, (Bos-chop. + Dan. kakke, to hack, hoe. + Swed. kacka, to chop. + G. hacken, to chop, cleave.  $\beta$ . All from a base HAK, to cut. Der. haggle, q v. Doublet, hash; and see hatch. Mr. Oliphant calls attention to O. Northumb. hackande, troublesome, in Early Eng. Psalter, Surtees Soc., Ps. xxxix. 13. 'Hence, perhaps, our "hacking cough."' [†] HACK (2), a hackney. See Hackney.

HACKBUT, an arquebus, an old kind of musket. (F., -Du.) In Holinshed, Hist. Scotland, an. 1583; hackbutter, a man armed with a hackbut, id. an. 1544. Rich, says that 'the 33 Hen. VIII. c. 6, regulates the length in stock and gun of the hagbut or demihaque, and sets forth who may keep and use them.' Also spelt hagbut, less $\beta$ . So called from the bent shape of the gun, which was the the bent shape of the gun, which was Cot.  $\beta$ . So the interval of the bent shape of the gun, which was an improvement upon the oldest guns, which were made straight; see Arquebus. It seeps to be a mere corruption of Du. kaakbus see Arquebus. It see us to be a mere corruption of Du. kaakbus (kackbusse in Hexham), an arquebus; due, apparently, to some confusion with O. F. buter, to thrust. - Du. kaak, a hook; and bus, a gun-barrel; thus the sense is 'gun with a hook.' HACKLE (1), HATCHEL, an instrument for dressing flax or hemp. (Du.) Better spelt Hockle, q. v. HACKLE (2), any flimsy substance unspun, as raw silk. (Du.)

So named from its looking as if it had been dressed or kackled; see Hackle (1). It also means a long shining feather on a cock's neck; or a fly for angling, dressed with such a feather. HACKNEY, HACK, a horse let out for hire. (F.,-Du.) M.E. kakeney; Chaucer, C. T. 16027; P. Plowman, B. v. 318.-O. F. haquenée, hacquenée, 'an ambling horse, gelding, or mare ; ' Cot. Cf. Span. hacanea, Ital. chinea (short for acchinea), the same. - O. Du.  $\beta$ . Of obscure origin; but hackeneye, an hackney (Hexham). probably derived from Du. hakken, to hack, chop, hew, mince; and Du. negge, a nag. Cf. Swed. kacka, to hack, hew, peck, chatter with cold, stammer, stutter; this suggests that the Du. hakken was here familiarly used in the sense of 'jolt;' and, probably, the orig. sense was 'jolting nag,' with reference to the rough horses which customers who hired them had to put up with, or with reference to their 'faltering' pace. See Hack and Nag. I Littré gives the syllable kack in this word the sense of 'horse;' this is quite wrong, as kack in the sense of 'horse' is merely a familiar abbreviation of hackney, just as cab stands for exbridet, or bas for omnibus. So, too, the verb to hack, in the sense of 'treat roughly,' or 'use for rough riding,' is quite modern, and due to the abbreviated form of the substantive. Der. hackney-ed, hackney-coach.

HADDOCK, as sea-fish. (E.?) M. E. haddoke. 'Hic morus, a haddoke.' Wright's Vocab. i. 222, col. 2. Spelt haddok, Prompt. Parv. Of unknown origin; the Gael. adag, a haddock, seems merely a borrowed word from English; similarly, the O. F. kadot, 'a salt haddock' (Cotgrave), is plainly a less original form. The suffix -ack is perhaps diminutive, as in hill-ock; the base had- has some similarity to Gk. yádos, a cod, but it is hard to explain the forms. The Irish name is codog. ¶ Webster explains it from W. Adog. having seed, prolific, from the sb. kad, seed; but I find no proof that W. hadog means a haddock. Can haddock be a corruption of A.S. hacod? See Hake.

HADES, the abode of the dead. (Gk.) Spelt Ades, Milton, P. L. ii. 964. – Gk. äuδηs, äδηs (Attic), diδηs (Homeric), the nether world. 'Usually derived from a, privative, and lõeiv, to see [as though it meant 'the unseen ]; but the aspirate in Attic makes this very doubtful;' Liddell and Scott. HÆMATITE, HÆMORRHAGE; see Homatite, He## morrhage.

HAFT, a handle. (E.) M. E. kaft. keft. 'Los in the kaft' = loose in the handle; Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 339. Spelt kaft. Wyclif, Deut. xix. 5; keft, Prompt. Parv. - A. S. kaft, a handle; Grein, ii. 20. + Du. keft, kecht. + Icel. kept (pron. keft). + G. keft, a handle, hilt, portion of a book.  $\beta$ . The orig. sense is 'that which is seized;' from the pp. seen in Icel. kaftr, one who is taken, a prisoner, and in Goth. Mafis, joined together; with which compare a prisoner, and in Gotin. Adjis, joined together; with which compare Lat. coptus, taken. Y. All from the verb seen in A. S. Aabban, Icel. kaja, Goth. kaban, Lat. capere. See Have. HAG, an ugly old woman. (E.) M. E. kagge; P. Plowman, B. v. 191. The pl. keggen is in the Ancren Riwle, p. 216. The A.S. form is fuller, viz. kagglesse, used to translate Lat. pythmissa, a pro-phetess or witch; Wright's Vocab. i. 60, col. 1. In the same column, we also find: 'Tisiphona, walcyrre; Parca, hægtesse;' on which M. Wright semenker, it The Aardo Same of these graduanced which Mr. Wright remarks : ' The Anglo-Saxon of these words would appear to be transposed. Hagtesse means properly a fury, or in its modern representative, a hag, and would apply singly to Tysiphone, while walcyrian was the name of the three fates of the A. S. mythology.' [Somner also gives a form hægesse, but for this I can find no authority.] + G. here, a witch; O. H. G. házissa, apparently short for hagazissa; cf. M. H. G. hacke, a witch,  $\beta$ . The suffix -t-esse, O. H. G. -z-issa, contains a feminine ending; the base is possibly (as has been suggested) the A.S. haga (G. hag), a hedge, bush; it being supposed that witches were seen in bushes by night. See Hodge, and Haggard. ¶ The Du. kaagdis, kaagedis, a lizard, strikingly resembles in form the A.S. hagtesse; and is easily derived from Du. haag, a hedge. Dor. hag-gard (2), q. v.; and even haggard (1) is from the same base.

HAGGARD (1), wild, said of a hawk. (F., -G.) Orig. the name of a wild, untrained hawk. 'As hagard hauke;' Spenser, F. Q. i. 11. 19. 'For haggard hawkes mislike an emptie hand;' Gascoigne's Flowers, Memories, John Vaughan's Theme, 1. 26. - O. F. correctly. - O. F. haquebute, 'an haquebut, or arquebuze, a caliver ;' kagard, 'hagard, wild, strange, froward ... Faulcon hagard, a hagard, hedge; see Hedge, Haw. Quite distinct from haggard (2), though perhaps from the same root. HAGGARD (2), lean, hollow-eyed. meagre. (E.) This word is certainly a corruption of hagged, confused in spelling by the influence of the word above. 'The ghostly prudes with hagged face ;' Gray, A Long Story, 4th stanza from end. Wedgwood cites from Lestrange's Fubles: 'A kagged carrion of a wolf and a jolly sort of dog with good flesh upon's back fell into company.' The orig. sense is 'hag-like,' or 'witch-like;' formed with suffix -ed from Hag, q. v. HAGGLE (1). to cut awkwardly, mangle. (E.) 'York, all kaggled over; 'Hen. V, iv. 6. 11. A weakened form of kack-le, the time of kack to cut. See Hack (1). Cf. Lowland Sc. kag, to hack. And see below.

HAGGLE (2), to be slow in making a bargain. (E.) Cotgrave explains O. F. karceler by 'to vex, harry, ... also, to kargek, hucke, hedge, or paulter long in the buying of a commodity.' He similarly recyc, or paulter long in the outying of a commonity. The similarly explains barguigner by 'to chaffer, ... dodge, haggle, brabble, in the making of a bargain.' It is plain that higgle is a weakened form of the same word.  $\beta$ . It seems probable that haggle stands for hackle, the frequentative of hack; see Hack (1). The particular use of the word appears more plainly in Dutch. Cf. Du hakkelen, to mangle, to stammer; explained by Sewel as 'to hackle, mangle, function to hackle, mangle, and the harmetime of faulter ;' also Du. hakketeren, to wrangle, cavil; both derivatives of Bu. Aakken, to hack. Y. Thus the word is ultimately the same as Haggle (1). Der. kaggl-er; and see kiggle. HAGIOGRAPHA, holy writings. (Gk.) A name given to the last of the three Jewish divisions of the Old Testament, containing Ps., Prov., Job, Dan., Ez., Nehem., Ruth. Esther, Chron., Cant., Lam., and Eccles. - Gk. ayioypapa (BiBlia), books written by inspiration. - Gk. ayio-, crude form of ayios, devoted to the gods, sacred, holy; and ypáp-eir, to write. β. äyios is from & YAG, to worship; cf. Skt. yaj, to worship. For ypápeur, see Grave. Der.

HA-HA, the same as Haw-haw; see Haw.
HAIL (1), frozen rain. (E) M.E. kazel, Layamon, 11975; spelt kawel in the later text. Later kayl, kail (y = i for 3) Chaucer, Good Women, Cleop. 76. - A. S. kagal, kagol; Grein. + Icel. kagl.
+ Du., Dan., Swed. kagel. + G. kagel. Allied to Gk. waxaf, wax a round pebble; so that hail-stone is tautological. Der. hail, verb. M E. hailen, Prompt. Parv.; also hail-stone, M. E. hailstoon, Wyclif, Wisdom, v. 23 (later text).

HAIL (2), to greet, call to, address. (Scand.) M. E. heilen. 'Heylyn, or gretyn, saluto;' Prompt. Parv. Spelt hezzlenn (for heylen), Ormulum, 2814. A verb formed from Icel. heill, hale, sound, in good health, which was particularly used in greeting, as in kom Asill, welcome, hail ! far heill, farewell ! B. The usual Icel. verb is keika, to say hail to one, to greet one, whence M.E. Aailsen, to greet. In P. Plowman, B. v. 101, we have : 'I kailse hym hendeliche, as I his frende were '= I greet him readily, as if I were his friend; and, in this very passage, the Bodley MS. reads : 'I haile him.' Cf. Swed. Ael, hale, Aelsa, health, helsa, to salute, greet; Dan. Aeel, hale, Milee, to salute, greet. See Hale (1), and Whole.

HAIL! (3), an exclamation of greeting. (Scal.) 'All hail, great master! grave sir, hail, I come!' Temp. i. 2. 189. 'Hayl be bow, mary'=Lat. aus Maria; Myrc's Instructions for Parish Priests, ed. Peacock, l. 422.-Icel. heill, hale, whole; but esp. used in greeting. See Hail (2), and Hale. Gr Similar is the use of A.S. wes hal, lit. be whole, may you be in good health; but the A.S. hal produced the E. whole, as distinct from Scand. hale. See Wassail. HAIR, a filament growing from the skin of an animal. (E.) M. E. her, her, Chaucer, C. T. 591; Ancren Riwle, p. 424.–A.S. hdr. her, Grein, ii. 24. + Du. haar. + Icel. har. + Dan. haar. + Swed. hdr.  $\beta$ . The European type is HÅRA, Fick, iii. 67. Root unknown. Der. hair-y. M. E. heeri, Wyclif, Gen. xxvii. 11; hair-i-ness; hair-less; also hair-breadth, -cloth, -powder, -splitting, spring, -stroke, -trigger, -worm.

HAKE, a sea-fish of the cod family. (Scand.) 'Hake, fysche, squilla;' Prompt. Parv. - Norweg. kakefisk (lit. hook-fish), a fish with hooked under-jaw, esp. of salmon and trout (Aasen); from Norweg. hole, a hook; see Hook. Compare A.S. Aacod, glossed by Lat. Incius; Wright's Vocab. i. 55, col. 2; whence also Prov. E. haked, a large pike (Cambridgeshire); Blount's Glossographia. + G. hecht, M. H. G. hecht, O. H. G. hacht, a pike. B. This explains A.S. Aacod as meaning 'hooked,' od being the pp. ending; see Hatoh (1). Observe also Icel. Aaka (Swed. Aaka, Dan. Aage), the chin, with reference to the peculiar under-jaw of the fish; cf. Icel. haki, Swed. kake, Dan. hage, a hook.

(and G.) barte, O. H. G. parta, a broad axe.  $\beta$ . But this was an (and G.) barte, O. H.G. parta, a broad axe. accommodation of the sense to the common meaning of helm; the real orig. meaning was 'long-handled axe,' from M. H. G. halm, a helve, handle; see Helm (1). 2. The origin of O. H. G. parta is obscure; some derive it from O. H. G. perjan; M. H. G. bern, berren, to strike, cognate with Icel. berja, Lat. ferire, to strike; see Forule. Others connect O. H. G. parta with O. H. G. part, G. bart, a beard, and this certainly accounts better for the vowel. As to the connection between 'beard' and 'axe,' compare Icel bard (the same word as E. beard, but used in the sense of a fin of a fish, or beak of a ship) with Icel. barda, a kind of axe; whilst the Icel. skeggia, a kind of halberd, is plainly derived from skegg, a beard. The con-nection is again seen in O.F. barbelé, explained by Cotgrave as bearded, also full of snags, snips, jags, notches; whence flesche barbelée, a bearded, or barbed arrow; 'see Barb. Similarly the kalberd may have been named from the jagged and irregular shape of the iron head. Der. kalberd-ier, O.F. kalebardier, 'an halberdier;' Cot.

HALCYON, a king-fisher; as adj., serene. (L., - Gk.) 'Halcyon days'=calm days, 1 Hen. VI, i. 2. 131. It was supposed that the weather was always calm when the kingfishers were breeding. 'They lay and sit about midwinter, when daies be shortest; and the time whiles they are broody, is called the halcyon daies; for during that season, the sea is calme and nauigable, especially in the coast of Sicilie; 'Holland's Pliny, b. x. c. 32. - Lat. Aalcyon, commonly alcyon, a kingfisher. - Gk. dlaváv, dlaváv, a kingfisher. B. Of uncertain origin; the aspirate seems to be wrong; clearly cognate with Lat. alcedo, the true Lat. name for the bird.

A.S. healf (Gen. xiii. 9), Icel. hálfa, Goth. halba, O. H. G. halpa, used with the sense of 'side,' or 'part;' and this may have been the orig. sense. It occurs, e.g. in the Goth. version of 2 Cor. iii. 9, where the Gk.  $i\nu$  robra  $\tau \hat{\varphi} \mu \epsilon \rho \mu$  is translated by in thizai halbai. Thus the European type is HALBA, sb., a part, side.  $\gamma$ . A late example of the sb. is in the phrase left half = left side, or left hand; D. D. Phoreman B. iii. So called because excellent eating for holidous: the sense being 'holy called because excellent eating for holidays; the sense being 'holy (i.e. holiday) plaice.' The fish often attains to a large size, and weighs as much as 400 lbs. The cognate languages have similar names for it. + Du. heilbot; from heilig, holy, and bot, a plaice. Cf. M. E. halle, Chaucer, C. T. 2523. -HALL, a large room. (E.) A. S. heall, heal (for older hal), Grein, ii. 50; the acc. healle occurs in Mark, xiv. 15, where the latest text has halle + Du. hal. + Icel. in Mark, xiv. 15, where the latest text has halls. + Du. hal. + Icel. hall, höll. + O. Swed. hall. (The G. halls is a borrowed word.)  $\beta$ . From the Teutonic base HAL, to conceal, whence A. S. helas. to hide, conceal, cover; just as the corresponding Lat. cella is from Lat. celare, to conceal, cover; the orig. sense being 'cover,' or place of shelter. See Cell, a doublet, from the same root. Der. hall-mark, will be the conceal with the concentration of the same root. guild hall.

wild hall. (5) Quite unconnected with Lat. aula. HAT.I.EI.UJAH, the same as Alleluiah, q. v.

HALLIARD, the same as Halyard, q. v.

HALLIOO, HALLOA, a cry to draw attention. (E.) 'Halow, schypmannys crye, Celewma;' Prompt. Parv. Cf. kalloo, King Lear, tii. 4. 79, where the folio edd. have alow, and the quarto edd. have a lo (Schmidt). I suppose it to differ from Holls, q. v. and to be nothing else but a modification of the extremely common A.S. B. In this word, ea stands for interj. ealá, Matt. xxiii. 33, 37.  $\beta$ . In this word, ea stands for a, the modern ak 1 whilst la is the modern lo. See Ah and LO. HALTER, a rope for leading a horse, a noose. (E.) M. E. Aulter, Gower, C. A. ii. 47. [Perhaps heifter = halter, in O. Eng. Matter, Gower, C. A. H. 47. [Pernaps Majter = naiter, in O. Eng. Misc., ed. Morris, i. 53, I. 18.] = A. S. Asaliter (rare); the dat. on Asolitre = with a halter, occurs as a translation of Lat. in camo in PS. xxxi. 12 (Camb. MS.), ed. Spelman; also spelt Asalitre; we find 'capistrum, hæltre,' Wright's Vocab. i. 84, col. 1; cf. Thorpe's Analecta, p. 28, L 1. + O. Du. haliter (Hexham). + G. haliter, a halter. Perhaps from  $\checkmark$  KAL (Skt. hal), to drive. Der. halter, verb. HALVE: collider helf (Skt. Sec. Hold). HALVE, to divide in half. (E.) See Half.

HALYARD, HALLIARD, a rope for hoisting or lowering sails. (E.) Both spellings are in Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. The ropes are so called because fastened to the yards of the ship from which the sails are suspended; and the word is short for hale-yard, because they hale or draw the yards into their places. See Hale (2) and Yard.

HAM, the inner or hind part of the knee; the thigh of an animal. (E.) M. E. Aamme, Aomme; the pl. is spelt both Aommen and Aammes, Ancren Riwle, p. 122. - A. S. Aamm; 'poples. hamm;' Wright's Vocab. i. 44, col. 2; 'suffragines, hamma' (pl.); id. + O. H. G. Aamma, prov. G. Aamme. B. So called because of the 'bend' in the leg; cf. Lat. camurus, crooked, W. cam, bent.to be crooked. See Chamber. Der. ham-string, sb. see Capon. Der. hamper, a fetter (rare).

Shak. Troil. i. 3. 154; hom-string, verb. Diez derives Ital. gamba, F. jambe, the lower part of the leg, from the same root KAM, to bend: see Gambol, and Gammon (1). [+] HAMADRYAD, a dryad or wood-nymph. (L. -Gk.) Properly used rather in the pl. Hamadryades, whence the sing. kamadryad was (incorrectly) formed, by cutting off the suffix -es. Chaucer, C. HAMLET, a small village. (F., -O. Low G.) M. E. kamelet, of three syllables; Rob. of Brune, tr. of Langtoft, p. 269; spelt Aamelat, Barbour, Bruce, iv. 195; Aamillet, id. ix. 403 (Edinb. MS.); Aamlet, id. x. 403 (Camb. MS.). = O. F. Aamel (whence mod. F. Aameau), with dimin. suffix -et. Hamel is used by Froissart, ii. 2. 233 (Littre). The suffix -el is also dimin.; the base being ham. - O. Friesic ham (North Friesic Aamm, Outzen). a home, dwelling; cognate with A.S. kám, whence E. kome. See Home. ¶ The fact that the word is French explains the difference of vowel. [†] HAMMER, a tool for driving nails. (E.) M. E. kamer, kammer; Chaucer, C. T. 2510; Havelok, 1877.-A.S. kamor, Grein, ii. 11.+

Du. hamer. + Icel. Armar. + Dan. Armmer. + Swed. hammare. + G. hammer; O. H. G. hamar. B. Of doubtful origin; Curtius (i. 161) connects it with Church Slavonic kameni (Russ. kamene), a stone, Lithuanian akma (stem akmen), a stone, Gk. áspar, an anvil, thunderbolt, Skt. acman, a stone, thunderbolt; and remarks that in German, as in Slavonic, metathesis has taken place.' This ety-German, as in Slavonic, inclatuces has the root is (probably)  $\checkmark$  AK, to mology appears to be correct; and the root is (probably)  $\checkmark$  AK, to pierce, the orig. sense of Skt. açman being 'pointed stone; acani, the thunderbolt of Indra; and note the 'kammer of Thor,' i.e. a thunderbolt.  $\gamma$ . Fick (iii. 64) says that the comparison of hammer with Skt. agman is 'not to be thought of,' and refers it to ✓ KAM, to be crooked; but this gives no appreciable sense. We should naturally expect the original hammer to have been a stone, and the metathesis of form is quite possible. Der. hammer, verb.

K. John, iv. 1. 67; Aammer-Acad (a kind of shark). HAMMEBCLOTH, the cloth which covers a coach-box. (Hybrid; Du. and E.) In Todd's Johnson. The form hammer is an E. adaptation of the Du. word hemel (which was not understood); with the addition of E. cloth, by way of giving a sort of sense. -Du. hemel (1), heaven (2) a tester, covering. Den hemel van een koetse, the seeling of a coach.' Hexham ; explained by Sewel as 'the testem of a coach.'  $\beta$ . Cognate with Swed., Dan., and G. himmel, testern of a coach.'  $\beta$ . Cognate with Swed., Dan., and G. himmel, heaven, a canopy, tester. All these are derivatives from the form appearing in A.S. hama, Icel. hamr, a covering. – Teut. base HAM = KAM, to curve, cover as with a vault ; see Chamber. [†] HAMMOCK, a piece of strong netting slung to form a hanging bed. (West Indian.) 'Those beds which they call hamacas, or Brasill beds; 'Hackluyt's Voyages, iii. 641 (R.) 'Cotton for the making of Aamaccas, which are Indian beds;' Ralegh, Discovery of Guiana, ed. 1596, p. 32 (Todd). 'Beds or Aamacks;' Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 6 (id.). Columbus, in the Narrative of his First Voyage, says: 'a great many Indians came today for the purpose of bartering their cotton, and hamocas, or nets, in which they sleep' (Webster). Cf. Span. Armaca, a hammock. Of West Indian origin; perhaps slightly changed to a Span. form. ¶ Ingeniously corrupted in Dutch to hangmat, i. e. a hanging mat; but the older Du. form was hammak (Sewel).

HAMPER (1), to impede, hinder, harass. (E.) M. E. kamperen, kampren; the pp. is kampered and kampred, Will. of Paleme, 441, 4694. 'For, I trow, he can kamper thee;' Rom. of the Rose, 6428. A difficult word ; the p is probably excressent, giving an older form hameren, equivalent to M. E. hamelen, to mutilate, which itself took an excrescent b at a later time, so that hamper and hamble are, in fact, doublets. 'Hameling or hambling of dogs is all one with exteditating. Manwood says, this is the ancient term that foresters used for that matter;' Blount's Law Lexicon. 'Expeditate, in forest laws, signifies to cut out the ball of great dogs' fore-feet, for preservation of the king's game; ' id. The orig, sense of to hamble or hamper is to mutilate, render lame; cf. Lowland Sc. hammle, to walk in an ungainly manner; hamp, to halt in walking, to stutter; hamrel, one who stumbles often in walking; hamper, one who cannot read fluently (Jamieson). - A.S. hamelian, to mutilate, maim; Grein, ii. 10. + Icel. hamla, to mutilate, maim. + G. hammeln.  $\beta$ . According to Fick, iii. 65, the forms hamla, hamelian are from an older hamfla, formed from the base hamf in Goth. hamfs, maimed, Mark, ix. 43 Y. This Goth. ham/s is cognate with Gk. suppose, blunt. dumb. deaf (Curtius. i. 187), and with Gk. scinew, a capon. - & SKAP, to cut;

HAMPER (2), a kind of basket. (Low Lat., -F., -G.) 'An and Work. Amper of golde;' Fabyan's Chron., an. 1431-2; ed. Ellis, p. 607. A corruption of Hanaper, q. v. 'Clerk of the Hamper or hanaper' E., it is con (Clericus kanaperii) is an officer in chancery (Anno 2 Edw. iv. c. 1) otherwise called Warden of the Hamper in the same statute; ' Blount's Law Lexicon .- Low Lat. hanaperium, a large vessel for keeping cups in. - O. Fr. hanap (Low Lat. hanapus), a drinking-cup. - O. H. G. Anapf (M. H. G. napf), a drinking-cup. + A. S. Anap, as a gloss to Lat. ciathus (cyathus); Wright's Vocab. i. 24, col. 2. + Du. nap, a Luc, low, basin. Root unknown. Doublet, kanaper. HANAPER, the old form of Hamper, q.v. Cf. 'kanypere, or kamper, canistrum;' Prompt. Parv., p. 226. 'The Hanaper office in the Court of Chancery derives its name from the kanaperium, a large basket in which writs were deposited,' &c.; Way's note.

HAND, the part of the body used for seizing and holding. (E.) M. E. hand, hond, Chaucer, C. T. 843. - A. S. hand, hond; Grein, ii, 11. + Du. hand. + Icel. hönd, hand, + Dan. haand, + Swed. hand, + Goth. handus. + G. hand; O. H. G. hant. β. The European type is HANDU; derived from HANTH, base of Goth. hinthan, to seize, a strong verb (pt. t. hanth, pp. hunthans), only found in the compounds frakinthan, to take captive, uskinthan, to take captive. Remoter origin unknown. Dor. kand, verb, Temp. i. 1. 25; hand-er; hand-barrow, hand-bill, hand-book (imitated from G. handbuck, see Trench, Eng. Past and Present); hand-breadth, Exod. xxv. 25; handeart; hand-ful (Wyclif has hondfullis, pl., Gen. xxxvii. 7); hand-gallop; hand-glass, hand-grenade, hand-herchief (see Korchief), hand-less, hand-maid (Gen. xvi. 1), hand-maiden (Luke, i. 48), handspike, hand-staves (Ezek. xxxix. 9), hand-weapon (Numb. xxxv. 18), hand-writing. And see hand-cuff, hand-i-cap, hand-i-craft, hand-i-work, hand-le, hand-sel. hand-some, hand-y.

HANDCUFF, a manacle, shackle for the hand. (E.) In Todd's Johnson, without a reference ; rare in books. The more usual word (in former times) was hand-fetter, used by Cotgrave to translate O. F. manette, manicle, and manotte. The word is undoubtedly an adaptation of M. E. kandcops, a handcuff; the confusion between cops, a fetter (an obsolescent word) and the better known M. E. coffes (cuffs) was inevitable. We find 'manica, hond-cops' in a vocabulary of the 12th century; Wright's Vocab. i. 95, col. 2. - A. S. hand-cops; we find 'manice, hand-cops' in an earlier vocabulary; id. i. 86, col. 1; also 'compes, fot-cops' just above. The A. S. cops is also spelt cosp; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, lib. iv. met. 3.

HANDICAP, a race for horses of all ages. (E.) In a handicap, horses carry different weights according to their ages, &c., with a view to equalising their chances. The word was formerly the name of a game. 'To the Miter Taverne in Woodstreete ... Here some of Us fell to kandycappe, a sport that I never knew before; 'Pepps' Diary, Sept. 18, 1660. The game is thus explained in Dr. Brewer's Dict. of Phrase and Fable. 'A game at cards not unlike Loo, but with this difference; the winner of one trick has to put in a double stake, the winner of two tricks a triple stake, and so on. Thus: if six persons are playing, and the general state, us to the and A gains 3 tricks, he gains 6., and has to "hand i' the cap" or pool 3s. [4s.?] for the next deal. Suppose A gains two tricks and B one, then A gains 4s. and B 2s., and A has to stake 3s. and B 2s. for the next deal.' But this game does not seem to have originated the phrase.  $\beta$ . There was, I believe, a still older arrangement of the kind, described in Chambers' Etym. Dict., where it is explained as ' originally applied to a method of settling a bargain or exchange by arbitration, in which each of the parties exchanging put his hand into a cap while the terms of the award were being stated, the award being settled only if money was found in the hands of both when the arbiter called "Draw." Y. A curious description of settling a bargain by arbitration is given in P. Plowman, B. v. 327; shewing that it was a custom to barter articles, and to settle by arbitration which of the articles was more valuable, and how much (by way of amends') was to be given to the holder of the inferior one. From this settlement of 'amends' arose the system known as handicapping. The etymology is clearly from hand i cap (=hand in cap), probably rather from the drawing of lots than from the putting in of stakes into a pool. See my Notes on P. Plowman. HANDICRAFT, manual occupation, by way of trade. (E.) Cotgrave translates O. F. mestier by 'a trade, occupation, mystery, handicraft.' A corruption of handcraft; the insertion of i being due to an imitation of the form of handiwork, in which i is a real part of the word. - A. S. handcræft, a trade; Canons under K. Edgar, sect. xi; in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, ii. 246. See Hand and Craft. Der. handicrafts-man and Work.  $\P$  The prefix  $g \in$  in A.S. is extremely common, and makes no appreciable difference in the sense of a word. In later E., it is constantly rendered by i- or y-, as in y-clept, from A.S. geeleoped. In Icel. handaverk, handa is the gen. pl. HANDLE, to treat of, manage. (E.) M.E. handlen, Chaucer,

HANDIWORK, HANDYWORK, work done by the hands. (E) M. E. handiwerk, hondiwere; spelt hondiwere, O. Éng. Homi-lies, ed. Morris, i. 129, l. 20. – A. S. handgeweere, Deut. iv. 28. – A. S.

C. T. 8252. - A. S. handlian, Gen. xxvii. 12. Formed with suffix 4 and causal -ian from A.S. kand, hand. + Du. handelen, to handle, trade.+Icel. köndla.+Dan. handle, to treat, use, trade.+Swed. handla, to trade. + G. handeln, to trade. All similarly formed. See Hand. Der. handle, sb., lit. a thing by which to manage a tool; the pl. hondlen occurs early, in St. Juliana, ed. Cockayne and Brock, p. 59; cf. Dan. handel, a handle.

HANDSEL, HANSEL, a first instalment or earnest of a bargain. (E. or Scand.) 1. In making bargains, it was formerly usual to pay a small part of the price at once, to conclude the bargain and as an earnest of the rest. The lit. sense of the word is 'delivery into the hand' or 'hand gift.' The word often means a gift or bribe, a new-year's gift, an earnest-penny, the first money received in a morning, &c. See Hansel in Halliwell. M. E. kansele, P. Plow-man, C. vii. 375; B. v. 326; kansell, Rich. Redeles, iv. 91. 2. Another sense of the word was 'a giving of hands,' a shaking of hands by way of concluding a bargain; see kandad in Icel. Dict.; and it is probable that this is the older meaning of the two. - A. S. kandselen, a delivery into the hand; cited by Lye from a Glossary (Cot. 136), but the reference seems to be wrong. [The A. S. word is rare, and the word is rather to be considered as Scand.] - A. S. hand, the hand; and sellan, to give, deliver, whence E. sell. Thus the word handsel stands for hand-sale. See Hand and Sell, Sale. + Icel. handsal, a law term, the transaction of a bargain by joining hands; 'hand-shaking was with the men of old the sign of a transaction, and is still used among farmers and the like, so that to shake hands is the same as to conclude a bargain' (Cleasby and Vigfusson); derived from Icel. hand, hand, and sal, lit. a giving.+Dan. handsel, a handsel, earnest.+Swed. handsöl. Dor. handsel or hansel, verb, used in Warner's Albion's England, b. xii. c.

HANDSOME, comely, orig. dexterous. (E.) Formerly it sig-nified able, adroit, dexterous; see Trench, Select Glossary; Shak. has it in the mod. sense. M. E. kandsum. 'Handsum, or esy to hond werke, esy to han hand werke, manualis;' Prompt. Parv. - A. S. kand, hand; and suffix -sum, as in wyn-sum, winsome, joyous; but the whole word handsum does not appear. + Du. handzaam, tractable, B. The suffix -sum is the same as Du. -zaam, G. serviceable. -sam (in lang-sam); see Winsome. Der. handsome-ly; handsomeness, Troil. ii. 1. 16.

HANDY (1), dexterous, expert. (E.) "With kandy care;" Dryden, Baucis and Philemon, l. 61. The M. E. form is invariably kendi (never kandi), but the change from e to a is a convenience; it is merely a reversion to the orig. vowel. It occurs in King Horn, ed. Lumby, 1336. 'Thenne beo 3e his kendi children' = then ye are his dutiful children; Ancren Riwle, p. 186. – A. S. kendig, appearing in the comp. list-kendig, having skilful hands (Grein); which is com-posed of A. S. list. skill, and kendig, an adj. regularly formed from the sb. hand by the addition of the suffix ig and the consequent vowel change from a to e. See Hand. + Du. handig, handy, expert. + Dan. handig, usually behandig, expert, dexterous. + Swed. händig, dexterous. + Goth. handugs, clever, wise. Cf. G. behend, agile, dexterous; and see Handy (2). HANDY (2), convenient, near. (E.) This is not quite the same word as the above, but they are from the same source. 'Ah I though he lives so handy, He never now drops in to sup;' Hood's Own, i. 44. M.E. Aende. 'Nade his help kende ben' = had not help been near him ; William of Palerne, 2513. - A. S. gehende, near ; 'sumor is gehande' = summer is nigh at hand, Luke, xxi. 30; 'he wæs gehende påm scipe '= he was nigh unto the ship, John, vi. 19. [The prefix ge-could always be dropped, and is nearly lost in mod. English.] The A.S. gekende is an adv. and prep., formed from hand by suffixed -e (for -i?) and vowel-change. See Handy (1).

HANDYWORK, the same as Handiwork, q. v.

HANG, to suspend; to be suspended. (E.) In mod. E. two verbs have been mixed together. The orig. verb is intransitive, with the pt. t. Aung, pp. hung; whence the derived transitive verb, pt. t. and pp. hanged. [So also in the case of lie, lay, sit, set, fall, fell, the A. S. trans. rather than of the intransitive yerb, on which account the unoriginal form will be first considered here. unoriginal form will be first considered here. A. Trans. and weak verb, pt. t. and pp. kanged. 'Born to be kanged;' Temp. i. 1. 35. But the pt. t. is generally turned into Aung, as in 'hung their eyelids down;' I Hen. IV, iii. 2.81. M.E. hangien, hongien; also hangen, hongen. 'Honged hym after' = he hanged himself after-Aand, hand ; and geweere, another form of weere, work. See Hand wards ; P. Plowman, B. i. 68; pp. hanged, id. B. prol. 176. - A. S.

hangian, hongian, Grein, ii. 14; the pt. t. hangode occurs in Beowulf, 2 ed. Grein, 2085. + Icel. hengia, to hang up (weak verb). + G. hängen (weak verb). These are the causal forms of the strong verb following. B. M. E. kangen, pt. t. Aeng (sometimes hing), pp. kongen. 'And theron keng a broche of gold ful schene;' Chaucer, C. T. 160. 'By unces Aenge his lokkes that he hadde;' id. 679. The infin. kangen is conformed to the causal and Icel. forms, the A.S. infin. being always contracted. - A. S. hon, to hang, intr. (contr. from hakan or hanhan); pt. t. Adag, pp. Aangen; Grein, ii. 95. + Icel. Aanga, to hang, intr.; pt. t. Ackk (for keng), pp. Aanginn. + Goth. Kakan, pt. t. haikak (formed by reduplication), pp. kohans. + G. hangen, pt. t. hieng, hing, pp. gehangen. O. All these verbs are from a European base pp. gehangen. O. All these verbs are from a European base HANH (Fick, iii. 58), corresponding to a root KANK, whence Lat. cunctari, to hesitate, delay, and Skt. cank, to hesitate, be in un-certainty, doubt, fear. And again, KANK is a nasalised form of  $\checkmark$  KAK, whence Gk.  $\delta \kappa \nu \epsilon \nu$ , to linger, be anxious, fear, standing for an older form  $\kappa \sigma \kappa \nu \epsilon i \nu$ . 'We must assume an Indo-European root kak, nasalised kank, and refer  $\delta \kappa \nu \sigma s$  to  $\kappa \sigma \kappa \sigma \sigma s$ ; 'Curtius, ii. 375. The orig. sense of 🖌 KAK seems to be 'to be in doubt,' 'be anxious, 'be suspended in mind,' or simply 'to waver.' ¶ The Du. hangen, Dan. hænge, Swed. hänga, are forms common to both trans. and intrans. senses. Dor. hang-er, (1) one who hangs, (2) a suspended sword, orig. part of a sword-belt whence the sword was suspended, Hamlet, v. 2. 157; Aanger-on, hang-ing; hang-ings, Tam. Shrew, ii. 351; hanger-on, Mang-ing; hang-ings, Tam. Shrew, ii. 351; hang-man, Meas. iv. 2. 18; hang-dog, Pope, Donne Versified, Sat. iv. 267; also hank, q. v.; hank-er, q. v. [+]

HANK, a parcel of two or more skeins of yarn, tied together. (Scand.) Cotyrave translates O. F. bobine by 'a skane or hanke of gold or silver thread.' Cf. prov. E. hank, a skein, a loop to fasten a gate, a handle (Halliwell). The rare M. E. verb hanken, to fetter, count of Curve Murdi i Carbon Wardi i the horas of horas of here is the horas. occurs in Cursor Mundi, 16044. - Icel. hanki, the hasp or clasp of a Chest;  $\lambda \delta nk$ ,  $\lambda angr, a$  hank, coil;  $\lambda ang$ , a coil of a snake. + Dan.  $\lambda ank$ , a handle, ear of a vessel. + Swed.  $\lambda ank$ , a string, tie band. + G.  $\lambda enkel$ , a handle, ring, ear, hook.  $\beta$ . The orig. sense seems to be 'a loop' for fastening things together, also a loose ring to hang a thing up by; and the form hangr shews the connection with Icel. kanga, to hang, also to hang on to, cleave to; whence the sense of fastening. Cf. G. kenken, to hang (a man). See Hang, Hanker.

HANKER, to long importunately. (E.) Not in early use. 'And felt such bowel-kankerings To see an empire, all of kings;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2. l. 239. Cf. prov. E. hank, to hanker after (North); Halliwell. This verb is a frequentative of hang, with the same change of ng to nk as in the sb. hank; cf. the phrases 'to hang on,' and ' to hang about,' and the use of Icel. hanga in the sense of 'to cleave to.' + O. Du. hengelen, to hanker after (Sewel), from Du. hangen, to hang, depend; mod. Du. hunkeren, to hanker after, corrupted from the older form honkeren (= hankeren); see Sewel, ¶ The change from ng to nk is also well shewn by G. Anker (=hang-er), a hangman; G. henken, to hang (a man). See Hank, Hange [†] HANSEATIC, pertaining to the Hanse Towns in Germany. (F., -0, H. G.) The Hanse towns were so called because associated in a league. -0. F. hanse, 'the hanse; a company, society, or cor-poration of merchants;' Cot. -0. H. G. hansa, mod. G. hanse, an association, league (Flügel). + Goth. Aansa, mod. G. Adnie, an association, league (Flügel). + Goth. Aansa, a band of men, Mk. xv. 16; Luke, vi. 17. + A. S. Aós [for Anns], a band of men; Beowulf, 924. The league began about A. D. 1140 (Haydn). HANSEL, the same as Handsel, q. v. HANSEL, the same as Handsel, q. v.

HANSOM, a kind of cab. (E.) Modern. An abbreviation for 'Hansom's patent safety cab.' From the name of the inventor. Hansom is no doubt the same as handsome, in which the d is frequently dropped. Many surnames are nicknames; see Handsome.

HAP, fortune, chance, accident. (Scand.) M.E. kap, happ; P. Plowman, B. xii. 108; Layamon, 816, 3857. – Icel. kapp, hap, chance, good luck. Cf. A.S. gehap, fit; Ælfriz's Colloquy, in Thorpe's Analecta. p. 21, l. 7; also A.S. magenhap, full of strength, modhap, full of courage, Grein, ii. 219, 259. The W. hap, luck, hap, chance, must be borrowed from E.; but the Irish cobh, victory, triumph, is prob. cognate. Der. happ-y, orig. lucky, Pricke of Conscience, 1334; happ-i-ly, happ-i-ness; hap-less, Gascoigne, Fruits of War, st. 108; hap-less-ly; hap-ly, Shak. Two Gent. i. J. 32 (happily in the same sense, Meas. iv. 2. 98); hap-hazard, Holland, tr. of Livy, p. 578 (R.); happen, verb, q. v.; mis-hap, per-haps. HAPPEN, to befal. (Scand.) M.E. happenen; Gower has hapneth = it happens; C. A. iii. 62. '3if me pe lyffe happene' = if life be granted me; Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1269.  $\beta$ . The form happenen is an extension of the commoner form happen (mod. E. hap); 'In any cas that mighte falle or happe;' Chaucer, C. T. 587. The latter verb is formed directly from the sb. hap above. With the ending -enen compare Goth. verbs in -nan.

HARANGUE, a popular address. (F., -O. H. G.) In Milton, P. L. xi. 663. -O. F. harangue, 'an oration, . . set speech, long tale; P. L. xi. 663.=0. F.  $n^{ac}$  I  $\mathcal{G}^{ue}$ , 'an oration, . . set speech, long tale; Cot. Cf. Span. arenga, Ital. aringa, arringa, an harangue.  $\beta$ . The Ital. aringa signifies a speech made from an aringo, which Florio explains by 'a pulpit; aringo also meant an arena, lists, and prob. a hustings. The more lit. sense is a speech made in the midst of a ring of people. = O. H. G. hring (mod. G. ring), a ring, a ring of people, an arena, circus, lists; cognate with E. ring and circus. See Ring, Circus. ¶ The vowel a (for i) reappears in the sb. rank; see Rank, Range. The prefix ka-in F., and a- in Span. and Ital., are due to the G. A-, now dropped. Der. karangue, verb, Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2. l. 438. HARASS, to torment, vex. plague. (F.) Also spelt harras. 'To harass and weary the English ;' Bacon, Life of Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, we can be a sub-weak of the second s vex, disquiet;' Cot. best to suppose it to be an extension of O. F. harer; 'harer un chien, to hound a dog at, or set a dog on a beast;' Cot. - O. H. G. haren, to cry out. - KAR, to call out; cf. Gk. añpuf, a herald. Der. harass, sb, Milton, Samson, 257; harass-er.

HARBINGER, a forerunne  $(F_{n} = 0, H, G_{n})$  In Shak. Macb. 4 45. See Trench. Select Glossary. The n stands for r, and the older form is M.E. herbergeour, one who provided lodgings for a host or army of people. This sense is retained in Bacon, who says: 'There was a harbinger who had lodged a gentleman in a very ill room ;' Apophthegms, no. 54. 'The fame anon throughout the toun is born . . By herbergeours that wenten him beforn; 'Chaucer, C. T. 5417. In the title of the legend of St. Julian, in Bodley MS. 1596, fol. 4, he is called 'St. Julian the gode ksrberjour,' i. e. the good harbourer. Herbergeour is formed (by help of the suffix our, denoting the agent) from the O. F. Aerberger, 'to harbour, lodge, or dwell in a house; Cot. (and see Burguy) - O. F. Aerberge, 'a house, harbour, lodging; Cot.; mod. F. auberge. - M. H. G. herberge, O. H. G. hereberga, a lodging, harbour; see further under Harbour.

HARBOUR, a lodging, shelter, place of refuge. (Scand.) M.E. kerberwe, Chaucer, C. 1. 767; whence mod. E. Aarbour by change of erwe to our and the use of ar to represent the later sound of er. The w stands for an older 3, and this again for g; the spelling Aerberse is in Layamon, 28878. - Icel. Aerbergi, a harbour, inn, lodg-ing, lit. a 'host-shelter;' derived from Icel. Aerr, an army, and bjarga, to save, help, defend. + O. Swed. hærberge, an inn; derived from har, an army, and berga, to defend (Ihre). + O. H. G. hereberga, a camp, lodging; der. from O. H. G. heri, hari (mod. G. heer), an army, and bergan, to shelter: whence come mod. F. auberge, Ital. albergo, an inn, and mod. E. harbinger, q.v. B. For the former element, cf. also A. S. here, Goth Asrijs, a host, army, the European form being HARJA (Fick, iii. 65). Cognate with Lithuan. karas, war, army, lit. 'destroyer,' from KAR, to kill, destroy, whence Skt. gára, hurting, grí, to hurt, wound, Gk. «Adeir, to break, and perhaps C. For the latter element, Russ. karate, to punish ; see Harry. cf. Goth. bairgan. A. S. beorgan, to preserve; and see Bury. ¶ It is usual to cite A.S. hereberga as the original of harbour; but it is quite unauthorised. Dor. harbour, verb, M. E. herberwen, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 73, from Icel. herbergja, to shelter, harbour, a verb formed from the sb. herbergi; also harbour-er; harbour-age, K. John, ii. 234 ; harbour-less ; harbour-master ; also harbinger, q. v.

11. 234; Aaroour-tess; Marcour-messer; also new orgs: q. ... HARD, firm, solid, severe. (E.) M. E. kard, Chaucer. C. T. 220 (and common). - A. S. keard, John, vi. 60. + Du. kard. + Dan. keard. + Swed. hard. + Icel. hardr. + Goth. kardus. + G. kart. + Gk. kparús, strong; cf. κρατερόs, καρτερόs, valiant, stout. β. There is a little doubt about the relationship of Gk. sparies; if it be right, the forms are all from a base KART, from 4 KAR, to make. See Curtius, i. 189. Der. kard-ly, kard-ness = A. S. keardnes, Mark, x. 5; kard-en = M. E. kardnen, Ormulum, 1574, 18319, which is an extension of the commoner M. E. harden, of which the pp. yharded occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 10559; hard-en-ed; hard-ship, M. E. heardschipe, Ancren Riwle, p. 6, 1.9; hard-ware; hard-featured, hard-fisted, hard-handed, hard-hearted, hard-mouthed, hard visaged; also hard-y, q. v.

HARDY, stout, strong, brave. (F., -O. H.G.) M.E. hardi. Aardy, P. Plowman, B. xiz. 285; the comp. Aardiere is in Layamon, 4348, later text. - O. F. Aardi, hardy, daring, stout, bold; Cot. Hardi was orig. the pp. of O.F. kardir, of which the compound enhardir is explained by Cotgrave to mean 'to hearten, imbolden.'-O. H. G. hartjan (M.H.G. herten), to harden, make strong. - O.H.G. harti (G. hart). hard; cognate with A. S. heard, hard. See Hard. Dor. hardi-ly, hardi-ness, P. Plowman, B. xix. 31; hardi-head, Spenser, F. Q. i. 4. 38; hardi-hood, Milton, Comus, 6:0. Gr Hardi-ly, hardi-ness, hardi head, hardi-hood are all hybrid compounds, with E. suffixes; shewing how completely the word was naturalised.

HARE, the name of an animal. (E.) M. E. kare, Chaucer, C. T. 13626. - A. S. hara, as a gloss to Lat. lepus, Ælfric's Gloss., in Wright's Vocab. i. 22, 78. + Du. haas. + Dan. and Swed. hare. + 3 Icel. Aéri. + G. hase; O. H. G. haso. + W. ceinach (Rhys). + Skt. caca, orig.  $\alpha_{aa,a}$  hare, lit. a jumper.  $\beta$ . The A.S. form stands for an older  $Aa_{aa,a}$  as shewn by the Du., G., and Skt. forms. The Skt. gives the etymology; cara being from the verb cao, orig. cas, to jump, move along by leaping. Hence all the forms are from a root KAS, to jump, prob. connected with E. haste. See Hasto. Der. hare brained, 1 Hen. IV, v. 2. 19; hare-lip, K. Lear, iii. 4. 123; harelipped; harrier, q. v.; harebell, q. v. HAREBEILL, the name of a flower. (E.) In Cymb. iv. 2. 222.

The word does not appear among A.S. names of plants. Certainly compounded of hare and bell; but, owing to the absence of reason for the appellation, it has been supposed to be a corruption of kairbell, with reference to the slenderness of the stalk of the true hairbell, the Campanula rotundifolia. The apparent absence of reason for the name is, however, rather in favour of the etymology from kare than otherwise, as will be seen by consulting the fanciful A.S. names of plants given in Cockayne's Leechdoms, vol. iii. To name plants from animals was the old custom; hence hare's beard, hare's-ear, hare's foot, hare's lettuce, hare's palace, hare's tail, hare-thistle, all given in Dr. Prior's Popular Names of British Plants; to which add A.S. haran-hyge (hare's foot trefoil), haran-specel (now called viper's bugloss), haran-wyrt (hare's wort), from Cockayne's Leechdoms. The spelling hair-bell savours of modern science, but certainly not of the principles of English etymology. ¶ A similar modern error is to derive fox-glove from folks -glove (with the silly interpretation of folks as being 'the good folks' or fairies), in face of the evidence that the A.S. name was foxes glifa = the glove of the fox. [+]

HAREM, the set of apartments reserved for females in large Eastern houses. (Arab.) Not in Todd's Johnson. Spelt karam in Moore's Lalla Rookh; 'And the light of his karam was young Nourmahal." Also in Byron, Bryde of Abydos, c. i. st. 14. – Arab. haram, women's apartments; lit. 'sacred;' Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 197.-Arab. root harama, he prohibited; so that the haram is the place which men are prohibited from entering.

HARICOT, (1) a stew of mutton, (2) the kidney bean. (F.) "Haricot, in cookery, a particular way of dressing mutton-cutlets; also, a kind of French beans ;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. - F. haricot. mutton sod with little turneps, some wine, and tosts of bread crumbled among,' &c.; Cotgrave (who gives two other methods of preparing it, shewing that it was sometimes served with 'chopped herbs').  $\beta$ . See Littre, who discusses it; it is found that the sense of 'bean' is late, whilst the sense of 'minced mutton with herbs' is old. The oldest spelling is herigote (14th cent.); cf. O. F. hardigote, a piece, morsel (Burguy). We may certainly conclude that the beaution of the beaution o the bean was so named from its use in the dish called haricot. Y. Of unknown origin, but presumably Teutonic. We also find the following. 'Herigotes, dew-claws, also spurs;' Cot. 'Harigct, petite flûte, flageolet fait avec les os des pieds, ou tibia de chevrau et d'agneau; Roquefort. 'Arigot, larigot, sorte de fifre, petite flûte militaire;' id. (The 1ight key would probably connect and explain these words). [†]

HARK ! listen ! (E.) M. E. herke, Coventry Mysteries, 55 (Stratmann). The imp. mood of M. E. herken; 'to herken of his sawe,' Chaucer, C. T. 1528. Closely allied to M. E. herknen, to hearken. See Hearken.

HARLEQUIN, the leading character in a pantomime. (F.) • The joy of a king for a victory must not be like that of a harlequin upon a letter from his mistress; ' Dryden (in Todd's Johnson; no reference). - F. arlequin, a harlequin; spelt harlequin in the 16th cent. Cf. Ital. arlocchino, a harlequin, buffoon, jester. β. Some derive the F. word from the Italian ; but it is not an old word in the latter language, and the borrowing seems to have been the other way.  $\gamma$ . It seems best to connect F. arlequin (harlequin) with the O. F. hierlekin or hellequin (13th century) for which Littre gives quotations. This word was used in the phrase li maisnie kierlekin (Low Lat. harlequini familias) which meant a troop of demons that haunted lonely places, called in Middle-English Hurlewaynes kynne or Hurlewaynes meyné = Hurlewain's kin or troop, mentioned in Richard the Redeles, i. co, and in the Prologue to the Tale of Beryn, l. 8. The orig signification of O. F. hierlekin, Low Lat. harlequinus, and M. E. hurlewayn seems to have been a demon, perhaps the devil. Cf. also Ital. Alickino, the name of a demon in Dante, Inf xxi. 118. The origin of the name is wholly unknown. See note to Rich. Redeles, ed. Skeat. i. 90. ¶ I shall here venture my guess. Perhaps hierlekin may have been of O. Low German origin; thus O. Friesic helle kin (A.S. helle cyn, Icel. heljar kyn) would mean 'the kindred of hell' or 'the host of hell,' hence a troop of demons. The sense being lost, the O.F. maisnie would be added to keep up the idea of host,' turning hierlehin into (apparently) a personal name of a single demon. The change from kellekin to kerlequin, &c., arose from a z stones together (Cotgrave); hence, a grappling-iron. - O. F. harpe, popular etymology which connected the word with Charles Quint popular elymology which connected the word with Charles Quant (Charles V.); see the story in Max Müller, Lectures, ii. 581. HARLOT, a wanton woman. (F.) Orig. used of either sex indifferently; in fact, more commonly of men in Mid. Eng. It has not, either, a very bad sense, and means little more than 'fellow.' 'He was a gentil harlot and a kind;' Chaucer, C. T. 649. 'A sturdy harlot [a stout fellow] wente hem ay behind:' id. 7336. 'Dauwe the dykere with a dosen karlotes of portours and pykeporses and pylede toth-drawers' = Davy the ditcher with a dozen fellows who were porters and pick-purses and hairless (?) tooth-drawers; P. Plowman, C. vii. 369. 'Begge as on Aarlot' = beg like a vaga-bond, Ancren Riwle, p. 356. Undoubtedly of Romance origin. -O. F. arlot (probably once harlot), explained by Roquefort as 'fripon, coquin, voleur,' a vagabond, a robber; also spelt herlot, for which Diez gives a reference to the Romance of Tristran, i. 173. β. The Prov. arlot, a vagabond, occurs in a poem of the 13th century; Bartsch, Chrestomathie Provençale, 207. 20. Florio explains Ital. arlotto by 'a lack-Latin, a hedge-priest,' and arlotta as a harlot in the modern E. sense. Ducange explains Low Lat. arlotus to mean the modern  $\gamma$ . Of disputed origin, but presumably Teutonic, viz. from the O. H. G. karl, a man. This is a well-known word, appearing also as Icel. karl, a man, fellow, A. S. ceorl, a man, and in the mod. E. churl; see Churl. The suffix is the usual F. dimin. suffix -ot, as in bill-ot from bille; see Brachet's Dict. § 281; it also appears in the E. personal name Charlotte, which is probably the very same word. We actually find the whole word carlot in Shak. As You Like It, iii. 5. 108. Note also the form Arletta, said to have been the name of the mother of William I. ¶ We find also W. herlod, a stripling, lad; but this is merely the E. word borrowed; the Cornish not only borrowed the E. karlot unchanged (with the sense of 'rogue'), but also the word harlutry, corruption, which is plainly the M. E. harlotrie, with a suffix (-rie) which is extremely common in French. See Williams, Cornish Lexicon, p. 211. Der. Abriot-ry = M. E. karletrie, of which one meaning was 'ribald talk;' see Chaucer, C. T. 563, 3147. The suffix -ry is of F. origin, as in caval-ry, bribe-ry, &c.

HARM, injury, wrong, (E) M. E. karm, P. Plowman, C. xvi. 113: spelt herm, Ancren Riwle, p. 116. – A. S. kearm, herm, grief of mind, also harm, injury; Grein, ii. 60. + Icel. karmr, grief. + Dan. Aarme, wrath + Swed. Aarm, anger, grief, pity. + G. Aarm, grief.  $\beta$ . Cf. Russ. srame, shame; Skt. grama, toil, fatigue. The latter is from the vb. gram, to exert one's self, toil, be weary. - V KRAM, or KARM, to be tired; whence some derive also Lat. clemens, and E. clement (Fick, i. 48). Der. karm, verb, M. E. karmen, spelt kearmin in O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, p. 263, l. 7; harm-ful, Wyclif, Prov. i. 22; harm-ful-ly, harm-ful-ness; harm-less = M. E. harmles, Will. of Paleme, 1671; harm-less-ly, harm-less-ness.

HARMONY, concord, esp. of sounds. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) karmonie, Gower, C. A. iii. 90. 'There is a melodye in heauen, whiche clerkes clepen armony;' Testament of Love, in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. cccii. col. 2. - F. harmonie. - Lat. harmonia -Gk.  $d\rho\mu\sigma\nu la$ , a joint, joining, proportion, harmony. - Gk.  $d\rho\mu\sigma$ , a fitting, joining. - Gk.  $d\rho\mu\nu$  (fut.  $d\rho\omega$ ), to fit, join together. -  $\checkmark$  AR, to fit; whence also E. arm, article, &c. Der. harmon-ic, Milton, P. L. iv. 689; harmoni-cs, harmoni-c-al, harmoni-c-al-ly; harmoni-ous, Temp. iv. 119; harmoni-ous-ly, harmoni-ous-ness; harmon-ise (Cudworth), harmon-is-er, harmon-ist, harmoni-um (about A. D. 1841).

HARNESS, equipment for a horse. (F.,-C.) In old books, it almost always means body-armour for soldiers; 1 Kings, xx. 11; &c. M. E. harneis, harneys, Chaucer, C. T. 1613; spelt herneys, P. Plowman, B. xv. 215. 'He dude quyk harnesche hors' = he commanded horses to be quickly harnessed, King Alisaunder, 4708. – O. F. harnas, har nois, hernois, armour. - Bret. harnez, old iron; also armour. - Bret. howarn (pl. hern), iron; cognate with W. haiarn, Gael. iarunn, Irish iaran, iron. See Iron. ¶ The G. harnisch, Du. harnas, &c., are borrowed from French. Der. harness, verb, = O. F. harnascher.

HARP, a stringed musical instrument. (E.) M.E. karpe, Gower, C. A. iii. 301; Layamon, 4898. – A. S. hearpe, Grein, ii. 62; and see Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxv. § 6 (b. iii. met. 12). + Du. harp. + Icel. harpa. + Swed. harpa. + Dan. harpe. + G. harfe, O. H. G. Aarpha. β. Root unknown; but perhaps connected with Lat. crepare, to crackle, erabro, a hornet; if so, it orig. meant 'loud-sounding.' ¶ There is no pretence for connecting it, as usual, with Gk. δρη, meaning 'a sickle,' or 'a bird of prey'! See note to Harpoon. Der. harp-er = A. S. hearpere, in Ælfred, as above; harp, HARPOON, a dart for striking whales. (Du., -F.) 'Some fish with karpons' (late edd. karpoons), Dryden, Art of Love, 875. The dart is also called 'a harping-iron.' Harpon is the F., karpoon the Du. form. - Du. harpoon (pron. like E. harpoon), 'a harping-iron;' Sewel. - F. harpon, orig. 'a crampiron wherewith masons fasten gone, a harpoon, arpese, a cramp-iron, clamp, arpicare, to clamber up, arpino, a hook, arpione, a hinge, pivot, hook, tenter.  $\beta$ . The notion of 'grappling' seems to underlie all these words; but the origin is by no means clear; Littré cites an O. H. G. harfan, to seize, which Scheler spells hrepan; this seems to be nothing but mod. G. raffen, to snatch up; and I doubt its being the true source. y. Surely the Ital. arpagone is nothing but the Lat. acc. Aarpagonem; y suppose the base Aarp- to be no other than that which appears in Lat. harpago, a hook, grappling-iron, harpaga, a hook, and harpaz, rapacious; all words borrowed from Gk.; cf. Gk. apwayh, a hook, rake, apraf, rapacious, aprn, a bird of prey, all from the base APII race, appendix, in particular, appendix, appendix of the root being RAP, as in Lat. rapere, to seize. See Harpy.  $\P$  Diez identifies F. karpe, a dog's claw, with F. karpe, a harp, on the plea that the harp was probably 'hook-shaped;' of which there is no proof. Der. harpoon-er.

HARPSICHORD, an old harp-shaped instrument of music. (F.) Also spelt karpsicon or karpsecol. 'On the karpsicon or virginals;' Partheneia Sacra, ed. 1633, p. 144 (Todd). 'Harpsechord or Harpsecol, a musical instrument;' Kersey. Spelt harpsechord in Minsheu, ed. 1627. The corrupt forms of the word are not easy to explain; in particular, the letter s seems to have been a mere intrusion. - O. F. harpechorde, 'an arpsichord or harpsichord;' Cot. Compounded of O.F. harpe, a harp (from a Teutonic source); and chorde, more commonly cords, a string. See Harp, Chord, and Cord. HARPY, a mythological monster, half bird and half woman. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) In Shak. Temp. iii. 3.83.-O.F. harpie, or harpye, a harpy;' Cot.-Lat. harpyia, chiefly used in pl. harpyia, Verg. Æn. iii. 226. - Gk. pl. aprwae, harpies; lit. ' the spoilers.' - Gk. dpnthe base of doráger, to seize; cognate with Lat. rap., the base of raper, to seize. See Rapacious. HARQUEBUS, the same as Arquebus, q. v.

HARRIDAN, a worn-out wanton woman. (F.) In Pope, Macer, a Character, l. 24. It is a variant of O. F. haridelle, which Cot. explains by 'a poor tit, or leane ill-favored jade;' i.e. a wornout horse. Probably connected with the set of the set o

HARRIER (1), a hare-hound. (E.) Formerly karier, more correctly. So spelt in Minsheu, ed. 1627. The word occurs also in Blount, Ancient Tenures, p. 39 (Todd). Formed from hare, with suffix -ier; cf. bow-yer from bow, law-yer from law. HARRIER (2), a kind of buzzard. (E.)

harrying or destroying small birds. See HATTY. HARROW, a frame of wood, fitted with spikes, used for breaking the soil, (E.) M. E. karwe, P. Plowman, B. xix. 268; spelt karu, Aarow, Karwe, Cursor Mundi, 12388. A.S. Aearge, a harrow (in a gloss). 'Herculus, Aearge'; Wright's Voc. ii. 43, col. 2. + Du. hark, a rake. + Icel. Aerfi, a harrow. + Dan. Aarv, a harrow; Aarve, to harrow. + Swed. Aarka, a rake; Aarka, to rake; Aarf, a harrow; Aarfva, to harrow. + G. harke, a rake (Flügel); Aarken, to rake. Root unknown; cf. Gk. sipsis, a peg. pin, skewer. ¶ The F. Aerce, a harrow, is a different word; see Hearse. Der. Aarrow, verb,

M.E. karwen, P. Plowman, C. vi. 19. HARRY, to ravage, plunder, lay waste. (E.) Also written karrow, but this is chiefly confined to the phrase 'the Harrowing of Hell,' i. e. the despoiling of hell by Christ. M.E. kergien, later Aerien, Aerwen, Aerwen, 'By him that Aerwed helle;' Chaucer, C. T. 3512. 'He that Aeried helle;' Will. of Paleme, 3725. - A. S. Aerg-ian, to lay waste, Grein, ii. 38. Lit. to 'over-run with an army;' cognate with Icel. herja, Dan. hærge, to ravage. - A. S. herg-, which appears in Arrg-er, gen. case of Arre, an army, a word particularly used in the sense of 'destroying host;' Grein, ii. 35.  $\beta$ . The . The A. S. here is cognate with Icel. herr, Dan. har, Swed. har, G. heer, and Goth. Aarjis, a host, army; all from European base HARJA, an army, from Europ. root HAR, to destroy, answering to Aryan √ KAR, to destroy; cf. Skt. cri, to hurt, wound, cirna, wasted, decayed; Lithuan. karas, war, army. Dor. karrier (2). HARSH, rough, bitter, severe. (Scand.) M. E.

M. E. harsk, rough to the touch, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1084. 'Harske, or haske, as sundry frutys; 'Prompt. Parv. – Dan. harsk, rancid; Swed. härsk, rank, rancid, rusty; O. Swed. harsk (Ihre). + G. harsch. harsh, rough.  $\beta$ . Cf. Lithuan. harsh, bitter (of taste); Skt. hatu, pungent. krit, to cut. Dor. harsh-ly, harsh-ness.

HART, a stag, male deer. (É.) M. E. kart, Chaucer, C. T. 11503; spelt Acort, Layamon, 26762. - A. S. keort, Acorot, Grein, ii. 69. Du. hert. + Icel. hjörtr. + Dan. hiort. + Swed. hjort. + G. hirsch, Ó. H. G. hiruz, 256 HARPSICHURD. 'a dog's claw or paw;' Cot.; cf. 'se harper l'un à l'autre, to grapple, <sup>6</sup> (Fick, iii. 67), from a shorter HERU; the latter corresponds to Lat. grapp, hasp, clasp, imbrace, cope, close together, to scuffle or fall together by the ears;' id. Cf. Span. arpon, a harpoon, arpeo, a erappling-iron. arpar, to tear to pieces, rend, claw. Also Ital. arpa-related to E. karn. The orig, sense is 'horned animal.' See further under Horn. Der. harts-horn, so called because the horns of the hart abound with ammonia ; harts-tongue.

HARVEST, the ingathering of crops, the produce of labour. (E.) Sometimes used in the sense of 'autumn;' see Wyclif, Jude, 12; Shak. Temp. iv. 116. M. E. heruest (with u for u), P. Plowman, B. vi. 292, 301 .- A. S. harfest, autumn, Grein, ii. 24; the orig. sense being 'crop.' + Du, herfst, autumn. + Icel. haust, autumn (contracted form). + Dan. köst, harvest, crop (contr. form). + Swed. köst, autumn (contr. form). + G. herbst, autumn, harvest ; M. H. G. herbest, O. H. G. herpist. B. All with a suffix -as-ta from Teut, base harf-, equivalent to the base saps- of the cognate Gk. sapsos, fruit. - √ KARP, to seize; as in Lat. carpere, to pluck, gather. γ. This root is perhaps related to √ SKARP, to cut; see Sharp. Der. harvest, verb ; harvest-er ; harvest-home, I Hen. IV, i. 3. 35 ; harvest-man, Cor. i. 3. 39; harvest-moon, harvest-time. From the same root, ex-cerpl.

HASH, a dish of meat cut into small slices. (F., -G.) 'Hask, cold meat cut into slices and heated again with spice, &c.;' Kersey, ed. 1715. An abbreviation of an older form hackey or hackee, in Cotgrave. - O. F. hachis, 'a hachey, or hachee; a sliced gallimaufrey or minced meat; Cot. = O. F. kacker, 'to hack, shread, slice; 'id. -G. kacken, to hack; cognate with E. kack. See Hack. ¶ In E., the sb. is older than the vb. to kask; conversely in F. Der.

Ask. vb. ; and see hatch (3). HASP, a clasp. (E.) M. E. haspe, Chaucer, C. T. 3470. 'Hespe of a dore, pessulum; Prompt. Parv. [Haspe stands for hapse, by the same change as in clasp from M. E. clapsen, aspen from A. S. apr.]-A. S. hapse, as a gloss to sera (a bolt, bar), in Wright's Vocab. i. 81, col. 1. + Icel. hespa. + Dan. haspe, a hasp, reel. + Swed. haspe, a hasp. + G. kaspe, a hasp; kaspel, a staple, reel, windlass; cf. Du. kaspel, a windlass, reel.  $\beta$ . All from an old Teut. base HAP-SA, in which the suffix may be compared with that in A. S. rédel-s (for rádel-sa), a riddle. The orig. sense 'that which fits;' cf. A. S. gehap, fit; and see Hap.

HASSOCK, a stuffed mat for kneeling on in church. (C.) 'Hassock, a straw-cushion us'd to kneel upon;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Also in Phillips, New World of Words, 1706, in the same sense; see Trench, Select Glossary. So called from the coarse grass of which it was made; M. E. kassok. 'Hassok, ulphus;' Prompt. Parv.; see Way's Note, showing the word to be in use A. D. 1147; whilst in 1465 there is mention of 'segges, soddes, et hassokes' sedges, sods, and hassocks. Forby explains Norfolk kassock as 'coarse grass, which grows in rank tufts on boggy ground.'  $\beta$ . In this case, the suffix answers rather to W. -gr than to the usual E. dimin. suffix; the W. og being used to form adjectives, as in goludog, wealthy, from golud, wealth. The orig. signification of the word is 'sedg-y,' the form being adjectival. - W. hesg-og, sedgy, from Aesg, s. pl. sedges ; cf. W. Aesgyn, a sieve, Aesor, a hassock, pad. Cf. also Corn. Aescen, a bulrush, sedge, reed; and (since the W. initial & stands frequently for s) also Irish seisg, a sedge, bog-reed. Thus Aasock (= sedg - y) is co-radicate with sedge. See Sedge. HASTATE, shaped like the head of a halberd. (Lat.) Modern, and botanical. – Lat. Aastatus, spear-like, formed from Aasta, a spear, which is co-radicate with E. goad. See Goad.

HASTE, HASTEN, to go speedily; Haste, speed. (Scand.) The form kasten appears to be nothing more than the old infin. mood of the verb; the pt. t. and pp. hastened (or hastned) do not occur in early authors; perhaps the earliest example is that of the pp. Mastemat in Spenser, Shep. Kal., May, 152. Strictly speaking, the form kaste (pt. t. hasted) is much to be preferred, and is commoner than hasten both in Shak. and in the A. V. of the Bible. M. E. hasten (pt. t. hastede), where the n is merely the sign of the infin. mood, and was readily dropped. Thus Gower has: 'Cupide ... Seih [saw] Phebus Aasten him so sore, And, for he shulde him haste more, . A dart throughout his hert he caste; C. A. i. 336. 'To hasten hem;' Chaucer, C. T. 8854. 'But hasteth yow' = make haste, id. 17383. "He hasteth wel that wysly can abyde; and in wikked haste is no profit; id., Six-text, B. 2244. B. It is hard to say whether the vb. or sb. first came into use in English; perhaps the earliest example is in the phr. in Aast = in haste; K. Alisaunder, 3264. Neither are found in A. S. = O. Swed. Aasta, to haste; Aast, haste (lhre); Dan. haste, to haste ; hast, haste. + O. Fries. hast, haste. + Du. haasten, to haste ; haast, haste. + G. hasten, to haste ; hast, haste (not perhaps old in G.). y. The base appears to be HAS, corresponding to KAS, whence Skt. cae (for eas), to jump, bound along (Bentey). old in G.).  $\beta_i$  or tr. + Dan. Aiort. + Swed. Ajort. + G. Airsch. See HARE. The suffix ta is prob. used to form a sb., as in trust  $\beta$ . These answer to a European type HERUTA  $\otimes$  (base trans-ta); and the verb was formed from the sb. Der. Aast(from the sb.; cf. Swed. and Dan. hastig, Du. haastig, O. Fries. HATRED, extreme dislike. (E.) M. E. hatred, P. Plowman, B. Aastick. Aastig), Will. of Palerne, 475; kast-i-ly, kast-i-ness. (B) We also find M. E: kastif, hasty, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, iii, 520; this is from O. F. hastif, adj. formed from the O. F. haste (mod. F. hate), haste, which was borrowed from the Teutonic.

HAT, a covering for the head. (E.) M. E. kat, Chancer, C. T. 473, 1390. – A. S. kat; 'Galerus, vel pileus, fellen kat; 'Wright's Vocab. i. 22, col. 1; 'Calamanca, kat; 'id. i. 41, col. 1. + Icel. kattr. + Swed. katt. + Dan. kat. B. Prob. connected with Lat. cassis (base cad), a helmet, from the base KAD, shortened form of SKAD, to cover; cf. Skt. chhad, to cover. ¶ Not to be confused with G. Aut, which is cognate with E. hood. Der. hall-er, hat-band (Minsheu).

HATCH (1), a half-door, wicket. (E.) A word presenting some difficulty. 'Leap the batch;' King Lear, iii. 6, 76. It is the same as North of E. Aeck, an enclosure of open-work, of slender bars of wood, a hay-rack, the bolt or bar of a door: a heck-door is a door only partly panelled, the rest being latticed (Halliwell); cf. Lowland Sc. hack or heck, a rack for cattle, a frame for cheeses (Jamieson). It seems to have been specially used of anything made with crossbars of wood. Palsgrave has : 'Hatche of a door, hecg.' In a 15thcent. vocabulary we find: 'Hoc osticulum, a hatche;' Wright's Vocab. i. 201, col. 1. [The form hatch is prob. E.; the form heck is Scand.]-A. S. Aaca, the bolt of a door, a bar; a rare word, found in a gloss (Leo); whence probably a form hacee, for which the dictionaries give no reference. + Du. Ack, a fence, rail, gate. + Swed. Adek, a coop, a rack. + Dan. Ack, Ackke, a rack; cf. Ackkebuur, a breed- $\beta$ . All, probably, from the same source as hook; the ing-cage. name seems to have been given to various contrivances made of light fails or bars fastened or 'hooked' together; cf. prov. E. katek, to fasten (Halliwell); and see Shak. Per. iv. 2. 37. But the word remains obscure. See note to Hatch (2), and see Hook. Der. hatch (2), q. v., hatch-es, q. v.; also hatch-way. [†] HATCH (2), to produce a brood by incubation. (E.) M. E. hae-chen. 'This brid [this bird] . . hopith for to hacche;' Richard the Redeles, Pass. iii. I. 44. Not found earlier, but formed from the sb. Aatch discussed above.  $\beta$ . To hatch birds is to produce them under a hatch or coop. Thus, from Swed. häck, a coop, is formed the verb häcka, to hatch, to breed; and from Dan. hakke, a rack, is formed hakkebuur, a breeding-cage (lit. a hatch-bower), and hakkefugl, a breeder (lit. a hatch-fowl). In German, we have hecken, to hatch, from the sb. kecke, a breeding-cage. ¶ The G. kecke also means a hedge, but its connection with E. kedge is not at all certain; the words for hatch and hedge seem to have been confused, though probably from different sources. Hence much of the difficulty of tracing the word clearly. HATCH (3), to shade by minute lines, crossing each other, in drawing and engraving.  $(F_{n}-G_{n})$  'Hatch, to draw small strokes with a pen;' Kersey, ed. 1715. A certain kind of ornamentation on a sword-hilt was called halching; hence 'halched in silver,' Shak. Troil. i. 3. 65; 'my sword well halcht;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Bonduca, ii. 2. - F. hacher, 'to hack, ... also to hatch a hilt;' Cot. -G. hacken, to cut; cognate with E. hack. See Hack (1), and Hash. Der. hatch-ing (perhaps sometimes confused with etching); and see hatch-et.

HATCHES, a frame of cross-bars laid over an opening in a ship's deck. (E.) M. E. hacehes, Chaucer, Good Women, 648; Will. of Palerne, 2770. Merely the pl. of Hatch (1), q. v. Der. hatch-way, fairme, 2770. Merely the pl. of Haton (1), q. V. Der. nath-way, from the sing. hatch. HATCHET, a small axe. (F.,-G.) M. E. hachet. 'Axe other [or] katchet;' P. Plowman, B. iii. 304.-F. hachete, 'a hatchet, or small axe;' Cot. Dimin. of F. hache, 'an axe;' id.-F. hacher, to hack; see Hatch (3). HATCHMENT, the escutcheon of a deceased person, publicly dimension (F. 1). In Shak Hamlet in a case. Well known to displayed. (F., -L.) In Shak. Hamlet, iv. 5. 314. Well known to be a corruption of atch ment, the shortened form of atchievement (mod. E. achievement), the heraldic name for the same thing. Dryden uses atchievement in the true heraldic sense; Palamon and Arcite, 1. 1620.

See Achieve. HATB, extreme dislike, detestation; to detest. (E.) A. The sb. is M. E. hate, Chaucer, C. T. 14506. - A. S. hete, Grein, ii. 39; the mod. E. sb. takes the vowel a from the verb; see further. + Du. haat. + Icel. katr. + Swed. kat. + Dan. kad. + Goth. katis. + G. hass. B. All from a Teutonic base HAT, which Fick (iii, 60) connects with E. Aunt, with the notion of 'pursue.' The form of the root is KAD; cf. W. cas, hateful, casau, to hate. B. The verb is M. E. hatien, katen. 'Alle ydel ich hatye' = all idle men I hate; P. Plowman, B. xiii. 225. - A. S. hatian, Grein, ji. 18. + Du. haten. + Icel. hata. + Swed. hata. + Dan. hade. + Goth. hatjan, hatan. + G. hassen. Der. hat-er ; hate-ful, Chaucer, C. T. 8608, hate-ful-ly, hateful-ness; also hat-red, q. v.; from the same source, heinous, q. v.

iii. 140; fuller form hatreden, Pricke of Conscience, 3363. Not found in A.S.; but the suffix is the A.S. suffix -reden, signifying ' law,' 'mode,' or 'condition,' which appears in freondraden, friendship (Gen. xxxvii. 4), &c.; see Kindrød. And see Hate. HAUBERK, a coat of ringed mail. (F., -O. H. G.)

Orig. armour for the neck, as the name implies. M. E. hauberk, Chaucer, C. T. 2433; hawberk, King Alisaunder, 2372. - O. F. hauberc, older form kalberc (Burguy). - O. H. G. kalsberc, kalsberge, a hauberk. -O. H. G. kals (G. Aals), the neck, cognate with A. S. keals, Lat. collum, the neck; and O. H. G. bergan, perkan, to protect, cognate with A. S. beorgan, to protect, hide. See Collar and Bury. Der. habergeon,

HAUGHTY, proud, arrogant. (F., - L.) a. The spelling with gA is a mistake, as the word is not E.; it is a corruption of M. E. kautein, loud, arrogant. 'I peine me to haue a kautein speech' = I endeavour to speak loudly; Chaucer, C. T. 12264. Myn kauter herte '= my proud heart; Will, of Palerne, 472. β. The corruption arose from the use of the adj. with the E. suffix -ness, producing a form hautein-ness, but generally written hautenesse, and easily misdivided into kauti-ness, 'For heo [she, i. e. Cordelia] was best and fairest, and to hautenesse drow lest ' [drew least]; Rob. of Gloue. p. 29.-O. F. hautain, also spelt haultain by Cotgrave, who explains it by 'hauty, proud, arrogant.' - O. F. haut, formerly halt, high, lofty; with suffix -ain = Lat. -anus. - Lat. altus, high ; see Altitude. Der. haughti-ly; haughti-ness (put for hautin-ness = hautein-ness, as explained above).

HAUL, to hale, draw; see Hale (2). HAULM, HALM, HAUM, the stem or stalk of grain. (E.) Little used, but an excellent E. word. 'The haume is the strawe of the wheat or the rie; 'Tusser's Husbandry, sect. 57, st. 15 (E. D. S.). 'Halm, or stobyl [stubble], Stipula; 'Prompt. Parv. – A. S. kealm; in the compound kealm-streaw, lit. haulm-straw, used to translate Lat. stipulam in Ps. lxxxii. 12, ed. Spelman. + Du. halm, stalk, straw. + Icel. Aáimr. + Dan. and Swed. Aaim. + Russ. soloma, straw. + Lat. culmus, a stalk; calamus, a reed (perhaps borrowed from Gk.)+ Gk. ralapos, a reed; ralaph, a stalk or straw of corn. β. From the same root as Culminate, q.v. HAUNCH, the hip, bend of the thigh. (F., = O. H. G.) M. E.

kanche, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1100; spelt kaunche, Ancren Riwle, 280.-F. kanche, 'the haunch or hip;' Cot. Cf. Span. and Ital. anca, the haunch ; the F. word was also sometimes spelt anche (Cotgrave), the A being unoriginal. -0. H. G. enchá, einchá (according to Diez, also ancha), the leg; allied to 0. H. G. enchía, the ancle, and E. ancle.  $\beta$ . The orig. sense is 'joint' or 'bend;' cf. Gk. áysth, the bent arm ; and see Ancle, Anchor.

HAUNT, to frequent. (F.) M. E. haunten, hanten, to frequent, use, employ. 'That haunteden folie' = who were ever after folly; Chaucer, C. T. 12398. 'We haunten none tauernes' = we frequent no taverns; Pierce Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, 106. 'Haunted Maumetrie' = practised Mohammedanism, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoff, p. 320. The earliest use of the word is in Hali Meidenhad, ed. Cockayne, p. 25, l. 15. -0. F. hanter, 'to haunt, frequent, resort unto;' Cot.  $\beta$ . Origin unknown, and much disputed. Suggestions are: (1) Icel. heimta, lit. to fetch home, to draw, claim, recover; but neither form nor sense suits: (2) Bret. hent, a path: (3) a nasalised form of Lat. Aabitare, to dwell (Littré): (4) a Low Lat. form ambitare (not found), to go about, from Lat. ambitus, a going about (Scheler). The last seems to me the most likely; there are many such formations in F. Der. haunt, sb.

HAUTBOY, a kind of musical instrument. (F., -L. and Scand.) Also called obor, the Ital. name. In Shak. 2 Hen. IV, iii. 2. 351; where the old edd. have hoeboy. Spelt hau'boy (sic) in Ben Jonson, tr. of Horace's Art of Poetry, where the Lat. has tibia; Ars Poet. 202. Spelt Aobois, Aoboy in Corgrave. - O. F. haultbois (or hautbois), 'a hobois, or hoboy;' Cot. - O. F. hault, later haut, high, from Lat. altus, high; and F. bois = Low Lat. boscus, a bush. See Altitude and Bush. Thus the lit. sense is 'high wood;' the kautboy being a and Bush. Thus the lit. sense is 'high wood;' the hautboy being a wooden instrument of a high tone. Doublet, oboe. HAVE, to possess, hold. (E.) M. E. hauen, pt. t. hadde, pp. had (common). - A. S. habban, pt. t. hafde, pp. gehafd. + Du. hebben. + Icel. hafa. + Swed. hafva. + Dan. have. + Goth. haban. + G. haben.  $\beta$ . All from the Teut. base HAB; Fick, iii. 63. Allied to Lat. captere, to seize, hold; Gk.  $\kappa \omega \pi \eta$ , a handle; W. caffael, to get (Rhys).  $-\sqrt{KAP}$ , to seize, hold; Fick, i. 518. Der. haft, q. v.; perhaps have a v. hawk a v. from the same prot. cath-acioux, and numerous haven, q. v., hawk, q. v.; from the same root, cap-acious, and numerous other words; see Capacious.

HAVEN, an inlet of the sea, harbour, port. (E.) M. E. kauen (with u for v), Chaucer, C. T. 409; spelt hauene, Layamon, 8566. – A. S. hafene (acc. hafenan), A. S. Chron. an. 1031. + Du. haven. + Icel. höfn. + Dan. havn. + Swed. hamn. + G. hafen. β. Allied B. Allied to A.S. haf (Grein, ii. 19), Icel. and Swed. haf, Dan. hav, the open Fretailer (Sewel). sea, main; we also find O. H. G. haba in the sense, not only of 'possessions,' but of 'the sea.'  $\gamma$ . From the Teut. base HAB, Y. From the Teut. base HAB. (A. S. Aabban, Goth. Aaban), to have, hold; the haven being that which contains ships, and the deep sea being capacious or all-containing. See Have. HAVERSACK, a soldier's bag for provisions.  $(F_{.,-}G_{.})$  Lit. 'oat-bag' or 'oat-sack.' A late importation. It occurs in Smollett's tr. of Gil Blas, b. ii. c. 8  $(R_{.}) = F_{.}$  kavresac, a haversack, knapsack (Hamilton).-G. habersack, hafersack, a sack for oats.-G. haber, hafer, oats (cognate with Icel. hafr, Du. haver, Swed. hafre, Dan. haver, oats), from M. H. G. habere, O. H. G. habaro, oats; and G.

HAVOC, general waste, destruction. (E.) 'Cry kavoc, 'Shak. Cor. iii. 1. 275; Jul. Czes. iii. 1. 273; 'cries on kavoc,' Haml. v. 2. 375. 'Pell-mell, kavoc, and confusion;' 1 Hen. IV, v. 1. 82. Not in early use (in this sense at least). Of uncertain origin.  $\beta$ . The best etymology seems to be that which supposes it to be the A.S. B. The hafoe, a hawk (see Hawk); the chief difficulty being in the late preservation of an A.S. form, esp. when the form hawk was in general use. But it may have been handed down in a popular proverb, without remembrance of the meaning; the phrase 'cry havoc !' (like Skelton's ' ware the hawke') seems to have been a popular exclamation, and has been supposed to have been orig. a term in hawking. The form havek (havek) in the sense of 'hawk' occurs as late as about A. D. 1200, in Layamon, 3258. y. Others derive it from W. hafoe, havoc, destruction; this would, of course, be right, were it not for the probability that this W. word is but the E. word borrowed; a pro-bability which is strengthened by observing that there is a true W. word hafoe, meaning 'abundant,' or 'common,' allied to W. hafug, abundance. Der. havoe, verb (rare), Hen. V, i. 2. 173, where a cat is said ' to tear and Anvoc more than she can eat."

HAW, a hedge; a berry of the haw-thorn. (E.) The sense of 'inclosure' or 'hedge' is the orig. one. In the sense of 'berry,' the word is really a short form for haw-berry or hawthorn-berry; still it is of early use in this transferred sense. M. E. hawe. Chaucer uses have, lit. a haw-berry, to signify anything of no value, C. T. 624r; but he also has it in the orig. sense. 'And eke ther was a polkat in his kaue' = there was a polecat in his yard; C. T. 12789. – A. S. haga, an enclosure, yard, house, Grein, ii. 5; whence the usual change to later hage, have, have, by rule. + Icel. hagi, a hedged field, a pasture. + Swed. kage, an enclosed pasture-ground. + Dan. have [for hage], a garden. + Du. haag, a hedge; whence 's Gravenhage, i. e. the count's garden, the place called by us the Hague. + G. hag, a fence, hedge; whence the deriv. kagen, a grove, now shortened to hain.  $\beta$ . All from the Teut. base HAG, to surround.  $-\checkmark$  KAK, to surround; cf. Skt. kach, kańch, to bind, kakshya, a girdle, an enclosed court; from the same root is Lat. cingere, to surround, and E. cincture. See Cincture. Der. haw-haw, a sunk fence, a word formed by reduplication; haw-finch; haw-thorn = A. S. hagborn, which occurs as a gloss to alba spina, Wright's Vocab. i. 33, col. 2. Also hedge, q. v.

HAWK (1), a bird of prey. (E.) M. E. hauk, Chaucer, C. T. 4132, 5997. Earlier hauek (= hauek), Layamon, 3258. – A. S. hafoe, more commonly heafoc, Grein, ii. 42. + Du. havie. + Icel. haukr. + Swed. kök. + Dan. kög. + G. kabicht, O. H. G. kapuk. B. All probably from the Teut. base HAB, to seize, hold; see Have, and cf. Lat. capere. Der. kawk, verb, M. E. kauken, Chaucer, C. T. 7957; hawk-er.

HAWK (2), to carry about for sale. (O. Low G.) Not in early use. Rich. quotes from Swift, A Friendly Apology, the line: 'To hear his praises hawk'd about.' The verb is a mere development from the sb. hawker, which is an older word. See Hawker.

HAWK (3), to force up phlegm from the throat, to clear the throat. (W.) 'Without handhing or spitting;' As You Like It, v. 3. 12. - W. Aochi, to throw up phlegm ; koch, the throwing up of phlegm. Apparently an imitative word.

HAWKER, one who carries about goods for sale, a pedlar. (O. Low G.) Minsheu tells us that the word was in use in the reign of Hen. VIII; it is much older, in E., than the verb to hawk. Hawkers, be certain deceitful fellowes, that goe from place to place buying and selling brasse, pewter, and other merchandise, that ought to be vttered in open market . . You finde the word An. 25 Hen. VIII, cap. 6, and An. 33 eiusdem, cap. 4;' Minshen. 'Those people which go up and down the streets crying newsbooks and selling them by retail, are also called Hawkers; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1074. The earliest trace of the word is in P. Plowman, B. v. 227, where the trade of the pedlar is denoted by hokkerye, spelt also hukkerye and hukrie; shewing that the base of the word is the same as that of the B. A word introduced from the Netherlands: cf. word huck ter.

We Gind also Dan. köher, a chandler, huckster, rade d also Dan. köher, a chandler, huckster, retailer (Sewel). , trade d also Dan. köher, a chandler, huckster, köhere, a hawker's heese, köhre, to hawk; Swed. köheri, higgling, kökere, a hawker<sup>5</sup>, cheese<sup>4</sup>, kökere, to hawk; Swed. kökeri, higgling, kökare, a chandler, cheese<sup>4</sup> monger. Also G. köcker, a retailer of gooda. See further under Huckster.

HAWSER, HALSER, a small cable. (Scand.) 'Honoser, a three-stroud [three-strand?] rope, or small cable. Honoser, two large round holes in a ship under the beak, through which the cables pass when the ship lies at anchor;' Kersey, ed. 1715. In Sherwood's index to Cotgrave, halser means a tow-rope by which boats are drawn along. In Grafton's Chron., Rich. III, an. 3, we read : 'He wayed up his ancors and kalsed up his sayles.' Like many sea-terms, it is of Scand. origin. Both the sb. kauser and the verb to halse are formed from halse, sb. the orig. form of hawse, used as a seaterm. - Icel. kals, kals, the neck; also (as a sea-term), part of the bow of a ship or boat; also, the front sheet of a sail, the tack of a sail, the end of a rope; whence the verb Adlsa, to clew up a sail. + Dan. kals, the neck; (as a sea-term) tack; ligge med styrbords halse. to be on the starboard tack ; halser I raise tacks and sheets !+ Swed. hals, neck, tack. And cf. Du. hals, neck; halsklamp, a hawse-hole.  $\beta$  Thus the orig. sense is neck, then front of the bow of a ship; then a hole in the front of the bow; whence kalser = a rope passing through such a hole; also halse, to clew up a sail, from the Icel. use of the derived verb. I Not to be confused with hale, haul, hoist. As to tals, see Hauberk. But see Addenda. [+] or hoise.

HAWTHORN, from haw and thorn; see Haw.

HAWTHORN, from haw and thorn; see Haw. HAY, grass cut and didd. (E.) Formerly used also of uncut growing grass. M. E. hey, hay; Chaucer, C. T. 16963. 'Vpon grene hey '= on green grass; Wyclif, Mark, vi. 39. – A. S. hig, grass, hay; 'ofer bæt gréne hig '= on the green grass; Mark, vi. 39. + Du. hooi. + Icel. hey. + Dan. and Swed. ho. + Goth. havei, grass. + G. haw. M. H. G. howwe, O. H. G. hewi, hay: B. The true sense is 'cut grass; ' the sense of 'growing grass' being occasional. The common Teutonic type is HAUVA, from the base HAU of the E. wash to here is a to cut. Wick iii cr, See Haw. Dar hawcook verb to hew, i. e. to cut ; Fick, iii. 57. See How. Der. hay-cock, hay-maker. (But not M. E. hay-ward, where hay = hedge.)

HAZARD, chance, risk. (F., -Span, -Arab., -)ers.) M.E. Assard, the name of a game of chance, generally played with dice; Chaucer, C. T. 12525. Earlier, in Havelok, 2326. - F. Aasard, 'hazard, adventure;' Cot. The orig. sense was certainly 'a game at dice' (Littré). β. We find also Span. azar, an unforessen accident, hazard, of which the orig. sense must have been 'a die; O. Ital. zara, 'a game at dice called hazard, also a hazard or a nicke at dice;' Florio. It is plain that F. ha-, Span. a-, answers to the Arab. article al, turned into az by assimilation. Thus the F. word is from Span., and the Span. from Arab. al zár, the die, a word only found in the vulgar speech; see Devic's Supplement to Littré.-Pers. zár, a die; Zenker. Dor. hazard, verb, hazard-ous.

HAZE, vapour, mist. (Scand.?) Not in early use. The earliest trace of it appears to be in Ray's Collection of Northern-English Words, 1691 (1st. ed. 1674). He gives: 'it kazes, it misles, or rains small rain.' As a sb., it is used by Burke. On a Regicide Peace, let. 4 (R.) 'Hazy weather' is in Dampier's Voyages, ed. 1684 (K.) Being a North-Country word, it is probably of Scand. word certainly related to A.S. hasu, heasu, used to signify a dark gray colour, esp. the colour of a wolf or eagle; whence also have fig, of a gray colour; see Grein, ii. 14, 15. If this be right, the orig. sense was 'gray,' hence dull, as applied to the weather; and the adj. hazy answers to A.S. haswig-, only found in the compound haswigfevere, having gray feathers (Grein). ¶ Mahn suggests the Breton aézen, a vapour, warm wind. Der. haz-y, haz-i-ness.

HAZEL, the name of a tree or shrub. (E.) M. E. kasel. 'The Acsel and the has-borne' [haw-thorn]; Gawayne and the Grene Knight, ed. Morris, 744. – A. S. Azsel. 'Corilus, hæsel. Saginus, hwit hæsel;' Wright's Vocab. i. 32, col. 1. 'Abellanz, hæsl, vel hæsel-hnutu' [hazel-nut]; id. 3., col. 2. + Du. kazelaar. + Icel. kasl, keeli. + Dan. and Swed. kasel. + G. kasel; O. H. G. kasala. + Lat. corving (for cosulus). + W. coll (Rhys).  $\beta$ . All from the base KASALA, root KAS; but the orig. meaning is unknown. Der. hazel-nut = A.S.

Acselhavit, as above; hazel-twig, Tam. Shrew, ii. 255. HE, pronoun of the third person. (E.) M. E. he; common. – A. S. he; declined as follows. Mase. sing. nom. he; gen. his; dat. kim; acc. hine. Fem. sing. nom. ked; gen. and dat. Aire; acc. Al. Newt. sing. nom. and acc. hit; gen. his; dat. him. Plural (for all genders); nom. and acc. hi, hig; gen. hira, heora; dat. him, heom. + Du. hij. + Icel. hann + Dan. and Swed. han. β. The E. and A. S. forms are not connected with the Gothic third personal pronoun is (=G. er), but with the Goth. demonstrative pronoun his, this one, only found in the masc. dat. himma, masc. acc. hina, neut. acc. hita, in the singular number. Cf. Gk. inciros, neiros, that one, from a base O. Du. heukeren, to sell by retail, to huckster; heukelaar, a huckster,  $\frac{1}{4}$  KI, related to the pronominal base KA. The latter base has an interrogative force; cf. Skt. kas, who, cognate with E. who. See  $\stackrel{\bullet}{\to}$  HEARSE, a carriage in which the dead are carried to the grave. Who. (F., -L.) Much changed in meaning. M. E. herse, herce, First

HEAD, the uppermost part of the body. (E.) M. E. Aed, Aeed; earlier Aeued (= Aeued), from which it is contracted. 'His hed was balled' [bald]; Chaucer, C. T. 198. In P. Plowman, B. xvii. 70, it is spelt Aed; but in the corresponding passage in C. xx. 70, the various readings are hede, heed, heede. - A S. heofod, Mark, xvi. 24, where the latest MS. has heafed. + Du. hoofd. + Icel. höfuh. + Dan. howed. + Swed. hufwud. + Goth. haubith. + G. haupt, O. H. G. houbit. + Lat. caput. B. Further allied to Gk. xeepath, the head; Skt. kapala, the skull. From  $\checkmark$  KAP, but it is uncertain in what sense; perhaps 'to contain;' see Have. Der. head, vb.; head-ache, -band (Isa, iii. 20), -dress. -gear, -land, -less, -piece (K. Lear, iii. 2. 26), -guarters, -stall (Tam. Shrew, iii. 2. 58), -stone (Zech. iv. 7), -tire (t Esdras. iii. 6), -way, -wind. Also head-ing, a late word; head-s-man (All's Well, iv. 3. 342); head-y (a Tim. iii. 4), head-iy, head-arness. Also head-long, q. v. Doublet, chief, q. v. HEADLONG, rashly; rash. (E.) Now often used as an adj.

HEADLONG, rashly; rash. (E.) Now often used as an adj., but orig. an adv. M. E. kedling, keedling, kedlynges, kewelynge; Wyclif, Deut. xxii. 8; Judg. v. 22; Matt. viii. 32; Luke, viii. 33. 'Heore hors kedlyng mette' = their horses met head to head; King Alisaunder, 2261. The suffix is adverbial, answering to the A.S. suffix -lunga, which occurs in grund-lunga, from the ground. 'Funditus, grundlunga;' Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Somner (16:9); p. 42, I. 4. In this suffix, the l is a mere insertion; the common form being -unga is an adv. form, made from the common noun-suffix -ung, preserved abundantly in mod. E. in the form -ing, as in the word learn-ing.

HEAL, to make whole. (E.) M. E. helen. 'For he with it coude bothe hele and dere;' i. e. heal and harm; Chaucer, C. T. 10554. – A. S. helan, to make whole; very common in the pres. part. Adlend = the healing one, saviour, as a translation of Jesus. Regularly formed from A.S. hull, whole; see Whole. + Du. heelen, from heel, whole. + Icel. heila, from heell, hale; see Hale. + Dan. hele, from heel, hale. + Swed. hela, from heel, + G. heilan, from heel. from heel. from heel. from heel. from heel.

N; ii. 396, l. 21. Formed from A. S. hélt, whole; hélan, to heal. The suffix -8 denotes condition, like Lat. -tas. ¶ Not a very common word in old writers; the more usual form is M. E. hele (P. Plowman, C. vi, 7, 10). from A S. hélu, Grein, ii. 22. Der. health-y, health-i-ly, health-i-ness; health-ful, health-ful-ly, health-fulwers; health-some, Romeo, iv. 3, 34.

HEAP, a pile of things thrown together. (E.) M. E. Aeep (dat. Aeepe, Aspe), Chaucer, C. T. 577; P. Plowman, B. vi. 190. – A. S. Aeeje, a heap, crowd, multitude, Grein, ii, 56. + Du. Aoop. + Icel. Aúpr. + Dan. Aob. + Swed. Aop. + G. Aaufe, O. H. G. Aúfo. + Russ. Arapa, a heap, crowd, group. + Lithuanian kaupas, a heap (Fick, iii. 77).  $\beta$ . All from  $\checkmark$  KUP, which is perhaps the same as Skt. Awa, to be excited; the orig. sense seems to be 'tumult;' hence, a swaying crowd, confused multitude, which is the usual sense in M. E. Der. Acap, vb., A. S. Aedjian. Lu. vi. 38. Doublet, hope (1).

Der. kap, vb., A.S. kedfian. Lu. vi. 38. Doublet, hope (2). HEAR, to perceive by the ear. (E.) M. E. keren (sometimes kwyre), pt. t. kerde, pp. kerd; Chaucer, C. T. 860, 13448, 1577.– A.S. kýran, héran, pt. t. kýrde, pp. gekýred; Grein, ii. 132. + Du. kooren. + Icel. kyra. + Dan. köre. + Swed. köra. + Goth. hansjan. + G. kören, O. H. G. hórjan.  $\beta$ . Of uncertain origin; it seems best to connect Gk. davósen, to hear, with Lat. causere, to beware, Skt. kavis, a wise man, and the E. show (all from  $\checkmark$  SKAW), rather than with the Goth. kausjan, E. kear. See Curtius, i. 186.  $\gamma$ . It does not seem possible so to ignore the initial A as to connect it with the word ear, though there is a remarkable similarity in form between Goth. kausjan to hear, and Goth. auso, the ear. The latter, however, is allied to Lat. audire, which is far removed from E. kear.

See Ear. Der. hear-er, kear-ing, hear-a, q. v., hearken, q. v. HEARKEIN, to listen to. (E.) M. E. herken, Chaucer, C. T. 1528. Another form was herknen, id. C. T. 2210. Only the latter is found in A. S. - A. S. hyrenian (sometimes heorenian), Grein, ii. 133. Evidently an extended form from hyran, to hear. + O. Du. horeken, horken, harchen, to hearken, listen (Oudemans); from Du. Aboren, to hear. + G. horeken, to hearken, listen, from O. H. G. horjan (G. hören) to hear. See Hear.

• HEARSAY, a saying heard, a rumour. (E.) From hear and say. 'I speake unto you since I came into this country by hearesay. For I heard say that there were some homely theeves,' &c.: Bp. Latimer, Ser. on the Gospel for St. Andrew's Day (R.) The verb say, being the latter of two verbs, is in the infin. mood, as in A. S. Ful ofte time I have herd sain; 'Gower, C. A. i. 367. 'He... seegan hýrde'= he heard say, Beowulf, ed. Grein, 875.

(F., -L.) Much changed in meaning. M. E. herse, herce. First (perhaps) used by Chaucer: 'Adown I fell when I saw the herse;' Complaint to Pity, st. 3. 'Heerce on a dede corce (herce vpon dede corcys), Pirama, piramis;' Prompt. Parv, p. 236. Mr. Way's note says : 'This term is derived from a sort of pyramidal candlestick, or frame for supporting lights, called hercia or herpica, from its resemblance in form to a harrow, of which mention occurs as early as the xiith century. It was not, at first, exclusively a part of funeral display, but was used in the solemn services of the holy week ... Chaucer appears to use the term herse to denote the decorated bier, or funeral pageant, and not exclusively the illumination. which was a part thereof; and towards the 16th century, it had such a general signification alone. Hardyng describes the honours falsely bestowed upon the remains of Richard II. when cloths of gold were offered "upon his hers" by the king and lords; '&c. See the whole note, which is excellent. The changes of sense are (1) a harrow. (2) a triangular frame for lights in a church service, (3) a frame for lights at a funeral, (4) a funeral pageant, (5) a frame on which a body was laid, (6) a carriage for a dead body; the older senses being quite forgotten.  $\Rightarrow$ O. F. herce, 'a harrow, also, a kind of portcullis, that's stuck, as a harrow, full of sharp, strong, and outstanding iron pins [which leads up to the sense of a frame for holding candles]; Cot. Mod. F. keree, Ital. erpice, a harrow. - Lat. hirpicem, acc. of hirpez, a harrow, also ¶ A remarkable use of the word is in Berners' tr. spelt irpex. of Froissart, cap. cxxx, where it is said that, at the battle of Crecy, 'the archers ther stode in maner of a herse,' i. e. drawn up in a triangular form, the old F. harrow being so shaped. See Specimens of English, ed. Skeat, p. 160.

HEART, the organ of the body that circulates the blood. (E.) M. E. herte, properly dissyllabic. 'That dwelled in his hertë sike and sore, Gan faillen, when the hertë feltë deth ;' Chaucer, C. G. herzá. + Irish cridhe. + Russ. serdise. + Lat. cor (crude form cordi·). + Gk. stip, kapôia. + Skt. Atid, Atidaya (probably corrupt forms for crid, gridaya).  $\beta$ . The Gk. kapôia is also spelt kpaðia (Doric) and kpaðin (Ionic); this is connected with spaðáeur, spaðaiveur, to quiver, shales: the orig. sense being that which quivers, shakes, or beats. -  $\sqrt{KARD}$ . to swing about, hop, leap; cf. Skt. hurd, to hop, jump; Fick, i. 47; Benfey, 197. Dor. heart-ache, Hamlet, iii. 1. 62; heart-blood = M. E. herte blod, Havelok, 1819; L. L. L. i. 1. 280; heart-ease, heart-m, 3 Hen. HEARTH, the floor in a chimney on which the fire is made. (E.) M. E. Aerth, herthe; a rare word. 'Herthe, where fyre ys made;' Prompt. Parv. – A. S. heorð, as a gloss to foculare; Wright's Vocab. i. 27, col. I. + Du. Anard. + Swed. Närd, the hearth of a forge, a forge. + G. herd, a hearth; O. H. G. hert, ground, hearth.  $\beta$ . Perhaps orig. 'a fireplace;' cf. Goth. haurja, burning coals, Lithuan. hurti, to heat an oven (Nesselmann). Der. hearth-stone (in late use). HEART'S-EASE, a pansy. (E.) 'Hearts-ease, or Pansey, an herb;' Kersey, cd. 1715. Lit. ease of heart, i.e. pleasure-giving. HEARTY, cordial, encouraging. (E.) M. E. herty, 'Herty, HEARTY, cordial, encouraging. (E.) M. E. herty, cordialis; Prompt. Parv. An accommodation of the older M. E., hertly. '3e han hertely hate to oure hole peple' = ye have hearty hate against our whole people; Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Skeat, 961. Thus the orig. sense was heart-like. Der. hearti-ly, hearti-ness. HEAT, great warmth. (E.) M. E. hete, Chaucer, C. T. 16876.

HEAT, great warmth. (E.) M. E. Aete, Chaucer, C. T. 16876. -A.S. hátu, háto; Grein, ii. 24; formed from the adj. hát, hot. + Dan. hede, heat; from hed, hot. + Swed. hetta, heat; from het, hot.  $\beta$ . The Icel. hiti, heat, Du. hitte, G. hitze, are not precisely parallel forms; but are of a more primitive character. See further under Hot. Der. heat, verb = A.S. hátan, in comp. onhátan, to make hot, formed rather from the adj. hát, hot, than from the sb.; heat-er.

HEATH, wild open country. (E.) M. E. Aethe (but the final e is unoriginal); Chaucer, C. T. 6, 608; spelt Aeth, P. Plowman, B. xv. 451. - A.S. Aétő, Grein, ii. 18. + Du. Aeide. + Icel. Aeidr. + Swed. Aed. + Dan. Asde. + Goth. Aaithi, a waste. + G. Aeide. + W. coed, a wood. + Lat. -cetum in comp. bu-cetum, a pasture for cows; where bu- is from bos, a cow.  $\beta$ . All from an Aryan base KAITA, signifying a pasture, heath, perhaps 'a clear space;' cf. Skt. chitra, visible. Der. Aeath-y; also heath-en, q. v., Aeath-er, q. v. HEATHEN, a pagan, unbeliever. (E.) Simply orig. 'a dweller on a heath;' see Trench, Study of Words; and cf. Lat. paganus, a pagan, lit. a villager, from pagus, a village. The idea is that dwellers in remote districts are among the last to be converted. M. E. Aethen. 'Hetheme is to mene after Aeth and vntiled erthe' = heathen takes its sense from heath and untilled land; P. Plowman, & sense of Gk. Exrap is 'bolding fast;' from the Gk. Exrap, to hold. B. xv. 451.-A. S. Adoen, a heathen; Grein, ii. 18.-A. S. Ado, a heath. See Heath.  $\beta$ . So also Du. heiden, a heathen, from heide, a heath; Icel. heidinn, from heidr; Swed. heden, from hed; Dan. keden, from kede; Goth kaithno, a heathen woman, from haithi; G. heiden, from heide. Dor. heathen-dom = A.S. h&bendom, Grein, ii. 19; heathen-ish, heathen-ith-ly, heathen-ith-ness, heathen-ise, heathen-ism.

HEATHER, HEATH, a small evergreen shrub. (E.) So named from its growing upon heaths. Heather is the Northern form, and appears to be nothing more than heath-er = inhabitant of the heath; the former syllable being shortened by the stress and frequency of use. Compare heath en, in which the suffix is adjectival. See Heath.

HEAVE, to raise, lift or force up. (E.) M. E. Aeuen (with u for v); Chaucer, C. T. 552; earlier form Aebben, Rob. of Glouc., p. 17, 1. 8. – A. S. Aebban, Grein, ii. 28; pt. t. Aof, pp. hafen; orig. a strong verb, whence the later pt. t. hove, occasionally found. + Du. heffen. + Icel. hefja. + Swed. häjva. + Dan. hæve. + Goth. hafjan. + G. heben, O. H. G. heffan. B. Root uncertain; prob. connected with Lat. capere, to seize, and with E. Have, but it is not clear in what manner it is related. Dor. heaver, heaver, from g; also heaver, q. v. HEAVEN, the dwelling-place of the Deity. (E.) M. E. heaven (with u for v), Chaucer, C. T. 2553. – A. S. heofon, hiofon, hefon, Grein, (with u for v), Chaucer, C. T. 2553. – A. S. heofon, hiofon, hefon, Grein, ii. 63. + O. Icel. hifinn (mod. Icel. himinn). + O. Sax. hevan (the v being denoted by a crossed b). β. Of unknown origin; a connection with the verb to keave has been suggested, but has not been ¶ The G. himmel, Goth. himins, heaven (and clearly made out. perhaps the mod. Icel. himinn) are from a different source; probably from the VKAM, to bend; cf. Lat. camera, a vault, chamber. See Fick, iii. 62, 64. Der. heaven ly = A. S. herfonlic; heavenly-minded; heaven-ward, heaven-wards, as to which see Towards.

HEAVY, hard to heave, weighty. (E.) M. E. Acui, heny (with u = y). Chaucer has heny and heuinesse; C. T. 11134, 11140 - A. S. (=heffen, etc. http://www.sec.etc.in.com/action/ is the result of stress of accent. Der. heavi-ly; heavi-ness = A.S.

Heignes (Grein). HEBDOMADAL, weekly. (L., - Gk.) 'As for hebdomadal periods or weeks;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 12 § 11.-Lat. hebdomadalis, belonging to a week. - Lat. hebdomad, stem of height and the second seco hebdomas, a number of seven, a week ; with suffix -alis. - Gk. isouás, a number of seven, a week; cf. EBoopos, seventh - Gk. entá (for everrá), seven; cognate with E. seven. See Seven. HEBREW, a descendant of Abraham. (F., -L., -Gk., -Heb.) In Merch. of Ven. i. 3. 58, 179. - F. hébreu, spelt hébrieu in Cotgrave. -Lat. Hebrœus. -Gk. έβραῖοs. - Heb. ivri, a Hebrew (Gen. xiv. 13); of uncertain origin, but supposed to be applied to Abraham upon his crossing the Euphrates; from Heb. awar, he crossed over. [+] HECATOMB, a sacrifice of a large number of victims. (F.,-L

-Gk.) Lit. a sacrifice of a hundred oxen. In Chapman's tr. of Homer's Iliad, b. i. l. 60. - F. hecatombe; Cot. - Lat. hecatombe. -Gk. ἐκατόμβη, a sacrifice of a hundred oxen; or any large sacrifice. -Gk. ¿naróv, a hundred, put for ¿v-naróv, where ¿v is neut. of els, one,

GK. earlow, a numbred, but for θ- karlow, where ev is neut. or eit, one, and -karlow is cognate with Skt. cata. Lat. centum, A. S. hund; and βoûe, an ox, cognate with E. cow. See Hundred and Cow. HECKLE, HACKLE, HATCHEL, an instrument for dressing flax or hemp. (Du.) M.E. hekele, heckele. 'Hekele, mataxa; Prompt. Parv. 'I keckell (or hetchyll) flaxe;' Palsgrave. 'Hec mataxa, a hekylle;' Wright's Vocab. i. 269, col. 2. – Du. hekel, a heckle. [The word came to us from the Netherlands.] It is the dimin. of Dn head, a hoad, with dimin ends. dimin. of Du. haak, a hook, with dimin. suffix -el and consequent vowel-change. + Dan. hegle, a heckle; from hage, a hook. + Swed. häckla; from hake, a hook. + G. heckel, doublet of häkel, a little hook; from haken, a hook. See Hook. Der. hackle (1), hackle (2), q. v. HECTIC, continual; applied to a fever. (F., -L., -Gk.) 'My fits are like the fever ectick fits ;' Gascoigne, Flowers, The Passion of a Lover, st. 8. Shak, has it as a sb., to mean 'a constitutional fever;' Hamlet, iv. 3. 68. – F. hectique, 'sick of an hectick, or continuall feaver;' Cot .- Low Lat. hecticus*, for which I find no authority, but it was doubtless in use as a medical word.-Gk. Extunios, hectic, consumptive (Galen). - Gk. Efes, a habit of body; lit. a possession. - Gk. Efw, fut. of Exer, to have, possess. - VSAGH, to hold in, stop; whence also Skt. sak, to hold in, stop, bear, undergo, endure, &c. Dor. hectic, sb.

Here ac. Der. necuc, so. HECTOR, a bully; as a verb, to bully, to brag. (Gk.) 'The 'toring kill-cow Hercules;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 1. l. 352. n the Gk. Hector ("Exrap), the celebrated Trojan hero. The lit. pronounce the E. word as hejra, with soft g and no i.

HEGIRA.

See Hectic. HEDGE, a fence round a field, thicket of bushes. (E.) M.E. hegge, Chaucer, C. T. 15224, -A. S. hege; nom. pl. hegas; Ælfric's Hom. ii. 376, ll. 14, 17. Hege comes from a base hag-ia, formed from hag- with suffix -ie, causing vowel-change of hag- to heg-; i.e., it is a secondary form from A.S. haga, a hedge, preserved in mod. E. in the form haw; see Haw. + Du. hegge, heg, a hedge; from haag, In the form haw; see Law, + DL. Negge, Neg, a hedge; from hadg, a hedge, + Icel. Neggr, a kind of tree used in hedges; from hagi, a hedge (see note in Icel. Dict. p. 774). Der. Nedge, verb (Prompt. Parv. p. 232), hedge-bill, hedge-born, I Hen, VI, iv. I. 43; hedge-hog, Temp. ii. 2. 10; hedge-pig, Macb. iv. I. 2; hedge-priest, L. L. L. v. 2, 545; hedge-row, Milton, L'Allegro, 58; hedge-ichool; hedge-sparrow, K. Lear, i. 4. 235; also hedge-r, Milton, Comus, 293. [*]

HEED, to take care, attend to. (E.) M. E. heden, pt. t. hedde; Layamon, 17801; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 1050 (or 1051). - A.S. hedan, to take care; pt. t. hedde; Grein, ii. 29. A weak verb, formed by vowel change from a sb. kod\*, care, not found in A.S. but equivalent to G. Aut, O. H. G. Auota, heed, watchfulness. + O. Friesic huda, koda, to heed, protect; from kude, kode, sb. protection. + O. Sax. kódian, to heed. + Du. kyden, to heed, guard; from koede, guard, care, protection. + G. küten, to protect (O. H. G. kuaten), from G. kut (O. H. G. kuota, protection).  $\beta$ . For the vowel-change, cf. kut (O. H. G. kuoia, protection). β. For the vowel-change, cf. bleed (A. S. blédan) from blood (A. S. blód). γ. There is a disy. There is a distinction to be made between this A.S. hod\*, care (doubtless a fem. sb.), and A. S. hold, a hood (doubtless masc.); just as between Du. hoede, fem. heed, and hoed (usual hood (usual hoede); just as between Dat. hoede, fem. heed, and hoed, masc. hood; and again, between G. hut, fem. heed, and hut, masc. a hat. Yet it seems reasonable to refer them to the same root. The notion of 'guarding' is common to both words. See Hood. Der. heed, sb. = M.E. hede, Chaucer, C. T. 305; heed-ful, heed-ful-ly, heed-ful-ness, heed-less, heed-less-ly, heedless-ness.

HEEL (1), the part of the foot projecting behind. (E.) M. E. keel, keele; Wyclif, John, xiii, 18, - A. S. kela, the heel; Grein, ii. 30. We find also the gloss: 'Calx, hela, hoh nipeweard' - the heel, the lower part of the heel: Wright's Vocab. i. 283, col. 2. + Du. kiel. +  $\beta$ . Probably also the same Icel. hall. + Swed. käl. + Dan. hal. word with Lat. calx, Gk. λάξ (for κλάξ), the heel; Lithuanian kulnis, the heel; Curtius, i. 451. Y. If so, there is probably a further connection with Lat. -cellere, to strike, occurring in the compound percellere, to strike, smite, the form of the root being KAR. Cf. Skt. kal, to drive; Fick, i. 45. ¶ It is proper to note Grein's theory, viz. that A. S. kėla is a contraction for kók-ila, with the usual vowelchange from 6 (followed by i) to e; this would make the word a diminutive of A. S. Aoh, which also means 'the heel,' and is a commoner word. But this seems to set aside the Du. and Scand. forms, and ignores the generally accepted identification of E. heel with Lat. calz. Der. heel-piece.

HEEL (2), to lean over, incline. (E.) a. This is a very corrupt form; the word has lost a final d, and obtained (by compensation) a lengthened vowel. The correct form would be held or hild. M.E. helden, hilden. Palsgrave has: 'I kylde, I leane on the one syde, as a bote or shyp, or any other vessel, is encline do cousié. Sytte fast, I rede [advise] you, for the bote begynneth to kylde.' 'Heldyn, or bowyn, inclino, flecto, deflecto; ' Prompt. Parv. p. 234; see Way's note.  $\beta$ . The M. E. kelden or kilden was frequently transitive, meaning (1) to pour, esp. by tilting a vessel on one side; and (2) intransitively, to heel over, to incline. Wyclif has: 'and whanne the boxe of alabastre was brokun, she helde it [poured it out] on his heed; 'Mark, xiv. 3. - A. S. hyldan, heldan, trans. to tilt, incline, intrans. to bow down; Grein, ii. 131. 'Pu gestadoladest cordan swa fæste, þæt hid on ænige healfe ne helded '= Thou hast founded the earth so fast, that it will not heel over on any side ; Ælfred's Metres, xx. 164. It is a weak verb, formed from the (participial) adjective heald, inclined, bent down, which occurs in wier-heald, bent downwards; Grein, ii. 295. + Icel. halla, to lean sideways, heel over, esp. used of a ship; from hallr, leaning, sloping. + Dan. helde, to slant, slope, lean, tilt (both trans. and intrans.) : from held, an inclination, slope. + Swed. hälla, to tilt, pour. + M. H. G. halden, to bow or incline oneself downwards; from kald, leaning forwards. Root uncertain; perhaps Teut. HAL, to strike, bend; Fick, iii. 71. HEFT, a heaving. (E.) In Shak. Wint. Ta. ii. 1. 45. Formed from the verb to heave just as haft is formed from the verb to have,

¶ Heft also occurs as another spelling of haft. HEGIRA, the flight of Mohammed. (Arab.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'The era of the Hegira dates from the flight of Mohammed from Mecca to Medina, on the night of Thursday, July 15, 622. The era hegins on the 16th; 'Haydn, Dict. of Dates. - Arab. kijrah, separation (here flight); the Mohammedan era; Palmer's Pers. Dict. THence,

HEIFER, a young cow. (E.) M. E. hayfare, helfere. 'Juvenca, hayfare;' Wright's Vocab. i. 177, l. 4; 'Hec juvenca, a helfere;' id. 250, col. 2. – A. S. heihfore. 'Annicula, vel vaccula, heáhfore;' also, 'Altilium, fat heihfore' [a fat heifer]; id. p. 23, col. 2. Lit. 'a high ox,' i. e. a full-grown ox or cow. Compounded of A. S. heih, high; and fear (Northumb. far), an ox. In Matt. xxii. 4, the Lat. tawri is glossed by fearras, fearres in the Wessex versions, and by farras in the Lindisfarme MS. B. The A. S. fear is cognate with M. H. G. pfar, O. H. G. varro, far, an ox, and the Gk. wopus, a heifer. - af PAR. as seen in Lat. barrers to produce: see Parent. [+]

- A PAR, as seen in Lat. parere, to produce; see Parent. [+] HEIGH-HO, an exclamation of weariness. (E.) Also, in Shak., an exclamation of joy; As You Like It, iv. 3. 160; ii. 7, 180, 182, 190; iii. 4. 54. Compounded of Aeigh, a cry to call attention. Temp. i. 1. 6; and Aol interjection. Both words are of natural origin, to express a cry to call attention.

Hero, and the suffixed and the suffixed

HEINOUS, hateful, atrocious. (F., -O. L. G.) Properly trisyllabic. M. E. keinous, kainous; Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 1617. -O. F. Aaīnos, odious; formed with suffix -os (= Lat. osus, mod. F. -eux) from the sb. kaīne, hate. -O. F. kaīr, to hate. From an O. Low G. form, well exemplified in Goth. katyan or katjan (= katian), to hate; not from the cognate O. H. G. kazzon. See Hate. Der. keinous-ly, keinous-ness.

HEIR, one who inherits property. (F., -L.) The word being F., the k is silent. M.E. heire, heyre; better heir, heyr; Chaucer, C. T. 5188; also eyr, Will. of Paleme, 128; eir, Havelok, 410.– O. F. heir, eir (later hoir), an heir.–Lat. heres, an heir; allied to Lat. herus, a master, and Gk.  $\chi e_i \rho$ , the hand. –  $\checkmark$  GHAR, to seize, take; cf. Skt. hri, to convey, take, seize. Curtius, i. 246. ¶ The O. F. heir is either from the nom. heres, or from the old acc. herem, the usual acc. form being heredem. Der. heir-dom, heir-thip, hybrid words, with E. suffixes; heir-apparent, 1 Hen. IV, i. 2. 65; heir-ess, Wint. Ta. v. 1. 10; heir-presumptive, heir-male; also heir-loom, q. v.

HEIR-LOOM, a piece of property which descends to an heir along with his inheritance. (Hybrid; F. and E.) 'Which he an heir-loom left unto the English throne i' Drayton, Polyolbion, s. 11. Compounded of heir (see above); and loom, a piece of property, furniture, the same word with loom in the sense of a weaver's frame. See Loom. [†]

See Loom. [†] HELIACAL, relating to the sun. (L., -Gk.) A term in astronomy, used and defined in Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 13. § 7; 'We term that .. the keliacal [ascension of a star], when a star which before, for the vicinity of the sun, was not visible, being further removed, beginneth to appear.' - Late Lat. keliacus, Latinised from the Gk.  $\frac{3}{4}\lambda ascis$ , belonging to the sun. -Gk.  $\frac{4}{5}\lambda cos$ , the sun; on which difficult word see Curtius; he shews the probability that it is from the  $\frac{1}{2}$  US, to shine, burn, whence also Skt. usk, to burn. Der. keliacal-ly.

HELIOCENTRIC, belonging to the centre of the sun. (Gk.) An astronomical term; in Kersey, ed. 1715. Coined from helio-= Gk.  $\hbar\lambda \omega$ -, crude form of  $\hbar\lambda \omega$ , the sun; and centrie, adj. coined from Gk. storpor, centre. See Heliacal and Centre.  $\beta$ . Similar formations are helio-graphy, equivalent to photography, from  $\gamma p d\phi e \omega$ , to write; helio-latry, sun-worship, from  $\lambda a \tau \rho e i a$ , service, worship; helio-latry. Q. V.

Aelio-trope, q. v. HEILIOTROPE, the name of a flower. (F., -L, -Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. -F. Aeliotrope, 'the herbe turnsole;' Cot. -Lat. heliotropium. -Gk. fluoropium, a heliotrope. -Gk. fluo, crude form of fluo, the sun; and rpow, base connected with rpiweux, to turn; so that the lit. sense is 'sun-turner,' or the flower which turns to the sun. See Heliacal and Trope. HEILIX, a spiral figure. (L., -Gk.) 'Helix, barren or creeping

HELIX, a spiral figure.  $(L_{..} - Gk_{.})$  'Helix, barren or creeping ivy; in anatomy, the outward brim of the ear; in geometry, a spiral figure;' Kersey, ed. 1715. - Lat. Nelix, a volute, spiral; kind of ivy. - Gk.  $\lambda \lambda \xi$ , anything twisted, a tendril. spiral, volute, curl. -Gk.  $\lambda \lambda \sigma \epsilon w$ , to turn round. - Gk. root  $f \epsilon \lambda$ ,  $f a \lambda$ ; equivalent to Lat. wol- in voluere, to roll. -  $\checkmark$  WAR, to turn about.' See Volute, of which helix is, practically, a doublet. Der. helices, the pl. form; helic-al. helic-al-ly.

HEILI., the place of the dead; the abode of evil spirits. (E.) M. E. Aelle; Chaucer, C. T. 1202. – A. S. Ael, Aell, a fem. sb., gen. helle; Grein, ii. 29. + Du. Ael. + Icel. Ael. + Dan. helvede; Swed. Aelvete; from O. Swed. Aelwite, a word borrowed (says Ihre) from A. S. Aelle-wite, lit. hell-torment, in which the latter element is the A. S. wite, torment. + G. Kölle, O. H. G. Aella. + Goth. halja, hell.  $\beta$ . All from the Teutonic base HAL, to hide, whence A. S. Aelan, G. Aeklem, to hide; so that the orig. sense is the hidden or unseen place. The A. S. Aelan is cognate with Lat. celare, to hide, from the base KAL, to hide; whence also Lat. cella, E. cell.  $\gamma$ . It is supposed that the base KAL, older form KAR, is a development from a root SKAR, of which one meaning was 'to cover;' cf. Skt. Ari, to pour out, to cast, to cover. Der. Aell-ich. Aell-ich-ly, hill-ish-ness; hell-fre = A. S. helle-fir, Grein, ii. 31; hell-hound, M. E. helle-hund, Seinte Marherete, ed. Cockayne, p. 6, l. 4 from bottom. HEILLEBOREE, the name of a plant. (F. -L., -Gk.) Also HELLEBORE, the name of a plant. (F., -L., -Gk.) Also spelt ellebore, as frequently in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxv. 5. -O. F. ellebore, 'hellebore;' Cot. Properly kellebore. - Lat. kelleborus. - Gk.  $\lambda\lambda\delta\beta\rho\rhoos$ , the name of the plant. Of uncertain origin; the latter half of the word is probably related to Gk.  $\beta\rho\rho\delta$ , food.

HEILM (1), the instrument by which a ship is steered. (E.) Properly used of the tiller or handle of the rudder. M. E. kelme; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, iii. 149. – A. S. kelma, masc., Ælfred's tr. of Boethius, cap. xxxv. § 4; lib iii. pr. 12. + Icel. kjalm, a rudder. + G. kelm, a helve, handle.  $\beta$ . Closely allied to kaulm, from the likeness between a stalk and a handle. Another kindred word is kelve. See Haulm, Helve, Halberd. Dor. kelms-man; where kelms = kelm's (the possessive case). Also kal-berd.

Actives - See Hattinn, Heives, Hattberd. Der. Autmi-mark; where Actives - Active's (the possessive case). Also Aal-berd. HEILM (1), HEILMET, armour for the head. (E.) M. E. helm, Chaucer, C. T. 2611. – A. S. helm, masc., (1) a protector, (2) a protection, helm; Grein, ii. 31. + Du. helm (also helmet), a helm, casque. + Icel. hjalmr, a helmet. + Dan. hielm. + Swed. hjelm. + G. helm. + Goth. kilms. + Russ. shleme. a helmet. + Lithuan. azalmas. B. All formed with suffix -ma from the base KAL (Teutonic HAL), to cover, protect; the orig. sense being 'covering.' See Hell. Der. helm-ed, Chaucer, C. T. 14376; helm-et, a dimin. form, with suffix -et of F. origin, perhaps borrowed from Du. helmet. HELMINTHOLOGY, the natural history of worms. (Gk.) A

HELMINTHOLOGY, the natural history of worms. (Gk.) A scientific word. Coined from Gk.  $\xi\lambda\mu\nu\nu\theta_{\sigma}$ , crude form of  $\xi\lambda\mu\nu\nu$ , a worm; and  $-\lambda\sigma\gamma\iotaa$ , a discourse, from  $\lambda\epsilon\gamma\epsilon\iota\nu$ , to speak. The Gk.  $\xi\lambda\mu\nu\nu$  is also found as  $\xi\lambda\mu\nu$ , i. e. that which curls about; from the same source as  $\xi\lambda\iota\xi$ , a helix. See Helix. Der. helminthologi-c-al. HELOT, a slave, among the Spartans. (L.,-Gk.). Rare. The HELOT, a slave, among the Spartans. (L., -Gk.) Rare. The pl. helois answers to Lat. pl. Heloiss, borrowed from Gk. Elaures, pl. of Elaur, a helot, bondsman; said to have meant one of the inhabitants of Helos ("Elos), a town of Laconia, who were enslaved under the Spartans. Der. heloi-ism.

HELP, to aid, assist. (E.) M. E. kelpen, pt. t. kalp, pp. holpen; Chaucer, C. T. 1670, 1651, 10244. – A. S. kelpan, pt. t. kealp, pp. holpen; Grein, ii. 33. + Du. helpen. + Icel. hjálpa. + Dan. hielpe. + Swed. hjelpa. + Goth. hilpan. + G. kelfen, O. H. G. kelfan. B. All from the Teutonic base HALP = Aryan KALP, to help; whence also Skt. klip, to be fit for, kalpa, able, able to protect; Lithuan. szelpti, to help. Der. kelp, sb. = A. S. kelpe (Grein); help-er, kelp-ful, help-ful-ness, kelp-less, helf-less-ly, help-less-ness; also kelp-mate, a coinage due to a mistaken notion of the phrase an help meet (Gen. ii. 18, 20); thus Rich. quotes from Sharp's Sermons, vol. iv. ser. 12: 'that she might be an help-mate for the man.'

HELVE, a handle of an axe. (E.) M. E. kelve (- kelve), Wyclif, Deut. xix. 5; spelt kellfe (for helfe), Ormulum, 9948. – A. S. kielf, of which the dat. kielfe occurs in Gregory's Pastoral, ed. Sweet, p. 166, l. 8; also helfe, as in 'Manubrium, hæft and kelfe;' Wright's Vocab. i. 35, col. 1. + O. Du. kelve, a handle; Oudemans. + M. H. G. kalp, a handle. Allied to Helm (1) and Haulm.

HEM (1), the border of a garment. (E.) M. E. kem; pl. kemmes, Wyolif, Matt. xxiii. 5. - A. S. kemm, hem; 'Limbus, stemning vel hem;' Wright's Vocab. i. 36, col. 1. Allied to Friesic kömel, a hem, edge, border, noted by Outzen s. v. kemmel, heaven. Cf. G. kamme, a fence, hedge; Flügel. Also G. kimmel, heaven, a canopy, orig. a vault, allied to Latin camera, a vault, chamber.  $\beta$ . All from the Teut. base HAM, equivalent to Lat. KAM. -  $\checkmark$  KAM, to bend. Thus the orig. sense is a 'bend' or curved border, edge. Der. kem, verb, chiefly in the phr. to kem in (cf. G. kemmen, to stop, check, hem, from kamme, a fence). Shak. Troilus, iv. 5. 193.

HEM (2), a slight cough to call attention. (E.) 'Cry hem! when he should groan,' Much Ado, v. 2 16; cf. As You Like It, i. 3. 19. An imitative word, formed from the sound. Allied to Hum. In Dutch, we also find the same word hem, used in the same way. Der. hem, verb, As You Like It, i. 3. 18.

HEMATITE, an ore of iron. (L.,-Gk.) The sesqui-oxide of giron; so called because of the red colour of the powder (Webster).

c. 16. - Lat. hæmatites; Pliny. - Gk. aluarírys, blood-like. - Gk. aiµar-, stem of aiµa, blood.

HEMI-, half. (Gk.) From a Lat. spelling (hemi-) of the Gk. prefix

 $\mu_{\mu-}$ , signifying half; cognate with Lat. semi-, half. See Somi-. HEMISPHERE, a half sphere, a half globe. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Cotgrave. - O. F. hemisphere, 'a hemisphere;' Cot. - Lat. hemisphærium. - Gk. ήμισφαίριον, a hemisphere. - Gk. ήμι-, prefix, signifying half; and opaipa, a ball, sphere. See Hemi- and Sphere. Der. kemispheri-c-al; Sir T. Browne, Vulg, Errors. b. ii. c. 1. § 13.

HEMISTICH, half a line, in poetry. (L., -Gk.) Not from F. kemistique (Cotgrave), but directly from Lat. kemistichium, by dropping the two latter syllables. Kersey has: Hemistichium, a half verse. Gk.  $\eta\mu\sigma\tau\chi_{100}$ , a half verse. – Gk.  $\eta\mu\sigma\tau\chi_{100}$ , a row, order, line, verse. See Homi- and Distich.

HEMLOCK, a poisonous plant. (E.) M. E. hemlok; spelt humloke, humlok, Wright's Vocab. i. 226, col. 1, 265, col. 1; homelok, id. i. 191, col. 2. - A.S. hemlic, hymlice; Gloss. to Cockayne's Saxon 1. The first syllable is of unknown origin; Strat-Leechdoms. mann connects it with a supposed M.E. hem, malign; but the instances of this word are not quite certain. Still it probably implies something bad; and may be related to G. hammen, to maim; see Hamper. 2. The second syllable is from A.S. leúc, a leek, plant, whence the M. E. loke above, and modern E. -lock. The same ending occurs in char-lock, gar-lic. See Loek. [†] HEMORRHAGE, a great flow of blood. (F., -L., -Gk.) Spelt hemorragy by Ray, On the Creation, pt. 1 (R.) - O. F. hemorrhagie, 'an abundant flux of blood ;' Cot. - Late Lat. hæmorrhagia, Latinised from Gk. aluoppayia, a violent bleeding. - Gk. aluo-, for alua, blood; and pay-, base of phyroun, I break, burst; the lit. sense being 'a bursting out of blood.' Gk. Fpay = E. break; see Break. HEMORRHOIDS, EMERODS, painful tubercles round the margin of the anus from which blood is occasionally discharged.

(F., -L., -Gk.) 'Hemorroides be vaynes in the foundement;' Sir T. Elyot Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 10. - F. hemorrhoïde, 'an issue of blood by the veins of the fundament;' Cot.-Lat. hæmorrhoides, hemorrhoids, pl. of hamorrhois. - Gk. aluoppotões, pl. of aluoppots, adj., liable to flow of blood. - Gk. aluo-, for alua, blood; and here, to flow, cognate with Skt. sru, to flow. Der. hemorrhoid-al. Doublet, emerods.

HEMP, a kind of plant. (L., -Gk. -Skt.) M. E. hemp, Havelok, 782. Contracted from a form henep; the n becoming m by the in-782. Contracted from a form amep; the n occoming m by the influence of the following p = A. S. hence, havnep; Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, i. 124, II. 1, 3, and note. Cf. Du. hennep; Icel. hamp; Dan. hamp; Swed. hampa; G. hanf; O. H. G. hannf (Fick). All from Lat. cannabis; Gk. warvaßis; hemp. = Skt. cana, hemp.  $\beta$ . The from Lat. cannabis; Gk. kárvaßıs; hemp. – Skt. cana, hemp. – B. The Lat. word is merely borrowed from Gk. 'Grimm and Kuhn both consider the Gk. word borrowed from the East, and the Teutonic one from the Lat. cannabis which certainly made its way to them; Curtius, i. 173. The word was borrowed so early that it suffered letter-change. Der. hemp-en, with adj. suffix, as in gold-en; Hen. V, iii. chor. 8. Also canvas, q. v. HEN, the female of a bird, especially of the domestic fowl. (E.) M. E. hen, Chaucer, C. T. 15445; pl. hennes, id. 14872. - A. S. henn hen, han; Grein, ii. 23. The proper form is han, formed by vowel-change from A. S. hana, a cock; Grein, ii. 11. + Du. hen, fem of haan, a cock. + Icel. hana, fem. of hani, a cock. + Dan. höne, fem. of hane, a cock. + Swed. hona, fem. of hane, a cock. + G. henne, fem. of hann, a cock. Cf. Goth. hana, a cock.  $\beta$ . Thus hen is the fem. of a word for cock (obsolete in English), of which the old Teutonic type was HANA. y. The word hana means, literally, 'singer,' the suffix -a denoting the agent, as in A.S. hunt-a, a hunter. - VKAN, to sing; whence Lat. canere, to sing. Der. hen-bane, Prompt. Parv. to sing; whether Latt charter, to sing. Also hen-coop, hen-harrier, a kind of hawk (see Harrier); hen-pecked, i. e. pecked by the hen or wife, as in the Spectator, no. 176: 'a very good sort of people, which are commonly called in scorn the henpeckt. [1]

HENCE, from this place or time. (E.) a. M. E. hennes, P. Plowman, B. i. 76; whence the shorter form hens, occurring in Lidgate's Minor Poems, p. 220 (Stratmann). In the modern hence, the -ce merely records that the M.E. hens was pronounced with sharp β. In the form hennes, the suffixed s, not with a final z-sound. s was due to a habit of forming adverbs in -s or -es, as in twy-es, twice, need-es, needs ; an older form was henne, Havelok, 843, which is found as late as in Chaucer, C. T. 2358. Y. Again, henne represents a still older henen or heonen, spelt heonene in Ancren Riwle, p. 230, 1.8. - A.S. heonan, hionan, hence; Grein, ii. 67; also heonane, id. 68. Here heonan stands as usual for an older hinan. Shorter forms appear in the A.S. heona (for hina), hence, Grein, ii. 67; hine, id. 76. + G.

ren (chiefly used with von preceding it), hence; O. H. G. hinnan, ; a shorter form appears in kin, there, thither.

'The sanguine load-stone, called hamatiles;' Holland's Pliny, b. xxvi. It these forms are adverbial formations from a pronominal base; cf. these forms are accus. ca commations from a pronominal base; c. Goth. kina, him, accus. ca se of the third personal pronoun, cognate with A. S. kine, him, and G. ikn, him; also in the accus. case. The nom. of A.S. hine is he, he; to which accordingly the reader is referred. ¶ Similarly, Lat. hinc, hence, is connected with Lat. See He. hic, this. Der. hence-forth, compounded of hence and forth, and answering to A. S. ford heonan, used of time; see examples in Grein, ii. 68, 11. 1-4; hence-forward, comp. of hence and forward.

HENCHMAN, a page, servant. (E.) In Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 121. 'Compare me the fewe . . disciples of Jesus with the solemne pomp . . . of such as go before the bishop, of his kensemen, of trumpets, of sundry tunes,' &c.; Udal, on St. Mark, c. 11 (R.) 'And every knight had after him riding Three henshmen on him awaiting ; The Flower and the Leaf, 1. 252 (a poem wrongly ascribed to Chaucer, and belonging to the fifteenth century).  $\beta$ . Of disputed origin; but we also find Hinzman as a proper name in Wilts. (in the Clergy List, 1873); and this renders it almost certain that the right etymology is from M. E. hengest (cognate with Du. and G. hengst, Swed. and Dan. hingst), a horse, and E. man. We find similar formations in Icel hestvörör (lit. horse-ward), a mounted guard (Cleasby); and in Swed. hingstridare (lit. horse-rider), 'a groom of the king's stable, who rides before his coach; 'Widegren's Swed. Dict. In this view, the sense is simply 'groom,' which is the sense required by the earliest y. The M. E. hengest quotation, that from the Court of Love. occurs in Layamon, l. 3546, and is from A, S. kengesi, a horse (Grein, ii. 34), once a common word. It is cognate with Icel. kestr, Swed. and Dan. hingst and hüst, G. hengst, from an orig. Teutonic hangista; Fick, iii. 59. ¶ The usual derivation is from haumch-man, a clumsy hybrid compound, clumsily explained to mean 'one who stands beside one's hip.' Surely, a desperate guess. I find in Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691, the following: 'Henchman, qui equo innititur bellicoso, from the G. hengst, a war-horse: with us it signifies one that runs on foot, attending upon a person of honor or worship. [Mentioned] Anno 3 Edw. 4. cap. 5, and 24 Hen. 8. cap. 13. It is written henxman, anno 6 Hen. 8. cap. 1. [†] HENDECAGON, a plane figure of eleven sides and angles.

(Gk.) So called from its eleven angles. - Gk. irdera, eleven; and youria, an angle. Erdena = ër, one, and déra, ten. See Heptagon. HENDECASYLLABIC, a term applied to a verse of eleven syllables. (Gk.) From Gk. žvôena, eleven (= žv, one, and déna, ten); and συλλαβή, a syllable. See Decasyllabic.

HEP, HIP, the fruit of the dog-rose. See Hip (2). HEPATIC, pertaining to the liver.  $(F_{,-}L_{,-}Gk_{,-})$  'Hepatiques, obstructions of the liver; 'Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. – O. F. kepatiques, 'hepatical, of or belonging to the liver; 'Cot. – Lat. kepaticus. – Gk. harinos, belonging to the liver. - Gk. haari-, crude form of haap, the liver. + Lat. ieeur, the liver. + Skt. yakril, yakan, the liver. All from a base YAK. Der. hepatic-al; hepatic-a, a flower, the liverwort ; see hepathique, hepatique in Cotgrave.

HEPTAGON, a plane figure with seven sides and angles. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1074. So called from its seven angles. – Gk. έπτά, seven, cognate with E. seven: and γανώ, an angle, corner, from γώνν, a knee. Sce Seven and Knee. Der. heptagon-al. HEPTAHEDRON, a solid figure with seven bases or sides.

(Gk.) Spelt heptaedron in Kersey, ed. 1715. - Gk. έπτά, seven, cognate with E. seven; and Edpa, a seat, base, from the same base as E. seat and sit. See Seven and Sit.

HEPTARCHY, a government by seven persons. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Applied to seven Old-English kingdoms, viz. those of Kent, Sussex, Wessex. Essex, Northumberland, Mercia, and East Anglia. The term is not a good one; see Freeman, Old Eng. Hist. for Children, p. 40. - Gk. 2nr-, for 2nrá, seven ; and -apxia, government. See Seven and Anarchy.

HER, possessive and objective case of the fem. of the third pers. pronoun. (E.) M. E. kire, the usual form; also here, Chaucer, C. T. 4880; hure, P. Plowman, C. iv. 45-48. - A. S. hire, gen. and dat. case of heo, she; the possessive pronoun being made from the gen. case, and indeclinable; see Sweet's A. S. Reader, Grammat. Introduction. The word is to be divided as hi-re, where hi- is to be referred to the Teutonic pronominal base HI (Fick, iii. 74), signifying 'this;' and re is the usual A.S. fem. inflection in the gen. and dat. of adjectives declined according to the strong declension. See He. Der ker-s, M. E. hires, Chaucer, C. T. 4647, not found much earlier; her-self.

HERALD, an officer who makes proclamations. (F., -O. H. G.) M. E. herald, heraud; Chaucer, C. T. 2601; P. Plowman, B. xviii. 16. -O. F. heralt, heraut, a herald; Low Lat. heraldus; cf. Ital. araldo, a herald. - O. H. G. herolt (G. herold), a herald; we also find O. H. G. Heriold, Hariold, as a proper name. answering to Icel. Haraldr and E. Harold. β. Hariold is a contracted form for Hari-wald, where Hari-= O. H. G. hari (G. heer), an army; and wald = O. H. G. walt, B. All strength. Thus the name means 'army-strength,' i. e. support or stay.

of the army, a name for a warrior, esp. for an officer. The limitation 🍄 the heir ;' Thorpe, Ancient Laws, b. ii. glossary, s. v. In later times, of the name to a herald was due to confusion with O. H. G. foraharo, a herald, from forharén, to proclaim; cf. Gk. snpvf, a herald. Y. We may note that O. H. G. hari answers to A. S. here, army; a word also used in forming proper names, as in Here-ward. See further under Harry. And, for the latter part of the word, see Valid. Der. herald-ic; also herald-ry, Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 213, spelt heraldie, Gower, C. A. i. 173.

HERB, a plant with a succulent stem. (F., -L.) The word being of F. origin, the & was probably once silent, and is still sometimes pronounced so; there is a tendency at present to sound the k, the word being a short monosyllable. M. E. herbe, pl. herbes; Chaucer, C. T. 14972, 14955; King Alisaunder, 331.-F. herbe, 'an herb;' Cot. - Lat. herba, grass, a herb; properly herbage, food for cattle.  $\beta$ . Supposed to be allied to O. Lat. forben, food, and to Gk.  $\phi o \beta \beta \eta$ , pasture, fodder, forage. - / BHARB, to eat; cf. Skt. bharb, to eat; b ii. c. 6. § 4; kerb-ar-ium, from Lat. kerbarium, a book describing herbs, a herbal, but now applied to a collection of plants; kerbi-worows, herb-devouring, from Lat. worare, to devour (see Voracious). And note M. E. herbere, a herb-garden, from Lat. herbarium through the French: a word discussed under Arbour.

HERD (1), a flock of heasts, group of animals. (E.) M. E. heerde, heorde. 'Heerde, or flok of beestys;' Prompt. Parv. p. 236. 'Ane heorde of heorten' = a herd of harts; Layamon, 305. - A. S. heord, herd, hyrd, (1) care, custody, (2) herd, flock, (3) family; Grein, ii. 68. + Icel. hjörð. + Dan. hiord. + Swed. h. ord. + G. heerde. + Goth. hairda. Root unknown. Der. herd, vb., M. E herdien, to draw together into a herd, P. Plowman, C. xiv. 148; herd-man, M. E. herdeman, hirdeman, Ormulum, 6853; later form herd-s-man, Shak, Wint.

Ta. iv. 4. 344. Dor. herd (2). HERD (2), one who tends a herd. (E.) Generally used in the comp. shep herd, cow-herd, &c. M. E. herde, Chaucer, C. T. 605 (or 603); Will. of Paleme, 6; spelt hurde, P. Plowman, C. x. 267.— A. S. herde, Lindie Grain ii, with the the park herde + A.S. heorde, hirds; Grein, ii. 77. + Icel. hirdir. + Dan. hyrde. + Swed. herde. + C. hirt. + Goth. hairdeis.  $\beta$ . Formed from the word above; thus A.S. heorde is from heord; Goth. hairdeis is from kairda; the A.S. suffix - here denotes the agent, and signifies 'keeper,' or 'protector of the herd.' Cf. Lithuan. kerdzus, a cow-HERE, in this place. (E.) M. E. her, heer; Chaucer, C. T. 1610, 1612. - A. S. hér; Grein, ii. 34. + Du. hier. + Icel. hér. + Dan. her. + Swed. här. + G. hier; O. H. G. hiar. + Goth. her. B. All from a type HIRA, formed from the pronominal base HI (Fick, iii. 74); so that here is related to he just as where is related to who. See He. Der. here-about. Temp. ii. 2. 41; here-abouts; hereofier, M. E. Acr-after, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 243; here-by, M. E. her-owl and Nightingale, 127; here-in, M. E. her-inne, Havelok, 458; here-of, M. E. her-of, Havelok, 2585; here-tofore, I Sam. iv. 7; here-wno, 1 Pet. ii. 21; here-upon, answering to M. E. her-on, P. Plowman, Design of the second s B xiii. 1 30; here-with, Malachi, iii. 10.

HEREDITARY, descending by inheritance. (L.) In Shak. Temp.ii. I. 223; and in Cotgrave, to translate F. hereditaire. Englished from Lat. hereditarius, hereditary. - Lat. heredita-, base of hereditare, to inherit. - Lat. "heredi-, crude form of heres, an heir. See Heir. Der. kereditari-ly. From the same base we have keredita-ble, a late and rare word, for which heritable was formerly used, as in Blackstone's Comment. b. ii. c. 5 (R.); also heredita-ment, given in Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715.

HERESY, blich, ed. 1715. HERESY, the choice of an opinion contrary to that usually received.  $(F_{..}-L_{..}-Gk_{.})$  The word means, literally, no more than 'choice.' M. E. keresye, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 267 (see Spec. of English, ed. Morris and Skeat. p. 103, l. 149); eresie, Wyclif, Acts, xxiv. 14.-O. F. heresie, 'heresie, obstinate or wicked error;' Cot.-Lat. haresis. - Gk. alpeous, a taking. choice, sect, heresy. - Gk. alpeir, to take; on which see Curtius, ii. 180. Der. heretic, q. v. HERETIC, the holder of a heresy. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) M. E. eretik, heretik, Wyclif, Tit. iii. 10.-0. F. heretique, 'an heretick;' Cot. - Lat. hareicus. - Gk. alperinós, able to choose, heretical. - Gk. alpeir, to take, choose. See Horesy. Der. heretic-al.

HERIOT, a tribute paid to the lord of a manor on the decease of a tenant. (E.) See Blackstone, Comment. b. ii. capp. 6, 28; and see Hariot in Blount's Law Lexicon; and Heriot in Jamieson's Scot. Dict. Sir D. Lyndesay speaks of a herield hors, a horse paid as a heriot, The Monarche, b. iii. 1. 4734. Corrupted from A.S. heregeatu, lit. military apparel; Grein, ii. 36. The heregeatu consisted of 'military horses and cows, and many other things were paid as heriots to the lord of the manor. 'And pam cinge minne hæregeatwa, feówer sweord. and feówer spæra, and feówer scyldas, and feówer beágas, . . feower hors, and twa sylfrene fata;' i.e. And [I bequeath] to the king my herio's, viz. four swords, and four spears, and four shields, and four torques . . four horses, and two silver vessels; Will dated about 946-955; in Thorpe's Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, p. 499.-A.S. kere, an army (hence, belonging to war); and geatus, preparation, apparel, adomment; Grein, i. 495. [+] HERITAGE, an inheritance. (F.,-L.) In early use. M.E.

keritage, Hali Meidenhad, ed. Cockayne, p. 25, last line but one; King Horn, ed. Lumby, 1281; also eritage, Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Skeat, 981.-O.F. heritage, 'an inheritance, heritage;' Cot. Formed, with suffix -age (answering to Lat. -aticum) from O.F. heriter, to inherit. - Lat. hereditare, to inherit; the loss of a syllable is exemplified by Low Lat. heritator, used for hereditator; it would seem as if the base heri- was substituted for heredi .- Lat. heredi-, crude form of keres, an heir; see Heir. Der. from same source, heritable heritor HERMAPHRODITE, an animal or plant of both sexes. (L., - Gk.) In Gascoigne, The Steele Glas, 1. 53. See Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 17. - Lat. hermaphroditus. - Gk. epuappoouros; a coined word, made up from Gk.  $F\rho\mu\eta$ , Hermes (Mercury), as representing the male principle; and  $A\phi\rhoo\delta(r\eta, Aphrodité (Venus),$ the female. Hence the legend that Hermaphroditus, son of Hermes and Aphrodite, when bathing, grew together with Salmacis, the nymph of a fountain, into one person. Der. hermaphrodit-ic, -ic-al, -ism; also hermaphrodism.

HERMENEUTIC, explanatory. (Gk.) A modern word. From Gk. έρμηνευτικόε, skilled in interpreting. - Gk. έρμηνευτήε, an interpreter; of which a shorter form is epunvevs. Connected (perhaps) with  $E\rho\mu\hat{\eta}s$ , Hermes (Mercury), the tutelary god of skill; but the connection is not certain; see Curtius, i. 433. Der. hermeneutic-al, hermeneutic-al-ly, hermeneut ics (the science of interpretation).

HERMETIC, chemical, &c. (Gk.) 'Their seals, their characters, hermetic rings; ' Ben Jonson, Underwoods, lxi. An Execution upon Vulcan, l. 73. - Low Lat. hermeticus, relating to alchemy; a coined word, made from the name Hermes (= Gk.  $E\rho\mu\eta\eta$ ); from the notion that the great secrets of alchemy were discovered by Hermes Trismegistus (Hermes the thrice-greatest). Dor. hermetic-al, hermetic-al ly. Hermetically was a term in alchemy; a glass bottle was said to be hermetically (i. e. perfectly) sealed when the opening of it was fused and closed against the admission of air. HERMIT, one who lives in solitude. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) M.E.

eremite, heremite; in early use. It first appears in Layamon, 18763, where the earlier text has aremite, the later heremite. This form was probably taken directly from Lat. heremita, the later form hermite being from the French. Heremite occurs in P. Plowman, B. vi. 190, and even as late as in Holinshed's Description of Britain, b. i. c. 9 (R.) The shorter form hermyte is in Berners' tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 204 (R.) - F. hermi'e, 'an hermit;' Cot. - Low Lat. heremita, a form occurring in P. Plowman, B. xv. 281; but usually eremita. - Gk. έρημίτης, a dweller in a desert. - Gk. έρημία, a solitude, desert. - Gk. έρημοι, deserted, desolate. Root uncertain. Dor. hermit-age, Spenser, F. Q. i. 1. 34, spelt heremytage, Mandeville's Travels, p. 93, from F. hermitage, 'an hermitage;' Cot. Also hermit-ic-al, spelt heremiticall in Holinshed, Desc. of Britain, b. i. c. 9 (R.), from Lat. heremiticus (better eremiticus), solitary.

HERN, the same as Horon, q. v. HERNIA, a kind of rupture; a surgical term. (L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715.-Lat. hernia, a rupture, hernia. Of uncertain origin.

HERO, a warrior, illustrious man. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Hamlet, ii. 2. 270. - O. F. heroë, 'a worthy, a demygod;' Cot. - Lat. heroëm, acc. of heros, a hero. - Gk. fipus, a hero, demi-god. + Skt. vira, a hero. + Lat. wir, a man, hero. + A. S. wer, a man. See Virile. ¶ The mod. F. héros is now accommodated to the spelling of the Lat. nom. The Lat. acc. is, however, still preserved in the Span. heroe, Ital. eros. Der. hero-ic, spelt heroicke in Spenser, F. Q. v. 1. 1, from O.F. heröique (Cot.), which from Lat. heroicus; hero-ic-al-ly, hero-ism; also hero-ine, q. v.

HEROINE, a famous woman. (F., - L., - Gk.) In Minsheu. 'A heroine is a kinde of prodigy;' Evelyn, Memoirs; Mrs. Evelyn to Mr. Bohun, Jan. 4, 1672 (R.) - F. heroine, 'a most worthy lady;' Cot. - Lat. heroine. - Gk. powtry, fem. of pows, a hero. See Hero.

HERON, a long-legged water-fowl. (F., -O.H.G.) M.E. heroune. The Monarche, b. iii. 1, 4734. Corrupted from A. S. heregeatu, lit. military apparel; Grein, ii. 36. The heregeatu consisted of 'military habiliments or equipments, which, after the death of the vassal, escheated to the sovereign or lord, to whom they were delivered by Cot. (Mod. F. heron; Prov. aigros; Ital. aghircme, airone; Span. airon.) - O. H. G. heigir, heiger, a heron; with suffixed -on (Ital. -one). + Swed. häger, a heron. + Dan. heire, a heron. + Icel. hegri, a heron. β. Fick further compares these words with G. käher, keher, a jackdaw, lit. 'laugher,' from the ✔ KAK, to laugh; cf. Skt. kakk, kakk, to laugh; Lat. cachinnus, laughter; prov. E. heighaw, a wood-pecker. Similarly it is probable that the 'heron' was named from its harsh voice. ¶ The A.S. name was hragra, Wright's Vocab. i. 29, (from W. creg, cryg, hoarse); G. reiker, a heron; Lat. graculus, a jay; all similarly named from the imitative word which appears in E. as crake, creak, croak. See Crake. Der. heron-er, M. E. heronere, Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 413; from O. F. haironnier; Cotgrave explains faulcon haironnier as 'a herner, a faulcon made only to the heron.'

Also heron-ry. And see Heronshaw, Egret. HERONSHAW, HERNSHAW, (1) a young heron (2) a heronry. (F.). Spenser has herneshaw in the sense of heron; F. Q. vi. 7.9. Two distinct words have been confused here. 1. Hernshaw, a heron, is incorrect, being a corruption of heronseue; the name heronseue for the heron is still common in Lincolnshire and Yorkshire. Mr. Peacock's Glossary of Manley and Corringham (Lincoln) words has: 'Heronsew, the common heron. "There were vewed at this present survey certayne heronsewes whiche have allwayes used to brede there to the number of iiij."—Survey of Glastonbury, temp. Hen. VIII, Mon. Ang. i. 11. See Chaucer, Squyeres Tale, 68.' The etymology of this heronsewe is given by Tyrwhitt, who cites the F. herongeau from 'the glossary,' meaning probably that in Urry's ed. of Chaucer; but it is verified by the fact that the O.F. herouncel (older form of herongeau) occurs in the Liber Custumarum, p. 304, and means 'a young heron. The suffix -c-el is a double dimin., as in lion-c-el, later liongeou. Cf. also M.E. bew-tee = F. beau-té. 2. Hernshaw in its other sense is correct; and is compounded of heron, and shaw, a wood. The sense is given by Cotgrave, who explains O.F. haironniere by 'a heron's neast, or ayrie; a herneshaw, or shaw of wood wherein herons breed.' Hence heronshaw (1) is (F., - O.H.G.); heronshaw (2) is hybrid.

HERRING, a small fish. (E.) M. E. hering (with one r), Havelok, 758. – A. S. hærincg; the pl. hærincgas is in Ælfric's Col-loquy, in Thorpe's Analecta, p. 24; also hæring. Wright's Vocab. i. 56, l. 4. + Du. haring. + G. häring.  $\beta$ . The explanation in Webster is probably correct; viz. that the fish is named from its appearance in large shoals; from the Teutonic base HARYA, an army (Fick, iii. 65), as seen in Goth. harjis, A. S. here, G. heer, (O. H. G. hari), an army. See Harry. [†] HESITATE, to doubt, stammer. (L.) Spelt hesitate, hæsitate in Minsheu, ed. 1627. [Perhaps merely made out of the sb. hesi-tation, which occurs in Cotgrave to translate F. hesitation, whereas he explains hesiter only by 'to doubt. feare, stick, stammer, stagger in opinion.'] - Lat. hæsitatus, pp. of hæsitare, to stick fast; intensive verb formed from hasum, supine of harere, to stick, cleave, + Lithuanian gaiszti, gaiszoti, to tarry, delay (Nesselmann); Fick, i. 576.-√GHAIS, to stick, cleave. Dor. hesitat-ion, hesit-anc-y; from the same root, ad-here, co-here, in-her-ent.

HEST, a command. (E.) M. E. hest, heste, a command; also, a promise; Chaucer, C. T. 14062. The final t is properly excrescent, as in whils-1, agains-1, amongs-1, amids-1, from M. E. whiles, againes, amonges, amiddes. And it was easily suggested by confusion with the Icel. heit. - A. S. has, a command, Grein, i. 24. - A. S. hatan, to command. + Icel. heir, a vow; from heita, to call, promise. + O. H. G. heiz (G. geheiss), a command; from O. H. G. heizan (G. heissen), to call, bid, command. Cf. Goth. haitan, to name, call, command. β. Fick (iii. 55) suggests a connection with Gk.  $\kappa i \nu \nu \mu \alpha$ , I hasten, E. his, q. v. In this case, the base is KID, an extension of  $\checkmark$  KI.

HETEROCLITE, irregularly inflected. (L.,-Gk.) A grammatical term; hence used in the general sense of irregular, disorderly. "Ther are strange heteroclits in religion now adaies;" Howell, Familiar Letters, vol. iv. let. 35. - Lat. heteroclitus, varying in declension. - Gk. έτερόκλιτοs, otherwise or irregularly inflected. - Gk. έτερο-, crude form of Erepos, other; and -«Airos, formed from «Aireir, to lean, cognate with E. lean.

HETERODOX, of strange opinion; heretical. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Compounded from Gk. Erepo-, crude form of Erepos, another, other; and doga, opinion, from doneiv, to think. Der. heterodox-y, Gk. erepodoția. HETEROGENEOUS, dissimilar in kind. (Gk.) Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, gives the adjectives heterogene, heterogeneal, and the sb. heterogeneity. Compounded from Gk. Erepo-, crude form of Erepos, another, other; and yevos, kind, kin, cognate with E. kin. Der.

heterogeneous-ly, -ness; heterogene-it-y. HEW, to hack, cut. (E.) M. E. hewen, Chaucer, C. T. 1424.-A. S. heawan, to hew; Grein, ii. 62. + Du. houwen. + Icel. höggva. + Swed. hugga. + Dan. hugge. + G. hauen; O. H. G. honwan. + Russ. to hide; which again is a weakened form of  $\checkmark$  SKL "rate, to hammer, forge. Allied to Lat. cudere, to strike, pound, i. 816. See Sky. Der. hid-ing; and see hide (2).

beat. The root appears to be KU, to strike, beat. Der. herer; also hoe, q. v.

HEXAGON, a plane figure, with six sides and angles. (L., - Gk.) Hexagonal is in Blowht's Gloss., ed. 1674. Hexagone in Minsheu, ed. 1627. Named from its six angles. - Lat. hexagone, a hexagon. -Gk. &fayavos, six-cornered. - Gk. &f. six. cognate with E. six; and ywria, an angle, corner, from Gk. yorv, a knee, cognate with E. Ines. See Six and Knee. Der. hexagon-al, hexagon-al-iy. HEXAMETER, a certain kind of verse having six feet. (L.,.

Gk.) 'This provoking song in kexameter verse;' Sidney's Arcadia, b. i. (R.) 'I like your late Englishe kexameters;' Spenser, letter to Harvey, qu. in Globe ed. of Spenser, p. xxviii.-Lat. hexameter ; also hexametrus. - Gk. ¿{áµerpos, a hexameter; properly an adj. meaning 'of six metres' or feet. - Gk. &, six, cognate with E. six; and µerpor. a measure, metre. See Six and Metre.

HEY, interjection. (E.) M. E. hei, Legend of St. Katharine, l. 579; hay, Gawayn and Grene Knight, 1445. A natural exclamation. + G. hei, interjection. + Du. hei, hey 1 ho !

HEYDAY (1), interjection. (G. or Du.) In Shak. Temp. ii. 2. 190. 'Heyda, what Hans Flutterkin is this? what Dutchman does build or frame castles in the air?' Ben Jonson, Masque of Augurs. Borrowed either from G. heida, ho ! hallo ! or from Du, hei daar, ho ! there. It comes to much the same thing. The G. da, Du. daar, are cognate with E. there. ¶ The interj. hey is older; see above.

HEYDAY (a), frolicome wildness. (E.) 'At your age the keyday in the blood is tame; 'Hamlet, iii. 4. 69. I take this to be quite a different word from the foregoing, though the commentators confuse the two. In this case, and in the expression 'keyday of youth,' the word stands for high day (M. E. hey day); and it is not surprising that the old editions of Shakespeare have highday in place of heyday; only, unluckily, in the wrong place, viz. Temp. ii. 2. 190. Cf. 'that sabbath day was an high day;' John, xix. 31. For the old spellings of high, see High. [†] HIATUS, a gap, defect, &c. (L.) In Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. – Lat. hiatus, a gap, chasm. – Lat. hiatus, pp. of hiare, to yawn, gape; cognate with E. yaum. See Yawn. Doublet, chasm. q. v. HIBERNAL, wintry. (F., – L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 13. § 10, where it is spelt hybernal. - F. hibernal, ' wintery ; Cot. - Lat. hibernalis, wintry; lengthened from Lat. hibernus, wintry. β. Hi-bernus is from the same root as Lat. hi-ems, winter, Gk. χι-ών, snow, and Skt. hi-ma, cold, frost, snow; the form of the root is GHL. Der. from same source, hibern-ate.

HICCOUGH, HICCUP, HICKET, a spasmodic inspiration, with closing of the glottis, causing a slight sound. (E.) Now generally spelt hiccough. Spelt hiccup (riming with prick up), Butler's Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 1. 346. Also hicket, as in the old edition of Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 9. § 5; and in Minsheu. Also hickock; Florio explains Ital. singhiozzi by 'yexings, hickocks.' Also hickock; Cotgrave has: 'Hoquet, the hickock, or yexing;' also 'Hoqueter, to yex, or clock [cludd] to have the kickock or yeking;' also 'Hoqueter, to yex, or clock [cluck], to have the hickup or hickcock.'  $\beta$ . It seems to be generally considered that the second syllable is cough, and such may be the case; but it is quite as likely that hiccough is an accombondared spelling, due to popular etymology. The evidence takes us back to the form kick-ock, parallel to kick-et, both formed from kick by the help of the usual dimin. suffixes -ock, -et. Cf. F. koquet, the hiccough, in which the final -et is certainly a dimin. suffix; and probably some confusion with F. hoquet caused the change from kick-ock to hick-et. Y. The former syllable hic, hik, or hick is of imitain the word Hitch, q. v. It is not peculiar to English. + Du. hit, the hiccough; kikken, to hiccough. + Dan. kikke, the hiccough; also, to hiccough. + Swed. hicka, the hiccough; also, to hiccough. And cf. W. ig, a hiccough, sob; igio, to sob; Breton kik, a hiccough, called hak in the dialect of Vannes, whence (probably) F. koquet. 8. All from a base HIK, weakened form of KIK, used to denote convulsive movements in the throat; see Chincough.

HICKORY, an American tree of the genus Carya. Origin unknown.

HIDALGO, a Spanish nobleman of the lowest class. (Span.,-L) The word occurs in Terry, Voyage to East India, ed. 1655, p. 169 (Todd); also in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 116.-Span. hidalgo, a nobleman ; explained to have originally been hijo de algo, the son of something, a man of rank, a name perhaps given in irony.  $\beta$ . Hijo, O. Span. figo, is from Lat. filium, acc. of filius, son; see Filial. Algo is from Lat. aliquod, something. HIDE (1), to cover, conceal. (E.) M. E. hiden, huden; Chaucer,

C. T. 1470; Ancren Riwle, p. 130. – A. S. hidan, hydan; Grein, ii. 125. – Gk. seideuv, to hide. And cf. Lat. custos (for cud-tos), a guardian, protector. –  $\checkmark$  KUDH, to hide; an extension of  $\checkmark$  KU, to hide; which again is a weakened form of  $\checkmark$  SKU, to cover; Fick, HIDE (2), a skin. (E.) M. E. hide, Pricke of Conscience, l. 5299; \$high-spirited; high-way = M. E. heigh weye, P. Plowman, B. x. 155; hude, Ancren Riwle, p. 120. - A. S. hyd, the skin; Grein, ii. 125. + Du. huid. + Icel. hud. + Dan. and Swed. hud. + O. H. G. huie; G. haut. + Lat. cuii, skin. + Gk. noros, onoros, skin, hide. - & SKU, to cover; Fick, i. 816. See Sky. Der. hide-bound, said of a tree the bark of which impedes its growth, Milton's Areopagitica, ed. Hales, 32, l. 2; also hide (3).

p. 32, l. 2; also hide (3). HIDE (3), to flog, castigate. (E.) Colloquial. Merely 'to skin' by flogging. Cf. Icel. hyda, to flog; from Icel. hud, the hide. Der. hid-ing HIDE (4), a measure of land, (E.) 'Hide of land;' Blount's Law Dict., ed. 1691. Of variable size; estimated at 120 or 100 acres; or even much less; see Blount. Low Lat. kida; Ducange. - A.S. kid; Ælfred's tr. of Bede, b. iii. c. 24; b. iv. c. 13, 16, 19. (See Kemble's Saxons in England, b. i. c. 4; and the Appendix, shewing that the estimate at 120 or 100 acres is too large.)  $\beta$ . This word is of a contracted form; the full form is kigid; Thorpe, Diplomatarium Evi Saxonici, p. 657; Kemble, Codex Diplomaticus, no. 243. This form kigid is equivalent to kiwise, another term for the same thing; and both words orig, meant (as Beda says) an estate sufficient to support one family or household. They are, accordingly, closely connected with A. S. kiwan, domestics, those of one household, and with the Goth. heiwa-frauja, the master of a household; see further under ¶ Popular etymology has probably long ago confused Hive. the hide of land with hide, a skin; but the two words must be kept entirely apart. The former is A.S. kigid, the latter A.S. kyd.

HIDEOUS, ugly, horrible. (F.) The central e has crept into the word, and it has become trisyllabic; the true form is hidous. It is trisyllabic in Shak. Merry Wives, iv. 3. 34. M. E. hidous (the invariable form); Chaucer, C. T. 3520; he also has kidously, C. T. 1701.-O. F. kidos, kidus, kideus, later kideux, hideous; the oldest form is hisdos. B. Of uncertain origin; if the former s in hisdos is not an inserted letter, the probable original is Lat. hispidosus, roughish, an extended form of Lat. hispidus, rough, shaggy, bristly. Dor. hideous-ly, hideous-ness.

HIE, to hasten. (E.) M. E. kien, kyen, kizen; P. Plowman, B. xx. 322; cf. Chaucer, C. T. 10605. The M. E. sb. kie or Aye, haste, is also found; id. 4627.—A. S. kigian, to hasten; Grein, ii. 72. 8. Allied to Gk. kiew, to go, move, kiwyaa, I go; also to Lat. ciere, to summon, cause to go;  $citus, quick. - \sqrt{K}$ , to sharpen, excite; cf. Skt. ci, to sharpen; whence also E. hone. See Cite.

HIERARCHY, a sacred government. (F., -Gk.) Gascoigne has the pl. hierarchies; Steel Glass, 993; ed. Arber, p. 77. The sing. is in Cotgrave. -F. hierarchie, 'an hierarchy;' Cot. -Gk. iepapxia, the power or post of an lepápxns. - Gk. lepápxns, a steward or president of sacred rites. - Gk. lep-, for lepo-, crude form of lepos, sacred; and dpxew, to rule, govern. B. The orig. sense of lepos was 'vigorous;' cognate with Skt. ishiras, vigorous, fresh, blooming (in the Peterb. Dict.); see Curtius, i. 499; from  $\checkmark$  IS, probably 'to be vigorous.' For  $dp_{Xeiv}$ , see Arch-, prefix. Der. hierarchi-c-al; we also find hierarch (Milton, P. L. v. 468), from Gk. lepapyne. [†]

HIEROGLYPHIC, symbolical; applied to picture writing. (L., -Gk.) 'The characters which are called hieroglyphicks;' Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 1051 (R.) 'An hieroglyphical answer;' Ralegh, Hist, of the World, b. iii. c. 5. s. 4 (R.) – Lat, hieroglyphicus, symbolical. - Gk. lepoy λυφικόs, hieroglyphic. - Gk. lepo-, crude form of lepos, sacred ; and yhtopen, to hollow out, engrave, carve, write in incised characters. See Hierarchy and Glyptio. Der. kieroglyphic-al, -al-ly; also the sb. hieroglyph, coined by omitting -ic.

HIEROPHANT, a revealer of sacred things, a priest. (Gk.) In Warburton's Divine Legation, b. ii. s. 4 (R.)-Gk. lepopárrys, teaching the rites of worship. - Gk. lepo-, crude form of lepos, sacred; teaching the rites of worship. - GK. tepo-, crude form of tepos, sacred; and pairen, to shew, explain. See Hiorarchy and Phantom.

HIGGLE, to chaffer, bargain. (E.) 'To higgle thus;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 2. 1. 491. And used by Fuller, Worthies, Northumberland (R.) A weakened form of haggle; see Haggle (2).
Der. higgl-er. [†]
HIGH, tall, lofty, chief, illustrious. (E.) M. E. heigh, high, hey, ky; Chaucer, C. T. 318; P. Plowman, B. x. 155. - A. S. kedh, héh;

Grein, ii. 44. + Du. koog. + Icel. kár. + Swed. kög. + Dan. köi. + Goth. hanks. + G. hock; O. H. G. kok. B. The orig. sense is Goth. hauks. + G. hoch; O. H. G. hok. β. The orig. sense is 'kaoblike,' humped or bunched up; cf. G. hocken, to set in heaps; böcker, a knob, hump, bunch; G. hügel, a bunch, knob, hillock; Icel. haugr, a mound. The still older sense is simply 'bent' or 'rounded;' cf. Skt. hukshi, the belly, hucka, the female berest. Y. From Teutonic base HUH. to bend how project in the sense is y. From Teutonic base HUH, to bend, bow, project upwards in a rounded form. - VKUK, to bend, make round; cf. Skt. kuch, to contract, bend. Der. height, q. v.; high-ly; also high-born, K. John, No. 2. 79; high-book high-coursed, Ant. and Cleop. ii. 7. 4; high-fool; high-flowm; high-handed; high-minded, I Hen. VI, i. 5. 12; high-minded-ness; high-ness, Temp. ii. 1. 172; high-priest; high-road; feet of a quadruped in the rear. But the older expression is 'kinder high ways man; high wrought, Othello, ii. 1. 2; with numerous similar compounds. Also high-land, which see below. HIGHLAND, belonging to a mountainous region. (E.) 'A generation of highland thieves and redshanks; ' Milton, Observ. on the Art. of Peace (qu. in Todd). From high and land; corresponding somewhat to the M. E. upland, used of country people as dis-tinguished from townsfolk. Der. highland-er; highlands. HIGHT, was or is called. (E.) Obsolete. A most singular word, presenting the sole instance in English of a passive verb; the correct phrase was he hight = he was (or is) called, or he was named. 'This grisly beast, which lion hight by name ' = which is called by the name of lion; Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 140. M. E. highte. 'But ther as I was wont to highte [be called] Arcite, Now highle I Philostrat ;' Chaucer, C. T. 1557. Older forms hatte, hette. 'Clarice hatte that maide' - the maid was named Clarice; Floriz and Blancheflur, ed. Lumby, I. 479. 'Thet hetten Calef and Iosue' = that were named Caleb and Joshua; Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 67. And see Stratmann's Dict. s. v. håten. -A. S. hátte, I am called, I was called; pres. and pt. t. of A. S. hatan, to be called, a verb with passive signification; from A.S. hatan, active verb, to bid, command, call; Grein, ii. 16, 17. + G. ich heisse, I am named; from keissen, (1) to call, (2) to be called.  $\beta$ . Best explained by the Gothic, which has kaitan, to call, name, pt. t. β. Best kaikait; whence was formed the true passive pres. tense kaitada am called, he is called; as in 'Thomas, saei haitada Didymus'= Thomas, who is called Didymus ; John, xi. 6. See further under Hest.

HILARITY, cheerfulness, mirth. (F., -L., -Gk.) 'Restraining his ebriety unto hilarity; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. v. c. 23, part 16. – F. hilarité, mirth; omitted by Cotgrave, but see Littré. – Lat. kilaritatem, acc. of kilaritas, mirth. - Lat. kilaris, kilarus, cheerful, gay. Not an orig. Lat. word; but borrowed. - Gk. Mapós, cheerful, gay. Cf. Gk. iAaos, propitious, kind. Der. Hence the late word hilari-ous, formed as if from a Lat. hilariosus; hilarious does not occur in Todd's Johnson. From same source, ex-hilarate. Hilary Term is so called from the festival of St. Hilary (Lat.

kilaris); Jan. 13. HILDING, a base, menial wretch. (E.) In Shak. used of both sexes; Tam. Shrew, ii. 26; &c. [Not derived, as Dr. Schmidt says, from A.S. healdan, to hold; which is impossible.] 'The word is Halliwell. Hence the obvious etymology. Hilding is short for kilderling, and hilderling stands for M.E. kinderling, base, degenerate; Ormulum, 4860, 4889. Made up from A. S. kinder, behind; and the suffix -ling. See Hind (3) and (on the suffix) Chamberlain.

HILL, a small mountain. (E.) M. E. hil (with one l); Havelok, 1287: also Aud, Ancren Riwle, p. 178. - A. S. hyll; Grein, ii. 132. <sup>120</sup>7; also say, function terms, p,  $r_1$ ,  $r_2$ ,  $r_3$ ,  $r_4$ ,  $r_5$ ,  $r_4$ ,  $r_5$ ,  $r_6$ lofty; culmen, a top. See Culminate, and Haulm. Der. hill-y, kill-i-ness; dimin. kill-ock, in Shak. Venus and Adonis, 237. ¶ Not connected with G. kügel, a hill; for that is related to E. how, a hill; ¶ Not see How (2).

HILT, the handle of a sword. (E.) In Shak. Hamlet, v. 2. 159; it was common to use the pl. kilts with reference to a single weapon; Jul. Cæsar, v. 3. 43. M. E. kilt; Layamon, 6506. – A. S. kilt, Grein; ii. 75. + Icel. kjalt. + O. H. G. kelza, a sword-hilt.  $\beta$ . The Icel. kjalt also means the guard between the hilt and blade; the Lat. gladius, sword, is perhaps related; Fick, iii. 72. ¶ In any case, it is quite unconnected with the verb to hold. Der. hilt-ed.

HIM, the objective case of he; see Ho.

HIN, a Hebrew liquid measure. (Heb.) In Exod. xxix. 40, &c. Supposed to contain about 6 quarts. - Heb. kis, a hin; said to be a word of Egyptian origin.

HIND (1), the female of the stag. (E.) M. E. kind, hynde; P. Plowman, B. xv. 274. - A. S. kind, fem.; Grein, ii. 76. + Du. kinde, a hind, doe. + Icel., Dan., and Swed. kind. + O. H. G. kintá, M. H. G. a mind, dot.  $\neg$  lett., ball, and swell, and  $\neg$  of 11.0. And  $\beta$ , mind, m. H. G. hinds; whence G. kindin, a doe, with suffixed (fem.) -in.  $\beta$ . Fick (iii. 61) gives the Teutonic type as HENDA, as if from the Teut. base HANTH, to take by hunting; see Hand. HIND (2), a peasant. (E.) In Spenser, F. Q. vi. 8. 12. The d is excressent. M. E. kine, Chaucer, C. T. 605; kyne, P. Plowman, B.

vi. 133. - A. S. kina, a domestic; but the word is unauthenticated as a nom. sing., and is rather to be considered a gen. pl.; so that kina really stands for kina man = a man of the domestics. We find kina ealdor = elder of the domestics, i. e. master of a household; Ælfred's tr. of Beda, iii. 9. β. Further, kina stands for kiwna, kiwena, gen. pl. of kiwan (pl. nom.), domestics; Grein, ii. 78. So called wards; hinder, adv. backwards; Grein, ii. 76. + Goth. hindar, prep. behind; hindana, prep. beyond. + G. kinter, prep. behind; hinten, adv. behind. All from the base which appears in A. S. hine, hence. See Hence, He, Behind. Der. kind-ward, Wyclif, Ps. xlix. 17, kix. 4; also hind-most, q.v.; hinder, verb, q.v.; be-hind.

 HINDER, to put behind, keep back, check. (E.) M. E. hindren, kyndren; Gower, C. A. i. 311. He also has the sb. hinderer; i. 330; iii. 111. - A. S. hindrian; A. S. Chron. an. 1003. - A. S. hinder, adv. behind; from hindan, behind. + Icel. hindra, to hinder. Hind (3). Der. hinder-er; also hindr-ance (for hinder-ance), with F. suffix -ance; 'damage, hurt, or hinderaunce;' Frith's Works, p. 15.

HINDMOST, last. (E.) In Shak. Sonnet 85. 12; 2 Hen. VI, ii. 1. 2. a. The suffix has nothing to do with the word most; iii. 1. 2. the word is to be divided as hind-m-ost, a double superlative; where both -m- and -ost (=-est) are superlative suffixes; so also in the case of Aftermost, Utmost. The corruption of -est to -ost is due to confusion with the word most in popular etymology. The form kindmost is not old; Chaucer has hinderest, C. T. 624. B. The suffix -est being the usual one for the superlative, we have only to account for the rest of the word. - A. S. hind ma, hindmost; Grein, ii. 76. Here the suffix -ma is the same as that seen in Lat. op!i-mus, oplu-mus, best ; see Aftermost. + Goth. kindumists, hindmost, Matt. viii. 12; to be divided as hind-u-m-ists; cf. Goth. fru-ma, first. See Hind (3). Also spelt hindermost, as in Holinshed, Hist. Scotland, an. 1290 (R.) Here the r is an insertion, due to confusion with hinder; but the e is correct; cf. A.S. hindema.

HINGE, the joint on which a door turns. (Scand.) The i was formerly e. M. E. kenge (with hard g), a hinge; with dimin. form kengel, a hinge. 'As a dore is turned in his kengis' [carlier version, wenger, a hinge. As a dore is timed in its wengers [earlier version, in his heeng]; Wyclif, Prov. xxvi. 14. 'Hengyl of a dore;' Prompt. Parv. p. 35. 'Hie gumser, a hengylle;' Wright's Vocab. i. 261, col. I.  $\beta$ . So called because the door hangs upon it; from M. E. hengen, to hang, a word of Scand. origin. 'Henged on a tre;' Havelok, 1420. – Icel. hengja, to hang; cognate with A. S. hangian, to haug; see Hang (A). Cf. Du. hengsel, a hinge. Der. hinge, v. HINT, a slight allusion. (E.) a. The verb is later than the sb.

'As I have kinted in some former papers;' Tatler, no. 267. Only the sb. occurs in Shak., where it is a common word; Oth. i. 3. 142, 166. Esp. used in the phrases 'to take the hint,' or 'upon this hint.'  $\beta$ . Hint properly signifies 'a thing taken,' i. e. a thing caught or apprehended; being a contraction of M. E. hinted, taken; or rather a variant of the old pp. hent, with the same sense. 'Hyntyd, raptus; Hyntyn, or revyn, or hentyn, rapio, arripio; ' Prompt. Parv. p. 240. The earlier spelling of the verb was henten, pt. t. hente, Chaucer, C. T. 700; the pp. hent occurs even in Shak. Meas. iv. 6. 14. - A. S. hentan, to seize, to hunt after; Grein, ii. 34. Cf. Goth. kinthan, to seize, catch with the hand. See Hit, Hunt. Der. kint, verb. [†]

HIP (1), the haunch, upper part of the thigh. (E.) M. E. hupe, hipe, hippe. 'About hire hippes large;' Chaucer, C. T. 474. 'Hupes had hue faire ' = she had fair hips; Alisaunder, I. 190; printed with Will. of Palerne. ed. Skeat. – A. S. hype; Gregory's Pastoral, ed. Sweet, p. 383, 1. 2. + Du. heup. + Icel. huppr. + Dan. hofte. + Swed. hift. + Goth. hups. + G. hüfte, O. H. G. huf.  $\beta$ . S. keóp, in the comp. heóp-brymel, a hipbramble; Wright's Vocab. i. 33, col. 1; to translate Lat. rubus. M. H. G. kiefe, O. H. G. kiufo, a bramble-bush. Root unknown. [†] HIPPISH, hypochondriacal. (Gk.) In Byron, Beppo, st. 64. The word is merely a colloquial substitute for hypochondriacal, of which only the first syllable is preserved. See note at end of Hip (1). [†] HIPPOCAMPUS, a kind of fish. (Gk.) It has a head like a horse, and a long flexible tail; whence the name. - Gk. innorápuros, luπoκάμπη, a monster, with a horse's head and fish's tail. - Gk. luπo-, crude form of innos, a horse; and kaunreiv, to bend.

HIPPOPOTAMUS, the river-horse. (L., = Gk.) M. E. ypotamus, Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Skeat, 157. Also ypotanos, King have crept into the word in mo Alisaunder, 6554. Both corrupted from Lat. hippopotamus. -Gk. Hustle, q.v. Der. hitch, sb.

Gk. innos, crude form of innos, a horse; and norapós, a river. B. The Gk. innos stands for innos, cognate with the back of bindeward, hindwards, back-Lat. equus, a horse; see Equine. Ilorapós is fresh, drinkable water; ger From the same Gk. inwos we have kippo-drome, see Potable. a race-course for horses; kippo-phagy, a feeding on horse-flesh; kippo-griff, a monster, half horse, half griffin; &c.

HIRE, wages for service. (E.) M. E. hire, Chaucer, C. T. 509; also hure, huyre, hyre, P. Plowman, A. ii. 91; B. ii. 122. - A. S. kyr, fem. (gen. hýre), Luke, x. 23. + Du. huur, wages, service. + Swed. hyra, rent, wages, + Dan. hyre, hire, + O. Fries. here, a lease. + G. heuer, hire (Flügel's Dict.). B. The orig. sense was perhaps 'service;' the word is probably connected with A.S. hired (for hiwred), a family, household, and with E. hind (a servant) and hive. Sce Hive, Hide (4), Hind (2). Der. hire, verb, A.S. hyrian, HIS, of him, of it. (E.) Formerly neut. as well as masc. See He. Its.

HISS, to make a sound like a serpent or a goose. (E.) Wyclif has hisshing, a hissing, 2 Chron. xxix. 8. The Lat. sibulat is glossed by hyssyt, i.e. hisses; Wright's Vocab. i. 180, l. 1. - A. S. hysian, to hiss; the Lat. irridebit is glossed by hyseo; A. S. Psalter, ed. Spelman, ii. 4. + O. Du. kisschen, to hiss; Kilian, Oudemans. β. Formed from the sound; the Du. sissen, G. zischen, to hiss, are even more expressive; cf. fizz, whizz, whistle. Dor. hiss, sb.; hiss-ing, Jcr. xviii. 16, &c ; and see hist, hush.

HIST, an interjection enjoining silence. (E. or Scand.) In Shak. Romeo, ii. 2. 159. In Milton, Il Penseroso, 55, the word hist appears to be a past participle = hushed, silenced; so that ' with thee bring...the mute silence kist along' = bring along with thee the mute hushed silence. (So also whist; see Whist.) Perhaps the orig. form was hiss, a particular use of the verb above. Cf. Dan. kys, interj. silence ! hysse, to hush. See Hush.

HISTOLOGY, the science which treats of the minute structure of the tissues of plants and animals. (Gk.) A modern scientific term. Coined from Gk. 1070-, crude form of 1076s, a web; and - Noyea, equivalent to  $\lambda \delta \gamma os$ , a discourse, from  $\lambda \delta \gamma \epsilon u$ , to speak. β. The orig. sense of 1076s is a ship's mast, also the bar or beam of a loom, which in Greek looms stood upright; hence, a warp or web. v. So called because standing upright; from Gk. iornym, to make to stand, set, place; from / STA, to stand; see Stand.

HISTORY, also STORY, a narrative, account. (L.,-Gk.) Story (q. v.) is an abbreviated form. M. E. Aistorie. Fabyan gave to his Chronicle (printed in 1516) the name of The Concordance of Histories. In older authors, we commonly find the form storie, which is of F. origin. Historie is Englished directly from Lat. kistoria, a history .- Gk. loropia, a learning by enquiry, information, history .-Gk. lorop-, stem of lorwp or lorwp, knowing, learned; standing for 1δ-rup, from the base lδ- of elδérea, to know. - VWID, to know; see Wit. HISTRIONICAL, relating to the stage. (L.) In Minsheu. And is a histrionical contempt; Ben Jonson, Magnetic Lady, A. iii. sc. 4. Coined, with suffix -al, from Lat. histrionicus, of or belonging to a player. - Lat. histrioni-, crude form of histrio, a player, actor. 3. The orig. sense was probably 'one who makes others laugh;' cf. Skt. has, to laugh, hasra, a fool.

HIT, to light upon, to strike, to attain to, succeed. (Scand.) M. E. hitten, P. Plowman, B. xii. 108; xvi. 87; Layamon, l. 1550.= Icel. kitta, to hit upon, meet with. + Swed. kitta, to find, discover, light upon. + Dan. kitte, to hit upon. β. Prob. allied to Goth. kinthan, to catch, occurring in the compound frakinikan, to take cap-tive; and to E. hent, hint. See Hint. Cf. also Lat. cadere, to fail, happen. Der. kit, sb.

HITCH, to move by jerks, catch slightly, suddenly. (E.) M.E. hicchen. 'Hytchyn, hychyn, hytchen, or remevyn, Amoueo, moueo, removeo;' Prompt. Parv. p. 239; where the word should have been printed as hycchyn or hycchen. We also find: 'Hatchyd [read hacchyd], or remevyd, hichid, hychyd, Amotus, remotus;' ibid. Cf. Lowland Scotch hatch, hotch, to move by jerks ; Jamieson. β. The M.E. hicchen can only be a weakened form from an older hikken, used to denote convulsive movement; see Hiccough. ¶ I see no evidence for connecting hitch with hook; though the notion of hooking seems to have crept into the word in modern use. It is rather connected with HITHE, HYTHE, a small haven. (E.) M.E. hithe; as in <sup>4</sup> Chaucer, Book of the Duchesse, 347. - A.S. hás, Grein, ii. 14. + Garlik-hithe, P. Plowman, B. v. 324; and see Prompt. Allied to the verb to hide, and to hide, a skin, covering ; with the same sense of protecting or shielding; from  $\checkmark$  KU, shortened form of  $\checkmark$  SKU, to protect, cover. See Hide (1) and Hide (2).

HITHER, to this place. (E.) M. E. hider, hither, Chaucer, C. T. 674; the right form in Chaucer being probably hider, since he rimes thider with slider; C. T. 1265. [So also M. E. fader, moder are now father, mother; the difference being probably one of dialect.] - A. S. hider (common); also hider; Grein, ii. 71. + Icel. hear. + Dan. hid. + Swed. hit. + Goth. hidre. + Lat. eitra, on this side.  $\beta$ . comparative suffix, as in aj-ter, whe-ther. See He. Der. hither-to; hither-ward, M. E. hiderward, P. Plowman, B. vi. 323. HIVE, a basket for bees. (E.) The old sense is 'house.' M. F. hiue (with u for v), Chaucer, C. T. 15398. Spelt hyje, Wright's Vocab. i. 223, col. 2. From the A. S. hiw\*, a house; preserved only in the comp. hiwráden, a family, household (Lat. domus), Matt. x. 6; hiwise, a household, Luke, xiii. 25; &c. Cf. Northumbrian kizo, used to translate Lat. familia; Luke, ii. 4. The word is also to be traced in A. S. hiwan, sb. pl. domestics, Grein, ii. 78; Icel. hjú, a household, A. 5, which, so is a construct, or the in  $\beta$ , the master of a house, Mark, xiv, 14; and (probably) in M. H. G. hirát, G. keirath, marriage.  $\beta$ . All from a Teutonic base HI, equivalent to Aryan  $\checkmark$  KI, to lie, rest ; whence Skt. ci, to lie, repose, Gk. reipau, I lie. From the same root are also Lat. ciuis, a citizen; E. civic, civil, city, cemetery, quiet, ac. ¶ But see the important correction in Addenda. [\*]

HO, HOA, a call to excite attention. (E.) a. 'And cried kol' Chaucer, C. T. 1706. Merely a natural exclamation; cf. Icel. ko, interj. ho l, also Icel. hoa, to shout out ho !  $\beta$ . In some cases, it seems to have been considered as a shortened form of hold; so that we even find ' withouten ko' = without intermission, Chaucer, Troil. ii. 1083. Cf. Du. how, hold ! stop ! from houden, to hold.

HOAR, white, grayish white. (E.) M.E. kor, koor; Chaucer, C.T. 3876, 7764; P. Plowman, B. vi. 85. - A. S. kár, Grein, ii. 14. β. Fick (iii. 67) suggests comparison + Icel. karr, hoar, hoary. + Icel. karr, noar, noar, noar, b. FICK (11. 07) suggests companison with Skt. gára, variegated in colour, also used of hair mixed with gray and white; Benfey, p. 942. ¶ To be kept distinct from Icel. kár, which is the E. kigk (the r being merely the sign of the nom. case); and also from E. hair. Der. hoar-y, occurring in the comp. horilocket, having hoary locks, Layamon, 25845; hoar-i-ness; also hoar-frost, M. E. hoorfrost, Wyclif, Exod. xvi. 14; also hoar-hound, q. v. HOARD, a store, a treasure. (E.) M. E. hord, Chaucer, C. T. 3263; Gower, C. A. iii. 155. – A. S. hord, Grein, ii. 96. + Icel. hodd. + G. hort. + Goth. huzd, a treasure.  $\beta$ . The Teutonic type is HUS-DA (Fick, iii. 79); from the same source as house; a hoard is 'a thing housed.' See House. Der. hoard, verb. A. S. hordian, in Sweet's A.S. Reader; cf. Goth. huzdjan, to hoard; hoard-er, A.S. hordere (Bosworth).

HOARDING, HOARD, a fence enclosing a house while builders are at work. (F., - Du.; or Du.) Rare in books; it is diffi-cult to say how long it may have existed in E. as a builders term. Either taken directly from Du. horde, a hurdle ; or from O. F. horde, a palissade, barrier (Burguy), which is the same word. The suffix ing is, of course, English. The true E. word is Hurdle, q. v. [†] HOARHOUND, HOREHOUND, the name of a plant. (E.) The true hoarhound is the white, Marrubium vulgare; the first part of the word is hoar, and the plant is so called because its bushy stems 'are covered with white woolly down;' Johns, Flowers of the Field. It is also 'aromatic;' whence the latter part of the name, as will appear. The final d is excrescent; the M. E. form being horehune. 'Marubium, horehune;' Wright's Vocab. i. 130. - A. S. hurhine; or simply hune; for numerous examples of which see Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 334; where we also find: 'the syllable kár, hoary, describes the aspect, so that "black horehound" shews how we have forgotten our own language.' The words are also found separate; ba háran húnan. We also find hwite háre húnan, white horehound, an early indication of the black horehound, Ballota nigra, a very as species of origanum, Pliny, xix. 8, 50; Gk. sovi $\lambda\eta$ , a species of origanum; so named, in all probability, from its strong scent; cf. Ski. know, to stink; Benfey, p. 224. ¶ It thus appears that the right names should have been hoar houn and black houn; white hoarhound involves a reduplication; and black hoarkound, a contradiction. HOARSE, having a rough, harsh voice. (E.) The r in this word is wholly intrusive, and is (generally) not sounded; still, it was in-serted at an early period. M. E. koos, kors; all three spellings occur in P. Plowman, B. xvii. 324 (and various readings); horse, b to place;' Cot. See Hobby (1).

β All from a Teutonic type HAISA; Fick, iii. 57. Root unknown. Der. hoar e-ly, hoarse-ness.

HOARY, white; see Hoar.

HOAX, to trick, to play a practical joke. (Low Lat.) In Todd's Johnson; not found in early writers. The late appearance of the word shews that it is a mere corruption of hzeus, used in just the same sense. 'Legerdemain, with which these jugglers hocus the (Todd). See Hocus-Pocus. ¶ Not from the A.S. hux, huse, a taunt, occurring in Lavamon; as has been too cleverly suggested. There is no bridge to connect the words chronologically; and they have different vowels. Der. koax, sb.

HOB (1), HUB, the nave of a wheel, part of a grate. (E.) The true sense is 'projection.' Hence hub, 'the nave of a wheel (Oxford-shire); a small stack of hay, the mark to be thrown at in quoits, the hilt of a weapon; up to the hub, as far as possible;' Halliwell. The mark for quoits is the same word as hob, 'a small piece of wood of a cylindrical form, used by boys to set on end, to put half-pence on to chuck or pitch at;' Halliwell. Hob also means the shoe (projecting edge) of a sledge. The hob of a fire-place is explained by Wedgwood as ' the raised stone on either side of the hearth between β. Though not easily traced which the embers were confined.' in early English, the sense is well preserved in the related word hump, which is the same word with a nasalised termination. Thus the true orig. base was hup, easily corrupted to hub, hob. From the Teutonic base HUP, to go up and down (Fick, iii. 77). whence also E. hop, hump. See Hop (1), Hump. Der. kob-nail, a nail with a projecting head, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 398; 2 Hen. VI, iv. 10. 63; hobnail-ed.

HOB (2), a clown, a rustic, a fairy. (F., -O. H.G.) 'The hobbes as wise as grauest men; ' Drant's tr. of Horace's Art of Poetry (R.) 'From elves, hobs, and fairies That trouble our dairies;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Monsieur Thomas, iv. 6. See Nares; also Hob in Atkinson's Cleveland Glossary, where, however, the suggestion of identification of hob with elf is to be rejected. It is quite certain that Hob was a common personal name, and in early use. 'To beg of Hob and Dick;' Cor. ii. 3. 123. That it was in early use is clear from its numerous derivatives, as Hobbs, Hobbins, Hobson, Hopkins, Hopkinson.  $\beta$ . That Hob, strange as it may seem, was a popular corruption of Robin is clearly borne out by the equally strange corruption of Hodge from Roger, as well as by the name of Robin Gcod-fellow for the hob-goblin Puck; (Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 34, 40).  $\gamma$ . The name Robin is French, and, like Robert, is of O. H. G. origin; Littré considers it as a mere pet corruption from Robert, a name early known in England, as being that of the eldest son of Will. I. Der. kobgoblin. See Bobin.

HOBBLE, to limp. walk with a limp. (E.) M. E. hobelen (with one b), P. Plowman, A. i. 113; P. Plowman's Crede, 106; and see Barbour's Bruce, iv. 447. The frequentative of kop; so that the lit. sense is 'to hop often.' + Du. kobbelen, to toss, ride on a hobby-horse, stammer, stutter (all with the notion of repetition of uneven motion). + Prov. G. hoppeln, to hop, hobble (Flügel). See Hop (1). Der. hobble. sb.

HOBBY (1), HOBBY-HORSE, an ambling nag. a toy like a horse, a favourite pursuit. (F., -O. Low G.) See Hobby in Trench, Select Glossary. A hobby is now a favourite pursuit, but formerly a toy in imitation of a prancing nag, the orig, sense being a kind of prancing horse. In Hamlet, ii. 2. 142. 'They have likewise excel-lent good horses, we term the hobbies; 'Holland, Camden's Ireland, p. 63. A corruption of M. E. hobin, a nag; Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat, xiv. 68, 500. – O. F. kobin, 'a hobby, a little ambling and shortmaned horse; 'Cot. [Said in Littre to be a Scotch word; but it was merely a F. word in use in Scotland in the fourteenth century; the suffix -in (=Lat. -inus) being wholly French. Cf. Ital. ubino, a Shetland pony.] = O. F. kober, 'to stirre, move, remove from place to place, a rustic word;' Cot.  $\beta$ . Of O. Du. or Scand. origin. = O. Du. hobben, to toss, move up and down; Du. hobben, to toss; a O. D. koopen, to toss, move up and down; D. koopen, to toss; a weakened form of koppen, to hop, which is cognate with E. Hop (1), q. v. γ. So too we find O. Swed. koppa, a young mare, from koppa, to hop; Ihre. So also Dan. koppe, a mare; North Friesic koppe, a horse, in children's language (Outzen). [†]
HOBBY (2), a small species of falcon. (F., -O. Low G.) Cotgrave translates O. F. kobreau by 'the hawke tearmed a kobby.' M. E. kobi, koby (with one b). 'Hcby, hawke;' Prompt. Parv.; pl. kobies, Sir T. Fluct The Covermour con wriji' see Suce of Falcink ad Sheet

T. Elyot, The Governour, cap. xviii; see Spec. of English, ed. Skeat, p. 204. Like other terms of falconry, it is of F. origin; being merely the corruption of the O. F. hoberau mentioned above. So named from its movement. - O. F. hober, 'to stirre, move, remove from place This etymology is confirmed by noting that the O. F. verb hober was sometimes spelt of an ox, (2) = hogsbead; O. Swed. ontufund, a hogshead, lit. 'oxauber (Cot.); corresponding to which latter form, the hobby was also called aubereau. Note also M. E. hobeler, a man mounted on a hobby or small horse; Barbour's Bruce, xi. 110. HOBGOBLIN, a kind of fairy. In Minsheu, ed. 1627; and in HOBNAIL, a kind of nail. See Hob (1).

HOBNOB, HABNAB, with free leave, in any case, at random. Compounded of hab and nab, derived respectively from A.S. (E.) habban, to have, and nabban, not to have. 1. In one aspect it means 'take it or leave it;' implying free choice, and hence a familiar invitation to drink, originating the phrase 'to kob-nob together.' 'Hob-nob is his word; give't or take't;' Twelfth Night, iii, 4. 262. 2. In another aspect, it means hit or miss, at random; also, in any case. 'Philautus determined, kab, nab, to sende his letters;' i.e. whatever might happen; Lyly's Euphues, ed. Arber, p. 354. 'Although set down hab-nab, at random;' Butler's Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3. l. 990. β. Hab is from A.S. habban; see Have. Nab is from A.S. nabban, a contracted form of ne kabban, not to have.

HOCK (1), the hough; see Hough.

HOCK (2), the name of a wine. (G.) 'What wine is it? Hock:' Beaum. and Fletcher. The Chances, A. v. sc. 3. A familiar corruption of Hockheim, the name of a place in Germany, on the river Main, whence the wine came. It means 'high home;' see High and Home.

HOCKEY, the name of a game. (E.) Also called kookey; so named because played with a kooked stick; see HOOK. ¶ In some named because played with a hookad stick; see HOOK. ¶ In some places called bandy, the ball being bandied backwards and forwards.

HOCUS-POCUS, a juggler's trick, a juggler. (Low Lat.) Hocola-Pocola, a juggler's trick, a juggler. (Low Lat.) Hokos-Pokos is the name of the juggler in Ben Jonson, Magnetic Lady, Chorus at end of Act i. In Butler's Hudibras, it means a trick; 'As easily as kocus-pocus;' pt. iii. c. 3. l. 708. If the word may be said to belong to any language at all, it is bad Latin, as shewn by the termination -ws. The reduplicated word was a mere invention, used by jugglers in playing tricks. At the playing of every trick, he used to say " hocus pocus, tontus, talontus, vade celeriter, jubeo; Ady's Candle in the Dark, Treat. of Witches. &c. p. 29; cited in Todd. See the whole article in Todd. ¶ The 'derivations' sometimes assigned are ridiculous; the word no more needs to be traced than its companions tontus and talontus. Der. hocus, to cheat; see Todd. Hence, perhaps, hoan, q. v.

HOD, a kind of trough for carrying bricks on the shoulder. (F., -G.) 'A lath-hammer, trowel, a hod, or a traie;' Tusser, Five Hundred Points of Husbandry, sect. 16, st. 16 (E. D. S. edition, p. 37, last line). Corrupted from hot, prob. by confusion with prov. E. hod, a box (lit. a hold, receptacle); Whitby Glossary. - F. hotte, 'a scuttle, dorser, basket to carry on the back; the right kote is wide at the top and narrow at the bottom;' Cot. Of Teutonic origin; O. Du. hotte, a pedler's box or basket, carried on the back (Oudemans); provin. G. hotte, a wooden vessel, tub, a vintager's dorser (Flügel).  $\beta$ . Root uncertain; but the word is probably related to Aut; thus the Skt. Auti not only means 'a hut,' but also 'a vessel serving for fumigation;' Benfey, p. 191. See Hut. [+] Der. kod-man. HODGE-PODGE, a mixture; see Hotchpot.

Since a Welsh initial k answers to an Aryan s, we may doubtless consider these words as a answers to an Aryan s, we may doubtless consider these worlds as cognate with Irish suig, a pig, and A. Also in Cotgrave, to translate F. tonneau; it seems to have meant a large cask. Minsheu, ed. 1627, refers us to 'An. 1 Rich. III, cap. 13. Tiedeman, in Notes and Queries, iv. 2, 46, that the cask may have been named from the device of an 'ox-head' having been branded upon it. In any case, the first syllable, in English, is a corruption. ¶ Numerous guesses, mostly silly, have been made. The word is found in Dutch as early as 1550

'Badault, a fool, dolt, sot, ... gaping hoydon;' Cot. 'Falourdin, a luske, lowte, ... lumpish hoydon;' id. 'Hilts. You mean to make a hoiden or a hare Of me, to hunt counter thus, and make these doubles; ' Ben Jonson, Tale of a Tub, A. ii. sc. 1.-O. Du. heyden (mod. Du. heiden), a heathen, gentile; also a gipsy, vagabond; Sewel. - O. Du. keyde, a heath. See Heathen, Heath. ¶ The Du. sy being sounded nearly as English long i, the vowel-change is slight; precisely the same change occurs in house; see Hoist. The W. hosden, having only the modern E. meaning of 'coquette,' must have been borrowed from English, and is not the original, as supposed in Webster.

HOIST, to heave, raise with tackle. (O. Du.) The t is excrescent, and due to confusion with the pp. The verb is properly hoise, with pp. hoist = hoised. 'Hoised up the main-sail;' Acts, xxvii. 40. Shak, has both hoise and hoise, and (in the pp.) both hoise and Active shake has both white and worst, and (in the pp.) both worst and hoisted; Rich. III, iv. 4. 529; Temp. i. 2. 148; Hamlet, iii. 4. 307; Antony, iii. 10. 15, iv. 12. 34, v. 2. 55. 'We hoyse up mast and sayle;' Sackville's Induction, st. 71 (A. D. 1563). -O. Du. hysee, to hoise (Sewel); mod. Du. hijschen. [The O. Du. y (mod. ij) being sounded like English long i, the vowel-change is slight, and much like that in hoyden, q. v.] + Dan. heise, hisse, to hoist. + Swed, hissa, to boist the beint with beint and the form of the beint work of the beint work of the beint work. hoist; hissa upp, to hoist up. Cf. F. hisser, to hoist a sail, borrowed from the Scandinavian; quite distinct from F. hausser, to exalt, which is from Lat. altus, high (F. haut). Root unknown; cf. Lithuan.

hiszli, to place. [+] HOLD (1), to keep, retain, defend, restrain. (E.) M. E. holden, Chaucer, C. T. 12116. – A. S. healdan, haldan, Grein, ii. 50. + Du. kouden, + Icel. kalda. + Swed. kdla. + Dan. kolde. + Goth. kaldan. + G. kalten.  $\beta$ . The general Teutonic form is kaldan (Fick, iii, 73); which is probably an extension from the Teutonic base HAL. to raise; see Hill, Haulm, Holm. Der. hold, sb., Chaucer, C.T.

HOLD (2), the 'hold 'ng. HOLD (2), the 'hold ' of a ship. (Du.) 'A hulk better stuffed in the kold; ' 2 Hen. IV, iv. 2. 70. Not named, as might be supposed, from what it kolds; but a nautical term, borrowed (like most other such) from the Dutch. The d is really excressent, and due to a natural confusion with the E. verb. The right sense is 'hole.'- Du.

natural confusion with the E. verb. The right sense is 'hole.' - Du. hol, a hole, cave, den, cavity; Sewel gives also 'het hol van een schip, the ship's hold or hull.' Cognate with E. Hole, q. v. HOLE, a cavity, hollow place. (E.) M. E. kole, hol; Chaucer, C. T. 3440, 3442; Havelok, 1813. - A. S. kol, a cave; Grein, ii. 92. + Du. kol. + Icel. kol, kola. + Dan. kul. + Swed. kdl. + G. kohl; O. H. G. kol. Cf. also Goth. hulundi, a hollow, cave; us-kulon, to hollow out, Matt. xxvii. 60.  $\beta$ . The root is not quite certain; Fick (iii. 70, i. 527) refers it to Teutonic base HAL, to cover, hide; from  $\sqrt{KAL}$ , to hide; see Hell.  $\gamma$ . But some endeavour to connect E. kole, kollow with Gk. scolos, hollow; from Gk. siver, to take in. whence also svap. sirres. a cavity; all from  $\sqrt{KU}$ , to to take in, whence also siap, sirres, a cavity; all from  $\checkmark$  KU, to contain, take in, be hollow; Fick, i. 551. The latter view is that taken by Curtius, i. 192; in this case, the l is merely suffixed. See Hollow and Hold (2). [†] HOLIBUT, a fish. (E.) See Halibut. HOLIDAY, a holy day, festival, day of amusement. (E.) For Aly day. Spelt koly day; Chaucer, C.T. 3309; kaliday, P. Plowman, B. v. 400. See Holy and Day.

 HOLINESS, a being holy. (E.) See Holy.
 HOLIA, HOLLO, stop, wait! (F.) Not the same word as kalloo, q. v., bat somewhat differently used in old authors. The true sense is stop 1 wait 1 and it was at first used as an interjection simply, though easily confused with halloo, and thus acquiring the sense of to shout. 'Holla, stand there;' Othello, i. 2, 56. 'Cry holla [stop 1] to thy tongue;' As You Like It, iii. 2, 257. - F. hold, an interjection, hoe there, enough; . . also, hear you me, or come hither;' Cot. - F. ko, interjection; and 1d, there. β. The F. *l*à is an abbreviation from Lat. illac, that way, there, orig. fem. ablative from illie, pron. he yonder, which is a compound of ille, he, and the enclitic ce, meaning 'there.' Der. holla, hollo, verb; K. Lear, iii, 1. 55; But note that there is properly a Twelfth Night, i. 5. 291. distinction between kolla (with final a), the French form, and kollo (with final o), a variant of halloo, the English form. Confusion was inevitable; yet it is worth noting that the F. là accounts for the final ¶ a, just as A.S. lá accounts for the final o or oo; since A.S. á becomes long o by rule, as in ban, a bone. stan, a stone.

HOLLAND, Dutch linen. (Du.) In Shak. 1 Hen. IV, iii. 3. 82. From the name of the country; Du. Holland. It means holt-land, i.e. woodland. Der. from the same source, hollands, i.e. gin made in Holland. [+] HOLLOW, vacant, concave; as sb., a hole, cavity. (E.) M. E.

holue, Chaucer, C. T. 201, 1365. - A. S. holk, only as a sb., signifying a hollow place, vacant space; also spelt holg, healoe; see Cockayne's A.S. Leechdoms, iii. 365; Gregory's Pastoral, ed. Sweet, p. 218, ll. 1, 3, 4, 9; p. 241, l. 7. An extended form from A. S. kol, a hole; see Hole. Der. kollow, verb; 'kollow your body more, sir, thus;' Ben Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, ed. Wheatley, i. 5. 136; hollow-ly, Temp. iii. 1. 70; hollow-ness, M. E. holownesse, Chaucer, Troil. v. 1821; hollow-eyed, Com. Errors, v. 240; hollow-hearted, Rich. III, iv. 4. 435. HOLLLY, the name of a prickly shrub. (E.) The word has lost a final n. M. E. kolin, kolyn. The F. kows [holly] is glossed by kolyn in Wright's Vocab. i. 163, l. 17; the spellings holin, kolis both occur in the Ancren Riwle, p. 418, note l. – A.S. holen, holegn; Cockayne's A.S. Leechdoms, iii. 332. + W. edyn; Corn. edin; Bret. kelen, holly. + Gael. cuilionn; Irish cuileann, holly. β. The change from A. S. & to Celtic c shews that the words are cognate; the base of the A. S. word is also preserved in Du. kulst, G. hülse, holly; and from the older form (said to be huliz) of the G. word the F. hour is derived. Y. Thus the form of the base appears as KUL (= Teutonic HUL); possibly connected with Lat. enimen, a peak, culmus, a stalk; perhaps because the leaves are 'pointed.' Der. holm-oah, q. v. HOLLYHOCK, a kind of mallow. (Hybrid; E. and C.) It should be spelt with one I, like holiday. M.E. holihoe, to translate Lat. althea and O. F. ymalue, in a list of plants; Wright's Vocab. i. 140, col. 1, l. 6. [Here the O. F. ymalus = mod. F. guimawe, the marsh mallow (Cot.)] Also spelt holihocce, holihoke; see Cockayne's Leechdoms, iii. 332, col. 1, bottom. Compounded from M. E. koli, holy; and hocce, hoke, hoc, a mallow, from A. S. Aoc, a mallow; id. Minsheu, ed. 1627, gives Holie hocke, i. e. malua sacra. B. The mallow was also called in A. S. kocledif, which at first sight seems to mean 'hook-leaf;' but we should rather keep to the orig sense of 'mallow' for hoe, as the word seems to have been borrowed from Celtic; cf. W. hocys, mallows; hocys bendigaid, hollyhock, lit. 'blessed mallow' (where bendigaid is equivalent to Lat. benedictus).  $\gamma$ . 'The hollyhock was doubtless so called from being brought from the Holy Land, where it is indigenous; Wedgwood. [+]

HOLM, an islet in a river; flat land near a river. (E.) 'Holm, a river-island;' Coles, ed. 1684. 'Holm, in old records, an hill, island, or fenny ground, encompassed with little brooks; Phillips, ed. 1706. The true sense is 'a mound,' or any slightly rising ground; and, as such ground often has water round it, it came to mean an island. Again, as a rising slope is often situate beside a river, it came to mean a bank, wharf, or dockyard, as in German. The most curious use is in A.S., where the main sea itself is often called kolm, from its convex shape, just as we use 'The Downs' (lit. hills) to signify the open sea. M. E. kolm. 'Holm, place besydone nills) to signify the open sea. M. E. kolm. Holm, place besydone a water, Hulmus; Prompt. Parv. p. 243; see Way's note, which is full of information about the word. [The Low Lat. kulmus is nothing but the Teutonic word Latinised.] – A. S. kolm. a mound, a billow, the open sea; Grein, ii. 94. + Icel. kólmr. kolmi, holmr, an islet; even meadows on the shore with ditches behind them are in Icelandic called holms.' + Dan. holm, a holm, quay, dockyard. + Swed. holme, a small island. + G. kolm, a hill, island, dockyard, wharf (Flügel). + Russ. kholm, a hill. + Lat. columen, culmen, a mountain-top; cf. Lat. collis, a hill. See Culminate, Column.

HOLM-OAK, the evergreen oak. (E.) Cotgrave translates O.F. yeuse by 'the holme oake, barren scarlet oak, French oak.' The tree is the Quercus Iles, or common evergreen oak, 'a most variable plant, . . with leaves varying from being as prickly as a holly to being as even at the edge as an olive;' Eng. Cyclop. s. v. Quercus. Whether because it is an ever-green, or because its leaves are sometimes prickly, we at any rate know that it is so called from its resemblance to the kolly.  $\beta$ . The M. E. name for holly was holin, sometimes corrupted to holm or holy. 'Holme, or holy;' Prompt. Parv. p. 244; and see Way's note. 'Hollie, or Holm:ree;' Minsheu. The form holm is in Chaucer, C. T. 2923. Thus holm-oak = holly-oak. See Holly.

HOLOCAUST, an entire burnt sacrifice. (L.,-Gk.) So called because the victim offered was burnt entire. It occurs early, in the Story of Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 1319, 1326, where it is piainly taken from the Vulgate version of Gen. xxii. 8. - Lat. holo-caustum; Gen. xxii. 8. - Gk. δλόκανστον, neut. of δλόκανστος, δλόand rates (fut. ravo-w), to burn. β. The Gk. δλos is related to Lat. solidus; scaleer is from & KU, to burn. See Solid and Calm.

HOLSTER, a leathern case for a pistol. (Du.) Merely 'a case; though now restricted to a peculiar use. In Butler, Hudbras, pt. i. c. 1. 1. 391. – Du. kolster, a pistol-case, holster; also, a soldier's knapsack (Sewel).  $\beta$ . The word is not orig. E., though we find Aulsred = covered, Rom. of the Rose, 6146; but the Du. word is cognate with A. S. keol. tor, a hiding-place, cave, covering, Grein, ii. 67; as well as with Icel. hulstr, a case, sheath; Goth. hulistr, a veil, y. Derived from Du. hullen, to cover, mask, 2 Cor. iii. 13. disguise; similarly the Icel. hulstr is from Icel. hylja, to cover; and the Goth, hulistr is from Goth. huljan, to cover. The A.S. verb corresponding to the weak verbs Du. hullen, Icel. hylja, Goth. huljan, to cover, does not appear in MSS. but is preserved in the prov. Eng. hull, to cover up = M. E. hulen, to cover (Stratmann). 8. This verb is closely related to Goth. hulandi, a hollow, A.S. hol, a hole, and E. hole; and all these words are to be referred back to the Teutonic base HAL, to cover = 4/KAL, to cover, whence A.S. helan, Lat. celare, to cover ; also Lat. occulere, to cover over. See Hole, Conceal, Occult. e. Fick gives the European form as HULISTRA = hul-is-tra, with double suffix, denoting the agent, so that the word means 'coverer;' cf. Lat. mag-is-ter, min-is-ter. Thus the suffix is not simply -ster, but -s-ter; where the -s- answers to Aryan suffix -as-, which mostly is used to form neuter nouns of action, seldom for nouns denoting an agent; Schleicher, Compendium, § 230. The suffix -ter is common, and occurs in Lat. pa-ter, ma-ter; and commonly denotes the agent. See also Hull, a related word.

HOLT, a wood, woody hill. (E.) 'Holt, a small wood, or grove;' Kersey, ed. 1715. M. E. kolt, Chaucer, C. T. 6. 'Hoc virgultum, a kolt;' Wright's Vocab. i. 270, col. 1. – A.S. kolt, a wood, grove; Grein, ii. 95. + Du. kout (for kolt), wood, timber. + Icel, holt, a copse. + G. kolz, a wood, grove; also wood, timber.  $\beta$ . Cf. also W. celt, a covert, shelter; from celu, to hide. Also Irish coill (pl. y. The coillte), a wood; coillteach, woody; ceilt, concealment. orig. sense was 'covert' or 'shelter ;' from 4/ KAL, to hide. See Holster, Hole.

HOLY, sacred, pure, sainted. (E.) This word is nothing but M.E. hool (now spelt whole) with suffix -y. M.E. holi, holy; Chaucer, C. T. 178, 5095. - A. S. hálig; Grein, ii. 7. - A. S. hál, whole; with C. 1. 170, 505.  $\blacksquare$  X. Mairy; Orem, in 7.  $\blacksquare$  X. S. Mai, whole; while suffix -ig (= mod. E.  $\cdot y$ ); so the orig. sense is 'perfect,' or excellent. + Du. keilig; from keel, whole. + Icel. keilagr, often contracted to kelgr; from keil, hale, whole. + Dan. kellig; from keel. + Swed, kelig; from keil. + G. keilig; from keil. See Whole, Hale. Der. koli-ly; holi-ness, A. S. kalignes; koli-day, q. v.; kolly-hock (for koly kock), q. v.; kali-but (= koly but), q. v. HOMAGE, the submission of a vassal to a lord. (F.,  $\_$ L.) In early use. In Rob. of Glouc. p. 46, l. 5; p. 134, l. 17; P. Plowman, B. xii. 155. - O. F. komage, later kommage, the service of a vassal. -Low Lat. homaticum (also hominium), the service of a vassal or 'man.' -Lat. homo (stem homin-), a man; hence, a servant, vassal; lit. 'a creature of earth.'- Lat. kumus, earth, the ground.  $\beta$ . From the base GHAMA, earth; whence also Russ. zomlia, earth, land; Gk. xaµal, on the ground. And see Human. ¶ The A. S. guina, a man, is cognate with Lat. homo; see Bridegroom.

HOME, native place, place of residence. (E.) M. E. koom, koms; Chaucer, C. T. 2367; P. Plowman, B. v. 365; vi. 203; commonly in the phrase ' to go home.' - A. S. hám, home, a dwelling; Grein, ii. . The acc. case is used adverbially, as in ham cuman, to come home; cf. Lat. ire domum. + Du. heim, in the comp. heimelijk, private, secret. + Icel. heimr, an abode, village; heima, home. + Dan. hiem, home ; also used adverbially, as in E. + Swed. hem, home ; and used as adv. + G. heim. + Goth. haims, a village. + Lithuanian këmas, a village (Fick, iii. 75). + Gk. κώμη, a village. β. All from KI. to rest; cf. Gk. κείμαι, I lie, κοίτοs, sleep, κοίτη, a bed; Skt. β. All from gi, to lie down, repose. From the same root is Lat. civis, a villager, hence a citizen, and E. kive. See Hive, City, Cometery, Quiet. Thus the orig. sense is 'resting-place.' Der. home-bred, Rich. 11, i. 3. 187; home-farm; home-felt; home-keeping, Two Gent. of Verona, i. 1. 2; home-less, A.S. kámleás (Grein); home-less-ness; home-ly, Chaucer, C. T. 330; home-li-ness, M. E. homlinesse, Chaucer, C. T. 8305; home-made; home-sick; home-sick-ness; home-spun, Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 1. 79; home-stall; home-stead (see Stead); home-ward, A.S. hammeard, Gen. xxiv. 61; home-wards.

HOMEOPATHY, HOMCEOPATHY, a particular treat-ment of disease. (Gk.) The system is an attempt to cure a disease by the use of small doses of drugs such as would produce the symptoms of the disease in a sound person. Hence the name, signifying 'similar feeling.' Proposed by Dr. Hahnemann, of Leipsic (died 1843). Englished from Gk. δμοιοπάθεια, likeness in feeling or condition, caustum; Gen. xxii. 8.-Gk. δλόκαυστον, neut. of δλόκαυστος, δλό-surros, burnt whole.-Gk. δλο-, crude form of δλος, whole, entire; warros, burnt whole.-Gk. δλο-, crude form of δλος, whole, entire;

HOMER, a large Hebrew measure. (Heb.) As a liquid measure, it has been computed at from 44 to 86 gallons. Also used as a dry measure. - Heb. chimer, a homer, also a mound (with initial cheth); from the root chimar, to undulate, surge up, swell up.

HOMESTEAD, a dwelling-place, mansion house, with its en-closures. (E.) In Bp. Hall, Contemplations, New Test. b. ii. cont. 3. §6 (Todd). 'Both house and homestead into seas are borne;' Dryden (qu. in Todd, without a reference). Compounded of home and stead. HOMICIDE, man-slaughter: a man-slayer. (F., -L.) 1. Chaucer has homicide in the sense of manslaughter ; C. T. 12591. - F. homicide, 'manslaughter;' Cot. - Lat. Aomicidium, manslaughter. - Lat. Aomi-, short for homin- or homini-, stem or crude form of homo, a man (see Homage); and -cidere, for cædere, to cut, to kill, from / SKID, to cut (see Schism). 2. Chaucer also has: 'He that hateth his brother is an homicide; 'Pers. Tale, De Ira, § 4.-F. homicide, 'an homicide, man-killer;' Cot. - Lat. homicida, a man-slayer; similarly formed from homi- and -cidere. Der. homicid-al. HOMILY, a plain sermon, discourse. (L., -Gk.) In As You Like It, iii. 2, 164. And see Pref. to the Book of Homilies. Englished from Lat. homilia, a homily; in partial imitation of O.F. homelie, of which Littre says that it was a form due to a dislike of having the same vowel recurring in two consecutive syllables, as would have been the case if the form homilie had been retained. - Gk. duixía, a living together, intercourse, converse, instruction, homily. – Gk.  $\delta\mu\lambda o_{\theta}$ , an assembly, throng, concourse. - Gk.  $\delta\mu$ -, short for  $\delta\mu\sigma$ -, crude form of duds, like, same, cognate with E. Same; and inn, einn, a crowd, band, from eileur, to press or crowd together, compress, shut in; which from WAR, to surround. Cf. Skt. vri, vri, to cover, surround. See Curtius, ii. 169, 170. [The Gk. είλειν is not to be connected with Lat. uoluere.] Dor. homiletic, from Gk. δμιλητικόs, sociable, the adj. formed from  $\delta \mu \lambda i a$ , used in E. as the adj. belonging to homily; hence homiletic-al, homiletic-s. Also homil-ist (= homily-ist). HOMINY, maize prepared for food. (West Indian.) ' From Indian aukúminea, parched corn; 'Webster.

HOMMOCK, a hillock; see Hummock. HOMOGENEOUS, of the same kind or nature throughout. (Gk.) 'Homogeneal, of one or the same kind, congenerous; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'Of homogeneous things;' State Trials, Earl of Strafford, an. 1640 (R.) Englished from Gk. δμογενήs, of the same race. - Gk. 640-, for 646s, cognate with E. same; and yeves, cognate with E. kin. See Same and Kin. Der. homogeneous-ness.

HOMOLOGOUS, agreeing, corresponding. (Gk.) 'Homologous, having the same reason or proportion ;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Englished from Gk.  $\delta\mu\delta\lambda\sigma\gamma\sigma$ , agreeing, lit. saying the same. - Gk.  $\delta\mu\delta\lambda$ . crude form of  $\delta\mu\delta\sigma$ , cognate with E. same; and  $\lambda\delta\gamma\sigma\sigma$ , a saying, from  $\lambda\epsilon\gamma\epsilon\omega$ , to say. See Same and Logic. Der. so also homology, agreement, from Gk.  $\delta\mu\sigma\lambda\sigma\gamma\sigma$ .

HOMONYMOUS, like in sound, but different in sense. (L.,-Gk.) Applied to words. In Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674. - Lat. homonymus, of the same name. - Gk. such vuos, having the same name. -Gk. όμο-, crude form of όμόs, cognate with E. same; and όνυμα, Æolic form of όνομα, a name, cognate with E. name. See Same and Name. The Gk. w is due to the double o. Der. homonymous-ly; also homonym, sb., from F. homonyme, 'a word of divers significations;' Cot. Hence Aomonym-y. ¶ Similarly we have homo-fhonous, like-sounding; from Gk. part, a voice, sound.

HONE, a stone for sharpening various implements. (E.) 'Hoone, barbarys instrument, cos; ' Prompt. Parv. p. 245. - A. S. kán, a hone; in Bosworth's smaller A.S. Dict., without authority; but see references in Leo; it can also be inferred with certainty from the M. E. and Icel. forms; and, still more clearly, from the derived verb hanan, to stone, John, x. 32. + Icel. hein, a hone. + Swed. hen, a hone (Widegren). + Skt. cána, a grind-stone; from co, to sharpen, allied to ci, to sharpen. Cf. Gk. xôros, a cone, peak; which is the same word. See Cone.

HONEST, honourable, frank, just. (F., -L.) M. E. honest, frequently in the sense of 'honourable;' Chaucer, C. T. 246, 8302.-O.F. honeste (Burguy); later honneste, 'honest, good, virtuous,' Cot.; mod. F. honnôte. – Lat honestus, honourable; put for honas-tus, from Lat, honos (honas), honour. See Honour. Der. honest-ly; honest-y, M. E. honestee, Chaucer, C. T. 6849, from O. F. honestet (Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, col. 5, l. 7) = Lat. acc. honestatem, from nom. honestas, honourableness.

HONEY, a fluid collected by bees from plants. (E.) M. E. HORE 1, a fund confected by bees from plants (E.) in E. hony, Rob. of Glouc., p. 43; P. Plowman, B. xv. 56; huni, Ancrea Riwle, p. 404.–A. S. kunig, Mark, i. 6. + Du. honig. + Icel. kunang. + Dan. honning.+ Swed. honing.+G. honig, M. H. G. honec, O. H. G. honang.  $\beta$ . The European type is HUNANGA or HONANGA, Fick, iii. 78. Perhaps allied to Skt. hana, grain, broken rice, the gradient of the boast; Romans, xi. 18. Doublet, whoop, same, like, cognate with E. same. See Same and Pathos. Der. In fine red powder which adheres to the rice-berry beneath the husk. homeopath-ic, homeopath-ist. HOMER, a large Hebrew measure. (Heb.) As a liquid measure, (red) which adheres to the rice. Der. homeopag, Mid. Nt. Dr. iii. grain-like, of the Hen. V, i. 2. 187; honey-comb, q. v.; honey-den, I. 171; honey-bee, Hen. Ta. ii. 2. 33; honey-suckle, q. v.; honey-tongued, L. L. L. v. 2. 334. HONEYCOMB, a mass of cells in which bees store honey. (E.)

M. E. honycomb, Chaucer, C. T. 3698. - A. S. hunig-camb; Bosworth, Lye. - A. S. hunig, honey; and camb, a comb. See Honey and Comb. (The likeness to a comb is fanciful, but there is no doubt about the word. It seems peculiar to E.; cf. G. honig-scheibe = a 'shive' or slice of honey, a honey-comb; Swed. honingskaka, Dan. honningkage (honey-cake); Icel. Aunangsseimr, Du. honigzeem

(honey-string). Der. Aoneycomb-ed. HONEYSUCKLE, the name of a plant. (E.) So named be-cause honey can be easily suched or sucked from it. M. E. honysocle, word. We find, however, A. S. hunigsucle * (Lye); an unauthorised word. We find, however, A. S. huni-suge, privet, Wright's Vocab. i. 33, col. 1; named for a similar reason. See Honey, Suckle. T. 46; earlier konure, Laya-mon, 6084 (later text). The verb konouren is in Rob. of Glouce, p. 14, 1. 16. - O. F. honur, honeur. - Lat. honorem, acc. of honos, honor, honour. Root uncertain; the word seems to be honos, with suffix -nos (=-nas). Der. honour, v., honour-able, Chaucer, C. T. 12574: honour-able-y, honour-able-ness, honour-ed, honour-less; honor-ar-y, used by Addison (Todd), from Lat. honorarius; also honest, q. v. ¶ The by Addison (Todd), from Lat. honorarius; also honest, q. v. spelling honor assumes that the word is from the Lat, nominative; which is not the case.

HOOD, a covering, esp. for the head. (E.) M. E. Acod, Chancer, C. T. 195; P. Plowman, B. v. 329; hod, Ancren Riwle, p. 56. - A.S. Aid, a hood; in a gloss (Leo, Lye). + Du. hord, a hat. + G. hut, O. H. G. huat, hot, a hat. β. Allied to E. herd; cf. G. hüten, to protect. Cf. also Gk. κοτύλη, a hollow vessel. Perhaps from VKAT, to hide. See Cotyledon and Hood. Der. hood-ed; hood-man-blind, Hamlet, iii. 4. 77; hood-wink, Romeo, i. 4. 4, lit. to make one wink or close his eyes, by covering him with a hood.

-HOOD, -HEAD, suffix. (E.) A. S. had, state, quality; cognate with Goth. haidus, manner, way, and Skt. ketu, a sign by which a thing is known. - VKIT, to know; Skt. hit, to perceive, know (Vedic)

HOOF, the horny substance covering the feet of horses, &c. (E.) M. E. hoof, huf; dat. sing. Aufe. Prick of Conscience, 4179; pl. Aover, Gawayn and the Green Knight, 459. - A. S. Auf, to translate Lat. ungula; Wright's Vocab. i. 43. col. 2, 71. col. 2. + Du. Aof. + Icel. Asfr. + Dan. Aov. + Swed. Aof. + G. A. J. Russ. Kopuito, a hoof. + Skt. capka, a hoof, esp. a horse's hoof. Root uncertain. Der. hoof-ed, hoof-less.

HOK, a bent piece of metal. (E.) M. E. hok, Havelok, 1102; pl. Askes, P. Plowman, B. v. 603. – A. S. Ace, Ælfric's Homilies, i. 362; also Acce; 'Arpago, vel palum, koce;' Wright's Vocab., i. 16, sol, 2. + Du. haak, + Icel. haki. + Dan. hage. + Swed. hake, a hook, clasp, hinge. + G. haken, a hook, clasp. Cf. Skt. chakra, a wheel.  $\beta$ . Cf. also Gk. minhos, a circle, whence E. cycle; Skt. huch, to bend. y. Perhaps from the VKAK, to surround, Fick, i. 515; the Skt. Area being from a variant KWAK of the same root. See Hatch (1), Hucklebone. Der. Aook, v.; hook-ed, P. Plowman, B. prol. 53; hook-er; hook-nosed, 2 Hen. IV, iv. 3. 35; also arguebus, q. v.
 ¶ Hence 'by hook or by crook;' Spenser, F. Q. v. 2. 27.
 HOOKAH, HOOKA, a kind of pipe for smoking. (Arab.) Best spelt hooka. 'Divine in hookas, glorious in a pipe;' Byron, The Irland a ii to a Arab have a screbt a vice the series biron.

The Island, c. ii, st. 19. – Arnb. h. ogo, a casket, a pipe, by bill, Cf. Arab. Augg, a hollow place. Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 201; Rich. Dict. p. 574. The initial letter is Ad; the third letter, Adf.

HOOP (1), a pliant strip of wood or metal bent into a band. (E.) M. E. koop, kope, k.ope. 'Hoope, kope, cuncus, circulus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 245. 'Hic circulus, a kope;' Wright's Vocab. i. 276, col. 1. Doubless an E. word, but the supposed A. S. kóp is quite unauthorised, and due to Somner. + Du. hoep, a hoop. β. Cf. also Icel. hop, Lowland Sc. hope, a haven. a bay; named from its ringlike form; also prov. E. kope, meaning (1) a hollow, (2) a mound, according as the flexure is concave or convex.  $\gamma$ . Connected with Gk.  $\kappa \delta \mu \pi \tau \epsilon i r$ , to bend (Fick, iii. 62). The Icel.  $h \delta \rho$  well answers to Skt.  $ch \delta \rho a$ , a bow; from the  $\checkmark$  KAP (nasalised form KAMP), to vibrate, undulate, bend; Fick, i. 39. See Hump, and HOOPOE, the name of a bird. (L.) a. The old name for the bird was houpe or hoore, as in Minsheu's Dict., ed. 1627. This is the The from Lat. upupo, a hoopoe; the initial & in the mod. E. form are from Lat. upupo, a hoopoe; the initial & in the mod. E. form being borrowed from the A in the F. form. y. Called inov in Greek; both Lat. up-up-a and Gk.  $i\pi - o\psi$  (= ap-ap-s) are words of onomatopoetic origin, due to an imitation of the bird's cry.  $\P$  The bird has a remarkable tuft on its head; hence F. Auppe, a tust of feathers. But the tust is named from the bird; not vice versâ.

· HOOT, to shout in derision. (Scand.) M. E. houten, whence the pp. yhouted, yhouted = hooted at; P. Plowman, B. ii. 218; also huten, Ormulum, 2034. Of Scand. origin; the original being preserved in O. Swed. huta, in the phrase huta ut en, lit. to hoot one out, to cast out with contempt, as one would a dog (Ihre); Swed. Auta ut, to take one up sharply. β. Formed from the Swed. interj. hut, begone ! a word prob. of onomatopoetic origin, and perhaps Celtic; cf. W. hut, off | away! Irish ut, out | psha! Gael. ut | ut | interjection of dislike. Y. Cognate with hoot is M. H. G. hiuzen, huzen, to call to the pursuit, from the interjection hiu (mod. G. hui), hallo 1 So also Dan. huie, to shout, hoot, halloo, from hui, hallo 1 The loss of t in the Danish form well illustrates the O. F. huer, to shout. Der. hoot, sb.; Ane, in the phrase Ane and cry; see Hue (2).

HOP (1), to leap on one leg. (E.) Formerly used of dancing on both legs. M. E. hoppen, huppen. 'At every bridal wolde he singe and A ppe,' i. e. dance; Chaucer, C. T. 4373. 'To huppe abowte'= to dance about, P. Plowman, C. xviii. 279.-A. S. hoppian, to leap, dance; Ælfric's Homilies, i. 202, l. 22. + Du. hopjen, to hop. + Icel. hoppa, to hop, skip. + Swed. hoppa, to leap, jump, hop. + Dan. hoppe (the same). + G. huppen (the same).  $\beta$ . All from the  $\beta$ . All from the Teutonic base HUP, to hop, go up and down; Fick, iii. 77.- $\checkmark$  KUP, to go up and down; whence Skt. kup, to be excited, and Lat. cupido, strong desire; see Cupidity. Der. hop, sb. (we still sometimes use hop in the old sense of 'a dance'); hopp-er (of a mill), M. E. hoper or hopper, Chaucer, C. T. 4034, 4037; hop-cotch, a game in which children hop over lines scotched or traced on the ground (see in which children Aop over times scorenea or tracet on the ground (see Scotch); hopp-le, a fetter for horses, causing them to Aop or pro-gress slowly, a frequentative form. Also hobb-le (=hopp-le); see Hobble. Also grass-hopper, q.v. And see Hip (1), Heap, Hump, Hoop (1); all from the same root. HOP (2), the name of a plant. (Du.) In Cotgrave, to translate O.F. Acabelon (= F. Acablon). Also in Minsheu's Dict., ed. 1627. 'Hopper, Homble. Horder', Lorine de vice. 'Hocher', horse', heap! Sir T.

humulus, lupulus;' Levins, ed. 1570. 'Hoppes in byere' [beer]; Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 21. ' Introduced from the Netherlands into England about 1524, and used in brewing;' Haydn, Dict. of B. We Dates. - Du. hop, the hop-plant. + G. hopfen, the hop. B. We also find Icel. humall, Swed. and Dan. humle, O. Du. hommel, the hop (Kilian); whence was formed the late Lat. kumulus, now used as the botanical name. [The F. Acubion is of Walloon origin, and ulti-mately from the Dutch.] Y. These forms must be connected, mately from the Dutch.]  $\gamma$ . These forms must be connected, and point back to a base hump (see Hump) and to the  $\checkmark$  KAMP, to bend; cf. Gk. καμπύλου, bent, crooked, curved; in allusion to the twining nature of the plant. See Hoop (1). 8. This is made clearer by noting that the Gk. novopos, light, Skt. chapala, trembling, 8. This is made unsteady, giddy, wanton, are from the same  $\checkmark$  KAMP; and that the Skt. kamp also means to tremble, vibrate. These words illustrate the loss of m, and further give to the kop the notion of slenderness and lightness as well as of twining.  $\P$  We may also note that the  $\sqrt{KAP}$ , KAMP is probably related to the  $\sqrt{KUP}$ , producing a sort of connection with the verb to kop above. Der. kop-vine, kopbind (corruptly hop-bine). [+]

HOPE (1), expectation; as a verb, to expect. (E.) The verb is weak, and seems to be derived from the sb. M. E. hore, sb., Chaucer, C. T. 88. M. E. hopen, verb, sometimes in the sense 'to expect;' as, 'Our manciple, I hope he wol be deed ' = I fear he will be dead; Chaucer, C. T. 4027. See P. Plowman, C. xviii. 313, and the note. - A. S. hopa, sb., only used in the comp. tohopa. hope, Grein, ii. 545; Appian, v. to hope. Grein, ii. 96. + Du. hoop, sb., hopen, v. + Dan. haab, sb., haabe, v. + Swed. hopp, sb.; whence the reflexive verb hoppas, to hope. + M. H. G. hoff, sb., represented by mod. G. hoff-nung; G. hoffen, to hope.  $\beta$ . Perhaps allied to Lat. cupere, to desire; see Cupidity. Der. hope-ful, hope-ful-ly, hope-ful-ness; hope-less, -ly, -ness. [+]

HOPE (2), a troop. (Du.) Only in the phr. forlorn hope, North's Plutarch, ed. 1631, p. 372; from Du. verloren koop; See Forlorn. the hair through terror. Cf. Skt. Arith, to bristle, said of the hair, where w is unoriginal; see Whoop. Der. hoop-ing-cough, a cough, <sup>B</sup> Here hoop = band, troop. as in 'een hoop krijghs-volck, a troupe or a accompanied with a hoop or convulsive noisy catching of the breath; band of souldiers; 'Hexham. The usual sense is heap; see Heap. formerly called the chincough. See Chincough. ¶ Also spelt HORDE, a wandering troop or tribe. (F., - Turk., - Tatar). Used whooping-cough, but this makes no real difference. the 16th century (Littré). – Turk. ordú, a camp; Pers. ordú, 'a court, camp, horde of Tartars; 'also urdú, a camp, an army; Rich. Pers. Dict., pp. 56, 201. First applied to the Tatar tribes. [†] HOREHOUND, a plant; see Hoarhound.

HORIZON, the circle bounding the view where earth and sky seem to meet.  $(F_{.,-}L_{.,-}Gk.)$  In Shak. 3 Hen. VI, iv. 7. 81. [But we also find M. E. orizonte, Chaucer, Treatise on the Astrolabe, prol. 1. 7. This is (through the O. F.) from the Lat. acc. horizontem.] -F. horizon, 'a horizon;' Cot. - Lat. horizon (stem horizon:-). - Gk. dei(ar, the bounding or limiting circle; orig. the pres. pt. of the vb. opiserv, to bound, limit. - Gk. opos, a boundary, limit; of which the Ionic form is  $\delta v_{\rho o s} = \delta \rho F o s$ , from the base  $\delta \rho$ ; Curtius, ii. 350. –  $\checkmark$  AR, perhaps in the sense of 'reach;' cf. Skt. ri, to go, to go to; Fick assigns the meaning 'to separate;' i. 21. Der. horizon:-al, horizont-al-ly.

HORN, the hard substance projecting from the heads of some animals. (E.) M. E. horn, Chaucer, C. T. 116. - A. S. horn, Grein, animals. (E.) M. E. Morn, Chauder, C. 1. 10.-47.5, Morn, Oren, ii. 98. + Icel., Dan., and Swed. Aorn. + Du. Aorn [for Aorn, the e being due to the trilling of the r.] + G. Aorn. + Goth. Aaurn. + W., Gael., and Irish corn. + Lat. cornu.  $\beta$ . All from a base kar-na, a horn, the -na being a suffix which does not appear in the Gk.  $\epsilon \epsilon_{Pas}$ , a horn (base kar-wa). Probably from  $\sqrt{KAR}$ , to be hard; see Curtius, i. 177, 180. Der. horn-beam, a tree; horn-bill, a bird; hernblende, a mineral term, wholly borrowed from G. horn-blende, where -blende is from blenden, to dazzle, lit. to make blind; horn-book, L. L. L. v. 1. 49; horn-ed, Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 243, spelt hornyd in Prompt. Parv. p. 247; horn-owl or horn-ed owl; horn-pipe, Wint. Tale, iv. 3. 47, a dance so called because danced to an instrument with that name, mentioned in the Rom, of the Rose, 4250; horn-stone; horn-work, a term in fortification, named from its projections; hornless; korn-y, Milton, P. R. ii. 267; also horn-st, q. v. From the same source are corn (2), corn-er, corn-et, &cc.

HORNET, a kind of large wasp. (E). So called from its antennæ or horns. In Holland's Pliny, b. xi. c. 21. - A.S. hyrnet, hyrnyt; the pl. hyrnytta occurs in Exod. xxiii. 28. 'Crabro, hyrnet; Ælfric's Gloss., De Nominibus Insectorum. Formed, with dimin. suffix -et, from horn, a horn, by regular vowel-change; cf. hyrned = homed, Grein, ii. 33. The vowel has, however, reverted in mod. E. to the original o, for clearness. See Horn. [†] HOBOLOGE, an instrument for telling the hours, a clock.

(F., -Lat., -Gk.) In Shak. Oth. ii. 3. 135. Perhaps obsolete. M.E. orologe, Chaucer, C. T. 14860. -O. F. Aorologe, later horloge; 'Horloge, a clock or dyall;' Cot. - Lat. horologium, a sun-dial, a water-clock. - Gk. ώρολόγιον, the same. - Gk. ώρο-, for ώρα, a season, period, hour; and - loyior, formed from léyeir, to tell. See Hour and Logic. Der. horolog-y, horolog-i-c-al. HOBOSCOPE, an observation of the sky at a person's nativity.

(F.,-L.,-Gk.) A term in astrology. In Cotgrave. [Chaucer uses the Lat. term horoscopum; Treatise on the Astrolabe, ed. Skeat, pt. ii. § 4. 8. 36.] - F. horoscope, 'the horoscope, or ascendant at a nativity;' Cot. - Lat. horoscopus, a horoscope; from horoscopus, adj., that shews the hour. - Gk. wpoorkonos, a horoscope ; from the adj. ώpoσκόποs, observing the hour. - Gk. ώpo-, for ωpa, season, hour; and σκοπείν, to consider, related to σκέπτομαι, I consider. See Hour and Spy. Der. horoscop-y, horoscop-i-e, horoscop-ist. HORRIBLE, dreadful, fearful. (F., - L.) M. E. herrible, also written orrible, Chaucer, C. T. 4893. - O. F. horrible, 'horrible, terrible; 'Cot. - Lat. horribilis, terrible, lit. to be trembled at; formed with suffix -bilis from horrere, to tremble, shake. See Horror.

Der. korribl-y, Chaucer, C. T. 15435; korribl-mess. HORBID, dreadful. (Lat.) Directly from Latin. Spenser uses it in the Lat. sense of 'rough.' 'His haughty helmet, korrid all with gold; F.Q. i. 7. 31. - Lat. horridus, rough, bristly, &c. - Lat. horrere, to be rough. See Horror. Der. horrid-19, horrid-ness. HORRIFY, to make afraid, scare. (Lat.) A late word; not in Johnson. Coined, by analogy with words in -fy (mostly of F. origin), from Lat. horrificare, to cause terror. - Lat. horrificus, causing terror. - Lat. horri-, from horrere, to dread; and -ficare, for facere, to make. Der. From Lat. horrificus has also been coined the adj. horrific, Thomson's Seasons, Autumn, 782. See Horror.

HORROR, dread, terror. (Lat.) Formerly also spelt horrowr (Minsheu), as if taken from the French; yet such does not seem to have been the case. We find 'sad horror' in Spenser, F. Q. ii. 7. 23; and horrors in Hamlet, ii. 1. 84, in the first folio edition. Cf. F. horreur, 'horror;' Cot. - Lat. horror, terror, dread. - Lat. horrere, to bristle, be rough; also, to dread, with reference to the bristling of

esp. as a token of fear or of pleasure. Thus horrers is for horsers to crude form of hostil, a guest, an enemy; see Host (2). Again, the (cf. Lat. hirsutus, rough, shaggy); from  $\sqrt{GHARS}$ , to be rough suffix -pit- is supposed to be from Lat. pois, powerful, the old sense (cf. Lat. Airsutus, rough, shaggy); from  $\checkmark$  GHARS, to be rough (Fick, i. 589); probably related to  $\checkmark$  GHAR, to grind; see Grind. Der. From Lat. korrere we have horrent (from the stem of the pres. part.); also korri-ble, q. v., korri-d, q. v.; korri-fy, q. v.; and korri-fic. HORSE, a well-known quadruped. (E.) The final e merely marks that the sis hard, and is not to be pronounced as z. M. E. kors; pl. kors (unchanged), also kors-es, as now. Chaucer, C. T. 74, 10504. 'They sellen bothe here hors and here harneys' - they sell both their horses and their harness; Mandeville's Travels, p. 38. - A. S. Aors, neut.; pl. kors, Grein, ii. 98. + Icel. kross; also hors. + Du. ros. + G. ross, M. H. G. ros, ors, O. H. G. kros. B. It is usual to compare ross, M. H. G. ros, ors, O. H. G. Aros. B. It is usual to compare these words with the Skt. Arest, to neigh; Benfey's Dict., p. 1126. But the comparison, obvious as it may look, is unlikely, since the E. A and Skt. A are not corresponding letters. Indeed, Fick takes the Teutonic type to be HORSA, as if the A.S. were the older form, and ingeniously refers it to a Teutonic root HAR (HOR), to run, cognate with Lat. currere, to run, whence also E. courser with the sense of 'horse.' See Courser. y. This supposition is made more probable by the fact that the same base will account for A S. Aorse, swift, Grein, ii, 98; cf. M. H. G. rosch, swift; and see Rash. Der. korse, verb, Wint. Ta. i. 2. 288; korse-back, M. E. kors-bak, Gower, C. A. iii. 256; horse-block, horse-breaker, horse-fly, horse-guards; Aorse-hair, Cymb. ii. 3. 33; Aorse-leech. Hen. V. ii. 3. 57; Aorse-man, Wint. Ta. iv. 3. 67; Aorse-man-ship, Hen. V. iii. 7. 58; Aorse-power, Aorse-race, korse-racing; Aorse-shoe, Merry Wives, iii. 5. 123; Aorsetail, horse-trainer, horse-whip, sb. and vb. Also numerous other compounds, as horse-bread, horse-flesh, horse-pond, all readily understood. Also horse-chestnut, said to be so called because the nuts were ground and given to horses; the word also occurs in several plant-names, as horse-foot, horse-knop, horse-radish, horse-tail, horse-thistle, horse-tongue, horse-vetch. Also wal-rus.

HORTATORY, full of encouragement. (L.) 'He animated his soldiers with many hortatorie orations; ' Holland, Ammianus, p. 202 (R.) Formed as if from Lat. Aortatorius*, a coined word from hortator, an encourager .- Lat. horta-, stem due to hortari, to encourage; prob. connected with hori (pres. tense horior), to urge, incite. Root uncertain. Der. So also hortative (Minsheu), a better form, from Lat. hortatinus, encouraging; also ex-hort, q. v.

HORTICULTURE, the art of cultivating gardens, gardening. (L.) A modern word. Coined from horti- = horto-, crude form of kortus, a garden; and culture, Englished form of Lat. cultura, culti-vation. See Culture. β. Lat. kortus is cognate with Gk. vation. See Culture.  $\beta$ . Lat. horius is cognate with Gk.  $\chi^{opros}$ , a yard; also with E. garik and yard. See Cohort. Der. Aprticultur-al, horticultur-ist.

HOSANNA, an expression of praise. (Gk., - Heb.) In Matt. xxi. 9, 15; &c. It is rather a form of prayer, as it signifies 's.ve, we pray.' - Gk. woarvá, Matt. xxi. g. - Heb. kóski ak nná, save, we pray (or save, I pray); Ps. cxviii. 25. - Heb. Aúskia', to save, Hiphil of yasha'; and na, a particle signifying entreaty.

HOSE, a covering for the legs and feet ; stockings. (E.) M.E. hose, pl. hosen; Chaucer, C. T. 458; Ancren Riwle, p. 420. – A. S. Aosa, pl. hosan; 'Caliga vel ocrea, hosa;' Wright's Vocab. i. 81, col. 2. + Du. Acos, hose, stocking, spout, water-spout. + Icel. Acos, the hose covering the leg between the knee and ankle,  $\alpha$  kind of gaiter. + Dan. Aose, pl. Aoser, hose, stockings. + G. Aose, breeches. Root unknown. Cf. Russ. hoshulia, a fur jacket. Der. hos i-er, where the inserted i answers to the y in law-y-er, bow-y-er; hos-i-er-y.

HOSPICE, a house for the reception of travellers as guests. (F.,-L.) Modern; chiefly used of such houses in the Alps.-F. hospice, a hospice. - Lat. hospitium, a hospice. - Lat. hospiti-, crude form of hospes, a guest; also, a host. See Host (1), Hospital.

HOSPITABLE, shewing kindness to strangers. (F., -L.) In K. John, ii. 244; Cor. i. 10, 26. – F. Aospitale, 'hospitale; 'Cot. Coined, with suffix -able, from Low Lat. hospitare, to receive as a guest; Ducange. - Lat. hospit., stem of hospes, a guest, host. See Host (1). Der. hospitabl-y, hospitable-ness.

Host (1). Der. kospitabl-y, kospitable-ness. HOSPITAL, a building for receiving guests; hence, one for receiving sick people. (F., - L.) M.E. Asspital, kospitalle; Mandeville's Travels, ed. Halliwell, p. 81; kospital, Eng. Gilds, ed. T. Smith, p. 350, l. 25. - O. F. kospital, 'an hospitall, a spittie;' Cot. - Low Lat. kospitale, a large house, palace, which occurs A. D. 1243 (Brachel); a sing formula formula in a languing and the strangers. a sing, formed from Lat. pl. Aospitalia, apartments for strangers. – Lat. Aospit-, stem of Aospes; see Host (1). Der. Aospitall-er, M. E. Aospitaler Chaucer, C. T. Persones Tale, De Luxuria; hospital-i-ty, As You Like It, ii. 4. 82. Doublets, hostel, hotel, spital. HOST (1), one who entertains guests. (F., -L.) M.E. host, hoste, Chaucer, C. T. 749, 753, &c. = O. F. hoste, 'an hoste, inn-keeper; Cot. Cf. Port. hospede, a host, a guest.-Lat. hospitem, acc. of hospes, (1) a host, entertainer of guests, (2) a guest. B. The base hospit- is commonly taken to be short for hosti-pit-; where hosti- is the suffix -pit- is supproved a lord; cf. Skt. path, a master, governor, lord; onest Y. Thus hospes = hati-pets = guest-master, guestsee Possible. lord, a master of a house who receives guests. Cf. Russ. gospode, the Lord, gospodare, governor, prince; from goste, a guest, and -pode = Skt. pati, a lord. Der. kost-ess, from O. F. kostesse, 'an hostesse,' Cot.; also host-el, q. v., host-ler, q. v., hotel, q. v.; and from the same

 BOST (a), an army. (F., -L.) The orig. sense is 'enemy' or 'foreigner.' M. E. Asst, Chaucer, C. T. 1028; frequently spelt ost. Will. of Paleme, 1127, 1197, 3767.-O. Der. host-ile. Cor. iii. 3. 97, from F. hostile, which from Lat. hostilis; host-ile-ly; host-il-i-ty, K. John, iv. 2. 247, from F. hostilité, which from Lat. acc. hostilitatem. Doublet, guest. ¶ Further remarks are made in Wedg HOST (3), the consecrated bread of the eucharist. (L.) ¶ Further remarks are made in Wedgwood.

'In as many koostes as be consecrate; Bp. Gardner, Of the Presence in the Sacrament, fol. 35 (R.) And in Holland's Plutarch, p. 1097 (R.) Coined by dropping the final syllables of Lat. houia, a victim in a sacrifice; afterwards applied to the host in the eucharist. B. The old form of hostia was fostia (Festus), and it signified ' that which is struck or slain.' - Lat. hostire (old form fostire), to strike.  $\gamma$ . Probably from a  $\checkmark$  GHAS, to strike (Fick, i. 582); whence also E. gad, goad, and Lat. hasta, a spear; cf. Skt. Aims, to strike, an anomalou. esiderative form from han, to strike. See Goad.

HOSTAGE, a person delivered to the enemy as a pledge for the performance of the conditions of a treaty. (F., -L.) In early use. M.E. Aostage, Layamon, 4793, 8905 (later text only). -O.F. Aostage, 'an hostage, pawne, surety, Cot.; mod. F. dage. Cf. Ital. ostaggio; Prov. ostaje, Bartsch, Chrestomathie Prov. col. 173, l. 18. – Low Lat. obsidaticum*, acc. of obsidaticus*, not found, yet preserved also in Ital. statico, a hostage. and regularly formed from late Lat. obsidarus, the condition of a hostage, hostage-ship. Obsidatus is formed (by analogy with principatus from princip-, stem of princeps) from Lat. obsid-, stem of obses, a hostage, one who remains behind with the enemy. - Lat. obsidere, to sit, stay, abide, remain. - Lat. ob, at, on, about ; and sedere, to sit, cognate with E. sit. See Sit. ¶ The h is prosthetic; HOSTEL, an inn. (F., -L.) Now commonly Actel, q. v. M.E. hostel, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 1397; Sir Gawayn and the Grene Knight, 805.-O. F. Asstel, an inn. Regularly contracted from Low Lat. Asspitale; see Hospital. Doublets, Astel, Asspital, spital. Der. hostel-ry, M. E. hostelrie, Chaucer, C. T. 23;

Orig. the inn-keeper himself, so hamed from his hostel. M. E. hostiler, Chaucer, C. T. 241. - O. F. hostelier, 'an inn-keeper;' Cot. - O. F. hostel; see Hostel. HOT, very warm, fiery, ardent. (E.) The vowel was formerly long. M. E. Aot, hoot, hote, hoote, Chaucer, C. T. 396, 1739. 'Nether cold, nether hoot;' Wyclif, Rev. iii. 16. – A. S. Add, hot; Grein, ii. 15. + Du. heet. + Icel. heitr. + Swed. het. + Dan. hed. + G. hein, O. H. G. heiz.  $\beta$ . The common Teut. type is HAITA (Fick, iii. 75), from the hase HIT to be hot to hum (of Inel hit here C. the field). from the base HIT, to be hot, to burn (cf. Icel. hiti, heat, G. hitze); extended from the base HI, to burn, whence Goth. Aais, a torch .-√KI, to burn, Fick, i. 550; but it seems uncertain. Cf. Lithuan. kaitra, heat. Der. hot-bed; hot-blooded, Merry Wives, v. 5. 2; hotheaded; hot-house, Meas. ii. 1. 66; hot-ly, hot-spur. Also heat, q.v.

HOTCH-POT, HODGE-PODGE, a farrago, confused mass. (F., = Du.) Hodge-podge is a mere corruption ; the old term is houspot. The intermediate form hotch-potch is in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 336. 'A hoschpot, or mingle-mangle;' Minsheu. An hotchpotte, incisium;' Levins. - F. hochepot, 'a hotch-pot, or gallimaufrey, a confused mingle-mangle of divers things jumbled or put together; 'Cot. Cf. F. hocher, 'to shake, wag, jog, nob, nod; 'id.-O. Du. Autspot, 'hodge-podge, beef or mutton cut into small pieces;' Sewel. So called from shaking or jumbling pieces of meat in a pot. - O. Du. Auts., base of Autsen, to shake, joit (Oudemans); and Du. pot, a pot. From hutsen was also formed the frequentative verb huiselen, 'to shake up and down, either in a tub, bowl, or basket;' Sewel. The verb huisen was also spelt hoisen (Sewel), which comes still closer to the French. See Hustle and Pot.

HOTEL, an inn, esp. of a large kind. (F., -L.) A modern word; borrowed from mod. F. hôtel = O. F. hostel. See Hostel.

HOTTENTOT, a native of the Cape of Good Hope. (Du.) The word is traced in Wedgwood, who shews that the Dutch gave the natives this name in ridicule of their peculiar speech, which sounded to them like stuttering. He cites the word from Schonten (1653). with house, but probably often supposed to be related to it; the old En is Dutch for 'and;' hence hot en tot='hot' and 'tot;' where  $\int form was house, the addition -ings being English. 'The cattle used$ these words indicate stammering. Cf. hateren, to stammer, in Hex-

HOUDAH, HOWDAH, a seat to be fixed upon an elephant's HOUDAH, HOWDAH, a seat to be fixed upon an elephant's back. (Arab.) Used in works of travel; and in The Surgeon's Daughter, c. xiv. by Sir W. Scott. - Arab. kaudaj, a litter carried by a camel, in which Arabian ladies travel; a seat to place on an elephant's back; Rich. Dict. p. 1694, col. 2; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 100. (Initial letter, kd, the 27th letter.) HOUGH, HOCK, the joint in the hind-leg of a quadruped, between the knee and fetlock, corresponding to the ancle-joint in man; in man, the back part of the knee-joint. (E.) Now generally spelt hock ; but formerly hough. 'Unto the camel's hough ;' 2 Esdras, xv. 36. (A. V.) Cotgrave translates F. jarret by 'the hamme, the hough.' M. E. Asuch, Wallace, ed. Jamieson, i. 322. The pl. Asges occurs in Sir Gawayn and the Grene Knight, l. 1357. - A. S. Aok, the heel; Grein, ii. 92. + Icel. ka, in the comp. hasinn = hock-sinew. + Dan. ha, in the comp. hase, corruption of hasen = hock-sinew. + Du. hak, the heel; also, a hoe. β. Probably allied to Lat. cona, the hip. The E. Acel may perhaps also be related; see Heel. Fick (iii. 59) also compares the Lithuanian kinka, a knee-joint; and the Skt. kaksha, an arm-pit. Der. knugh, verb, to cut the hamstring of a horse, Josh. xi. 6, 2 Sam. viii. 4; often corrupted to Aox, sometimes spelt hocks; see Shak. Wint. Ta. i. 2. 244; Wyclif, Josh. xi. 6 (later version); and examples in Richardson, s. v. hock.

HOUND, a dog. (E.) M.E. hound, hund; P. Plowman, B. v. 261; Havelok, 1994. – A. S. hund, Matt. vii. 6, +Du. hond. + Icel. hundr. + Dan. and Swed. hund. + G. hund. + Goth. hunds. β. All from a Teutonic type HUN-DA, extended from HUN = HWAN; a form cognate with the base of Lat. can-is, a dog, Gk. svár (genitive sur-is), Skt. çvan, a dog; the Aryan base being KWAN, a dog. Hence also Irish cu, Gael. cu, W. ci, a dog; Russ. suka, a bitch. Root uncertain. Der. hound, verb, in Otway, Caius Marius, Act iv. sc. 2 (R.); hound-fear Chourer C. To coop in way. fish, Chaucer, C. T. 9699 ; hound's-tongue.

my view And all his houris beckoning through ;' Byron, The Giaour ; see note 39 to that poem. - Pers. húrí, one virgin of Paradise; húrá, hur, a virgin of Paradise, a black-eyed nymph; so called from their fine black eyes. Cf. Arab. kawrá, fem. of akwar, having fine black eyes; Rich. Arab. Dict. pp. 585, 33; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 206. (The initial letter is ki, the oth letter of the Arab. alphabet).

HOUSE, a dwelling-place; a family. (E.) M. E. hous, Chaucer, C. T. 252. – A. S. Aús, Matt. xii. 25. + Du. Anis. + Icel. hús. + Dan. huus. + Swed. hus. + Goth. hus\*, in the comp. gud-hus, a house of God. + G. haus, O. H. G. hús. B. Probably cognate with Skt. koska or koça, a coop, a sheath, a shell, an egg, an abode, a storeroom. The form of the root is KUS, of uncertain meaning; perhaps related to  $\checkmark$  KU, to cover, and further to  $\checkmark$  SKU, to cover; Fick, i. 537. See Hide (2) and Sky. Der. house, verb, now 'to provide a house for,' as in Gower, C. A. iii, 18, but the M. E. housen also meant 'to build a house,' as in Rob. of Glouc. p. 21, l. 13 (cf. 'housyn, or puttyn yn a howse, domifero ;' ' howsyn, or makyn howsys, domifloo; Prompt. Parv. p. 251); house-breaker, house-breaking; house-hold, M. E. Aouthold, Chaucer, C. L. ii. 104; house-leek, M. E. hows-leke, Prompt. Parv. p. 251; house-less, K. Lear, iii. 4. 26; house-maid, house-steward, house-warming, house-wife, spelt husewif, Ancren Riwle, p. 416, also hosewijf or huswijf, Wyclif, 3 Kings, xvii. 17, and frequently huswife, as in Shak. Cor. i. 3. 76, Romeo, iv. 2. 43; kouse-wife-ry or hus-wife-ry, Oth. ii. 1. 113, with which cf. 'huswyfery, yconomia;' Prompt. Parv. See also Husband, Hussy, Hustings, Hoard.

HOUSEL, the eucharist or sacrament of the Lord's Supper. (E.) The orig. sense is 'sacrifice.' M. E. Aousel, Rom. of the Rose, 6386; P. Plowman, C. xxii, 394. - A. S. Aúsel (for Aunsel), the eucharist; Grein, ii. 112. + Goth. Aunsi, a sacrifice, Matt. ix. 13. B. No doubt derived from a root signifying 'to kill; ' and perhaps con-nected with Gk. mainers, wreiver, to kill, Skt. kskan, to wound, kskin, to hurt, kill, kshi, to destroy, hurt. Der. housel, verb, M. E. hoselen, for draught . . . are covered with housings of linnen ;' Evelyn, Diary, end of May, 1645. 'A velvet bed of state drawn by six horses, houss'd with the same;' Evelyn, Diary, Oct. 22, 1658. 'Spread on his back, the houss and trappings of a beast;' Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metam. b. xii. 582. 'Housse, the cloth which the king's horseguards wear behind the saddle ;' Coles' Dict., ed. 1684. - F. housse, 'a short mantle of course cloth (and all of a peece) worn in ill weather by country women about their head and shoulders; also a footcloth for a horse ; also a coverlet ;' Cot, Cf. Low Lat. Aucia, a long tunic ; housia, a long tunic, coverlet for a horse, also spelt husia, kussia. Ducange dates hucia in A. D. 1326, and husia in A.D. 1259, so that the word is of some antiquity. The sense is clearly ' covering.' β. Of Teutonic origin; Benecke, in his M. H. G. Dict., gives the forms hulst, hulft, a covering, and cites hulft = Low Lat. hulcitum, hulcia, from a gloss; he also gives hulsche, a husk; cf. G. hulse, a husk, shell; Du. Aulse, a huse, hulsel, a woman's head-attire (Sewel). - O. H. G. Aullen, to cover. See Holster, Husk. ¶ The W. Auss, a covering, may be merely borrowed from E. Aouss. [+]

Auss, a covering, may be merely borrowed from E. Aouss. [+] HOVEL, a small hut. (E.) M. E. hovel, hovil. 'Hovylle, lytylle howse, Teges; 'Prompt. Parv. p. 250. 'Hovyl for swyne, or oper beestys;' ibid. A diminutive, with suffix -el, from A. S. hof, a house; Grein, ii. 92; also spelt hofa. 'Edes, hofa; Ædicula, lytel hof;' Wright's Vocab. i. 57, col. 2. + Icel. hof, a temple, a hall. + G. hof, a yard, court. The common Teutonic type is HOFA; Fick, iii 62. Public related to A S. holder to how activity. iii. 63. B. Perhaps related to A. S. habban, to have, contain; cf. Lat. capax, capable of holding. See Have. ¶ Some connect it with A. S. Aebban, to heave, a temple being built up; this does not so well suit the G. sense of 'yard.' Cf. Ck. x7 sos, a garden.

HOVER, to fluctuate, hang about, move to and fro. (E.) In Mach. i. 1. 12. 'Hover, to stay, wait for. "Will you hover till I come?"' E. D. S. Gloss. B. 22, p. 96. A frequentative, with suffix -er, of M. E houen (= hoven), sometimes used in precisely the same sense, and once a common word. 'O night! alas! why nilt thou [wilt thou not] over us kove;' Chaucer, Troil. iii. 1433; also in P. Plowman, C. xxi. 83 (on which see the note); 'Where that she howed and abode;' Gower, C. A. iii. 63; 'He howede and abode;' Seven Sages, ed. Wright, 2825; 'He howede'= he waited, Rob. of Glouc. p. 172, l. 12.  $\beta$ . The orig. sense seems to have been to 'abide' p. 1/2, 1/2by the fact, that, though the A.S. verb Asfam does not occur, we nevertheless find the closely related O. Friesic kovia, to receive into one's house, entertain, whence the sense of merely lodging or abiding easily flows. Similarly, the O. Du. hoven meant to entertain in a house; as, 'Men mag hem huyzen noch hoven' = one may neither lodge nor entertain him (Sewel). The chief difficulty about the word is the existence of W. hofian, hofio, to hover, to fluctuate, to the word is the existence of W. Aogram, Aogro, to nover, to nucluate, to suspend; but possibly the W. word may have been borrowed from the English. Then all is clear. [+] HOW (1), in what way. (E.) M. E. kow, hou, hu; spelt hu, Ancren Riwle, p. 182, l. 20; also hwu, id., p. 256, l. 10; also whow, P. Plowman's Crede, l. 141. – A. S. Aú; Grein, ii. 110. + O. Fries. L. how - D. how - Coth kwaiwa. B. The Goth, form hu, ho, how. + Du. hoe. + Goth. hwaiwa. β. The Goth. form shews that the word is undoubtedly formed from the interrogative pronoun who, which is Goth. hwas, A. S. hwa. And if the Goth. Awaiwa is to be resolved into Awa aiwa = why ever, then how only differs from why by the added aye. See Who, Why, Aye. Or hen. V, i. 2. 91, Cor. i. 9. 70; how-ever, K. John, i. 173; how-so-ever, Haml. i. 5. 84. [†] HOW (2), a hill. (Scand.) Chiefly in place-names; as Silver

How, near Grasmere. M. E. AogA; ' bath ouer hil and AogA' = both over hill and how, Cursor Mundi, 15826 (Göttingen MS.) = Icel. Augr, a how, nound; Swed. Aog, a heap, pile, mound; Dan. Aoi, a hill. See Fick, iii. 77; where it is well remarked that the orig. Teutonic type is HAUGA, which is nothing but the substantive form of the Teutonic adj. HAUHA, high. Cf. Icel. Air, Swed. Aog, HOWDAH, the same as Houdah, q.v. HOWITZER, a short light cannon. (G., - Bohemian.)

Some times spelt howitz; a mod. word, in Todd's Johnson. Borrowed from G. haubitze, a howitzer; a word formerly spelt hauffnitz. - Bohe-How G. Advance, a how let  $f'_{1}$  a word to merry spen Advance. Bone-mian Anufaice, orig. a sling for casting a stone. (Webster, E. Müller.) HOWL, to yell, cry out. (F., -L.) M. E. Aoulea, Chaucer, C. T. 2819; Gower, C. A. ii. 265. – O. F. Auller, 'to howle or yell;' Cot. – Lat. ululare, to shriek, howl. – Lat. ulula, an owl. + Gk.  $b\lambda \hat{\mu}\nu$ , to howl; δλολυγή, a wailing cry. + G. heulen, to howl, hoot as an owl; M.H.G. hiuweln, hiulen, hulen; from G. eule, M.H.G. hiuwel, O.H.G. houselen, P. Plowman, C. xxii, 3; unhousel'd, Hamlet, i. 5. 77. [+] M.H.G. kiuweln, kiulen, kulen; from G. eule, M.H.G. kiuwel, O.H.G. HOUSINGS, trappings of a horse. (F., -G.) Unconnected kiuweld, also úwila (without the aspirate), an owl. See Owl.

HOX, to hamstring; see Hough. HOY (1), a kind of sloop. (Du.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 10. 64. 'Equyppt a hoye, and set hir under sayle ;' Gascoigne, Fruits of War, st. 130. - Du, heu, heude, a kind of fat-bottomed merchantman, a hoy; whence also F. keu, explained by Cotgrave to mean 'a Dutch hoy.' The E. word perhaps answers better to the Flemish form kui, ticed by littré. Of uncertain origin. HOY (2), interj. stop! (Du.) A nautical term. 'When one ship hails another, the words are, What ship, koy? that is, stop, and ship hails another, the words are what ship hoy? tell the name of your ship; 'Pegge, Anecdotes of the English Lan-guage, p. 16 (Todd). - Du. hui, hoy! come! well! An exclamation, like E. ho. See Ho! Der. a-koy, q. v.

HOYDEN, the same as Hoiden, q v.

HUB, the projecting nave of a wheel; a mark at which quoits are cast; &c. (E.) The orig. sense is 'projection.' 'Hubs, naves of wheels;' Marshall's Leicestershire and Warwickshire Words, ed. 1790 (E. D. S.) Marked by Halliwell as an Oxfordshire word. The same word as hob ; see Hob (1), Hump.

HUBBUB, a confused noise. (F., - Teut.) The old spelling is whoobub, Wint. Ta. iv. 4.629; Two Noble Kinsmen, ed. Skeat, ii. 5. 35. Possibly for wheop-whoop, by reduplication ; but, in any case, connected with whoop. - F. houper, to whoop; see Whoop. HUCKABACK, a sort of linen cloth. (Low G.?) 'Huckaback, a sort of linen cloth that is woven so as to lie partly raised;' Bailey, vol. ii. ed. 1731. The word bears so remarkable a resemblance to Low G. hukkebak, G. huckeback, pick-a-back, that it seems reasonable to suppose that it at first meant ' peddler's ware;' see Huckstor.

HUCKLE-BONE, the hip-bone. (E.) 'The hip..., wherein the joint doth move The thigh, 'is called the kuckle-bone;' Chapman, tr. of Homer, Iliad, v. 296. 'Ache in the kuckle-bone;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iv. c. 7. Huckle is the dimin. of prov. Eng. kuck, a hook, common in many dialects (Halliwell); and kuck is a mere variant of hook; thus huck-le = hook-el. Cf. Skt. huck, to bend; the sense of huckle being 'a small joint.' See Hook. ¶ Similarly, ¶ Similarly, kuckle-backed, 'having round shoulders' (Webster), is the equivalent of crook-backed, as regards its sense.

HUCKSTER, a peddler, hawker, retailer of small articles. (O. Du.) Properly a feminine form, the corresponding masc. form being hawker, as now spelt, though it should rather have been hucker. We have the expression she hath holden holder to be of the best and a huckster's trade; P. Plowman, B. v. 227. But the A.S. distinction in gender between the terminations or and oter was lost at an early period, so that the word was readily applied to men. 'Hwkstare, hukstere, auxionator, auxionatrix, auxionarius. Hukstare of frute, colibista; ' Prompt. Parv. p. 252. Huester, as a gloss to institorem; Wright's Vocab. i. 123. 'Forr patt te33 turndenn Godess hus intill hucesteress bobe' = for that they turned God's house into a huckster's booth; Ormulum, 15816, 7. β. An O. Low G. word, but it does not appear in A. S. The related words are Du. heuker, a retailer, Aenken, to retail; also 'Aenkeren, to sell by retail, to huckster; henk-elaar, a huckster, retailer;' Sewel's Du. Dict. Also Swed. hökare, a cheesemonger, kökeri, higgling; Dan. kökere, a chandler, huckster, kökeri, the huckster's trade; kökerske. a 'huxteress' (this form is just the Dan. equivalent of E. huckster); hukre, to huckster. y. The word was imported, about A.D. 12CO, probably from the Nether-lands; the termination -seer being Dutch as well as English, as shewn by Du. spin-ster, a spinster, &c. 8. The etymology is much disputed; but it is solved by Hexham's Du. Dict., which gives us hucken, to stoop or bow; een hucker, a stooper, bower, or bender; onder eenen swaren last hucken, to bow under a heavy burden; een hucker, a huckster, or a mercer. Compare also the Icel. hokra, to go bent, to crouch, creep, slink about, on which it is noted that 'in modern usage hokra means to live as a small farmer, whence hokr, in bu hokr, small farming; 'Cleasby and Vigfusson. Nothing could be more fitting than to describe the peddler of olden times as a croucher, creeper, or slinker about ; his bent back being due to the bundle upon it. (See Sir W. Scott's description of Bryce Snailsfoot in The Pirate.) e. Hence the word is directly derived from O. Du. huycken, huken, to stoop down, crouch (Oudemans). Cf. Icel. huka, to sit on one's hams, with its deriv. hokra; Low G. huken, to crouch (Brem. Wört.); E. hook, hug; with which cf. Skt. kuck, to bend. So also G. hucke is properly the bent back, whence G. Auckeback, pick-a-back; G. Aocken is to squat, and G. köcker means (1) a hump on the back, and (2) a huckster. See Hug, Hucklebone, Hook, Hawker.

HUDDLE, to throw together confusedly, to crowd together. (E.)

B. All from  $\checkmark$  UL, to howl; cf. Skt. wlúka, an owl; Fick, i. 511. Crowd; see Merch, of Ven. iv. 1. 28; Much Ado, ii. 1. 152. 'To Minsheu. Rare in early writers; but the equi-influence. Even in German, the  $\lambda$  is unoriginal; cf. Icel. ýla, to howl. Der. Aoul, sb.; also Aurly-wirky, q. v. [†] HOX, to hamstring; see Hough. HOX. thy Scots are scattered, and huddled together in their huts; Rob. Manning, tr. of Langtoft, ed. Hearne, p. 273. B. But again, this M. E. koderen also had the sense of 'cover;' as in 'kodur and β. But again, happe'= cover and wrap up; Le Bone Florence, 112, in Ritson's Met. Romances, vol. iii; and the true notion of kuddle or kudder was to crowd together for protection or in a place of shelter, a notion bill preserved when we talk of cattle being huddled together in rain.  $\beta$ . Briefly, koderen is the frequentative of M. E. kuden, to hide, Ancren Riwle, p. 174, more frequently written kiden, whence mod. E. kide; see Hide. Thus to kuddle is to hide closely, to crowd together for protection, to crowd into a place of shelter. The change from hudder to kuddle was probably due to the influence of the derived sb. kudels (=A.S. sydels), a hiding-place; Ancren Riwle, p. 146; Wyclif, Deut. xxvii. 15. 8. The notion of doing things hastily may Deut. xxvii. 15. have been due to the influence of Du. Autsen, to shake, jolt (see Hustle); and see houd, houdle, hot, holte, hour (all connected with hustle), in Jamieson's Scot. Dict. The connection with G. hustle), in Jamieson's Scot. Dict. hudeln, to bungle, is to be rejected; this verb belongs to hustle: yet it may have influenced the later and extended senses of kuddle. The etymology given above is curiously verified by the Low G. Audderken, used chiefly of hens, meaning to sit upon the chickens and keep them warm; also of children, as, de Kinder in der Slaap kudderken = to lull the children asleep. That is, the hens huddle up the chickens, and the nurses the children. Moreover, this Audderken is the frequentative of Low G. Aüden, to hide, with insertion of k, characteristic of diminution. See Bremen Wörterb. ii. 665. For Perhaps it may be well to remark that G. kudeln = Du. koetelen Swed. Autla, Dan. Autle, to bungle; and the corresponding E. word, if it existed, would take the form Autile, not Autole. [+] HUE (1), show, appearance, colour, tint. (E) M. E. Aeue, often a dissyllabic word; Chaucer, C. Huff, to puff or blow, to rant or vapour; 'Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Hence kuffer, a braggart ; 'By such a braggadocio kuffer;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3, l. 1034. The old sense was 'to blow' or 'puff up.' 'When as the said winde within the earth, able to Auffe up the ground, was not powerful enough to breake forth and make issue; 'Holland's Pliny, b. ii. c. 85. Also spelt hoove; 'But if it thunder withall, then suddenly they [the pearl-oysters] shut all at once, and breed only those excressences . . like vato bladders puft vp and hoosed with wind; 'Holland's Pliny, b. ix. c. 35.  $\beta$ . Of imitative origin; cf. Lowland Sc. hauch (with guttural ch), the forcible respiration of one who exerts all his strength in giving a stroke; heck (with guttural ch), to breathe hard; Jamieson. We find huf, puf, and haf, haf in Reliq. Antiq. i. 240, to represent forcible blowing; cf. puff. We find the cognate word in the G. kauchen, to breathe, blow, puff. Also, kuff probably stands for an older kugh, with a final guttural. Cf. Puff, Whiff. ¶ It is likely that the form koow arose from confusion with koven, the old pp. of to heave. Dor. huff, at draughts, simply means 'to blow;' it seems to have been customary to blow upon the piece removed; Jamieson gives 'blaw, to blow, also, to huff at draughts; I blow, or blow you, I take [i. e. huff] this man.' (So also in Danish; blass en brikke, to huff (lit. blow) a man at draughts.) Also huff-er, in Hudibras, as above; huff-ish, huff-ish-ly, huff-ish-ness, huff., huff-iness. HUG, to embrace closely. (Scand.) In Shak. Merch. of Ven. ii. 6. 16; Rich. III, i. 4. 252; &c. The original sense is to squat, cower in his bed for cold. B. Of Scand. origin; best shewn in the Used in late authors in the sense of performing a thing hastily; see Dan. sidde paa hug (lit. to sit in a crouched form, to sit in a hook), examples in Todd; but it simply meant, originally, to throng or to squat upon the ground, sit on one's hams. The verb is the Swed.

kuka, in the phrase kuka sig, to squat down; Icel. kuka, to sit on one's hams. It appears again in the O. Du. kuycken, kuken, to crouch, G. kocken, to crouch, squat, Skt. kuch, to bend.  $\gamma$ . Fick refers these to the  $\checkmark$  KUK, KWAK, to bend; related to  $\checkmark$  KAK, to surround; i. 36. Closely related words are Hucklebone, Hook, Hunch, &c.

HUGE, very great, vast. (F.) M. E. Auge, Chaucer, C. T. 2953; P. Plowman, B. xi. 242; Will. of Palerne, 2569. Oddly spelt Aogge; an Aogge geaunt; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 31, 1. 17. The etymology is much disguised by the loss of an initial a, mistaken for the E. indef. article; the right word is always. (The same loss occurs in M. E. avou, now always vow, though this is not quite a parallel case, since vow has a sense of its own.) - O. F. ahuge, huge, vast ; a 12th-century word. In the account of Goliath, in Les Livres des Rois, we find: 'É le fer de la lance sis cenz, e la hanste sud grosse e aluge cume le suble as teissures' = and the iron of his lance weighed six hundred (shekels), and the shaft (of it) was great and huge as a weaver's beam; Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, col. 45, 1. 36. The word is spelt alwgue in Roquefort, who cites this passage, and points out that it corresponds with the E. word.  $\beta$ . Of unknown origin; but not improbably from the old form of mod. G. erhöhen, to exalt, heighten, increase, from the did form of mod. G. ernomen, to exalt, heighten, increase, from the adj. hock, M. H. G. houck, high, cognate with E. High. [1] Der. huge-ly; huge-ness, Cymb. i. 4. 157. HUGUENOT, a French protestant. (F., -G.) 'Huguenots, Calvinists, Reformists, French Protestants;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. And in Minsheu. - F. huguenots, s. pl. 'Huguenots, Calvinists, Reformists;' Cot. Named from some person of the name of Huguenot, who was at some time conspicuous as a reformer. Such was Mahn's conjecture, who added that the name was probably a diminutive of F. Hugues, Hugh, and was nothing but a Christian B. The conjecture is perfectly verified by Littre's disname. covery, that Huguenot was in use as a Christian name two centuries before the time of the Reformation. 'Le 7 octobre, 1387, Pascal Huguenot de Saint Junien en Limousin, docteur en decret; Hist. Litt. de la France, t. xxiv. p. 307. Cf. Jeannot as a dimin. of Jean. Y. The F. Hugues is of German origin. M. H. G. Húg, Húc, Hugh; lit. a man of intelligence, a thoughtful man. - O. H. G. hugu, thought; Auggen, to think; the verb being cognate with Lat. cogitare, to think. See Cogitate. ¶ Scheler enumerates 15 false etymologies of this word; the favourite one (from G. eidgenossen) being one of the worst, as it involves incredible phonetic changes. [+]

HULK, a heavy ship. (Low Lat., -Gk.) Sometimes applied to the body of a ship, by confusion with kull; but it is quite a different word, meaning a heavy ship of clumsy make; Shak. Troil. ii. 3. 277. The kulks were old ships used as prisons. M. E. kulke. 'Hulke, shyppe, Hulcus; 'Prompt. Parv. p. 252. 'Hulke, a shyppe, heurcque;' Palsgrave. 'Orque, a kulk or huge ship;' Cot. - Low Lat. kulka, a heavy merchantship, a word used by Walsingham; see quotation in Way's note to Prompt. Parv.; also spelt kulcus, as quoted above. Also spelt (more correctly) kolcas; Ducange. - Gk.  $\delta\lambda\alpha ds$ , a ship which is towed, a ship of burden, merchantman. - Gk.  $\delta\lambda\alpha ds$ , a ship which is towed, a ship of burden, merchantman. - Gk.  $\delta\lambda\alpha ds$ , to draw, drag; whence also  $\delta\lambda\alpha ds$ , a dragging,  $\delta\lambda\alpha ds$ , a machine for dragging ships on land; from the base  $f \epsilon \lambda s$ . + Russ. vlecke, vleskck', to trail, drag, draw. + Lithuan. welku, I pull. B. The form of the root is WALK, for WARK; the sense is perhaps 'to pull.' See Curtius, i. 167. Der. kulk-ing, kulk-y, i.e. bulky or unwieldy. GP Not the same word as M. E. kulke, a hovel, Wyclif, Isaiah, i. 8; which is from A. S. kule, a hut; Wright's Vocab i, 58. [+]

HOLL (1), the husk or outer shell of grain or of nuts. (E.) HULL (1), the husk or outer shell of grain or of nuts. (E.) M. E. hule, hole, hole. 'Hoole, hole, holl, or huske, Siliqua;' Prompt. Parv. p. 242. 'Hull of a beane or pese, escosse. Hull or barcke of a tree, escorce;' Palsgrave; and see Way's note in Prompt. Parv. Pesse hole (or pese hule) = pea-shell; P. Plowman, B. vii. 194, in two MSS.; see the footnote. – A. S. hulu, a husk; in two glosses (Leo). Connected with the causal verb Aulian \*, to hide, cover, not found in A. S., but appearing at a very early period, and spelt hules in the Ancren Riwle, p. 150, note a; so also 'Aule and huide' = cover up and hide, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 279, I. 4. Cognate words are O. Saxon biaulean, to cover, Heliand, 1406 (Cotton MS.); Du. hullen, to put a cap on, mask, disguise; Goth. Auljan, to hide, cover; G. ver-hüllen, to wrap up; Icel. Ayja, to hide, cover; Swed. kölja, to cover, veil; Dan. Aylle, to wrap.  $\beta$ . All from  $\checkmark$  KAL, to hide; see further under Holstor. Der. see Ausk, housing:

HULL(2), the body of a ship. (E.) Not in very early use. 'She never saw above one voyage, Luce, And, credit me, after another, her Andl Will serve again;' Beaumont and Fletch. Wit Without Money, i. 2. 17. The Andl is, literally, the 'shell' of the ship, being the same word with the above; see Hull (1).  $\beta$ . But it is probable that its use with respect to a ship was due to some confusion with Du. Aol, the hold of a ship; see Hold (2). Der. Andl, werb, to float about, as a ship does when the sails are taken down, humbugg-er.

Shak. 1'w. Nt. i. 5. 217; Rich. III, iv. 4. 438; Hen. VIII, ii. 4. 199. So in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, we find: 'Hull, the body of a ship, without rigging. Hulling is when a ship at sea takes in all her sails in a calm.' [+]

HUM. [+] HUM (1), to make a low buzzing or droning sound. (E.) M. F. Aummen; Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 1199; Palladius on Husbandry, ed. Lodge, vii. 124. Of imitative origin. + G. Aummen, to hum. Cf. also Du. Aommelen, to hum; the frequentative form. Der. Aum (2), q. v., Aum-bug, q. v., Aum-drum, q. v., Aumble-bee, q. v.; also Aumm-ingbird, Pope's Dunciad, iv. 46, called a Aum-bird, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. vi. c. 8. § 10.

HUM (2). to trick, to cajole. (E) A particular use of the word above. In Shak. Aum not only means to utter a low sound, as in Temp. ii. 1. 317, but also to utter a sound expressive of indignation, as in 'turns me his back And Aums,' Macb. iii. 6. 42; 'to bite his lip and Aum At good Cominius,' Cor. v. 1. 49. See Richardson and Todd, where it further appears that applause was formerly expressed by Aumming, and that to Aum was to applaud; from applause to flattery, and then to cajolery, is not a long step. See the passage in Ben Jonson, The Alchemist, Act i. sc. 1, where Subtle directs his dupe to 'cry Aum Thrice, and then buz as often;' shewing that the word was used in a jesting sense.  $\beta$ . Wedgwood well points out a similar usage in Port. zumbir, to buzz, to hum, zombar, to joke, to jest; to which add Span. zumbar, to hum, resound, joke, jest, make one's self merry, zumbon, waggish. Der. Aum, sb. a hoax (Todd); Aumbug, q. v. Cf. Aumk 1 interj., Beaum. and Fletcher, Mons. Thomas, i. 2.

HUMAN, pertaining to mankind (F., -L.) Formerly Aumaine, but now conformed to the Lat. spelling. 'All Aumaine thought;' Spenser, F. Q. vi. 3. 51. 'I meruayle not of the inhumanities that the Aumain people committent;' Golden Book, lett. 11 (R.) = O. F. Aumain, 'gentle, ... humane, manly;' Cot. = Lat. Aumanus, human. -Lat. hom-o, a man. See Homage. Der. Auman-ly, Auman-ise, Aumanis-s-ai-ion, Auman-sist, Auman-kind; also Auman-i-y, M. E. Aumanitee, Chaucer, C. T. 7968, from O. F. Aumaniteit, which from Lat. acc. Aumanitatem, nom. Aumanitas; hence Aumanit-ar-i-an. And see Humano. GP The accent distinguishes Auman, of French origin, from Aumane, taken directly from Latin. The older word has the accent thrown back; see below.

HUMANE, gentle, kind. (Lat.) In Shak., Aumane (so spelt) does duty both for Auman and Aumane, the accent being always on the former syllable; see Schmitz, Shak. Lexicon. Hence it has the sense of 'kind;' Temp. i. 2. 346. We have now differentiated the words, keeping the accent on the latter syllable in Aumaine, to make it more like the Lat. Aumanus. We may therefore consider this as the Lat. form. Both Lat. Aumanus and F. Aumain have the double sense (1) human, and (2) kind. See Human. Der. Aumans-ly, Aumane-ness.

HUMBLE, lowly, meek, modest. (F., -L.) M. E. kumble, Chaucer, C. T. 8700. - O. F. (and F.) kumble, 'humble;' Cot. (With excressent b.) - Lat. kumilis, humble; lit. near the ground. - Lat. kumus, the ground; kumi, on the ground; whence also E. kuman and komage. See Human, Homage. Der. kumbley; humble-ness (formerly kumblesse, Chaucer, C. T. 1783). Also, from Lat. kumilis, kumili-iy, q. v., kumili-ate, q. v. Also, from Lat. kumus, ex-kume, q. v. And see Chameleon.

HUMBLE-BEE, a humming bee. (E.) To kumble is to hum; or more literally, to hum often, as it is the frequentative form, standing for kummele; the b being excrescent. 'To kumble like a bee;' Minsheu. M. E. kumbelen, for kummelen. 'Or elles lyk the kumbeling [old texts, kumbing] After the clappe of a thundring;' Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, ii. 531. Hence the deriv. kombull-be; Reliquize Antiquze, ed. Wright and Halliwell, i. 81. 'Hic tabanus, a kumbyl-bee;' Wright's Vocab. i. 255. + Du. kommelen, to hum, a frequentative form: kommel, a humble-bee, a drone. + G. kummel, a humble-bee; kummen, to hum. See Hum (1).

HUMBUG, a hoax, a piece of trickery, an imposition under fair pretences. (E.) 'Humbug, a false alarm, a bugbear;' Dean Milles MS. (written about 1760), cited in Halliwell. The word occurs in a long passage in The Student, vol. ii. p. 41, ed. 1751, cited in Todd. The earliest trace of the word is on the title-page of an old jest-book, viz. 'The Universal Jester, or a pocket companion for the wits; being a choice collection of merry conceits, drolleries, ... bon-mots, and Aumbugs,' by Ferdinando Killigrew, London, about 1735-40. See the Slang Dictionary, which contains a very good article on this word. It is a mere compound of Aum, to cajole, to hoax, and the old word bug, a spectre, bugbear, ghost; the sense being 'sham bugbear' or 'false alarm,' exactly as given by Dean Milles. The word has changed its meaning from 'false alarm 'or 'sham scare' to 'false pretence' or 'specious cheat;' an easy change. See Hum (3) and Bug. Der. Aumbug, verb; Aumbug, sb., improperly used for Aumbug-ar. adj., signifying monotonous, droning, tedious, as in 'an old humdrum fellow; Addison, Whig Examiner (1710), No. 3 (Todd). Merely compounded of hum, a humming noise, and drum, a droning sound. See Hum (1) and Drum.

HUMERAL, belonging to the shoulder. (Lat.) . Humeral muscle, the muscle that moves the arm at the upper end;' Kersey. ed. 1715.-Low Lat. Aumeralis, belonging to the shoulder; cf. Lat. humerale, a cape for the shoulders. - Lat. humerus, better umerus, the shoulder. + Gk.  $\delta \mu \omega s$ , the shoulder + Goth. amsa, the shoulder. + shoulder. + Gk. amad, the shoulder + Gohn. amad, the shoulder. -Skt. amsa, the shoulder.  $\beta$ . All from  $\checkmark$  AM, of uncertain meaning; perhaps 'to be strong.' HUMID, moist. (F.,-L.) In Milton, P. L. iv. 151; and in Cotgrave. - F. Aumide, 'humid, moist;' Cot. - Lat. Aumidus, better umidus, moist. - Lat. kumēre, better umēre, to be moist; from a base UG, whence also unens, moist, unidus, udus, moist. + Gk. by-pos, moist.  $\beta$ . From  $\checkmark$  UG, earlier form WAG, to moisten, wet; whence also Skt. with, to wet, sprinkle; also (from the earlier form) Icel. vokr, moist, prov. E. wokey, moist (Halliwell), and M. E. wokien, to moisten, P. Plowman, C. xv. 25. See Cartius, i. 229; Fick, i. 287. Der. Aumid-ness, Ammid-i-ty, Merry Wives, iii. 3. 43; and see Aumour. HUMILIATE, to make humble. (Lat.) A late word, really HUMILIATE, to make humble. (Lat.) A late word, really suggested by the sb. Aumiliation, used in Milton, P. L. iii. 313, x. 1091. The verb is formed from Lat. kumiliatus, pp. of kumiliare, to humble. - Lat. humili-, crude form of humilis, humble See Humble. Der. Animiliation (formed by analogy with other words in -ation) from Lat. acc. Aumiliationem, nom. Aumiliatio.

HUMILITY, humbleness, meckness. (F.,-L.) M. E. Aumi-litee, Chaucer, C. T. 13405.-O. F. Aumiliteit, later Aumilité.-Lat. acc. humili:atem, from nom. humilitas, humility. - Lat. humili-, crude form of Aumilis, humble. See Humble.

HUMOUR, moisture, temperament, disposition of mind, caprice. (F.,-L.) See Trench, Select Glossary, and Study of Words. 'He knew the cause of enery maladye, And wher engendred, and of what Aumour; Chaucer, C. T. 422, 423. [The four Aumours, according to Galen, caused the four temperaments of mind, viz. choleric, melancholy, phlegmatic, and sanguine.]-O.F. humor (Littré), later humeur, 'humour, moisture; 'Cot. - Lat. Aumõrem, acc. of Aumor, moisture. - Lat. Aumõre, better umēre, to be moist. See Humid. Der. humour, verb, humor-ous, humor-ous-ly, humor-ous-ness, humourless, humor-ist; from the same source, hum-ect-ant, moistening (rare). HUMMOCK, HOMMOCK, a mound, hillock, mass. (E.) 'Common among our voyagers,' Rich.; who refers to Anson, Voyage round the World, b. ii. c. 9; Cook, Second Voyage, b. ii. c. 4. It appears to be merely the diminutive of Aump, which again is merely a nasalised form of kaap. Cf. Du. komp, a hump, hunch ; 'een komp kaas, a lunch [i. e. hunch] of cheese; 'Sewel. 'Hompelig, rugged, cragged;' id. So too Low G. kümpel, a little heap or mound; Bremen Wörterb. ii. 669. Hummock is formed with dimin. -ock. as in hill-ock ; whilst the Low G. hump-el is formed with the dimin. -el. See Hump, Hunch.

HUMP, a lump, bunch, esp. on the back. (E.) 'Hump, a hunch, or lump, Westmoreland; Halliwell. Of O. Low G. origin, and may be claimed as E., though not in early use. 'Only a natural hump' [on his back]; Addison, Spectator, no. 558. 'The poor hump-backed gentleman; id. no. 559. + Du. komp, a hump, lump; cf. Low G, kümpel, a small heap, Bremen Wörterbuch, ii. 669. β. A nasalised form of heap, and from the same source, viz. the Teut. base HUP. to go up and down, preserved in E. Aop; see Heap, Hop (1). γ. The Aryan root is √ KUP, KUBH, to go up and down, bend about (Fick, iii. 77); whence also Gk. rôpos, a hump, rópapa, a hump on the back, suppowros, hump-backed; Lithuan. humpas, hunched; also Skt. hubja, hump-backed; and see Benfey's note on Skt. kumbha, a pot. Der. kump-backed ; kumm-ock, q. v. ; kumch, q. v. HUNCH, a hump, bump, a round or ill-shaped mass. (E.) Used as nearly a parallel form to hump, but the likeness in sense is due to the similar sense of the roots of the words. It is really the nasalised form of Aook; see Hook. Hunch-backed occurs in the later quarto edd. of Shak. Rich. III, iv. 4. 81 (Schmidt). 'Thy crooked mind within Aunch'd out thy back; Dryden, qu. in Todd (no reference).  $\beta$ . Without the nasal, we find E. hook and hug, Icel. hokra, to go bent, crouch, huka, to sit on one's hams, O. Du. huychen, huken, to stoop down, crouch (Oudemans), O. Low G. Auken, to bend one's self together, squat down (Bremen Wörterb. ii. 665); G. Aucke, the bent back, höcker, a hunch on the back, köckerig, hunch-backed. See Hug.  $\gamma$ . In Skt. we have both forms, with and without the nasal; kunch, to bend, divinchita, contracted; kuch, to bend, sam kuch, to contract one's self. 8. All from  $\checkmark$  KUK, for KWAK, to bend; Fick, i. 36. Der. hunch, vb., hunch-backed.

HUNDRUM, dull, droning. (E.) Used as an adv., with the HUNDRED, ten times ten. (E.) M. E. hundred, Chancer, C. T. sense of 'idly' or 'listlessly' in Butler. 'Shall we, quoth she, stand still hum-drum?' Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3. 1. 113. But it is properly an adj., signifying monotonous, droning, tedione as in ten old the list of the stand of the n. 111; and real, if real, speech, discourse, but here used in the early sense of reckoning or rate; cf. Goth. garatkjan, to reckon, number, Matt. x. 30; and see Rate, Read.  $\beta$ . The same suffix occurs not only in Icel. hund-rad, O. H. G. hund-erit, but also in Icel. átt-rædr, eighty, ní-rædr, ninety, ti-rædr, a hundred, and tolfrådr, a hundred and twenty. And as Icel. att-, ni-, ti-, and tolf- mean eight, nine, ten, and twelve respectively, it is seen that the 'rate' of numbering was originally by teus; moreover, hundred = tenth-red, as will appear. Y. We easily conclude that the word grew up by the unnecessary addition of -red (denoting the rate of counting) to the old word hund, used by itself in earlier times. 8. Dismissing the suffix, we have the cognate O. H. G. hunt (also once used alone). Goth. hund, W. cant, Gael. ciad, Irish cead, Lat. centum, Gk. &- war-ir, e. All from an Aryan form Skt. çata, all meaning a hundred. KANTA, a hundred. It is known (from Gothic) that KANTA stands for DAKANTA, tenth, from DAKAN, ten, and originally meant the tenth ten, i.e. the hundred; the Gothic (in speaking of a single hundred) has the full form taihun-taihund, a hundred ( = dakandakanta), i. e. ten-tenth. Hence hund = t-enth without the t, just as The M. E. hundreth is a Scand. form : centum = de-centum, &c. from the Icel. hundrad. Der. hundred-th, hundred-fold, hundred-weight, often written cwt., where c = Lat. centum, and wt = Eng. weight.

HUNGER, desire of food. (E.) M. E. Aunger, Chaucer, C. T. 14738.-A. S. Aungor, Grein, ii. 111. + Icel. Aunger, + Swed. and Dan. hunger. + Du. honger. + G. hunger. + Goth. huhrus, hunger; whence β. Probably allied to Skt. Auggrjan (= Aungrian), to hunger. kuich, to make narrow, contract, kuichana, shrinking; so that hunger denotes the feeling of being shrunk together, like the expressive prov. E. clemmed, lit. pinched, used in the phr. ' clemm'd wi' hunger.' See Hunch and Hug. Der. hunger, verb = A.S. hyngran (with vowel-change of u to y); hungry = A.S. hungrig (Grein); hungri-ly; hunger-bitten, Job, xviii. 12.

HUNT, to chase wild animals. (E.) M. E. hunten, konten, Chaucer, C. T. 1640 .- A. S. kuntian ; see Ælfric's Colloguy, in Thorpe's Analecta, p. 21. Properly 'to capture;' a secondary verb formed from a supposed verb kindan\*, pp. kunden\*; only found in Gothic. We find however another A.S. derivative from the same source, viz. hentan, to seize, also a weak verb; Grein, ii. 34.  $\beta$ . So also we find Goth. Aunths, captivity, Eph. iv. 8; formed from the pp. Aunthans of the  $\beta$ . So also we find Goth. verb kinikan (pt. t. hanth), to seize, take captive, only used in the comp. fra-hinthan, with pp. fra-hunthans, a captive, Luke, iv. 19. y. The base HANTH is a nasalised form of HATH, equivalent to Aryan ✓ KAT, to fell, to drive, appearing in Skt. oùtaya, to fell, to drive, a causal from Skt. oad, to fall (= Lat. cadere), from ✓ KAD, to fall. Fick, i. 56. Der. Aunt, sb.; Aunt-er, later form for M. E. Aunte, Chaucer, C. T. 1638, from A. S. Aunta, a hunter, in Ælfric's Colloquy; hunt-r-ess, with F. suffix -ess, As You Like It, iii. 2. 4; hunt-ing, sb., hunt-ing-box, hunt-ing-seat; hunt-s-man (= hunt's man), Mid. Nt. Dr.

Aumi-ing-oox, Aumi-ing-seat; Anni-s-man (= Aumi s man), Mid. N. Dr. iv. 1. 143; Aunts-man-ship; Aunts-up (= the Aunt is up. i. e. beginning), Rom. iii. 5. 34, replaced by the Aunt is up, Tit. Andron. ii. 2. 1. HURDLE, a frame of twigs interlaced or twined together, a frame of wooden bars. (E.) M. E. Aurdel; pl. Aurdles, K. Alisaun-der, 6104. – A. S. Ayrdel; 'cleta, cratis, Ayrdel; 'crates, i. e. flecta, Ayrdel; 'Wright's Vocab. i. 26. col. 2, 34. col. 1. A dimin. from an A.S. base hurd*, not found, but having several cognates, as seen below. + Du. horde, a hurdle. + Icel. hurd. + G. hurde, M. H. G. hurt. + Goth. haurds, a door, i.e. one made of wicker-work, Matt. vi. 6. y. All from a Teut. base HORDI, from a Teut. verb HARD, to weave. Cognate with Lat. crates, cratis, a hurdle, Gk. sápralos, a (woven) basket, from & KART, to weave; whence also Skt. krit, to spin, chrit, to connect together. See Fick, i. 525, iii. 68. Der. Aurdle, verb, pp. Aurdled, Milton, P. L. iv. 186. Doublet, crate, q. v. HURDY-GURDY, a kind of violin, but played by turning a wheel. (E.) 'Hum ! plays, I see, upon the Aurdy-gurdy;' Foote's play of Midas (Todd). Foote died a. D. 1777. It is in vain to seek far for the etymology, as it was doubtless coined in contempt, to express the disagreeable sound of the instrument, and is of purely imitative the disgreeable sound of the institutient, and is of purely initiative origin. Cf. Lowland Sc. kur, to snarl; gurr, to snarl, growl, purr; Jamieson. 'R is the dog's letter, and kurretk in the sound;' Ben Jonson, Eng. Grammar. The word seems to have been fashioned on the model of kurly-burly. See Hurry. [†] HURL, to throw rapidly and forcibly, to push forcibly, drive. (F., = C.; with E. suffix.) 'And kurlest [Tyrwhitt has kurlest] all from set till conject.

(F., -C.; with E. suffix.) 'And hurlest [Tyrwhitt has hurlest] al from est till occident and whirlest all from east to west; Chaucer, C. T. Group B, 297 = 1. 4717. Into which the flood was karlid; Wyclif, Luke, vi. 49, in six MSS.; but seventeen MSS. have karlid. So again, in Luke, vi. 48, most MSS. have Aurilid, but eight have go Aurilid. In the Ancren Riwle, p. 166, we find 'mid a lutel Auriange'= with a slight collision; where another reading is hurlinge. is plain that Aurl is, in fact, a contraction of Aurile; for the M.E. hurlen and hurlen are equivalent words, used in the sense of to push violently, jostle, strike with a forcible collision. For those who wish to make the comparison, further references are (1) for hurlen: Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 211; Poems and Lives of Saints, ed. Furnivall, xxiii. 25; Will. of Palerne, 1243; Legends of the Holy Rood, p. 140; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 44, 223, 376, 413, 874, 1204, 1211; Destruction of Troy, 1365; Rob. of Glouc. p. 487, 537; Fabyan's Chron., an. 1380-1 (R.); Spenser, F. Q. i. 5. 2, &c.; (2) for hurtlen, Wyclif, Jerem. xlviii. 12; Prompt. Parv. p. 253; Will. of Palerne, 5013; Pricke of Conscience, 4787; Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, Cleopatra, 59; &c. Y. The equal value of these Good Women, Cleopatra, 59; &c. v. The equal value of these words is best seen in passages where they are followed by together, and express 'collision.' Thus, we have: 'thet hurled togederes' = that come into collision, Ancren Riwle, p. 166; and again: 'bat heuen hastili and erbe schuld kurtel togader' = that quickly heaven and earth should come into collision; Will. of Palerne, 5013. Both hurl and hurtle are frequentatives of hurt. See further under Hurtle and Hurt. Der. kurl-er.

HURLY-BURLY, a tumult. (F. and E.) In Macb. i. 1. 3; as adj., 1 Hen. IV, v. 1. 78. A reduplicated word, the second sylla-ble being an echo of the first, to give more fulness. The simple form kurly is the original; see K. John, iii, 4. 169; 2 Hen. IV, iii, 1. 25.-F. kurler, 'to howle, to yell;' Cot. Cf. Ital. urlare, to howl, yell. Both these forms are corrupt, and contain an inserted r. The O. F. form was orig. kuller, to howl, also in Cot.; cf. Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, col. 354, l. 24; and the correct Ital. form is ululare, to shriek, also to howl or yell as a wolf (Florio).-Lat. ululare, to howl.-Lat. ulula, an owl. See Howl, Owl. ¶ The mod. F. Aurluburlu was probably borrowed from Shakespeare; it is a later word than the English; see Littré. The mod. E. Aullabaloo seems to be a corruption. [+]

HURRAH, an exclamation of joy. (Scand.) The older form is

Hussah, q. v. HURRICANE, a whirlwind, violent storm of wind. (Span., -Caribbean.) Formerly hurricano. 'The dreadful spout, Which shipmen do the Aurricano call; Shak. Troilus, v. 2. 172. - Span. huracan, a hurricane (of which another form was probably huracano). -Caribbean huracan, as written by Littre, who refers to Oviedo, Hist. des Indes. See also Washington Irving's Life of Columbus, b. viii. c. 9 (Trench); Rich. quotes from Dampier's Voyages, v. ii. pt. ii. c. 6, that hurricanes are 'violent storms, raging chiefly among the Caribbee islands.'

HURRY, to hasten, urge on. (Scand.) Quite different from barry, with which Richardson confuses it. In Shak. Romeo, v. 1. 65; Temp. i. 2. 131. Extended by the addition of y from an older form Aurr, just as scurry is from skirr. It is probably the same word with the rare M. E. Aorien, to hurry. 'And by the hondes hym hent and Aoryed hym withinne '= and they [the angels] caught him [Lot] by the hand, and hurried him within; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 83.-O. Swed. Aurra, to swing or whirl round (lhre); Swed. dial. Aurra, to whirl round, to whiz; Swed. dial. Aurr, great haste, hurry (Rietz). + Dan. hurre, to buzz, to hum. + Icel. hurr, a noise. β. Óf purely imitative origin, and the same word with the more expressive and fuller form whir; see Whir, Whis. Ben Jonson says of the letter R that it is ' the dog's letter, and hurreth in the sound.' Der. hurry, sb.

HURST, a wood. (E.) In Drayton's Polyolbion, s. 2: 'that, from each rising hurst.' M. E. hurst (Stratmann). Very common in place-names in Kent, e.g. Pens-kurst. – A.S. kyrst, i.e. Hurst in Kent; Thorpe, Diplomatarium, p. 65. + M. H. G. Aurst, a shrub, thicket. Lit. 'inferwoven thicket;' allied to Hurdle.

HURT, to strike or dash against, to injure, harm. (F., -C.) In early use. M. E. hurten, hirten, used in both senses (1) to dash against, push; and (2) to injure. Ex. (1) 'And he him hurteth [pusheth] with his hors adoun,' Chaucer, C. T. 2618 (Six-text, A. 2616), ac-cording to 4 MSS.; 'heo hurten heora hafden' = they dashed their heads together, Layamon, 1878. (2) 'That no man hurte other'= that none injure other; P. Plowman, B. x. 366. In the Ancren Riwle, it has both senses; see the glossary. -O. F. hurter, later heurter, to knock, push, jur, joult, strike, dash, or hit violently against;' Cot. 'Se heurier a une pierre, to stumble at a stone,' id.; which explains the sense 'to stumble' in the quotation from Wyclif given under Hurtle.  $\beta$ . Of Celtic origin; best shewn by W. kyrddu, to ram, push, impel, butt, make an assault, hwrdd, a push, thrust, batt, kurdd, pl. kyrddod, a ram; corroborated by Corn. kordh, a ram, spelt kor in late Cornish (Williams); and cf. Manx keurin, a he-goat (Williams). Thus the orig. sense was 'to butt as a ram;' from which the other senses easily flow. ¶ We find also Prov. urtar, Auriar (Gloss. to Bartsch, Chrest. Provençale), Ital. uriare, to knock, 277

B. It & hit, dash against; also from the Celtic source. Also Du. horien, to jolt, shake, M. H. G. hurten. to dash against; but these (according to Diez) are not very old words, and must have been simply borrowed from the Romance languages. The alleged A. S. Ayri, wounded, is unauthorised. Der. Auri, sb., Ancren Riwle, p. 112, Chaucer, C. T. 10785; hurt-ful, hurt ful-ly, hurt-ful-ness; hurt-less, hurt-less ly, hurtless-ness.

HURTLE, to come into collision with, to dash against, to rattle. (F., -C.; with E. suffix.) Nearly obsolete, but used in Gray's Fatal Sisters, st. 1; imitated from Shak. Jul. Cæsar, ii. 2. 22. M. E. hurtlen, to jostle against, dash against, push; see references under Hurl. To these add: 'And he him Aurileth with his hors adoun;' Chaucer, C. T. 2018 (Six-text, A. 2016), in the Ellesmere MS., where most other MSS. have hurteth.  $\beta$ . In fact, hurt-le is merely the frequentative of hurt in the sense 'to dash.' And this hurt is the M.E. Aurten, to dash, also to dash one's foot against a thing, to stumble. 'If ony man wandre in the dai, he kirtitk not,' i. e. stumbles not; Wyclif, John, xi. 9. Hurten, to dash, is the same with the mod. E. word. See further under Hurt.

HUSBAND, the master of a house, the male head of a household, a married man. (Scand.) The old sense is 'master of a house.' M. E. husbonde, husebonde. 'The husebonde... warned his hus pus'= the master of the house guardeth his house thus; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 246. 'Till a vast kusbandis houss' - to an empty [waste] house of a farmer; Barbour's Bruce, vii. 151.—A. S. kus-bonda; 'æt hira kúsbondum'= from their fellow-dwellers in the same house; Exod. iii. 22. Not a true A.S. word, but borrowed from a contracted form from Ausboardi or Ausbuandi. - Icel. Aus, a house; and búandi, dwelling, inhabiting, pres. part. of búa, to abide, dwell. See Busk, Bondage. Der. husband-man, M. E. housbond-man, a householder, Wyclif, Matt. xx. I, spelt husbond-man, Chaucer, C. T. 7350; husband-ry, M. E. housbonderye, P. Plowman, B. i. 57, spelt Ausbondrie, Chaucer, C. T. 9173. HUSH, to enjoin silence. (E.) Chiefly used in the imp. mood and in the pp. M. E. Ausken, Aussen; 'and Auske was al the place,' Chaucer, C. T. 2983, ed. Tyrwhitt; spelt Ausk, Auyse in Six-text, A. 2981. 'Tho weren the cruel clariouns ful whise [Camb. MS. Auss] and full stille; 'Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. met. s, l. 1340. 'After ianglyng wordes cometh Auistee, peace and be still;' Test. of Love, ed. 1561, fol. 290 a, col. 1.  $\beta$ . The word is purely imitative, from the use of the word hush or hushe to signify silence; and it is seen that whist is but another expression of the same thing. See Whist. Cf. Low G. Ausse bussee, an expression used in singing children to sleep; Bremen Wörterb. ii. 678. So also G. husch, hush! quick ! And see Hist. Der. Aush-money, Guardian, no. 26, April 10, In the form hushed or husht, the t was often regarded as 1713. an integral part of the word, just as in whist. 'I huste, I styll,'

An integrat part of the word, just as in write. I write, i style, Palsgrave; 'to Auste, silere;' Levins. HUSK, the dry covering of some fruits, &c. (E.) M. E. Auste. 'Huske of fruit or oper lyke;' Prompt. Parv. p. 254. The word has lost an l, which is preserved in other languages; the right form is hulsk. [The A.S. has only the closely related word hule, a hut, as in 'tugurium, Aule;' Wright's Vocab. i. 58, col. 1. This is a totally different word from the mod. E. kulk, but is closely allied to kolster (a Dutch word) and to the A.S. heolster, a cave, covering, and to Icel. hulstr, a case, sheath.] The orig. sense is 'covering' or sheath; and hul-sh is derived (with suffixed -sh) from M. E. hulen, to cover, mod. prov. E. Aull, to cover, cognate with Goth. Auljan, to cover. See further under Hull (1). + Du. Aulse, 'a husk' (Sewel). + Swed. Wörterb. ii. 668. + M. H. G. Aulsche, a husk (Benecke); G. Aúlse, a husk, shell. . Der. Ausk, verb, to take off the shells; Ausk-ed.

HUSKY, hoarse, as applied to the voice. (E.) Not connected with husk, but confused with it. In Todd's Johnson; but a rare word in literature. A corruption of hussy or haussy, i.e. inclined to cough. Formed from 'haust, a dry cough;' Coles' Eng. Dict. ed. 1684. M.E. hoost, host, a cough; Prompt. Parv. p. 248. – A.S. hwósta, a cough; which occurs to translate tussis in Ælfric's Grammar (Bosworth, Lye).+Du. hoest, a cough. + Icel. hosti.+Dan. hoste. + Swed. hosta. + G. husten, a cough; also, to cough. + Russ. kashele, a cough.

Mosta. + G. Nusten, a cougn; also, to cougn. + Russ. naisee, a cougn.
+ Lithuan. hosulys, a cough; kosti, to cough. + Skt. kása, a cough.
All from & KÅS, to cough; Skt. kás, to cough. Der. Ausk-i-ness.
HUSBAR, a cavalry soldier. (Hungarian.) 'Hussars, Hussars, Hungarian horsemen;' Coles' Dict. ed. 1684. 'After the manner of the Hussars;' Spectator, no. 576. 'Hussars, light cavalry in Poland and Hungary, about 1600 [rather, 1460]. The British Hussars were enrolled in 1759;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. - Hungarian Auszar, the twentieth. from hurst twenty. the twentieth; from husz, twenty. So called because Mathias Corvinus, king of Hungary and Bohemia (1458-1490), raised a corps of horse-soldiers in 1458 by commanding that one man should be chosen out of every twenty in each village; see Littré, Scheler, and Mahn. e than the name. For The Hungarian or Magyar belongs to the Finno-Ugrian or Finno-Hungarian group of languages, and is of an agglutinative character; it belongs to the Turanian family; see Max Müller's Lect. on Language, vol. i. App. no. iii. [+]

HUSSIF, a case containing thread, needles, and other articles for sewing. (Scand.) 'Hussif, that is, house wife; a roll of flannel sewing. (Scand.) with a pin-cushion attached, used for the purpose of holding pins. needles, and thread ;' Peacock, Gloss. of words used in Manley and Corringham, co. Lincoln. And in common use elsewhere. β. That the word has long been confused with hussy, hussuife, or house-wife, and hence obtained its final f, is certain.  $\gamma$ . It is equally certain that this is an error; it is of Scand. origin. - Icel. husi, a case; skærishúsi, a scissors-case. - Icel. hús, a house. See House. ¶ Thus the connection with house is correct; but the latter syllable has been misunderstood. [†]

HUSSY, a pert girl. (E.) 'The young husseys;' Spectator, no. 242. Hussy is a corruption of husswife; cf. 'Doth Fortune play the husswife with me now?' Hen. V, v. 1. 85. And again, husswife stands for house-wife = woman who minds a house; from house and wife in the general sense of woman; cf. 'the good housewife Fortune,' As You Like It, i. 2. 33; 'Let kousewives make a skillet of my helm;' See House and Wife. And see Hussif.

Oth. i. 3. 273. See House and Wife. And see Hussif. HUSTINGS, a platform used by candidates for election to par-liament. (Scand.) The modern use is incorrect; it means rather a 'council,' or assembly for the choice of such a candidate; and it should rather be used in the singular Austing. Minsheu has Austings, and refers to 11 Hen. VII. cap. 21. M. E. Austing, a council; 'hulden muchel Austing' = they held a great council; Layamon, 2324, - A. S. Aissing, a council (of Danes); A. S. Chron an. 1012; see gloss. to Sweet's A. S. Reader. Not an A. S. word, but used in speaking of Danes. – Icel. Ausping, 'a council or meeting, to which a king, earl, or captain summoned his people or guardsmen.' – Icel. Aus, a house; and ping, (1) a thing, (2) as a law term, 'an assembly, meeting, a general term for any public meeting, esp. for purposes of legislation; a parliament, including courts of law.' Cf. Swed. ting, a thing, an assize; hdlla ting, to hold assizes; Dan. ting, a thing, court, assize.  $\beta$ . The Icel. Aus is cognate with E. kouse; and bing with E. thing. See House and Thing.

HUSTLE, to push about, jostle in a crowd. (Du.) It should have been sutsle, but the change to sustle was inevitable, to make it easier of pronunciation. In Johnson's Dict., but scarce in literature. - Du. hutselen, to shake up and down, either in a tub, bowl, or basket; onder malkanderen Autselen, to huddle together [lit. to hustle one another]; Scwel. A frequentative form of O. Du. hulsen, Du. hotsen, to shake, jog, jolt. Cf. Lowland Sc. hotch, hott, to move by jerks, hotter, to jolt. See Hitch, Hotchpot. Der. hodgepodge. HUT, a cottage, hovel. (F., -O. H. G.) M. E. hotte. 'For scatted er bi Scottis, and hodred in per hottes' = for scattered are thy Scots, and huddled in their huts; Rob. Manning, tr. of Langtoft, ed. Hearne, p. 273. - F. Autte, 'a cote [cot] or cottage;' Cot. - O. H. G. hutta, G. hutte, a hut, cottage; whence also Span. huta, a hut; and G. d for H. G. 1). + Swed. hydda, a hut. + Skt. kuti, a hut; from hut, to bend (hence, to cover). See Cotyledon.

HUTCH, a box, chest, for keeping things in. (F., - Low L.) Chiefly used now in the comp. rabbit-Autch. Shak. has bolting-hutch, a hutch for bolted (or boulted) flour; 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 495. Milton has Autch d = stored up; Comus, 719. M. E. Auche, Aucche, P. Plowman, B. iv. 116; pl. Auches, Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 850. – O. F. (and F.) Auche, 'a hutch or binne;' Cot. – Low Lat. Autica; 'quadam cista, vulgo hutica dicta; Ducange. B. Of unknown origin; but almost certainly Teutonic; and prob. from O. H. G. huatan, M. H. G. hueten, to take care of, from O. H. G. huota, heed, care, cognate with E. heed. See Hoed.

HUZZAH (G.), HURRAH (Scand.), a shout of approbation. Huzzak is the older form, and was also written huzza. 'Loud huzzas; Pope, Essay on Man, iv. 256. 'They made a great Auzza, or shout, at our approch, three times ;' Evelyn's Diary, June 30, 1665. It appears to be one of the very few words of German origin. - G. Aussa, huzza; hussa rufen, to shout huzza. B. Probably of merely interjectional origin. We find also Dan. Aurra, hurrah! Swed. Aurra, hurrah! hurrarop, a cheer (rop = a shout); hurra, v., to salute with cheers. Cf. Dan. hurre, to hum, to buzz. See Hurry.

HYACINTH, a kind of flower. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Cotgrave and Minsheu; and in Milton, P. L. 701. - F. hyacinthe, 'the blew or purple jacint, or hyacinth flower; we call it also crow-toes;' Cot. -Lat hyacinthus. - Gk. bánuvos, an iris or larkspur (not what is now called a hyacinth); said, in Grecian fable, to have sprung from the HYÆNA, the same as Hyena, q. v.

HYBRID, mongrel, an animal or plant produced from two different species. (L. Gk.?) 'She's a wild Irish born, sir, and a Aybride;' Ben Jonson, New Inn, A. ii. sc. 2 (Host); also spelt Aybride β. Usually in Minsheu. - Lat. hibrida, hybrida, a mongrel, hybrid. derived from Gk. UBpio-, stem of UBpis, insult, wantonness, violation. . See this word discussed in Curtius, ii. 155; he takes the to be formative, whilst UBp- is compared with Lat. super-us, above (cf. Lat. Över. doubtful.

HYDRA, a many-headed water-snake. (L.,-Gk.) In Shak. Cor. iii. 1. 93. - Lat. kydra. - Gk. ύδρα, a water-snake; also written bopos; from the base vo- which appears in bowp, water. + Skt. udras, a water-animal, otter; cited by Curtius, i. 308. + Russ. vuidra, an otter, + Lithuan, udrà, an otter. + A. S. oter, an otter. See Otter and Water. Der. kydra-keaded, Hen. V, i. 1. 35. HYDRANGEA, a kind of flower. (Gk.) A coined name, referring to the cup-form of the capsule, or seed-vessel; Johnson's Gardeners' Dict., 1877. Made from Gk. Vowp, water; and dyyeiow, a vessel.

HYDRAULIC, relating to water in motion, conveying or acting by water. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) ' Hydraulick, pertaining to organs, or to an instrument to draw water, or to the sound of running waters (Bacon); Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Bacon has hydrawlicks, Nat. Hist. § 102. - F. kydraulique, ' the sound of running waters, or music made thereby;' Cot. - Lat. kydraulicus. - Gk. idpaulukos, belonging to a water-organ. - Gk. uopaulus, an organ worked by water. - Gk. υδρ-, for uder; and auλos, a tube, pipe; from the base af, to ¶ For a description of what the hydraulic organ really blow.

was, see Chappell's Hist. of Music. HYDRODYNAMICS, the science relating to the force of water in motion. (Gk.) A scientific term; coined from Gk. 55po, from 55op, water; and E. dynamics, a word of Gk. origin. See Water and Dynamic.

HYDROGEN, a very light gas. (Gk.) A scientific term; coined from hydro-, standing for Gk. 53po-, from 50ap, water; and gen, for Gk. root γέν-, to produce, generate. The name means 'generator of water.' See Water and Generate. HYDROPATHY, the water cure. (Gk.) Coined from kydro-, standing for Gk. ύδρο-, from ύδωρ, water; and Gk. wáθos, suffering, hence, endurance of treatment. See Water and Pathos. Der.

hydropath-ic, hydropath-ist. HYDROPHOBIA, fear of water. (L.,-Gk.) In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715; spelt hydrophobie, a French form, in Minsheu. symptom of the disease due to a mad dog's bite. Coined from Gk. ύδρο-, from ύδωρ, water; and Gk. φόβοε, fear, from 🖌 BHA, to tremble, whence also Skt. bhi, to fear, and Lat. febris, a fever. See Water and Fever.

HYDROPSY, the old spelling of Dropsy, q. v.

HYDROSTATICS, the science which treats of fluids at rest. (Gk.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. Scientific. Coined from kydro-=Gk. υδρο-, from υδωρ, water; and E. statics. See Water and Statics.

HYENA, a sow-like quadruped. (L., - Gk.) Also spelt kyana; Milton, Samson, 748. [Older authors use the French form, as Ayen, Shak. As You Like It, iv. I. 156. M. E. hyene, Chaucer, Le Respounce de Fortune a Pleintif, st. 2.] – Lat. hyæna. – Gk. vaura, a hyena, lit. 'sow-like;' thought to resemble a sow. - Gk. 5-, stem of 58, a sow. cognate with E. sow; with fem. adj. suffix -awa. See Hog, Sow. HYMEN, the god of marriage, (L. - Gk.) In Shak. Temp. iv.

1. 23. - Lat. Aymen. - Gk. 'Tuny, the god of marriage. Der. Aymen-ean or hymenzan, Milton, P. L. iv. 711, from O. F. Aymenean, of or belonging to a wedding,' Cot., from Lat. Hymenzus, Gk. iµtivaos, another name of Hymen, though the proper signification is a wed-ding-song; later turned into kymen-eal, as in 'kymeneal rites,' Pope's Homer, Il. xviii. 570.

HYMN, a song of praise. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. ympne, Wyclif, Matt. xxvi. 30; in which the p is excrescent after m, as in M.E. solempne = solemn. - O. F. ymne (Littré), later hymne, 'a hymne,' Cot. - Lat. hymnum, acc. of hymnus. - Gk. Uµros, a song, festive song, hymn. β. Some suppose that the expression ύμνοε doionie in Homer, Od. viii, 429, means 'a web of song;' thus linking  $\tilde{u}\mu\nu\sigma$ with  $\delta\phi\phi$ , a web, from the base  $\delta\phi$ -, from  $\checkmark$  WABH, to weave. See Weave. Der. hymno-logy.

HYPALLAGE, an interchange. (L., - Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; and in Minsheu, ed. 1627. - Lat. hypallage, 'a rhetorical figure, by which the relations of things seem to be mutually interchanged; as, dare classibus austros (= to give the winds to the fleet) blood of the youth Hyacinthos; but, of course, the fable is later instead of dare classes austris (to give the fleet to the winds); Virg. from a base ALIA, whence also alien and else. See Alien, Else.

HYPER-, prefix, denoting excess. (L., -Gk) Lat. hyper, put for Gk. intep, above, beyond, allied to Lat. super, above. See Super-. Hence kyper-baton, a transposition of words from their natural order, lit. 'a going beyond,' from Baireir, to go, cognate with E. come hyper-critical, coined from hyper- and critical; hyper-borean, extreme northern (Minsheu), from Lat. boreas, Gk. Bopéas, the north wind; hyper-metrical, &cc. And see below.

HYPERBOLE, a rhetorical exaggeration. (L., -Gk.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 407. - Lat. hyperbole. - Gk.  $i\pi\epsilon\rho\beta\partial\lambda\eta$ , excess, exaggera-tion. - Gk.  $i\pi\epsilon\rho$ , beyond (see Hyper-); and  $\beta\delta\lambda\lambda\epsilon\nu$ , to throw, cast. - GAR, GAL, to fall; see Gland. Der. kyperbol-ic-al, Cor. i. 9.

51. Doublet, hyperbola, as a mathematical term. HYPHEN, a short stroke (-) joining two parts of a compound word. (L., -Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. hyphen, which is merely a Latinised spelling of Gk. ὑφέν, together, lit. ' under one.' -Gk. ὑφ-, for ὑπό, under (see Ηγρο-); and έν, one thing, neuter of els, one, which is prob. allied to E. Same, q. v. HYPO-, prefix, lit. 'under.' (Gk.) Gk. bro, under; cognate with Lat. sub. See Sub-.

HYPOCHONDRIA, a mental disorder, inducing gloominess and melancholy. (L., -Gk.) The adj. Appendix occurs in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Named from the spleen, which was supposed to cause hypochondria, and is situate under the cartilage of the breast-bone. - Lat. Aspochendria, sb. pl., the parts beneath the breast-bone. - Gk. ύποχόνδρια, pl. sb., the same. - Gk. ύπό, under, beneath; and xóropos, a corn, grain, groat, gristle, and esp. the cartilage of the breast-bone. Der. Aypochondria-e, Aypochondria-e-al; also hip, to depress the spirits, hipp-ish. See Hippish.

HYPOCRISY, pretence to virtue. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. Ayperisie, Chaucer, C. T. 12344; ypoerisie, P. Plowman, B. xv. 108. – O. F. Aypoerisie, 'hypocrisie, dissembling;' Cot. - Lat. Aypoerisis, in I Tim. iv. 2 (Vulgate). - Gk. browpious, a reply, answer, the playing of a part on the stage, the acting of a part, hypocrisy. - Gk. inoxpino-par, I reply, make answer, play a part. - Gk. ino, under; and spiropar, I contend, dispute, middle voice of spireur, to judge, discern. See Critic. Der. from the same source, spicerite, Chaucer, C. T. 10828, F. hypocrite, Lat. hypocrita, hypocrites, from Gk. inonperfis, a dissembler, Matt. vi. 2; hypocrit-ic, hypocrit-ic-al, hypocrit-ic-al-ly. HYPOGASTRIC, belonging to the lower part of the abdomen.

(F.-L., -Gk.) Spelt Aypogastrick in Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. 'The Aypogaster or paunch;' Minsheu. -O. F. Aypogastriyue, 'be-longing to the lower part of the belly;' Cot. - Late Lat. Aypogastricus. - Gk. imoyácrpior, the lower part of the belly. See Hypoand Gastric.

HYPOSTASIS, a substance, personality of each Person in the Godhead. (L., -Gk.) In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715; and in Minsheu, ed. 1627. 'The hypostatical union is the union of humane nature with Christ's Divine Person ; ' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. hypostasis. - Gk. infortagis, a standing under, prop, groundwork, subsistence, substance, Person of the Trinity. - Gk. buo, under; and ordous, a placing, a standing, from STA, to stand. See Hypo- and Stand. Der. Aypostatic = Gk. inograrinis, adj. formed from inograsis;

hypostatic-al. HYPOTENUSE, HYPOTHENUSE, the side of a rightargled triangle which is opposite the right angle. Hypothenuse in Kersey, ed. 1715; but it should rather be hypotenuse. - F. hypotenuse. -Lat. hypotenusa. - Gk. inorcirousa, the subtending line (ypaµµh, a line, being understood); fem. of broreirar, pres. pt. of broreirar, to subtend, i.e. to stretch under.-Gk. bro, under; and reirar, to stretch. - V TAN, to stretch. See Subtend. [+]

HYPOTHEC, a kind of pledging or mortgage. (F., -L., -Gk.) A law term. The adj. hypothecary is in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Hypothee is Englished from O. F. hypotheque, 'an ingagement, mort-gage, or pawning of an immovable;' Cot. - Lat. hypotheca, a mortgage. -Gk. ὑποθήκη, an under-prop, also a pledge, mortgage. - Gk. ὑπό, under; and base  $\theta\eta$ -,  $\theta\epsilon$ -, to place, from  $\checkmark$  DHA, to place. See Hypothesis. Der. Aypothec-ate, to mortgage; hypothec-at-ion. HYPOTHESIS, a supposition. (L., - Gk.) In Minsheu, ed.

1627. The pl. hypotheses is in Holland's Plutarch, p. 623 (R.)-Late Lat. Appolassis. – Gk. isrolécus, a placing under, basis, supposition. – Gk. isro, under; and base  $\theta\epsilon$ , to place, from  $\checkmark$  DHA, to place. See Hypo- and Thesis. Der. hypothesis, adj = Gk. isrolerusis, supd, imaginary ; hypothetic-al, hypothetic-al-ly.

HYSSOP, an aromatic plant. (F.,-L.,-Gk.,-Heb.) Spelt hypope in Minsheu. M. E. ysope, Wyclif, Hebrews, ix. 19.-O. F. Bystope, 'hisop;' Cot.-Lat. Aystopum, Aystopus.-Gk. Vocornos, an sprinkle; cf. Skt. sich, to sprinkle, to wet, G. aromatic plant, but different from our hyssop; Heb. ix. 19.-Heb. filter. Curtius, i. 168; ii. 344. Der. ickor-ous.

has hysteric and hysterical; only the latter is in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.-O.F. by terique; ' affection hysterique, the suffocation of the 1074.-0. 1. a) triplet, algebraic hysterious, the basic, called in E. matrix; Cot.-Lat. hystericus; whence hystericus passio, called in E. 'the mother;' see K. Lear, ii. 4. 57.-Gk.  $b\sigma$  reputos, suffering in the womb, hysterical.-Gk.  $b\sigma$  répa, the womb; prob. connected with vorepos, latter, lower, comparative from base UD, out; see Out, Utter.  $\beta$ . Similarly Lat. ūterus, the womb, is thought to stand for ut-terus, compar, from the same base. Cf. Skt. udara, the belly, lower part; from ud, out. Dor. hysteric-al, -al-ly; hysterics, hysteria.

I.

I, nom. case of first personal pronoun. (E.) M. E. (Northern) ik, i; (Southern) ich, uch, i. - A. S. ic. + Du. ik. + Icel. ek. + Dan. jeg. + Swed. jag. + Goth. ik. + G. ich; O. H. G. ih. + W. i. + Russ. ia. + Lat.  $ego. + Gk. i \gamma \omega, i \gamma \omega \dots + Skt. aham, prob. corrupted from agam;$  $see Curtius, i. 383. <math>\beta$ . All from the Aryan form AGAM, appar-ently a compound word; composed of the pronominal base A, and the enclitic particle GAM or GA which appears in Gk. ye and Skt. ha (Vedic gha) as well as at the end of Goth. mi-k, thu-k, si-k, accusative cases of the first, second, and third (reflexive) pronouns. See Curtius, ii. 137. See Me, which is, however, from a different base.

I-, prefix with negative force. (L.) Only in i-guoble, i-gnominy, i-gnore, as an abbreviation of Lat. in-; see In- (3). IAMBIC, a certain metre or metrical foot, denoted by .-, for short followed by long. (L.,-Gk.) 'Iambick, Elegiack, Pastorall;' Sir P. Sidney, Apologie for Poetrie (1595); ed. Arber, p. 28. - Lat. iambicus. - Gk. Ιαμβικόs, iambic. - Gk. Ιαμβοs, an iamb or iambic foot, also iambic verse, a lampoon.  $\beta$ . So called because used for satiric poetry; the lit. sense being 'a throw,' or 'a cast.'-Gk. lánreur, to throw, cast; doubtless closely related to Lat. iacere, to throw. See Curtius, ii. 59, 154. See Jet. ¶ Iamb is sometimes used to represent Gk. iaµBos.

IBEX, a genus of goats. (L.) Ibexe name. - Lat. ibex, a kind of goat, chamois. Ibeze in Minsheu. A scientific IBIS, a genus of wading birds. (L., - Gk., - Coptic.) •A fowle in the same Egypt, called ibis; 'Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. viii. c. 27. - Lat. ibis. - Gk. iBis; an Egyptian bird, to which divine honours were paid; Herod. ii. 75, 76. Of Coptic or Egyptian origin. [†] ICE, any frozen fluid, esp. water. (E.) M. E. ys, iis; spelt ijs (=iis), P. Ploughman's Crede, 436; yse (dat. case), Rob. of Glouc. p. 463, 1. 4. -A. S. 45, ice; Grein, ii. 147. + Du. ij. + Icel. 48. + Dan. iis. + Swed. is. + G. eis; O. H. G. 48.  $\beta$ . Apparently from a  $\checkmark$  IS, to glide, go swiftly; cf. Skt. 48. to go, hasten, fly; Icel. eis. to go swiftly, as in ganga eisandi, to go dashing through the waves, said of a ship. See Fick. i. 29, 30; iii. 31, 32. See Iron. Der. ice-berg, quite a modern word, not in Todd's Johnson, in which the latter element is the Du. and Swed. berg, Dan. bierg, G. berg, a mountain, hill; whence Du. ijsberg, Swed. isberg, Dan. iisbierg, G. eisberg, an iceberg. [It is not at all clear in which of these languages iceberg first arose; it does not seem to be an old word in Danish or Swedish, yet it is probable that we borrowed it (together with iceblink) from one of these languages. It is certainly a sailor's word.] Also ice-blink, from Dan. ii.blink, Swed. isblink, a field of ice extending into the interior of Greenland; so named from its shining appearance; from Dan. blinke, to gleam; see Blink. Also ice-boat, ice-bound, ice-cream (abbreviated from iced-cream), ice-field, ice-float, ice-floe, ice-house, ice-island, Ice-land, ice-man, ice-pack, ice-flant. Also ice, vb., ic-ing. Also ic-y = A.S. isig; Grein, ii. 147; ic-i-ly, ic-i-ness. And see Iciclo.

ICHNEUMON, an Egyptian carnivorous animal. (L.,-Gk.) In Holland's Pliny, b. viii. c. 24. - Lat. ichneumon (Pliny). - Gk. izveipor, an ichneumon; lit. 'a tracker;' so called because it tracks out the eggs of the crocodile, which it devours. See Aristotle, Hist. Animals, 9. 6. 5. - Gk. Ixrever, to track, trace, hunt after. - Gk ixros, β. The origin of Gk. iχvos is not clear; it a track, footstep. appears to be related to Gk. einen, to go back, to yield, from & WIK, perhaps to separate. Cf. Skt. vich, to separate. See Curtius, i. 166. Der. From the same source is ichno-graphy, a design traced out, ground-plan, a term in architecture (Vitruvius).

'The sacred ichor; ICHOR, the juice in the veins of gods. (Gk.) Pope, tr. of Homer, Il. v. 216. - Gk. lxup, juice, the blood of gods; related to Gk. Inpás, moisture, Inpaireir, to wet. - VSIK, to moisten, sprinkle; cf. Skt. sich, to sprinkle, to wet, G. seihen, to strain, to ICHTHYOGRAPHY, a description of fishes. (Gk.) A scientific term. Coined from Gk. 1x600-, crude form of 1x600, a fish; and  $\gamma \rho \dot{\alpha} \phi \omega r$ , to describe. β. So also ichthyology, spelt icthyology by Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 24. § 1; from Gk.  $l\chi \theta v_s$ , a fish, and  $\lambda \delta \gamma o s$ , a discourse, from  $\lambda \delta \gamma e v_s$ , to speak of.

ICICILE, a hanging point of ice. (E.; parily C.) M. E. isikel; spelt yiskel, isiyokel, isykle, isechel, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 227; C. xx. 193. Compounded of M. E. ys, ice (see Ice); and ikyl, also used alone in the same sense of 'icicle,' as in Prompt. Parv., p. 259. Levins also has ickles = icicles. - A. S. isgicel, compounded of is, ice, and gicel, a small piece of ice; orig. writen ises gicel, where ises is in the gen. case. 'Stiria, ises gicel;' Ælfric's Gloss, in Wright's Vocab. i. 21, col. 2.  $\beta$ . Gicel is a dimin. form from gic-, put for IK or IAK, an old word for 'ice,' still preserved in Celtic, viz. in the Irish gicel eight is given from give. The transmission of the given based of the given ba aigh, Gael. eigh, W. ia (for iag), ice. Thus the word really = ice-ice-l, though the second ice is a Celtic word and not the same word with the first. + Icel. iss, ice; and jokull (used by itself), an icicle, dimin. the first. + feel. iss, ice; and Journal (used by itself), an icicic, dimin. of jaki, a piece of ice, cognate with or borrowed from the Celtic word above indicated. + Low G. is-hele, in the Ditmarsh dialect isjäkel; Bremen Wörterbuch, ii. 704. ¶ Observe that -ic- in ic-ic-le is totally different from -ic- in art-ic-le, part-ic-le. ICONOCLAST, a breaker of images. (Gk.) • Iconoclasts, or breakers of images; 'Bp. Taylor, Of the Real Presence, s. 13 (R.)

A coined word; from Gk. elkovo-, crude form of elkov (Latinised as icon), an image ; and κλάστηs, a breaker, one who breaks, from κλάειν, to break. Dor. iconoclast-ic.

ICOSAHEDRON, a solid figure, having twenty equal trian-gular faces. (Gk.) Spelt icosaedron in Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. gular faces. (Gk.) Spelt icosaedron in Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Coined from Gk. eleose, twenty; and topa, a base, lit. a seat, from base 13. to sit, cognate with E. Sit. Der. icosahedr-al.

IDEA, a (mental) image, notion, opinion. (L., - Gk.) 'Idea is a bodilesse substance,' &c.; Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 666. 'The fayre Idea; Spenser, Sonnet 45. — Lat. idea. — Gk. idéa, the look or semblance of a thing, species. — Gk. idéiv, to see. —  $\checkmark$  WID, to see; cf. Skt. vid, to perceive, know. See Wit, verb. Der. ide-al, from O. F. ideal, 'ideall' (Cot.), which from Lat. idealis; whence ide-al-ly, ide-al-ise, ide-al-ism, ide-al-ist, ide-al-is-at-ion, ide-al-ist-ic, ide-al-i-ty (most of these terms being modern).

IDENTICAL, the very same. (L.) 'Of such propositions as in the schools are called identical; ' Digby, Of Man's Soul, c. 2. Coined by adding -al to the older term identic, spelt identick in Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. 'The beard's th' identique beard you knew;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 1. 1. 149. Identic is formed as if from a Low Lat. identicus *, suggested by the older identitas; see Identity. Der. identic-al-ly, -ness.

IDENTITY, sameness. (F., - Low Lat., - L.) "Identity and diversity; 'Holland's Plutarch, p. 54 (R.); and in Minshen.-F. identité, 'identity, likeness, the being almost the very same; 'Cot.-Low Lat. identitatem, acc. of identitas, sameness; a word which occurs A. D. 1249; Ducange. - Lat. identi-, occurring in identi-dem, repeatedly; with suffix -tas. - Lat. idem, the same. - Lat. i-, from base I, pronominal base of the 3rd person; and dem. from base DA, likewise a pronom. base of the 3rd person. Der. From the same Lat. identiwe have identi-fy = F. identifier (Littre); whence identi-fic-at-ion; see identical.

IDES, the 15th day of March, May, July, and October, and the 13th of other months.  $(F_{.,}-L_{.})$  'The ides of March;' Jul. Cæsar, i. 2. 18, 19,  $-F_{.}$  ides, 'the ides of a month;' Cot. - Lat. idus, the ides.  $\beta$ . Of disputed origin; we can hardly derive it from a supposed iduare, as that would rather be a derivative from idus. It is prob. connected with Skt. indu, the moon.

IDIOM, a mode of expression peculiar to a language. (F., -L., 'The Latin and Greeke idiom;' Milton, Of Education (R.) Gk.) Spelt idiome in Minsheu. - F. idiome, 'an ideom, or proper form of speech; 'Cot.-Lat. idioma.-Gk. ίδιωμα, an idiom, peculiarity in language.-Gk. ίδιω, I make my own.-Gk. ίδιο-, crude form of toios, one's own, peculiar to one's self. Corrupted from the stem  $\sigma F \epsilon$ with suffix -yos, as explained by Curtius, ii. 272. 'In this way (he says) from the stem  $\sigma f \epsilon \dots$  came also  $\sigma f \epsilon \cdot y os$ ,  $\sigma f \epsilon \cdot \delta y os$ , later  $\sigma f \epsilon \cdot \delta i os$ ,  $f \epsilon \cdot \delta i os$ , and finally idios. Cf. Skt. svayam, reflexive pronoun of the three persons, self; from the base SAWA, SWA, one's own, reflex. possess. pronoun, with suffix YA. Der. idiom-at-ic, from lδίωματ-, stem of lδίωμα; idiom-at-ic-al, idiom-at-ic-al-ly. Also idiopathy, a primary disease not occasioned by another, from 1810-, crude form of ideos, and mad-, as seen in madeiv, to suffer (see Pathos); idio-path-ic, idio-path-ic-al-ly. And see below. IDIOSYNCRASY, peculiarity of temperament, a characteristic. (Gk.) 'Whether quails, from any idiosyncracy or peculiarity of constitution,' &c.; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 28, last section. - Gk. 1810-, crude form of 1810s, peculiar to one's self; and obympaous, a mixing together, blending. For Gk. 1810s, see Idiom. The Gk.

IGNITION.

see Crasis.

A "obympaous is compounded of our, together, and managing;

see Crasis. IDIOT, a foolish Person, one weak in intellect. (F., -L., -Gk.) See Trench, Study of Words. M. E. idiot, Chaucer, C. T. 5893 (nor 3893). - F. idiot, 'an ideot (sic) or naturall fool;' Cot. - Lat. idiota, an ignorant, uneducated person. - Gk. lowrys, a private person, hence one who is inexperienced or uneducated. (See 1 Cor. xiv. 16, where the Vulgate has locum idiota, and Wyclif the place of an idyot.) -Gk. loide, I make my own - Gk. Toio-, crude form of thios, one's own. See Idiom. Der. idiot-ic, idiot-ic-al, idiot-ic-al-ly, idiot-ism = idiom); also idioc-y, in Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715, formed from idiot as frequency is from frequent.

IDLE, unemployed, useless, unimportant. (E.) M. E. idel, Chau-cer, C. T. 2507, 12572; hence the phr. in idel - in vain, id. 12576.-A.S. idel, vain, empty, useless; Grein, ii. 135. + Du. ijdel, vain, frivolous, trifling. + Dan. idel, sheer, mere. + Swed. idel, mere, pure, downright. + G. eitel, vain, conceited, trifling; O.H.G. ual, empty, useless, mere.  $\beta$ . The orig. sense seems to have been 'clear' or 'bright;' hence, pure, sheer, mere, downright; and lastly, vain, un-important. The A.S. idel exactly answers to the cognate Gk. logois, clear, pure (used of springs), a scarce word, given in Curtius, i. 310, which see. - VIDH, to kindle; cf. Skt. indh, to kindle; whence Gk. allew, to burn, aloho, upper (clear) air, alooa, clear sky; also A.S. ad (for aid), a burning, funeral pile, O. H. G. eit, a funeral pile, eiten, to (d) ab; a binning, unleral pile, 0.11. 0. sit, a interial pile, edge, to burn, glow. See Althor. Der. idl-y; idle, verb; idl-er; idle-ness, Ormulum, 4736, from A. S. idelnes, Grein, ii. 135.
 IDOL, a figure or image of a god. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. idole, Chaucer, C. T. 15753, -O. F. idole; see Sherwood's index to Cot. -

Lat. idolum, 1 Cor. viii. 4 (Vulg.); also idolon. – Gk. eldow, an image, likeness. – Gk. eldowa, I appear, seem; cf. Gk. eldow, I saw, ideiv, to see. – ↓ WID, to see; cf. Skt. vid, to perceive; and see Wit, verb. Der. ido-latry (corruption of idolo-latry), M. E. idolatrie, Chaucer, C.T. Pers. Tale, De Avaritia, § 2, from F. idolatrie = Low Lat. idolatria, shortened form of idololatria, from Gk. είδωλολατρεία, service of idols, Coloss. iii. 5; composed of elouto-, crude form of eloutor, and harpeia, service, from  $\lambda \dot{\alpha} \tau \rho is$ , a hired servant, which from  $\lambda \dot{\alpha} \tau \rho or$ , hire. Also idolater, from O. F. idolater, 'an idolater' (Cot.); also ill-spelt idolatere in O. F., whence M. E. idolater, an idolater, Chaucer, C. T. Pers. Tale, De Avaritia, § 3; the O. F. idolatere is developed from O. F. idolatr-ie, explained above. Hence also idolatr-ess, idclatr-ise, idolatrous, idolair-ous-ly. Also idol-ise (Kersey), idol-is-er; see idyl. IDYL, IDYLL, a pastoral poem. (L.,-Gk.) 'Idyl, a little pastoral poem; 'Kersey, ed. 1715. ' Idyl, a poem consisting of a few verses; 'Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. – Lat. idyllium. – Gk. είδυλλισν. a short descriptive pastoral poem; so called from its descriptive representations. - Gk. «180», form, shape, figure, appearance, look. -Gk. «180µau, I appear, seem ; see further under Idol. Der. idyll-ic.

IF, a conjunction, expressive of doubt. (E.) M. E. if, Chaucer, C. T. 145; if, P. Plowman, B. prol. 7; giff, Barbour, Bruce, i. 12. – A. S. gif, if; Grein, i. 505. + Icel. ef, older form also if, if. + Du. of, or, if, whether, but; cf. Du. alcof = as if. + O. Fries. ief, gef, ef, of, if to Constant if if C. alcof = as if. + O. Fries. ief, gef, ef, of, if.+O. Sax. ef, of, if.+Goth. iba, ibai, perhaps, answering in form to E. if, Icel. of, O. Fries. ief, gef, ef, O. Sax. of; whence jabai, if (com-pounded of jak, and, also, and ibai) answering in form to Du. of, O. Fries. of, O. Sax. of, G. ob. + O. H. G. iba, condition, stipulation, whence the dat. case ibu, ipu, used in the sense of 'if,' lit. 'on the condition; also (answering to Goth, jabai) O. H. G. upi, upa, uba, oba, mod. G. ob, whether.  $\beta$ . The O. H. G. ibu is the dat case of iba, as said above; so also the Icel.  $e_i'$ ,  $i_i'$ , is closely related to (and once a case of) Icel.  $e_i'$  (older form  $i_i'$ ), doubt, hesitation, whence also the verb efa (formerly ifa), to doubt. All the forms beginning with e or i can be derived from a Teutonic type EBAI, dat. case of EBA, stipula-tion, doubt; see Fick, iii. 20. The other forms are evidently closely related. y. The W. o, if (for op, Rhys) is also cognate; we may also compare Lat. op- in op-inus, imagining, op-inuri, to suppose, op-inio, an opinion; see Opinion. There is a probable further connection with Lat. apisci, to acquire, and aptus, fit; see Apt. The probable root is  $\sqrt{AP}$ , to attain; cf. Skt. dp, to attain, obtain. Thus the train of thought would pass from 'attainment' to 'stipulation,' and thence to 'doubt.' ¶ The guess of Horne Tooke's, that A.S. gif is the imperative mood of A.S. gifan, to give, has been copied only too often. It is plainly wrong, (1) because the A.S. use of the words whibits no such connection out of the such as the surplex words exhibits no such connection, and (2) because it fails to explain the Friesic, Icelandic, German, and Gothic forms, thus ignoring the value of comparison in philology. But it will long continue to be held as indubitably true by all who prefer plausibility to research, Identity in the by an who price price price in the price of the second price of the s ignitus, pp. of ignire, to set on fire. - Lat. ignis, fire. + Skt. agni, fire.

B. 'It is not improbable that Skt. agni-s = Lat. igni-s, Lith. ugn)-s, is HILLEGAL, contrary to law. (L.) derived from the root AG (Skt. a) to move; Curtius, i. 134. For this root, see Agile. Der. Hence ignite, a later word, though perhaps formed directly from Lat. pp. ignitus; ignit-ible. Also igneous, Englished from Lat. igneus, hery, by the common change from Lat. -ws to E. -ous. Also, directly from the Latin, ignis fatuus, lit. ' foolish fire,' hence, a misleading meteor; see Fatuous. 'Fuller (Comment. on Ruth, p. 38) would scarcely have spoken of "a meteor of foolish fire," if ignis faimes, which has now quite put out "firedrake," the older name for these meteors, had not been, when he wrote, still strange to the language, or quite recent to it; ' Trench, Eng. Past and Present, lect. iv.

IGNOBLE, not noble, mean, base. (F., -L.) In Shak. Rich. III, iii. 7. 127. - F. ignoble, 'ignoble;' Sherwood's index to Cot-grave. - Lat. ignobilis. - Lat. i., short for in-, not; and gnobilis, later nobilis, noble. See I- and Noble. Der. ignobl-y, ignoble-ness. And see Ignominy.

IGNOMINY, disgrace, dishonour. (F., -L.) In Shak. 1 Hen. IV, v. 4. 100. - F. ignominie, 'ignominy;' Cot. - Lat. ignominia, dis-grace. - Lat. i., short for in., not; and gnomini., crude form of gnomes, later nomen, name, renown. See Name. Der. ignomini-ous, Formed as if from Lat. iliacus * (not given in White's Dict.), adj. regularly formed from Lat. ilia, sb. pl. the flanks, groin.

ILIAD, an epic poem by Homer. (L., -Gk.) Called 'Homer's Iliads' by the translator Chapman. - Lat. Iliad, stem of Ilias, the lliad. - Gk. TAido, the stem of 'TAids, the Iliad. - Gk. 'TAios, Ilios, the city of Ilus; commonly known as Troy. - 'TAos, Ilus, the grandfather of Priam, and son of Tros (whence Troy).

ILL, evil, bad, wicked. (Scand.) The comp. and superl. forms are Worse, Worst, q. v. M. E. ill, ille, Ormulum, 6647; common as adv., Havelok, 1165; chiefly used in poems which contain several as add, fraction, 1005, checky used in poens which contain sectar Scand. words. – Icel. illr, adj. ill; also (better) written illr.  $\pm$  Dan. ilde (for ille), adv. ill, badly.  $\pm$  Swed. illa, adv. ill, badly.  $\beta$ . The long vowel in Icel. is a mark of contraction; illr is nothing but a contraction of the word which appears in A. S. as y/el, and in mod. E. as evil. See Evil. Der. ill, adv., ill, sb.; ill-ness, Macb. i. 5. 21 (not in early use); ill-blood, ill-bred, ill-breeding, ill-favoured, ill-natured, ill-starred, ill-will.

ILLAPSE, a gliding in, sudden entrance. (L.) Rare. 'The illapse of some such active substance or powerful being, illaping into matter, &c.; Hale, Origin. of Mankind, p. 331 (R.) Coined (in imitation of lapse) from Lat. illapsus, a gliding in. See II. (1) and Lapse. Der. illapse, vb.

Der. illegibl-y, illegible-ness; also illegibil-i-ty.

ILLEGITIMATE, not born in wedlock. (L.) In Shak. Troil. v. 7. 18. From Il- (2) and Legitimate. Der. illegitimate-ly, not allowed. - Lat. il-=in-= E. un-, not; and licitus, pp. of licere, to be allowed, to be lawful. 'Licet, it is left to me, open to me (cf. naradelmeras, imodelmeras) is the intransitive to linguere, to leave;

and is related to it as pendet is to pendere, jacet to jacere; 'Curtus, ii. 61. See Leave, verb, and License. Der. illicit-ly, illicit-ness. ILLIMITABLE, boundless. (L.) In Milton, P. L. ii. 892. From II- (2) and Limitable; see Limit. Der. illimitabl-y, illimitable-ness.

ILLIBION, a striking against. (L.) In Holland's Plutarch, p. 867; and Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 27, part 10. Formed (by analogy with F. sbs. from Lat. accusatives) from Lat. illino, a the striking or dashing against. - Lat. il - in, prep. against; and lasus, pp. of laders, to strike, hurt. See II- (1) and Lession. ILLITERATE, unlearned, ignorant. (L.) In Shak. Two Gent. iii. 1. 296. - Lat. illiteratus, unlettered. - Lat. il - in - E. un-, not; and literates, literate. See II- (2) and Literal. Der. illiterate-ly, -ness. ILLOGICAL, not logical. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. From II- (2) and Logical; see Logio. Der. illogical-ly, -ness.

ILLUDE, to deceive. (L.; or F., -L.) 'I cannot be illuded; Sir T. More, Works, p. 166. Cf. F. illuder, 'to illude, delude, mock;' Cot. - Lat. illudere, pp. illusus, to make sport of, mock, decive. - Lat. il-= in-, on, upon; and ludere, to play. See II- (1) and Ludiorous. Der. illus-ion, q.v.; also illus-ive, Thomson, To Seraphina, l. 2; illus-ive-ly, illus-ive-ness.

ILLUMINATE, to enlighten, light up. (L.) In the Bible, ILIUMINATIE, to enlighten, light up. (1.) In the Bible, A. V., Heb. x. 32; Shak. Jul. Czesar, i. 3. 110. But properly a pp., as in Bacon, Adv. of Learning. b. i. 7. § 3; G. Douglas, tr, of Virgil, prol. to bk. xii., l. 54. [Older writers use illumine; see Dunbar, Thrissill and Rois, st. 3. We also find the shortened form illume, Hamlet, i. 1. 37. Both from F. illuminer; Cot.] – Lat. illuminatus, Heb. x. 32 (Vulgate); pp. of illuminare, to give light to. – Lat. il-, for in, on, upon; and luminare, to light up. – Lat. ilumina-tion, illuminative illuminator. Boy illuminary. Der. illuminative. illuminat-ive, illuminat-or; also illumine (see above), for which Gower uses enlumine, C. A. iii. 86; whence the short form illume (see above), with which cf. relume, Oth. v. 2. 13.

ILLUSION, deception, false show. (F., -L.) In Chaucer, C.T. 1146. - F. illusion, 'illusion ;' Cot. - Lat. acc. illusionem, from nom. illusio, a deception. - Lat. illusus, pp. of illuders. See Illudo; which also see for illusive.

ILLUSTRATE, to throw light upon. (L.) In Shak. Hen. VIII, iii. 2. 181. Properly a pp.; see L. L. L. iv. 1. 65; v. 1. 128. - Lat. illustratus, pp. of illustrare, to light up, throw light on. - Lat. il-, for in, upon; and lustrare, to enlighten. See Illustrious. Der. illustrat-or, illustrat-ion, illustrat-ive, illustrat-ive-ly; and see below.

ILLUSTRIOUS, bright, renowned. (F.,-L.; or L.) In Shak. L. L. L. i. I. 178. A badly coined word; either from F. illustre, by adding -ous, or from the corresponding Lat. illustris, bright, renowned; the former is more likely. [Its form imitates that of industrious, which is correct.] β. The origin of Lat. illustris is disputed. According to one theory, it is from Lat. lustrum, a lustration, which is prob. to be referred to VLU, to wash; see Lustration. Or, more likely, it stands for illuc-s-tris, from the base luc- seen in luc-id-us, bright (shortened to lū in lu-men, light, lu-na, moon); see Lucid. y. The prefix is the prep. in; see II - (1). Der. illustrious-ly, acst. IM- (1), prehx. (F., = L.; or E.) A. In some words, im- is a corruption of the O. French prefix em-, but is spelt im- (as sometimes in later F.) by confusion with the Latin prefix im- whence it is derived. B. And further, by a confusion arising from the double use of the prefix in- (which is both Eng. and Lat.) it was often looked upon as a fair substitute for the E. in, and is prefixed to words of purely E. origin, when the next letter is b or p. Exx.: im-bed, imbitter, im-body, im-bosom, im-bower, im-brown; and similarly im-park.

IM-(2), prefix. (L.) In many words, im = in-, from the Lat. prep. in, in; the next letter being b, m, or p. Exx.: im-bue, im-merge, im-migrate, im-minent, im-mit, im-pel, im pend, &c.

IM-(3), prefix. (F., -L.) In some words im-=F. im-=Lat. imp. See In- (3). Exx.: im-becile, im-mediate, im-memorial, im-mense, im-modest, im munity, im-palpable, &c. And see Im- (1).

IMAGER, a likeness, statue, idol, figure. (F., -L.) In Chaucer, C. T. 420, 14167. - F. image, 'an image;' Cot. - Lat. imaginem, ucc. of imago, a likeness. Formed, with suffix -ago, from the base imseen in im-itari, to imitate. See Imitate. Der. image-ry, Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 100; Gower, C. A. ii. 320; also imagine, q. v. IMAGINE, to conceive of, think, devise. (F., -L.) M. E. ima-ginen; Chaucer, C. T. 5309. - F. imaginer, 'to imagine, think;' Cot. -Lat. imaginari, pp, imaginatus, to picture to one's self, imagine -Lat. imagin-, stem of imago, a likeness; see Imago. Der. imagin-er; imagin-able, Sir T. More, Works, p. 1193 d; imagin-abl-y, imagin-ableness; imagin-ar-y, Com. of Errors, iv. 3. 10; imagin-at-ion, Chaucer, C. T. 15223; imagin-at-ive = M. E. imaginatif, Chaucer, C. T. 11406; imagin-at-ive-ness.

IMBALM, the same as Embalm, q.v. (F.) Milton has imbalm'd, Areopagitica, ed. Hales, p. 6, l. 7. IMBANK, the same as Embank, q. v. (F. and E.)

IMBARGO, the same as Embargo, q. v. (Span.) In Coles' Dict. ed. 1684.

IMBARK, the same as Embark, q.v. (F.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. IMBECILE, feeble. (F.,-L) We in a manner were got out of God's possession; were, in respect to Him, become imbecile and lost; Barrow, Sermons, vol. ii. ser. 22 (R.) [Formerly a rare word as an adj.; but the verb to imbécill (accented on the penultimate) was rather common; see note below.] Imbecility is in Shak. Troil. i. 3. 114.-O. F. imbecille, 'weak, feeble;' Cot.-Lat. imbecillum or im-becillem, acc. of imbecillus or imbecillis, feeble. Root uncertain. Der. imbecil-i-ty. GF The examples in R. shew that the verb to imbicill or imbicel, to weaken, enfeeble, was once tolerably well known. It also meant 'to diminish' or 'subtract from,' and this is probably the origin of our modern E. emberzle, to purloin, the etymo-logy of which is not given in its proper place. The example from Udal, on the Revelation of St. John, c. 16, shews the intermediate stage in the sense. It runs as follows: 'The seconde plage of the seconde angell, as the seconde iudgemente of God againste the regiment of Rome, and this is imbeselynge and dimynishe [diminution] of their power and dominion, many landes and people fallynge from The quotations (in R.) from Drant's tr. of Horace, b. i. sat. 5 them. and sat. 6, introduce the lines : 'So tyrannous a monarchie imbecelyng freedome, than' [then]; and: 'And so imbeeill all theyr strengthe that they are naught to me.' These lines completely establish the accentuation of the verb, and further illustrate its sense. See Embeszle. and the quotations in Richardson under embezzle, imbecile, and imbezzle. The old word bezzle, to squander, is still the same word, with loss of the first syllable.

IMBED, to lay, as in a bed. (E.; with F. prefin.) In Todd's Johnson. From Im-(1) and Bed. IMBIBE, to drink in. (F., -L.; or L.) In Blount's Gloss, ed.

1674.-F. imbiber, in use in the 16th cent.-Lat. imbibere, to drink in. - Lat. im- = in, in; and bibere. to drink. See Bib. B. Bibere is a reduplicated form from the base BI, weakened form of PI, to drink. - V PA, to drink; cf. Skt. pú, to drink; pibámi, I drink. See ¶ Or taken immediately from Latin. Milton, P. L. iii. 75, v. 597. IMBOWER, to shelter with a bower. (E.; with F. prefix.) From Im-(1) and Bower. In Milton, P. L. i. 304.

IMBRICATED, bent and hollowed like a gutter-tile. (L.) term in botany. Both imbricated and imbrication are in Kersey, ed. 1715 .- Lat. imbricatus, pp. of imbricare, to cover with a gutter-tile.-Lat. imbric-, stem of imbres, a gutter-tile. - Lat. imbri-, crude form of imber, a shower of rain. + Gk. ύμβροι, a shower. + Skt. ambkas, water; abkra, a rain-cloud. Said to be from AABH, to swell. Der. imbricat-ion.

IMBROWN, to make brown. (E.; with F. prefix.) From Im. (1) and Brown. In Milton, P. L. iv. 246.

MMOBILITY.

IMBRUE, INFREEW, EMBREW, to moisten, dreach. (F. – L.) '[Mine eyes] With teares no more imbrue your mistresse face;' Turberville, The Lover Hoping Assuredly. 'Imbrew'd in guilty blood;' Spenser, F. Q. i. 7. 47. = O. F. embruer; Cot. gives '*i'em-*bruer, to imbrue or bedable himself with.' Allied to O. Ital. *im-*bruer, to imbrue or bedable himself with.' Allied to O. Ital. imbre bevere, which Florio gives as equivalent to imbuire, 'to sinke into, to wet or moisten in, to steepe into, to embrue;' cf. mod. Ital. imbevere, to imbibe. β. The O.F. embruer is formed, like mod. F. abrenver, from a causal verb -bewrer, to give to drink, turned into brever in the 16th century, and thence into brever. See abreaver in Brachet. Y. This causal verb is founded on O. F. bevre (F. boire), Brachet. to drink ; from Lat. bibere, to drink. 8. Hence imbrue is the causal of to imbibe, and signifies ' to make to imbibe,' to soak, drench. See Imbibe. Probably it has often been confounded with imbue, which is really its doublet; see Imbue. Utterly unconnected with E. brew, with which it is sometimes supposed to be allied.

• With noysome IMBUE, to cause to drink, tinge deeply. (L.) rage imbew'd; ' Spenser, Ruines of Rome, st. 24, 1. 6. Cf. Milton, P. L. viii. 216 - Lat. imbuere, to cause to drink in. - Lat. im-, for in. in; and base BU, weakened form of PU, which is the causal from the base BI, to drink, weakened form of PI, to drink. See Imbibe. impassabl-y, impassable ness. IMPASSIBLE, incapable of feeling. (F.,-L.)

"This most pure parte of the soule, ... deuine, impassible, and incorruptible; Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 23 (R.) Impassibilitie is in Sir T. More's Works, p. 1329 b. – F. impassible, 'impassible, sencelesse; Cot.-Lat. impassibilis, incapable of passion or suffering.-Lat. im-=in-, not; and passibilis, capable of suffering. - Lat. passus, pp. of pati, to suffer. See Im- (3) and Passion, Patience. Der. impassible-ness, impassibili-19.

IMPASSIONED, roused to strong feeling. (F., - L.) In Milton, P. L. ix. 678. From the prefix im - Lat. in, with an intensive force; and Passion. Der. A similar formation is impassionale, rarely used. IMPASSIVE, not susceptible of feeling, not shewing feeling. (F.,-L.) In Milton, P. L. vi. 455. From Im-(3) and Passive. Der. impassive-ly, ness; Burton uses impassionale in a like sense (R.) IMPATIENT, not patient. (F., -L.) M. E. impatient. 'Im-patient is he that wol not be taught;' Chaucer, C. T. Pers. Tale, De Superbia, sect. 1. - F. impatient, 'impatient;' Cot. See Im- (3) and Patient. Der. impatient-ly, impacience, impaciencey. IMPAWN, to pledge. (F.) In Shak. Hen. V, i. 2. 21; Hamlet, IMPEACH, to charge (r.) In Shak, Hen. v. 1. 2. 21; Hamlet, v. 2. 155, 171. From im-, prefix, a substitute for F. em-=L. im-, in; and powm; see Im- (1) and Pawn.

 IMPEACH, to charge with a crime. (F., -L.) The orig. sense is 'to hinder;' and it was once so used. 'The victorie was much hindered and impeached;' Holland, tr. of Livy, p. 308 (R.) 'To impeach and stop their breath;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xi. c. 3. M. E. apechen, a corruption of empechen; the pp. apeched occurs in Shoreham's Poems, ed. Wright (Percy Soc.), p. 38, l. 24.-0.F. empescher, 'to hinder, let, stop, bar, impeach;' Cot.  $\beta$ . There is also an old F. form emprescher, in which the s again appears to be merely adventitious. Littre and Scheler connect these with Prov. empedegar, which they cite; and these forms may all be derived from Low Lat. impedicare, to fetter. Impedicare is from the prefix im = in, in, on; and pedica, a fetter, from pedi-, crude form of pes, a foot; see Im-(1) and Foot. Y. At the same time, the Span empachar, Ital. impacciare, to delay, are to be referred to Low Lat. impactare \* (not found), a frequentative from impingere, pp. impactus, to bind, to fasten. Impingere is compounded of im- = in, in, on; and pangere (base PAG), to fasten, from  $\sqrt{PAK}$ , to bind; cf. Sk. pag, to bind, pága, a fetter, Gk.  $\pi \eta \gamma \nu \mu \mu$ , I fix. It is very likely that the two sources may have been more or less confused, and may both have influenced the O. F. empescher. See Despatch. Der. impeach-er, impeach-able ; impeach-ment, Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 15. IMPEARL, to adom with pearls. (F.) In Milton, P. L. v. 747.

L. xi. 686. - F. imprudent, 'imprudent;' Cot. - Lat. imprudent-, stem of imprudens, not prudent. See Im- (3) and Prudent. Der. imprudent-ly, imprudence.

IMPUDENT, shameless. (F., -L.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 12. 5. -F. impudent, 'impudent;' Cot. - Lat. impudent-, stem of impudens, shameless. - Lat. im- = in- = E. un-, not; and pudens, modest, properly pres. part. of pudere, to feel shame (a word of doubtful origin). Der. impudent-ly ; impudence, from F. impudence, 'impudence' (Cot.).

IMPUGN, to attack, call in question. (F., -L.) In rather early use. M. E. impugnen; P. Plowman, B. vii. 147.-F. impugner, 'to impugne, fight or stirre against;' Cot.-Lat. impugnare, to fight against. - Lat. im-=in, against; and pugnare, to fight. See Im-(1) and Pugnacious, Pugilism. Der. impugn-sr, impugn-able. IMPULSE, IMPULSION, IMPULSIVE; see Impel.

IMPUNITY, safety from punishment. (F., -L.) 'As touching both the impunitie and also the recompense of other the informers; Holland, tr. of Livy, p. 1035 (R.); and in Cotgrave. - F. impunité, 'impunity;' Cot. - Lat. impunitatem, acc. of impunitas, impunity. -Lat. impuni-, crude form of impunis, without punishment. - Lat. im-in-ec. inspire, clube form of imparity without purishient. - Lat. imperiate parts in the part of the i-ty, Shak. Lucrece, 854.

IMPUTE, to place to the account of, reckon against as a fault, ascribe, charge. (F., -L.) In Levins. 'Th' imputed blame ;' Spenser, F. Q. ii. 1. 20. - F. imputer, 'to impute, ascribe, or attribute unto; Cot. - Lat. imputare, to bring into a reckoning. - Lat. im- = in, in ; and putare, to reckon, suppose, orig. to cleanse. - Lat. putus, cleansed, pure; from the same source as purus, pure. See Im- (1) and Pure. Der. imput-er, imput-able, imput-abl-y, imput-able-ness, imputabil-i-ty; imput-at-ion, Merch. Ven. i. 3. 13; imput-at-ive, imput-at-ive-ly.

E. on; see On. y. All from ANA, pronominal base of the third person; 'dvá is evidently a case-form of the demonstrative stem, which is preserved as ana in Sanskrit, as anas (= Lat. ille) in Lithuanian, and as ond with the same meaning in Church-Slavonic;' Curtius, i. 381. Der. inn-er, from A. S. innera, a comparative adj., Grein, ii. 143; in-most, M. E. inemaste (written for innemest), Castel of Love, ed. Weymouth, 1. 809 (Stratmann), from A. S. innemest, an authorised form (Bosworth). Gr The form innermost is doubly corrupt, having an inserted r, and o substituted for older e; the correct form is innemest = A.S. innemest above. Even this is a double superlative, with the suffix -est added to the formative m which in itself denotes the superlative (as in Latin pri-m-us); see this explained under Aftermost, Foremost. Similarly inmost should rather have been inmest. Dor. (continued): in-ward, q.v.; also there-in, where-in, withE. and is merely the prep. in in composition. Exx.: in-born, in-breathe, in-bred, in-land, in-lay, in-let, in-ly, in-mate, in-side, in-sigk', in-snare, in-stall, in-step, in-twine, in-twist, in-weave, in-wrap, in-wrought. See In.

IN- (2), profix, in. (L.; or F., -L.) In some words, the prefix is not the E. prep. in, but the cognate Lat. form. Exx. : in-augurate, incarcerate, in carried in the cognition of the form of the rate of the merous.  $\beta$ . Sometimes the Lat. word has passed through F. before reaching E. Exx.: in-cise, in-cite, in-cline, in-dication, &c. ¶ In-(2) becomes il- before l, as in il-lusion; im- before m and p, as in im-bue, im-peril; ir- before r, as in ir-rigate.

IN-(3), prefix, with negative force. (L.; or F., -L.) In numerous words, the prefix in- has a negative force; from Lat. neg. prefix in-, which is cognate with E. un- (with the same force), O. Irish an-, Skt. an. (frequently shortened to a-), Gk. dra-, dr- (often shortened to d-), Zend ana, an, a.  $\beta$ . This negative prefix is probably identical with the preposition ANA, which appears as Gk. dxd, up, Zend ana, up, Goth. ana, up, to, against. Thus the Gk. dxd occasionally has the sense of 'back' or 'backwards,' as in dxa-reject, to throw the head back in token of refusal, to deny; cf. drd poor, up stream, against the stream; whence the negative use may easily have arisen. See Curtius, i. 381. And see On, In.  $\beta$ . In many words, the Lat. word has reached us through the medium of French. Exx.: incomes is before gn, as in isomorphic incompatible, &c.  $\P$  In- (3) becomes is before gn, as in isomorphic is before l, as in il-legal; imbefore m and p, as in immense improves in before

INABILITY, lack of ability. (F., -L.) M. E. inabylité; in A Goodly Balade, a poem wrongly ascribed to Chaucer, 1. 61; see Chaucer's Works, ed. Morris, vi. 277. See In- (3) and Able.

E. enditen, Chaucer, C. T. 18;4, 2743. Indyted or endyted of clerkly speche, Dictatus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 201. Indytyd be [by] lawe, for trespace, Indictatus;' id. – O. F. endeter, 'to indict, accuse, impeach;' Cot. Also spelt enditer, with the sense 'to point out ;' Bartsch, Chrest. Française. - Low Lat. indictare, to accuse; frequentative of Lat. indicere, to proclaim, enjoin, impose. It is clear that the senses of the related words indicare, to point out, and dictare, to dictate, have influenced the sense of indite, and it is hardly possible to separate the influence of dicare from that of dicere. See Dictate, Diction. ¶ The spelling indict is reserved for the sense ' to accuse.' Der. indit-er, indite ment. Doublet.

indict, q. v. INDIVIDUAL, separate, pertaining to one only. (L.) · If it were not for two things that are constant . . . no individuall would last one moment ;' Bacon, Essay 58, Of Vicissitude. Formed, with suffix -al, from Lat. individu-us, indivisible, inseparable; hence, distinct, apart. - Lat. in-, not ; and dividuus, divisible, from dividere, to divide; see In- (3) and Divide. INDOCILE, not docile. (F., -L.) 'Hogs and more indocile beasts; 'Sir W. Petty, Adv. to Hartlib (1648), p. 23; Todd. - F. in-docile, 'indocible;' Cot. - Lat. indocilis, not teachable. See In- (3) and Docile. Der. indocil-i-ty.

INDOCTRINATE, to instruct in doctrine. (L.) 'His indoc-trinating power;' Milton, Apology for Smectymnuus (R.) Coined as if from Low Lat. indoctrinare , not found. – Lat. in, in; and doc-trina, learning. See In- (2) and Dootrine. Der. indoctrinat-ion. INDOLENCE, idleness. (L.) A shortened form of the older indolency. 'Indolence or Indolency;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Only indolency is given in Coles and Blount, and occurs in Holland's Plutarch, p. 480 (R.) Indolence and indolent both occur in the Spectator, no. 100. Indolency is Englished from Lat. indolentia, freedom from pain; hence, ease. - Lat. in, neg. prefix; and dolent., stem of dolens, pres. part. of dolere, to grieve. See In- (3) and Dolour. Der. indolent (later than indolency); indolent-ly.

INDOMITABLE, untameable. (L.) 'It is so fierce and indomitable;' Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 383 (R.) A coined word; from Lat. in-, not; and domitare, frequentative of domare, to tame, cognate with E. tame; see In- (3) and Tame. Der. indomitably. INDORSE, the same as Endorse. Der. induct-ion, from F. induction, 'an induction, entry, or leading into' (Cot.), from Lat. in-ductionem, acc. of inductio, an introducing ; induct-ive, induct-ive-ly. Induction was formerly used for 'introduction;' as in Sackville's Induction to the Mirror for Magistrates.

INDUE (1), to invest or clothe with, supply with. (L.) 'Infinite shapes of creatures there are found . . . Some fitt for reasonable sowles t'indew;' Spenser, F. Q. iii. 6. 35. 'Indu'd with robes of various hue;' Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metam. b. xi. l. 264; where the rertain ;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. v. c. 12 § 1. From Lat. has 'induitur uelamina mille colorum,' Metam. xi. 589. - Lat.

B. Connected with indinduere, to put into, put on, clothe with. unia, clothes, ex-unia, spoils; the prefix is ind- rather than in-, there being no connection with Gk. erover, erover, to put on. See Exuvise. Der. indue ment (rare). And see below.

INDUE (2), a corruption of Endue, q. v. (F., -L.) This word is totally distinct from the above, but some of our best writers seem to have much confused them. For instances, see Shak, Tw. Nt. i. 5. 105, Oth. iii. 4. 146, &c.; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 2. 6. See Todd's Johnson. The mistake chiefly arises in the phrase 'indued with,' miswritten for 'endued with,' in the sense of 'endowed with;' see Shak. Two Gent. v. 4. 153, Com. Errors, ii. 1. 22. Dryden uses ' indued with ' correctly, as in the instance cited under Indue (1).

INDULGENCE, permission, licence, gratification. (F.,-L.) M. E. indulgence, P. Plowman, B. vii. 193; Chaucer, C. T. 5666.-F. indulgence, 'indulgence;' Cot. - Lat. indulgentia, indulgence, gentleness. - Lat. indulgenti-, crude form of pres. part. of indulgere, to be courteous to, indulge.  $\beta$ . Origin unknown; it is not even certain whether the prefix is in- or ind-. Der. indulg-ent, Ant. and Cleop. i. 4. 16, from F. indulgent, 'indulgent,' Cot. Hence the (later) verb indulge, Dryden, tr. of Persius, Sat. v. 74, answering to Lat. indulgere.

INDURATE, to harden. (L.) Indurated occurs thrice, and induration twice, in Barnes, Works, p. 282. Properly a pp., as in Tyndal, Works, p. 28, col. 1; 'for their harts were indurate' - Lat.

induratives, pp. of indurare, to harden. See Endure. Der. induration INDUSTRY, diligence. (F., -L.) In Shak. Two Gent. i. 3. 22; spelt industree, Spenser, F. Q. i. 10. 45. - F. industrie, 'industry; Cot. - Lat. industria, diligence. - Lat. industries, diligent.  $\beta$ . Of β. Óf uncertain origin; perhaps for industruus = indo-stru-us, from indo, O. Lat. extension from in, in; and the base stru-, occurring in struere, to arrange, build (hence, to toil); see Instruct. Der. industri-al, industri-al-dy; also industri-ous, Temp. iv. 33, from F. industrieux, 'industrious' (Cot.), which from Lat. industri-osus, abounding in

INGLOBIOUS, not glorious. (F., -L.) In Shak. K. John, v. 1. 65. - F. inglorieux, 'inglorious;' Cot. - Low Lat. inglorious, INGOT, a mass of metal poured into a mould, a mass of unwrought metal. (E.) See my note to Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 2. 17. M. E. ingos, Chaucer, C. T. 16677, 16691, 16696, 16701; where it means 'a mould in which metal is cast;' see the passages. But the true sense is that which is still preserved, viz. 'that which is poured in,' a mass of metal. - A. S. in, in; and goten, poured, pp. of geotan, to in, a mass of metal. -A. S. in, in; and goten, pource, pp. of geotan, to pour, shed water, fuse metals; Grein, i. 504. Cf. Du. ingieten, Swed. ingjuta, to pour in.  $\beta$ . The A.S. geotan is cognate with Du. gieten, G. giessen, Icel. gjóta (pp. gotinn), Dan. gyde, Swed. gjuta (pp. gwten), Goth. gjutan, to pour, shed, fuse; all from  $\checkmark$  GHUD, to pour, seen also in Lat. funders (pt. t. fudi, pp. fusus); which is an extension of  $\checkmark$  GHU, to pour. See Fuse, Chyle. GF A. From the E. instatic derived the E. limit on inpot. which stands for the E. ingot is derived the F. lingot, an ingot, which stands for l'ingot, by that incorporation of the article which is not uncommon in French; cf. lendemain (= le en demain), loriot (from Lat. aureolus), lustle (from Lat. wwa), lierre (from Lat. hedera). And again, from F. lingot was formed the Low Lat. lingotus, which is not an early word, but assigned by Ducange to A. D. 1440. This Low Lat. word has been by some fancifully derived from Lat. lingua, the tongue; owing to a supposed resemblance of a mass of molten metal to the shape of the tongue; much as the countryman described the size of a stone B. Scheler hesitates to as being 'as big as a lump of chalk.' accept the derivation here given, from the notion that the A.S. verb gedean soon became obsolete. This is quite a mistake, as it is still extant ; see ' Yote, to pour,' in Halliwell, and cf. Cleveland yetling, a small iron pan; and more E. dialect-words from the same source might be adduced. The M. E. verb seten was long in use also; see examples in Stratmann, s. v. seoten, 3rd ed., p. 262. 'His mase [mace] he toke in his honde tho, That was made of yo'm bras,' i. e. brass formed in a mould; Rich. Coer de Lion, ed. Weber, 371. 'The lazar tok forth his coupe [cup] of gold; Bothe were yoten in o mold," i. e. both the lazar's cup and another were cast in one mould; Amis and Amiloun, ed. Weber, 2023. • Mawmez igoven of golde' = idols cast out of gold; Juliana, ed. Cockayne, p. 38, l. 13. 0. Moreover, there was a derivative sb. gote, a channel ; see Prompt. Parv., p. 205, and note; it occurs in the statutes 33 Hen. VIII, c. 33, 2 and 3 Edw. VI, c. 30; still in use in the forms gote, gowt, gut, got, in various parts of England; cf. Du. goot, a gutter; Low G. güte, gete, a can for pouring out, the beak of such a can; göte, a pouring out; see Bremen Wörterb. ii. 502. D. And note particularly that the whole word ingot has its exact parallel in the cognate (yet independent) G. einguss, 'infusion, instillation, pouring in, potion, drink (given to horses); as a technical term, jet, ingot; 'Flügel's G. Dict. This word, by Grimm's law, and by the usual vowel-changes, corresponds to the E. word, letter for letter, throughout. (Much more might be added.)

INGRAFT, ENGRAFT, to graft upon. (F., - L., - Gk.) See Engrafed and Engraft in Schmidt, Shak. Lexicon. Spelt in graft, Millon, P. L. xi. 35. Coined from In- (1) or In- (2) and Graft, q. v.

INGRAIN, to dye of a fast colour.  $(F_{.,-}L_{.})$  M. E. engreynen, P. Plowman, B. ii. 15, xiv. 20; cf. P. Plowman's Crede, 1. 230. See the excellent note by Mr. Marsh, in his Lect. on the E. Language, ed. Smith, p. 55, on the signification of to dys in grain, or of a fast colour. And see Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 5. 255, Haml. iii. 4. 90; Milton, Il Pens. 33, Comus, 750. - F. en graine, in grain; Cot. gives graine, the seed of herbs, also grain wherewith cloth is died in grain, scarlet die, β. The F. en = Lat. in, in; the F. graine is scarlet in graine.' from Low Lat. grana, the dye produced from cochineal, which appears also in Span, and Ital. grana, grain, seed, cochineal. Y. So named from the resemblance of the dried cochineal to fine grain or seed; see Grain.

F. enque, ink (Littré); the mod. F. form being encre, with inserted r. - Lat. encaustum, the purple red ink used by the later Roman emperors; neut. of encaustus, burnt in, encaustic. - Gk. Eynavo-¶ Littré remarks that the Tos. burnt in. See Encaustic. accent on the Lat. encaustum varied; from éncaustum was derived the O. F. enque, whilst from encaustum was derived the Ital. inchiostro (ink). Der. ink-y; ink-holder, ink-stand; ink-horn, Ezek. ix. 2 (A.V.), but otherwise obsolete. [†]

INKLE, a kind of tape. (F.,-L.) In Shak. L. L. L. iii. 140; Wint. Ta. iv. 4, 208. a. In the Prompt. Parv. we find the curious entry: 'Lymyolf, or inniolf, threde to sow wythe schone or botys, lymolf, Indula, licinium.' Here the final f appears to be a corrupt addition, leaving inniol as another form of lynyol or linniol.  $\beta$ . But it is certain that linniol is the same word with O. F. lignel or lignioul (Roquefort) or ligneul (Cotgrave), which also took the form lingell in English. 'Lyngell that souters sowe with, chefgros, lignier; Palsgrave. And since linnical also appears as innical, we have good ground for supposing that lingell might appears as innical, we have good an easy corruption.  $\gamma$ . This shews that Mr. Wedgwood is probably right in deriving inkle from lingell by the loss of initial l, which might be the provide the proved definition of the second definition which might easily have been mistaken for the French definite article, and thus be dropped as being supposed to be unnecessary. There are similar cases in which an l has been prefixed owing to a similar mistake; I have met with landiron with the sense of andiron; See Andiron. For further examples of lingell, lingel, or lingle, see Halliwell and Jamieson.-O.F. ligneul, 'shoomakers thread, or a tatching end,' Cot.; spelt lignel in the 13th cent. (Littré). Dimin. of F. ligne, thread (Littré).-Lat. linea, fem. of lineus, hempen, flaxen. -Lat. linum, flax. See Linen. [+]

INKLING, a hint, intimation. (Scand.) In Shak. Hen. VIII, ii. 1. 140; Cor. i. 1. 50. 'What cause hee hadde soo to thynke, harde it is to saye, whyther hee, being toward him, anye thynge harde it is to saye, whyther hee, being toward him, any targing knewe that hee suche thyng purposed, or otherwyse had anye inke-lynge thereof; for hee was not likelye to speake it of noughte; Sir T. More, Works, p. 38 a. Inkling is a verbal sb. formed from the M. E. verb incle. 'To incle the truthe;' Alisaunder, ed. Skeat, 616 (in Appendix to Will. of Palerne).  $\beta$ . Incle or inkle is a frequentative verb from a base ink-, to murmur, mutter. This word is now only preserved in the parallel form imi, appearing in Icel. ymia, Dan. ymia, to murmur, mutter, an iterative verb from ymja, to whine, which from ymr, a humming sound. Y. And again, ymr is from a base um-, appearing in Icel. umla, to mutter, to mumble; cf. Swed. Y. And again, ymr is from hum, a slight sound, whence the phrase fd hum om, to get a hint of, get an inkling of. 8. Finally, the Swed. hum, like E. hum, is of imitative origin; see Hum. Cf. O. Dan. ymmel, a murmur, ymle, to whisper, rumour (Molbech's Dan. Dict. s. v. ymre), which is a parallel

Lat. pp. internentus. INTERVIEW, a mutual view or sight, a meeting. (F.,-L.) In Shak. L. L. ii. 167. Modified from O. F. entreveu, pp. of entrevoir; cf. 's'entrevoir, to behold or visit one another;' Cot. = F. entre, from Lat. inter, between; and O. F. veu, pp. of voir, from Lat. uidere, to see; see View.

INTERWEAVE, to weave together. (Hybrid; L. and E.) The pp. interwoven is in Milton, P. R. ii. 263. Coined from Lat. inter, between ; and Weave, q. v.

INTESTATE, without a will. (L.) 'Or dieth intestate;' P. Plowman, B. xv. 134 .- Lat. intestatus, that has made no testament or will. - Lat. in-, not; and testatus, pp. of testari, to be a witness, to make a will; see Tostamont. Der. intestac-y.

INTESTINE, inward, internal. (F., -L.) In Shak. Com. Errors, i. 1. 11. - F. intestin, 'intestine, inward;' Cot. - Lat. intestinus, adj. inward.  $\beta$ . Formed from Lat. intus, adv. within; cognate with Gk. evros, within. These are extensions from Lat. in, Gk. ev, in; see In. Der. intestines, pl. sb., in Kersey, ed. 1715, from F. intestin, 'an intestine' (Cot.), which from Lat. intestinum, neut. of intestinus. Also intestin-al, from F. intestinal (Cot.).

INTHRAL, the same as Enthral, q.v., but with E. prefix. (E.) Spelt inthrall in Kersey, ed. 1715; and in Phineas Fletcher, Purple Island, c. 5 (R.) Der. inthral-ment. INTIMATE (1), to announce, hint. (L.) In Shak. L. L. L. ii. 129. Properly a pp., as: 'their enterpryse was invimale and pub-lished to the kyng;' Hall's Chron. Hen. IV, an. I (R.)-Lat. *inti*matus, pp. of intimare, to bring within, to announce. - Lat. intimus, innermost; superl. corresponding to comp. interior; see Interior. Der. intimat-ion, from F. intimation, 'an intimation;' Cot. And see Intimate (2).

INTIMATE (2), familiar, close. (L.) The use of this word is due to confusion with the word above. The correct form is intime. as in: 'requires an intime application of the agents;' Digby, On Bodies, b. 5. s. 6. This is O. F. intime, 'inward, secret, hearty, especiall, deer, intirely affected ' (Cot.), from Lat. intimus, innermost, closely attached, intimate; see above. Der. intimate, intimacy. INTIMIDATE, to frighten. (Low Lat.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. [Probably suggested by O. F. intimider, 'to fear, to skare;' Cot.] - Low Lat. intimidatus, pp. of intimidare, to frighten; in the Acta Sanctorum (Ducange). - Lat. in., intensive prefix, from the prep. in; and timidus, timid, fearful; see Timid. Der. intimidat-im, from F. intimidation, 'a fearing, a skaring; 'Cot. INTITULED, entitled. (F.,-L.) In Shak. L. L. V. I. 8; Lucrece, 57. – F. intitulé, 'intitled or intituled,' Cot.; intituler, 'to intitle,' id. See Entitle.

INTO, prep. denoting passage inwards. (E.) M.E. into, Chaucer, C. T. 2431; Layamon, 5150. - A. S. in 10 (two words), where in is used adverbially, and 10 is the preposition. 'Ne gá þú mid þínum esne in 16 dóme'=go not thou into judgment [lit. inwards to judgment] with thy servant; Psalm, cxlii. 2; Grein, ii. 140. See In and To.

and To. INTOLERABLE, not tolerable. (F.,-L.) 'For lenger to endure it is intollerable;' Lament of Mary Magdalen, st. 54; and see st. 10. - F. intolerable, 'intollerable;' Cot. - Lat. intolerabilis; see In (a) and Tolerable. Der. intolerabl-y, intolerable-ness. So also in-tolerant, a late word, in Todd's Johnson; intolerance = F. intolerance, 'impatiency,' Cot.

INTOMB, the same as Entomb. (F.,-L.; but with E. prefix.)

In Shak. Mach. ii. 4. 9 (first folio). INTONE, to chant. (Low hat., - Lat. and Gk.) 'Ass intones to ass;' Pope, Dunciad, ii. 253. - Low Lat. intonare, to sing according to tone. - Lat. in tonum, according to tone; where tonum is acc. of tonus, not a true Lat. word, but borrowed from Gk. roros; see Tone. Der. ¶ Note that intonation was also formerly used in the inton-at-ion. sense of 'loud noise.' Thus Minsheu (ed. 1627) has : 'Intonation, loud noise or sound, a thundering.' This is from the classical Lat. intonare, to thunder forth, compounded of in (used as intensive prefix) and tonare, to thunder, which is from O. Lat. tonus, thunder. But this O. Lat. tonus is cognate with Gk. toros (instead of being borrowed from it, like the tonus above); so that the result is much the same. See Thunder. We may also note that, in the quotation from Pope above, there is probably a play upon words; so that both Low Lat. intonare and Lat. intonare are involved in it.

INTOXICATE, to make drunk. (Low Lat., -Gk.) In Shak, Hen. V, iv. 7. 39. Used as a pp. in Fryth's Works, p. 77: 'theyr mind is so intoxicate.'-Low Lat. intoxicatus, pp. of intoxicare, to of which the pl.  $\tau \delta f a = (1)$  bow and arrows, (2) arrows only. Der.

Intoxical-sion. [†] INTRACTABLE, not tractable. (F., -L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. - F. intractable, 'intractable;' Cot. - Lat. intractabilis. See In- (3) and Tractable, Trace. Der. intractabl-y, intractable-ness. INTRAMURAL, within the walls. (L.) Modern; not in

Todd's Johnson. - Lat. intra, within; and murus, a wall; see Mural. INTRANSITIVE, not transitive. (L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. - Lat. intransitiuus, that does not pass over to another person; used of verbs in grammar. See In- (3) and Transitive. Der. intransitive-ly

INTREAT. the same as Entreat. (F., -L.; with E. prefix.) Minsheu, ed. 1627, gives both spellings; and see the Bible Wordbook and Nares

INTRENCH, the same as Entrench. (F., -L.; with E. prefix.) In Shak. I Hen. VI. i. 4. 9. Der. intrenchment. INTREPID, dauntless, brave. (L.) 'That qua INTREPID, dauntless, brave. (L.) 'That quality [valour] which signifies no more than an intrepid courage; 'Dryden; Dedic. to Virgil's Æneid. - Lat. intrepidus, fearless. - Lat. in-, not; and trepidus, restless, alarmed; see In- (3) and Trepidation. Der. intrepid-ly; intrepid-i-ty, Spectator, no. 122.

INTRICATE, perplexed, obscure. (L.) In Shak. Com. Errors, v. 269.-Lat. intricatus, pp. of intricare, to perplex, embarrass, en-tangle.-Lat. in, in; and trica, pl. sb., hindrances, vexations, wiles (whence also Extricate). Der. intricate-ly, intricate-ness; intricac-y, Milton, P. L. viii. 102. And see intrigue.

INTRIGUE, to form secret plots. (F., -L.) 'Intriguing fops; Dryden, Absalom and Achitophel, pt. ii. l. 521. - F. intriguer, formerly spelt intriguer, ' to intricate, perplex, pester, insnare ; Cot. Lat. intricare, to perplex ; see above. Der. intrigue, sb. ; intrigu-er. INTRINSIC, inward, genuine, inherent. (F., -L.) A mistake for intrinsec. Intrinsecal was formerly in use, as in Minsheu, ed. 1647. Shak has intrinse, K. Lear, ii. 2.81; and intrinsicate, Antony, v. 2. 307. 'Intrinsecal or Intrinsick, inward or secret;' Kersey, ed. 1715. - O.F. intrinseque, 'intrinsecal, inward;' Cot. - Lat. intrinsecus, inwards; lit, following towards the inside. - Lat, intr-a, within; in, into, towards; and secus, lit. following, connected with Lat. secundus, second, and sequi, to follow. See Inter-, In, and Second. Similarly Extrinsic, q. v. Der. intrinsic-al (for intrinsec-al), intrinsic-al-ly INTRODUCE, to lead or conduct into, bring into notice or use. (L.) 'With which he introduceth and bringeth his reders into a false vnderstanding ;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 341 e. - Lat. introducere, pp. introductus, to bring in .- Lat. intro, short for intero, orig. abl. of interus, inward (see Interior); and ducere, to lead; see Duke. Der. introduct-ion, Chaucer, C. T. 16854, from F. introduction = Lat. acc. introductionem (nom. introductio); in:roduct-ive; introduct-or-y, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, prol. 68; introduct-or-i-ly.

INTROMISSION, a letting in, admission. (L.) 'Intromission, a letting in ;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. A rare word. Formed, by analogy with F. sbs. in -ion, from the Lat. pp. intromissus of the verb intromittere, to introduce. - Lat. intrc-, within (see Introduce); and mittere, to send; see Mission. Der. Sometimes the verb intromit is used, but it is very rare.

INTROSPECTION, a looking into. (L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. Formed, by analogy with F. sbs. in -ion, from Lat. acc. introspectionem, from nom. introspectio, a looking into.-Lat. intro-, within (see Introduce); and spectus, pp. of specere, to look; see Spy. INTRUDE, to thrust oneself into. (L.) In Hamlet, iii. 4. 31. -Lat. intrudere, to thrust into, obtrude (oneself).-Lat. in, into; and trudere, to thrust. See Thrust. Der. intruder; also intrusion, Sir T. More, Works, p. 640b = F. intrusion, 'an intrusion' (Cot.), formed from Lat. pp. intrusus; intrus-ive, Thomson, Liberty, pt. i. 1. 299; intrus-ive-ly, intrus-ive-ness.

INTRUST, to give in trust, commit to one's care. (Scand. ; with E. profix.) Sometimes entrus, but intrust is much better, as being purer English; the latter part of the word being of Scand. (not F.) origin. In Dryden, Character of a Good Parson, 1. 57. Compounded of In and Trust.

INTUITION, a looking into, ready power of perception. (L.) Used by Bp. Taylor in the sense of 'looking upon;' Great Exemplar, pt. i. s. 36; and Rule of Conscience, b. iv. c. 2 (R.) Intuitive is in Cotgrave, and in Milton, P. L. v. 488. Formed, by analogy -Lat. in, upon; and tueri, to look; see Tuition, Tutor. Der.

INVEIGLE.

poison. - Lat. in, into; and toxicum, poison, a word borrowed from Gk. rofinóv, poison in which arrows were dipped. - Gk. rofiov, a bow, form of pres. pt. of intumescentia*), from Lat. intumescenti-, crude of which the pl. rofa=(1) bow and arrows (1) bow and Tumid.

INTWINE, another form of Entwine, q. v. (E.) Really a better form, as being purer English. ¶ So also in-twist; see Entwist. INUNDATION, an overflowing of water, a flood. (L.) In Shak. K. John, v. 1. 2; v. 2. 48. [Imitated from F. inondation.] — Lat. inundationem, acc. of inundatio, an overflowing. - Lat. inundature. pp. of inundare, to overflow, spread over in waves.-Lat. in, upon, over; and unda, a wave. See Undulate. Der. inundate, vb.,

in the second 14; and Sonnet 14, 1. 7. B. On the one hand, the F. prefix en- is more consonant with the analogy of other words, as en-able, en-camp, en-large, &c.; whilst, on the other, the E. in is more consistent with the origin of the word, since it arose from the old phrase 'in ure,' where ure is a sb. Y. The sb. ure is commonly explained by use, but its true sense is work or operation, or such use as is due to constant work. For examples, see we in Nares. Thus, in Ferrex and Porrex, Act iv. sc. 2, we have: 'And wisdom willed me without protract [delay] In speedy wise to put the same in are, i. e. in operation, not in use; see the passage in Morley's Library of Eng. Literature, Plays, p. 59, col. 1. And again, 'I wish that it should straight be put in ure;' id. Act v. sc. 1. 8. Hence was 8. Hence was also formed the verb to ure, used in the same sonse as inure. 'Ned, thou must begin Now to forget thy study and thy books, And ure thy shoulders to an armour's weight; 'Edw. III, Act i. sc. 1. 1. 159 (in the Leopold Shakspere, p. 1038). 'The Frenche souldiers whyche from their youthe have byne practysed and urede in feats of arms; Robinson's tr. of More's Utopia, ed. 1551, C 6 (inurede in ed. 1556, p. 40 of Arber's reprint). B. The etymology of ure is clearly the O.F. ovre, oevre, uevre, eure, work, action, operation ; see ourse in Burguy, and surse in Roquefort, and mod. F. surse in Littré. [Mr. Wedgwood well remarks upon the similar letter-changes by which the F. man-area has become the E. man-are.] - Lat. opera, work ; see Opera, Operate. Der. inwre-ment (rare). (a) The word wre here treated of is quite distinct from M. E. wre, fate, destiny, luck, as used in Barbour's Bruce, i. 312, ii. 434, &c. ; see glossary to my edition. In this case, ure is the O.F. eur, aur (mod. F. heur in bon-heur), from Lat. augurium ; see Augur. There is also an O. F. ure, put for Lat. hora; see Hour.

INURN, to put into a sepulchral urn. (F., -L.; or L.) In Shak.

Hamlet, i. 4. 49. See In- (1) and Urn. INUTILITY, uselessness. (F.,-L.) In Cotgrave.-F. inutilité. 'inutility;' Cot. - Lat. inutilitatem, from nom. inutilitas. See In-(3) and Utility.

INVADE, to enter an enemy's country, encroach upon. (F., -L.) 'And streight inuade the town;' Lord Surrey, tr. of Æneid, b. ii. 1. 338. - F. invader, 'to invade;' Cot. - Lat. inuadere, to go into. enter, invade. - Lat. in, in, into; and uadere, to go. See Wade. Der. invader; invas-ion, K. John, iv. 2. 173 = F. inva.ion, 'an invasion' (Cot.), from Lat. invasionem, acc. of invasio, from pp. inuasus ; also invas-ive, K. John, v. 1. 69.

INVALID, not valid. (F.,-L.) A. Accented invalid, Milton, P. L. viii. 116. From In- (3) and Valid. B. Accented invalid. and pronounced as a F. word, when used as a sb. 'As well stow'd with gallants as with invalids; ' Tatler, no. 16. - F. invalide, ' impotent, infirme ;' Cot. - Lat. invalidus, not strong, feeble. - Lat. in-, not; and ualidus, strong; see Valid. Der. invalid-ate, Burnet, Own

Time, an. 1680 (R.); invalid-at-ion; invalid-i-ty. INVALUABLE, that cannot be valued. (F.,-L.) 'For rareness of invaluable price; Drayton, Moses, his Birth and Miracles, bk. i (R.) From In- (3) and Valuable. Der. invaluabl-y.

From In- (3) and Variable. Der. invariable, invariable ness. INVASION, an entry into an enemy's country. (F.,-L.) See Invade.

INVEIGH, to attack with words, rail. (L.) In Shak. Lucrece, The close connection of inveigh with the sb. invective at once 1254. points out the etymology. In this word, the Lat. A is expressed by the guttural gA, just as the A.S. A was replaced by the same combination; see Matzner, Eng. Gram. i. 149. Cf. Span. invehir, to inveigh. - Lat. inuehere (pp. inuectus), to carry into or to, to introduce, attack, inveigh against. - Lat. in, into; and uehere, to carry; see Vehicle. Der. invect-ive, sb. from F. invective, 'an invective Thuti-ive = F. intuitive' (Cot); intuit-ive-ly. INTERCENCE, a swelling. (F., -L.) In Blount's Gloss., F. intumescence, 'a swelling, puffing;' Cot. Formed (as J INVEIGLE, to seduce, entice. (Unknown.) And see Spenser, F. Q. i. 12. 32. The origin is unknown, it being difficult to account for the ei; the word is spelt inveagle as well as inveigle in Minsheu. ¶ 1. By some guessed to be from Ital. invogliare, to give a desire to, make one long for; cf. invogliato, loving, desirous. - Ital. in = Lat. in, in; and voglia, a desire; cf. Ital. voglio, I wish, from volere, to wish -Lat. usile, to wish; prest. t. solo, I wish. See Voluntary. 2. By others thought to be corrupted from O. F. averagler, 'to blind, hudwinke' [hoodwink], Cot.; formed from the adj aveugle, blind = Low Lat. aboculis, blind. - Lat. ab, off, away, deprived of; and oculus, an eye. (Neither origin is satisfactory ; hence some have supposed that the word arose from a confusion of the Ital. and F. words. Even thus, the spelling remains unexplained.) [†] Der, inwigle-ment (rare). IN VIENT, to find out, devise, feign. (F., -L.) In Gower, C. A. ii. 262. - F. inventer, 'to invent; Cot. - Lat. invent-us, pp. of invenire, to come upon, discover, invent. - Lat. in, upon; and uenire, to come, cognate with E. Come, q.v. Formed, with suffix -ine (as in chlor-ine, brom-ine), from Gk. lad-ns, contr. form of losidite, violet-coloured. - Gk. io-v, a violet; and eid-os, appearance. See Violet and Idyl. Der. iod-ide.

IOTA, a jot. (Gk., - Heb.) See Jot. IPECACUANHA, a medicinal West-Indian root. (Port., -Brazilian.) So defined in Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. – Port. ipecacuanka, given in the Eng. Port. part of Vieyra's Dict. Cf. Span. ipecacuana. Both Port. and Span. words are from the South-American name of the plant; it is said to be a Brazilian word, and to mean 'the road-side sick-making plant.' [†] IB- (1), prefix. (L.; or F., -L.) The form assumed by the prefix in- (= prep. in), when the letter r follows. See In- (2). Exx.: ir-radiate, ir-rigate, ir-rision, ir-ritate, ir-ruption.

IR- (2), prefix. (L.; or F., -L.) Put for in-, negative prefix, when the letter r follows. See In- (3). Exx.: all words beginning with ire, except those given under Ir-(1). IRE, anger. (F., -L.) In Chaucer, C. T. 7587.-F. ire, 'ire; ' Cot.-Lat. ira, anger (of doubtful origin). Der. ire-ful, Com. Errors, v. 151; ir-as-ible, in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, from F. irascible, 'cholerick' (Cot.), which from Lat. irascibilis, adj. formed INVITE, to ask, summon, allure. (F., -L.) 'God innited men from irasei, to become angry; irascibil-y, irascibili-ty.

IRIS, a rainbow. (L., -Gk.) In Shak. All's Well, i. 3. 158.-Lat. iris, a rainbow. - Gk. Ipus, Iris, the messenger of the gods; Ipus, a rainbow (Homer). Root uncertain. Der. irid-e.c-ent, a coined word, as if from pres. part. of a Lat. verb irid-ec-ere, to become like a rainbow, formed with inceptive suffix -esc- from irid-, stem of iris (gen. irid-is); hence iridescence; also iridi-um (from the crude form iridi-). Iris, a flower, is the same word; and see orrice. IRK, to weary, distress. (Scand.) Now used impersonally, as in A. Formerly used personally. Shak. As You Like It, ii. 1. 22. M. E. irken, (1) to make tired, (2) to become tired. Of these, the transitive (orig.) sense does not often appear, though preserved in the mod. phrase 'it irks me,' and in the word irksome = tiring. ' Irkesum, fastidiosus ; Irkesumnesse, fastidium ; Irkyn, fastidior, accidior; Prompt. Parv. The intrans. sense is common. 'To preche also bow myst not yrke' = you must not grow weary of preaching; Myrc, Instructions for Parish Priests, 526. Irkel = shrank back, drew back; Gawain and Grene Knight, 1573. 'Swa bat na man moght irk withalle' = so that none may grow tired withal; Pricke of Conscience, 8918. B. We also find M. E. irk = tired, oppressed. 'Oure frendis of us wille sone be irke' = our friends will soon be tired of us; Sir Isumbras, 118. 'Syr Arther was irke,' i. e. tired; Anturs of Arthur, st. vi. C. The references in Stratmann shew that the word occurs chiefly in poems marked with strong Scandi-navian peculiarities; and the original word is still found in Swedish. - Swed. yrka, 'to urge, enforce, press; yrka lagen, to enforce the law; vi yrkade på vår afre:a, we pressed for our departure; yrka på någon, to urge one; yrka på en sak, to urge an affair; 'Widegren's Swed. Dict. D. This word is exactly cognate with Lat. urgere, to urge; see Urge. From  $\checkmark$  WARG, to press; when here also Skt. wij, to press out, exclude; Gk. dipyeuv, to press in, repress; Goth. urikan, to persecute, and E. wreak; see Wreak. [Perhaps distinct from VWARG, to work, whence E. work.] E. An interesting derivative from this root WARG is the A.S. weoresum, painful, irksome (Grein, ii. 678), which clearly suggested the adj. irksome. Cf. Dan. værke, to pain (perhaps distinct from virke, to work); and North of England toothwark = tooth-ache (rather than tooth-work). Also Lithuan. wargas, need ; wargus, irksome. See Curtius, i. 222; Fick, i. 773, iii. 293. F. Thus the Swed. yrka stands for wirka, weakened form of warka, from Teut. base WARK = Aryan & WARG. ¶ OЪ-Der. irk-some, irk-some-ness, in the Prompt. Parv., as above. serve how the word may be distinguished from work, though the roots may be connected. And note that there is no connection with A.S. earg (= arg), slothful, which has a different guttural letter and is represented in English by Arch, Arrant. See further under Urge, Wreak, and Wrong.

IRON, a common metal. (E.) M. E. iren, Chaucer, C. T. 502, yren, 1994; yzen (for isen), Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 139, l. 31. – Ä. S. iren, both adj. and sb., Grein, ii. 145; older form isen, both adj. and sb., id. 147. + Du. ijzer, formerly yzer. + Icel. járn, contracted from the old form isarn. + Dan. and Swed. jern. + O. H. G. isarn; M. H. G. isern, isen ; G. eisen. + Goth. eisarn, sb. ; eisarnein, adj. And cf. W. Aniarn, Irish igrann. Bret. houarn, iron. β. The Teut. forms are all from the base ISARNA, perhaps an adjectival form from ISA, ice; see Ice. This suggests that iron ( = ice-en) may have been named (like crystal) from some fancied resemblance to ice; perhaps from its hard smooth surface when brightened. See Fick, iii. 32. Der. ironbound, -clad, -founder, -foundry, -grey, -handed, -kearted, -master, -mould, -ware, -work, -witted, Rich. III, iv. 2. 28. Also iron-monger. q. v.[+] IRONMONGER, a dealer in iron goods. Lat. ir:- in, at; and ridere, to laugh. See Risible. IRRITATE, to provoke. (L.) 'Irritate [provoke] the myndes of the dauncers; 'Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 19. – Lat. irritatus, pp. of irritare, to snarl greatly (said of dogs), also to provoke, tease, irritate.  $\beta$ . Of uncertain origin; but possibly a frequentative from irrire, also spelt hirrire, to snarl as a dog, which is perhaps an imitative word. Der. irritation = F. irritation, 'an irritation' (Cot.), from Lat. acc. irritationem; irritatione, in Minsheu, ed. 1627, from Lat irritabilis; irrit-able, irrita-able, inritabili-iy.

IRRUPTION, a bursting in upon, sudden invasion. (F., -L.) 'An irruption, or violent bursting in ;' Minsheu, ed. 1627. - F. irruption, 'an irruption, a forcible entry;' Cot. - Lat. irruptionem, acc. of irruptio, a bursting into - Lat. ir = in, in, upon; and ruptio, a bursting, from ruptus, pp. of rumpere, to burst. See Bupture. Der. irruptive, irrupt-ive-iy, from pp. irruptus of irrumtere, to burst in.

IS, the 3 pers. pres. of the verb substantive. (E.) A.S. is; see further under Are, Essence.

IBINGLASS, a glutinous substance made from a fish. (Du.) 'Ising-glass, a kind of fish-glue brought from Island [Iceland], us'd in medicines; 'Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. A singular corruption (as if there were reference to icing in confectionery, and to the glassy appearance of jellies made with it) from O. Du. kuyzenblas, mod. Du. kuizenblas. 'Isinglass, kuyzenblas; 'Sewel's Eng.-Du. Dict.; 1754. The lit. sense is 'sturgeon-bladder;' isinglass being obtained from the bladder of the sturgeon (Accipenser sturjo). + G. kausenblase, isinglass; from kzusen, a kind of sturgeon (answering to Du. kuizen); and blase (=Du. blas), a bladder, from blacen, to blow, allied to E. Blow. ¶ That the word is of Du. rather than of G. origin, is obvious. The G. au (=ow in cow) could not have produced E. i; whereas the Du. wi (sometimes nearly = oy in coy) easily did so. The corruption was easily made by sailors.

ISLAND, an isle, land surrounded by water. (E.) The s is ignorantly inserted, owing to confusion with isle, a word of F. origin; see below. In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 6. 11, the word is spelt island in the Globe edition, but iland in the passage as quoted in Richardson. M. E. iland, ilond, yland, ylond; spelt ylond in Octovian Imperator, l. 539 (Weber's Met. Romances, iii. 179); ilond, Layamon, l. 1133 (later text). – A. S. igland, Grein, ii. 136. B. The A. S. igland is compounded of ig, an island, and land, land. Grein (ii. 136) gives ig, ieg as equivalent forms, with references; the word is also written eg (id. i. 233); and in Eng. local names appears as -ea or -ey, as in Batters-ea, Aldern-ey, Angles-ey. y. Cognate words are: Du. eiland, an island, formerly written eyland (Sewel); Icel. eyland; Swed. oland, used as a proper name for an island in the Baltic Sea; G. eiland. 5. Dropping the syllable -land, we also find A. S. ig, ieg, a meadow near water ; and see Ait, Eyot, the dimin. forms. All these Fick (iii. 10) deduces from an orig. Teut. form AHWIA, belonging to water or a place in water, a secondary formation from Teut. AHWA, water, which appears in Goth. ahwa, A.S. ei, O.H.G. aka, a stream, with which cf. Lat. aqua, water; is, a place near water,' an island, an island. Der, island-er, Temp. ii. 2. 37. ISLE, an island. (F., -L.) Quite distinct from the E. island, in which the s was ignorantly inserted. It is singular that, in the word icle, the s was formerly dropped, thus tending still further to confound the two words. M.E. ile, yle; Rob. of Glouc., p. 1, 1, 3; Wyclif, Deeds [Acts], xxviii. 1 - O. F. isle, 'an isle;' Cot.; mod. F. ile. Lat. insula, an island. See Insular. Der. isleet, in Drayton's Polyolbion, s. 24, note, from O. F. islette, 'a little island' (Cot.), a dimin. form. And see isolate.

ISOCHBONOUS, performed in equal times. (Gk.) In Phillips' Dict., ed. 1706 (s. v. I ochrone). Imitated from Gk. loóχρονos, consisting of an equal number of times (a grammatical term). – Gk. loo, crude form of loos, equal; and χρόνοs, time, whence also E. Chronicle. B. The Gk. loos or loos is closely related to Skt. visku, adv. equally, with which cf. Skt. viskuva, the equinox; the Aryan form being WISWA. equal; Fick, i. 221. Der. isochron-ism.

ISOLATE, to insulate, place in a detached situation. (Ital., -L.) The word occurs in the Preface to Warburton's Divine Grace, but was censured in 1800 as being a novel and unnecessary word (Todd). And see note in Trench, Eng. Past and Present. Todd remarks, further, that isolated was at first used as a term in architecture, signifying detached. It was thus at first a translation of Ital. isolato, detached, separate, formed as an adj. (with pp. form) from isola, an island. - Lat. in. ula, an island; also, a detached house or pile of buildings, whence insulatus, insulated, answering to Ital. isolato. See Insular. ¶ The F. isolé is likewise borrowed from the Ital. isolato; the E. word was not taken from the F. (which would only have given a form isoled), but directly from the Italian. Der. isolati.

ISOSCELES, having two sides equal, as a triangle. (L., -Gk.) In Phillips' Dict., ed. 1706. - Lat. isosceles. - Gk. Ιοσακελήε, with equal legs or sides. - Gk. loo, crude form of foos, equal (see Isoohronous); and σκίλοε, a leg, probably connected with σκαίρειν, to dance, and σκαληνόε, halting (see Scalene).

A fem. form of issue, 'issued, flowen, sprung, proceeded from;' pp. of issir, 'to issue, to go, or depart out;' id. -Lat. exire, to go out of; from ex, out, and ire, to go; see Exit. Der. issue, verb, merely borrowed from the sb., and in later use; 'we issued out' is in Surrey's tr. of Virgil, where the Lat. text has 'inuat ire,' Arneid, ii. 27. [The M. E. verb was isch, common in Barbour's Bruce, and borrowed from the F. vb. issir.] Also issuer; issue-less, Wint. Ta, v. 1, 174.

issir.] Also issueer; issue-less, Wint. Ta. v. 1. 174. ISTHMUS, a neck of land connecting a peninsula with the mainland. (L., -Gk.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627; spelt isimus in Cotgrave, to translate O. F. isthme. - Lat. isihmus. - Gk.  $l\sigma\theta\mu\delta e$ , a narrow passage, neck of land; allied to  $i\theta\mu a$ , a step; extended from  $\checkmark$  I, to go. Cf. Skt. i, to go; Lat. ire, to go.

IT, the neuter of the third personal pronoun. (E.) Formerly also kit, P. Plowman, A. i. 85, C. ii. 83; but ii in the same, B. i. 86. – A. S. kit, neuter of ke; see He. + Icel. kit, neut. of kinn. + Du. ket, neut. of kij. GP The gen. case its was just coming into use in Shakespeare's time, and occurs in Temp. i. 2. 95, &c., but the usual form in Shak. is kis, as in A. S. We also find ii in Shak. (with the sense of its) in the first folio, in 13 passages, Temp. ii. 1. 163, &c. See the articles in The Bible Wordbook and in Schmidt's Shak. Lexicon. Its does not once occur in the Bible, ed. 1611, which has it where mod. editions have its in Levit. xxv. 5. The use of kit for kis (=its) occurs early, viz. in the Anturs of Arthur, st. viii, 1. 11. The A. S. neuter form is kit, nom.; kis, gen.; kim, dat.; kit, acc.

IDEP: itself; see Self. ITALICS, the name given to letters printed thus—in sloping type. (L.) So called because invented by Aldo Manuzio (Aldus Manutius), an Italian, about A. D. 1500. Aldo was born in 1447, and died in 1515. Letters printed in this type were called by the Italians corsivi (cursive, or running hand), but were known to other nations as Italies; see Engl. Cyclop. s. v. Manuzio.—Lat. Italicus, Italian.—Lat. Italia, Italy. Der. italic-ise.

ITEM, a separate article or particular. (L.) The mod, use of item as a sb. is due to the old use of it in enumerating particulars. Properly, it is an adv. meaning 'also' or 'likewise,' as in Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 5. 265: 'as, item, two lips, indifferent red; item, two grey eyes;' &c. - Lat. item, in like manner, likewise, also; closely re-lated to ita, so. Cf. ITEBRATE, to repeat often. (L.) Bacon has iterations and iterate in Essay 25 (Of Dispatch). Shak, has iterance, Oth. v. 2, 150 (folio edd.); iteration, 1 Hen. 1V, i. 2, 101.—Lat. iteratus, pp. of iterare, to repeat.—Lat. iterum, again; a comparative adverbial form (with suffix -tar-) from the pronom. base I of the third person; see Item. Der. iterat-ion, iterat-ive. ITINERANT, travelling. (L.)

'And glad to turn itinerant;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2. l. 92 .- Lat. itinerant-, stem of pres. pt. of obsolete verb itinerare, to travel.-Lat. itiner-, stem of iter, a journey - Lat. it-um, supine of ire, to go - V I, to go; cf. Skt. i, to go. Der. itinerant-ly, itineranc-y, itinerac-y. Also itinerary (Levins), from Lat. itinerarium, an account of a journey, neut. of itiner-arius, belonging to a journey, from base uiner- with suffix -arius.

IVORY, a hard white substance chiefly obtained from the tusks of elephants. (F., -L.) M. E. ivory, ivorie (with w for v), Chaucer, C. T. 7323; also spelt every, Trevisa, i. 79. - O. F. ivwrie, ivory, a 12thcentury form, cited by Littre ; later ivoire, 'ivory;' Cot. [Cf. Prov. evori, Bartsch, Chrestomathie Provençale, 29. 20, whence perhaps the M. E. form every. Also Ital. avorio, avolio.] - Lat. evoreus, adj. made of ivory. - Lat. ebor-, stem of ebur, sb. ivory. made of ivory. - Lat. ebor., stem of ebur, sb. ivory. β. Supposed by some to be connected with Skt. ibha, an elephant. Der. ivory. adj., ivory-black, ivory-nut.

IVY, the name of a creeping evergreen. (E.) 'He mot go pipen in an ivy-lef;' Chaucer, C. T. 1840. – A. S. ifig, ivy; see Gloss. to A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne; also i/egn, an old form in the Corpus MS. glossary. [The A. S. f between two vowels was sounded as v, and the change of A. S. ig to E. y is regular, as in A. S. stán-ig = E. ston-y.] + O. H. G. ebah, ivy (cited by E. Müller).  $\beta$  There ig = E. son-y. j = 0. n. Der. ivy-maniled, ivi-ed.

IWIS, certainly. (E) M.E. ywis, iwis; Chaucer, C. T. 3277, 3705. Common in Shak., as in Merch. Ven. ii. 9. 68, Tam. Shrew, i. 1. 62, Rich. III, i. 3. 102. - A. S. gewis, adj. certain; gewislice, adv. certainly; Grein, i. 43. + Du. gewis, adj. and adv., certain, certainly. + G. gewiss, certainly. Cf. Icel. viss, certain, sure; vissuliga, certainly.  $\beta$ . All these words are closely connected with E. wise, and with A. S. witan, to know; from  $\sqrt{WID}$ , to know. GP It is to be particularly noted that the M. E. prefix i - (-A. S. g.) is often written apart from the rest of the word, and with a capital letter. Hence, by the mistake of editors, it is sometimes printed I wis, and explained to mean 'I know.' Hence, further, the imaginary verb wis, to know, has found its way into our dictionaries. But it is pure fiction; the verb being wit. See Wit, verb.

J.

JABBER, to chatter, talk indistinctly. (Scand.) Formerly jaber or jable. 'Whatsoeuer the Jewes would jaber or langle agayn ;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 665 (R.) 'To iabil, multum loqui; Levins, ed. 1570. And cf. gibber, Hamlet, i. 1. 116. Jabber, Jabble are weakened forms of gabber, gabble, frequentative forms from the base gab seen in Icel. gabba, to mock, scoff. See Gabble; and cf. Du. gabberen, 'to jabher' (Sewel). Der. jabber-er.

JACINTH, a precious stone. (F., -L., -Gk.) In the Bible, Rev. ix. 17; xxi. 20. 'In Rev. ix. 17, the hyacinthine, or dark purple, colour is referred to, and not the stone; as in Sidney's Arcadia (B. i. p. 59, l. 28), where mention is made of "Queene Helen, whose Iacinth haire curled by nature," &c.; Bible Wordbook, which see. [But I should explain 'iacinth haire,' like 'hyacinthine locks' in Milton, P.L. 1v. 301, to mean 'hair curling like the hyacinth,' without reference to colour.] M. E. iaconte, Wyclif, 2 Chron. ii, 7 (earlier version), iacynet (later version). Gower has jacinetus; C. A. iii. 112. - O. F. jacinthe, 'the precious stone called a jacint;' Cot - Lat. hyacinthus, a jacinth, Rev. xxi. 20 (Vulgate). - Gk. udnivoos; Rev. xxi. 20. See Hyacinth. ¶ Thus jacinth is for hyacinth, as Jerome for Hierome or Hieronymus, and Jerusalem for Hierusalem.

304 ITEM. Vocab. i. 20, col. 1, l. 6. + Du. jeuken, to itch; whence jeuking. JACK (1), a saucy fellow, sailor. (F.,-L,-Gk.,-Heb.) The jeukie (=A.S. gicka), an itching. + G. jucken, to itch. Root unknown. Der. itch. sb., itch-y. Der. itch. sb., itch-y. Tyrwhitt remarks ianguages, John, or its equivalent, is a name of contempt, or at least of slight. So the Italians use Gianni, from whence Zani; the Spaniards Juan, as bobb Juan, a foolish John; the French Jean, with various additions; and in English, when we call a man a John, we do not mean it as a title of honour. Chaucer, in 1. 3708, uses Jacke fool, as the Spaniards do bobo Juan; and I suppose jack-as has the same etymology.' 'Go fro the window, Jacke fool, she said;' Chaucer, C. T. 3708. This M. E. Jacke is obviously borrowed from the F. Jaques; but it is very remarkable that this common French name is considered as an equivalent to the E. common name John, since it really answers to  $Jacob. - Lat. Jacobas. -Gk. 'Idnus <math>\beta os. - Heb. Ya'aqob, Jacob; lit. one who seizes by the heel. - Heb. root 'áqab, to seize by the heel, supplant. B. It is$ difficult to tell to what extent the various senses of the word jack depend upon the name above. a. It is, however, clearly to be traced in the phrase Jack o' the clock, Rich. II, v. 5. 60, where it means a figure which, in old clocks, used to strike upon the bell.  $\beta$ . In a similar way, it seems to have been used to name various implements which supplied the place of a boy or attendant, as in y. Simiboot-jack and in the jack which turns a spit in a kitchen. larly, it denoted the key of a virginal ; Shak. Sonnet 128. 8. Hence perhaps also a familiar name for the small bowl aimed at in the game of bowls; Shak. Cymb. ii. 1. 2. e. And for a small pike (fish), as distinct from a full-grown one. Der. Jack-o-lent = Jack of Lent, a puppet thrown at in Lent, Merry Wives, iii. 3. 27; Jack-alantern = Jack o' lantern, also called Jack-with-the-lantern, an ignis fatuus (see Todd's Johnson); Jack-pudding, Milton, Defence of the People of England, c. I (R.), compounded of Jack and pudding, just as a buffoon is called in French Jean-pottage (John-pottage) and in German Hans-wurst (Jack-sausage); Jack-an-apes, Tyndall's Works, p. 132, col. I. l. 11, put for jack o' apes, with the insertion of  $\pi$  in imitation of the M. E.  $a\pi$  (really equivalent to  $a\pi$ ) and for the avoiding of hiatus (see Morris, Hist. Outlines of Eng. Accidence, p. 195), so that the word meant 'a man who exhibited performing apes Jack-by-the-hedge, 'an herb that grows by the hedge side,' Kersey, ed. 1715; jack-ass; and probably jack-daw, Pliny, b. x. c. 29 (and not a corruption of chough-daw, as it has been desperately guessed to be): cf. O. F. jaquette, 'a proper name for a woman, a plannat, or megatapy [magpie], Cot. Also (probably) jack-serew, a screw for raising heavy weights. ¶ 1. Thorpe, in his edit. of Ancient Laws, vol. i, Glossary, gives an A. S. orac, a sort of stocks or pillory (cf. Du. kaak, a pillory (Sewel), Dan. kag, a whipping-post), and adds: 'our word jack, signifying several kinds of engines and instruments, is probably derived from ceac, pronounced, as in later times, chack.' In this guess I have no belief; there is no trace of 'chack,' and nothing to connect jack (not earlier than the 14th century) with A.S. times. Add to this, that the A.S. word seems to have been ceae (with long a), which would have given a later form cheek; cf. Du. kaak, a pillory, which is the cognate word. 2. There is, however, an A. S. ceac, a pitcher (Mark vii. 4), which would have given chack or jack; this might seem to account for jack (more commonly black-jack) in the sense of a sort of leathern jug; but the jug really took its name from its likeness to a jack-boot; see Jack (2). JACK (2), a coat of mail, a military coat worn over the coat of mail. (F.) 'lakke of defence, iak of fence, garment, Baltheus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 256, and note, shewing that the word was in use as early as 1375. 'Iacke, harnesse, iacq. iacque:' Palsgrave. - O. F. Jaque, 'James, also a lack, or coat of maile, and thence, a lack for [with a wild boar]; Cot. Cf. Ital. giaco, a coat-of-mail, Span. jaco, a soldier's jacket; also Du. jak, G. jacke, Swed. jacka, a jacket, jerkin.  $\beta$ . Of obscure origin; it is even somewhat doubtful whether it is of Romance or Teutonic origin, but the latter is hardly probable. Most likely Ducange is right in assigning the origin of it to the Jacquerie, or revolt of the peasantry nicknamed Jacques Bon-homme, A. D. 1358. That is, it is from the O. F. name Jacques. See Jack (1). Der. jack-et, q. v.; also jack-boots, boots worn as armour for the legs, in the Spectator (Todd); black-jack (Nares, s. v. jack). JACKAL, a kind of wild animal. (Pers.) In Dryden, Annus

Mirabilis, st. 82, l. 327; Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 115. -Pers. skaghál; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 383. Cf. Skt. origála, a jackal, a fox; and perhaps Heb. shi'dl, a fox, from Heb. root sha'al, to dig, hollow out. [†]

JACKET, a short coat. (F.) 'In a blew jacket ;' Spenser, Mother Hubberd's Tale, l. 205. - O.F. jaquette, 'a jacket, or short and sleevelesse country-coat; 'Cot. Dimin. of O.F. jaque, 'a jack, or coat of mail; ' Cot. See Jack (2). Der. jacket-ed.

JADE (1), a sorry nag, an old woman. (Unknown.) M. E. JADE (1), a sorry nag, an old woman. (Unknown.) M. E. jade (MS. Iade), Chaucer, C. T. 14818. The same as Lowland Sc. yad, yaud, North of Eng. yaud, a jade. Of unknown origin; perhaps connected with Du. jagen, to hunt, chase, drive, ride, jagten, to hurry, jagt, the chase. Cf. Low G. jagd, a chase, crowd of people, Bremen Wörterb. ii. 683; Dan. jage, G. jagen, to chase; see Yaoht. The use of Lowland Sc. y shews that the word is people. Trutcein Ms. Wedgemody's atmosphere from Sann iindean probably Teutonic. Mr. Wedgwood's etymology, from Span. ijadear, to pant (from ijada, the flank, which is from Lat. ilia, the groin), is improbable. Der. jade, vb. to tire, spurn, Antony, iii. 1. 34.

JADE (2), a hard dark green stone. (Span., -L.) In Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. Cf. F. jade, jade; Ital. iada (Florio, 1598). - Span. Jade, jade; formerly piedra de ijada, because supposed to cure

Span. yaa, jade; formerly pieara at ijada, because suppose to cure a pain in the side. -Span. ijada, flank, pain in the side. -Lat. ilia, pl. the flank. (M. Müller, in The Times, Jan. 15, 1880). [+] JAG, a notch, ragged protuberance. (C.) 'Jagge, or dagge of a garment;' Prompt. Parv. p. 255. 'I iagge or cutte a garment; lagge, a cuttyng;' Palsgrave. JAM (2), a conserve of fruit boiled with sugar. (Scand.?)

In Johnson's Dict. Of uncertain origin, but most likely from Jam (1). The following quotation suggests that it may mean a soft substance, resembling what has been chewed. 'And if we have anye stronger

The word is also in use in the South, where they say the jaum of the chimney; Ray, Collection of North-Country Words, 1691. Spelt jaumbe in Cotgrave. 'Yea, the jambes, posts, principals, and standards, all of the same mettall; ' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxiii. c. 3. = F. jambe, 'the leg or shank, . . . the jaumbe or side-post of a door;' Cot. Cf. Ital. gamba, Span. gamba, the leg; Port. gambias, pl. the legs. - Late Lat. gamba, a hoof; Vegetius, 1. 50, near the end; 3. 20. This is certainly a corruption from an older form camba, which appears in O. Spanish (Diez, whom see). - V KAM, to bend; whence Lat. camurus, crooked, camera, a vault; so that the word was orig. used of the bent leg or the knee. Cf. W. cam, crooked. And see Chamber, Gambol, Ham. Der. giamb-eux, leggings, greaves, Spenser, F.Q. ii. 6. 29 (apparently a coined word). JANGLE, to sound discordantly, to quarrel. (F., = O. (F., - Turkish.) Bacon speaks of 'the Janizaries' in Essay 19, Of Empire, near the end. There is an earlier reference to them in Sir T. More, Works, p. 279 f. 'Janissaries, an order of interties the Turkish empire, originally women prisoners trained to infantry in the Turkish army: originally, young prisoners trained to arms; were first organised by Orcan, about 1330, and remodelled by his son Amurath I. 1360... A firman was issued on 17 June, 1826, abolishing the Janizaries; 'Haydn, Dict. of Dates. And see Gibbon, Roman Empire, c. 64. - O. F. Jannissaires, 'the Janizaries;' Cot. Of Turkish origin; the word means 'new soldiers;' from Turk. yeñi, new, and 'askari, a soldier. The # represents saghir noon, a nasal letter peculiar to Turkish. Cf. Pers. 'askari, a soldier; Arab. 'askar.

an army, troops; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1008. JANUARY, the first month of the year. (L.) M.E. January (MS. January), Chaucer, C. T. 9267 (March. Tale). Englished from Lat. Ianuarius, January, named from the god Ianus, a name connected with Lat. ianua, a door; the doors of houses being supposed to be under his especial protection. Prob. from  $\checkmark$  YA, to go; cf. Skt. yá, to go.

JAPAN, a name given to certain kinds of varnished work. (Japan.) Properly 'Japan work,' where Japan is used adjectivally. Named from the country. Pope playfully alludes to 'shining altars of Japan;' Rape of the Lock, iii. 107. Der. Hence japan, verb, to vamish like Japan work, to polish; japann-er, a polisher of shoes, shoe-black, Pope, Imit. of Horace, Epist. i. 1. 156.

JAR (1), to make a discordant noise, creak, clash, quarrel. (E.) Out of al ioynt ye iar; Skelton, Duke of Albany, L 378. And see Shak. Tam. Shrew, iii. 1. 39, 47; v. 2. 1. a. Jar stands for an older form char, only found in the derivative charken, to creak like a cart or barrow (Prompt. Parv.), also to creak like a door (Gower, C. A. ii. 102). B. Again, char stands for an older har, answering to the Teut. base KAR, to make a harsh sound, murmur, complain, seen in Goth. karón, to samo  $\lambda$  a maximum source, to lament, and in E. care, crane (= car-ane); see further under Care, Crane, Jar-gon. This Teut. base KAR is from  $\sqrt{GAR}$ , to call, cry, whence goil. This reat. base KAR is from & GAR, to Call, Cry, where also Lat. garrire, to prate, croak, garrulus, talkative; see Gar-rulous. Der. jar, sb., spelt jarre, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 3, 23. JAB (2), an earthen pot. (F., -Pers.) 'A great jar;' Ben Jonson, tr. of Horace's Art of Poetry; 1, 28. And in Cotgrave. -O. F. jare, 'a jarre,' Cot.; mod. F. jarre. [Cf. Vessel; cl. Pers. jurran, a little cruise, or jar; Kich. Pers. Jurran, a little cruise, or jar; Kich. Pers. Jack, p. 504, col. 2. Probably borrowed by the Spanish from the Arabs. JARGON, a confused talk. (F., -L.?) M. E. jargon, jergon, chattering. 'And ful of jergon' = very talkative; Chaucer, C. T. 9722. Particularly used of the chattering of birds; Gower, C. A. ii. 264, 318; Rom. of the Rose, 716. - F. jargon, 'gibridge, fustian language,' Cot.; jargonner, 'to speak fustian, jangle, chatter,' id. The word is old and an even with the care of the chattering of birds. The word is old, and appears with the sense of the chattering of birds in the 13th cent. (Littre). Cf. Span. gerigonza, jargon; gerigonzar, to speak a jargon; Ital. gergo, jargon.  $\beta$ . All perhaps from a Lat. base GARG, an extension from  $\sqrt{GAR}$ , to call, cry out, make a noise, seen in Lat. garrie; see Jar (1). This extended form GARG, answering to a Teut. base KARK, is exactly represented in English by M. E. charken, to creak as a cart, and the A. S. coarcian, to gnash the teeth (Ælfric's Homilies, i. 132). An attenuated form of charken is the M. E. chirken, to chirp, to make a harsh noise. 'Al ful of chirking [-jargon] was that sory place; 'Chaucer, C. T. 2006. JARGONEILLE, a variety of pear. (F.,-Ital.,-Pers.?) In Johnson's Dict.-F. jargonelle, a variety of pear, very stony (Littré). Formed (according to Littré) as a dimin. from F. jargon, a yellow diamond, a small stone. - Ital. giargone, a sort of yellow diamond. Perhaps from Pers. zargun, gold-coloured, from zar, gold ; see Devic, Supp. to Littré.

JASMINE, JESSAMINE, a genus of plants. (Pers.) Spelt jasmin, jessemin, jelsomine, jesse, in Cotgrave. Milton has gessamine, P. L. iv. 698; Lycidas, 143. The spelling jasmin agrees with O. F. jasmin; Cot. Jessemin, jelsomine answer to the Ital. forms gesmine, gelsomino. The Span. form is jazmin. All are from Pers. yásmín, jasmine; of which another form is yasamin, jessamine; Rich. Pers.

iii. 112; Iaste, id. 131. - O. F. jaspre (see Littre), an occasional <sup>B</sup> faucibus, of hem pat Banden; 'Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 4, spelling of O. Pers. Dict. p. 1707; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 710. Cf. Heb. yach, a jasper. And see Diaper. JAUNDICE, a disease caused by bile. (F.,-L.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. i. 1. 85. The d is purely excrescent, as commonly in E. words after n; cf. sound from F. son. M. E. Jaunys, Pricke of Conscience, l. 700; spelt iaundys, Trevisa, ii. 113; further corrupted to iaundres, in a 15th-cent. tr. of Higden, on the same page as the last reference. - O. F. (and F.) jaunisse, so spelt in the 13th cent. (Littré); but Cot. gives it as jaulnisse, 'the jaundies.' Formed with suffix -isse (= Lat. -itia) from F. jaune, yellow; because the disease is characterised by yellowness of the skin and eyes. The oldest spelling of journe is joine (Littré). - Lat. galbinus, also galbanus, greenish yellow. - Lat. galbus, yellow. B. The origin of Lat. galbus is obscure; it is a rare word, and allied to Lat. giluus, yellow, used by Virgil, This a rate word, and while to Lat. guivas, yenow, used by Vigin, Georg. iii. 83. The likeness of Lat. galbus, giluus, to G. gelb and E. yellow is so close as to suggest that they are Latinised forms of Teutonic words; the true Lat. form being heluus, answering to Gk.  $\chi\lambda\omega\rhoos.$  See Chlorine, Green, and Yellow. Der. jaundic-ed. JAUNT, to ramble, make an excursion. (Scand.) It is clear from the exx. in Shak, that jaunt and jaune are equivalent terms. Jaunt is a wild and fatiguing ramble. Romeo, ii. 5. 26; where an-other reading is jaunce. It also means to ramble, rove, id. ii. 5. 53, where another reading for jounting is jouncing. A. It is easier to trace jounce first. Shak. has: 'Spurred, galled, and tired by jouncing Bolingbroke,' i e. hard-riding Bolingbroke. This jaunce is from O.F. in the stable till he be swart with all, or as our jount; an old word? This O. F. jancer, to play tricks with or tease a horse, is from the same source as jount, as will appear.  $\beta$ . The proper sense of jount is to play tricks, play the fool, hence to talk wildly, and hence, to ramble, rove. This appears from Lowland Sc. jannt, to taunt, to jeer; whence the frequentative form jaunder, to talk idly, to converse in a roving way; whence to jaunder about, to go about idly from place to place, without any object (Jamieson). Of Scand. origin. – place to place, without any object (Janueson). Of Scand. Origin. – Swed. dial. ganta, to play the buffoon, to romp, sport, jest; ganta, to jest; cf. O. Swed. gantas, to toy; see Rietz and Ihre. So also Dan. dial. gantast, to jest (Aasen). This Swed. dial. ganta is from the sb. gant, a fool, buffoon; from the adj. gan, droll (Rietz). Cf. Icel. gan, frenzy, frantic gestures. ¶ It will thus be seen that the form jaunt (also written jant) came to us directly from the Scandinavian, whilst the form jaunce came to us mediately through the French. causing the change from t to c. See Gentle, Genteel.

JAVELIN, a kind of spear or dart. (F., -C.?) Used in the sense of boar-spear, Shak., Venus, 616. - O. F. javelin, m., javeline, f., 'a javeling, a weapon of the size between a pike and partizan;' Cot. Cf. O. F. javelot, 'a gleave, dart, or small javelin;' Cot. Also Span. jabalina, Ital. giavellotto, a javelin. B. Perhaps of Celtic origin. jabalina, Ital. giavellotto, a javelin. The orig. sense is merely a pointed weapon, and the orig, javelin was doubtless a piece of a branch of a tree with a forked head made by cutting off the sprays. The Breton gavlin and gavlod may merely be borrowed from the French, yet the Bret. also has the true Celtic word gavl (also gaol), a place where a tree forks. But the origin appears more clearly from the Irish gaf, gafa, a hook, any orgin appears more clearly from the frish gay, gaya, a hook, any crooked instrument; gabhla, a spear, lance; gabhlack, forked, divided, peaked, pointed; gabhlan, a branch, a fork of a tree; gabhlog, any forked piece of timber; gabhal, a fork. Cf. Gael. gobad, a fork; gobhlack, forked, pronged; gobhlag, a small fork, two-pronged in-strument; gobhlan, a prong, small fork, weeding-hook. Also W. gaft, a fork; gaflack, a fork, a dart. See Gaff. Y. Hence may also he avalationed the M. E generate a singular data in King Also. also be explained the M.E. gavelok, a javelin, dart, in King Ali-saunder, l. 1620; A.S. gafelue, gafeloe (Leo); also M. H. G. gabilot, a javelin. As these words are all borrowed from Celtic, the initial letter remains unchanged.

JAW, part of the mouth. (E.) Also spelt chaw. 'I wyll put an booke in thy chauses '= an hook in thy jaws; Bible, 1551, Ezek. xxix. 4 (A. V. jaus). Precisely parallel with E. jaw is the O. Du. kouwe, the cavity of the mouth, from O. Du. kouven (Du. kaauwen), to chew; Kilian. JEER, to mock, scoff. (Du.) In Shak. Com. Errors, ii. 2. 22. 'He saw her toy, and gibe, and gears;' Spenser, F. Q. ii. 6. 21. 'There you named the famous jeerer, That ever jeered in Rome or Athens;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Nice Valour, v. I (Song). It seems to have been regarded as a foreign word; see Ben Jonson, Staple of News, iv. 1. 5: 'Let's jeer a little. Jeer? what's that? Expect, sir,' i. e. wait a bit, and you will find out. 3. The origin of the word is very curious. From the Du. gek, a fool, and scheeren, to shear, was formed the phrase den gek scheeren (lit. to shear the fool), to mock, jeer, make a fool of one. Soon these words were run together, and the word gekscheeren was used in the sense of jeering. See Sewel's Du. Dict. which gives the above forms, as well as the sb. Sewel's Du. Dict. which gives the above forms, as well as the sb. gekscheeren, 'a jeering, fooling, jesting: Ik laat my niet gekscheeren, I will not be triffed with.' This is still preserved in mod. Du. gek-scheren, to jest, banter, and in the phrase het is geen gekscheren, it is no laughing matter. Y. The phrase was also used as scheeren den gek, to play the fool; whence simply scheeren, 'to gibe, or to jest' (Hexham). And hence the E. jeer. O. The word gek, a fool. is probably connected with gawky; scheeren is E. shear. See Gawky and Shear. ¶ Such I take to be the true explanation of this difficult word. It is hardly worth while to notice the numerous other difficult word. It is hardly worth while to notice the numerous other solutions. Mahn's objection that G. sch cannot become E. j does not apply to the Du. sch. Wedgwood's remark that the word is also spelt yeer is a mistake; it is founded on the fact that Junius, in manipulating the word, chose to spell it so without authority. The original sense was a game in which the chances are even, a game of hazard, hence hazard or chance; as in: 'To put that sikernes in jeopardie' = to put in Fazard that which is secure (last reference). - O. F. jeu parti, lit. a divided game. 'A jeu parti is properly a game, in which the chances are exactly even. JERBOA, a genus of small rodent quadrupeds. (Arabic.) Mentioned in an E. translation of Buffon's Nat. Hist., London, 1792. The animal takes its name from the strong muscles in its hind legs. - Arab. yarbú', '(1) the flesh of the back or loins, an oblique descending muscle; (2) the jerboa, an animal much resembling the dormouse, which makes prodigious bounds by means of its long hind legs; see Nat. 'To jerke or gerke;' Minsheu, ed. 1627. Halliwell also gives: 'Girk, a rod; also, to beat.' B. Another form is jert. Cotgrave has: 'Attainte, a reach, hit, blow, stroke, ... a gentle nip, quip, or jert, a sleight gird, or taxation." y. Moreover, the words jert and gird were regarded as equivalent; thus Sherwood has, in his index to Cotgrave: 'A jert or gird, Attainte.' The words jerk, jert, and gird are probably all connected, and all had once the same meaning, viz. to strike, esp. with a whip or rod. 8. The only one of these three forms found in M.E. is girden, to strike; see gurden, in Stratmann. The original of girden, to strike, is seen in A S. gyrd, gierd, a rod; Grein, i. 536. See Gird (2), Gride, and Yard. ¶ It may be added that the usual meaning JERKED BEEF, dried beef. (Peruvian.) The beef thus called is cut into thin slices and dried in the sun to preserve it. The process is explained in Capt. Basil Hall's Extracts from a Journal written on the coasts of Chili, Peru, and Mexico, vol. i. c. 4. The name is a singular corruption of chargui, the S. American name for it, which appears to be a Peruvian word. 'The male deer and some of the coarser kind of the Peruvian sheep were slaughtered; ... and their flesh, cut into thin slices, was distributed among the people, who converted it into charqui, the dried meat of the country; 'Prescott, Conquest of Peru, c. v. JOHN DORY, the name of a fish. (F., -L.) John Dory is the vulgar name of the fish also called the dory. It occurs in Todd's Johnson, spelt John Dory, dory, and doree. 1. Dory or doree is merely borrowed from the F. doree, the vulgar F. name of the fish, signifying 'golden' or 'gilded,' from its yellow colour. Dores is the fem. of the pp. of the verb dorer, to gild. -Lat. deaware, to gild, lit. 'cover with gold.'-Lat. de, prep. of, with; and aurum, gold. See Aureste. 2. The prefix John is probably a mere sailor's It is probably expletive, and nothing but the ordinary name; cf. jack-ass. It is usually explained as a corruption of F. jaune, yellow; but there is no reason why Englishmen should have prefixed this F. epithet, nor why Frenchmen should use such a tautological expression as jame dorée. E. adj. jolly. JOLT, to shake violently, to jerk. (E.) Formerly also joult. Cotgrave explains F. heuriade as 'a shock, knock, jur [jar], jol?, found in the comp. jolt-head, a thick-headed fellow, Two Gent. iii. 1. 290; Tam. Shrew, iv. 1. 169. 'Teste de bœuf, a joult-head, jobernoll, loger-head, one whose wit is as little as his head is great ;' Cot. not, toger-nead, one whose wit is as little as his head is great ; Cot. In North's Plutarch. p. 133 (R.), or p. 158, ed. 1631, we find some verses containing the word jolt-head, as well as the expression 'this heavy jolting pate,' said of Jupiter, when regarded as a stupid tyrant.  $\beta$ . The frequent association of jolt with head or pate is the key to the history of the word. 'jolt-head = jolled-head, one whose head has been knocked against another's, or against the wall, a punishment for stupid or sulky scholars. The shorter form joll was especially (perhaps only) used in this sense, for the plain reason that it was formed from the sb. joll or jowl, the cheek or side of the head. Y. It will be found, accordingly, that the words occur in the following chronological order, viz. (1) joll, the cheek, of A.S. origin; (a) joll, to knock the head; and (3) joll-kead and joll. 'Iol, or heed, iolle, Caput;' Prompt. Parv. 'Iolle of a fysshe, teste;' Palsgrave. 'Ther they jollede [beat on the head] Jewes thorowe;' M.S. Calig. A. ii. f. 117; cited in Halliwell. 'They may joll horns [knock heads] together;' As You Like It, i. 3. 39. 'How the knave jouds it [viz. a shull] to the ground;' Hamlet, v. 1. 84. 'Joll, the beak of a bird, or jaw-bone of an animal; hence, to peck; Norfolk; 'Halliwell. 'Joll, to job with the beak, as rooks job for worms, or for corn recently sown;' Marshall's Rural Economy, East Norfolk (E. D. S. Gloss, B. 3). 8. Even if the above equation of jolt to joll d be not accepted, the facts remain (1) that jolt is an extension of joll, to knock the head, or peck with the head (as a bird), and (2) that joll, verb, is from joll or joud, sb. e. It may be added that jolt seems to have acquired a frequentative sense, 'to knock often,' and was soon used generally of various kinds of jerky knocks. 'He whipped his horses, the coach jolled again;' Rambler, no. 34 (R.) See further under Jowl. Der. jolt, sb. JONQUIL, a kind of narcissus. (F. - L.) In Kersey's Dict.

JORDAN, a pot, chamber-pot. (L.?-Gk.?-Heb.?) M.E. JORDAN, a pot, chamber-pot. (L.?-Gk.?-Heb.?) M.E. Iordan, Chaucer. C. T. 12239; see Tyrwhitt's note. Also Iurdon, Iordeyne; see Frompt. Parv., and Way's note; p. 267. Halliwell explains it as 'a kind of pot or vessel formerly used by physicians and alchemists. It was very much in the form of a soda-water bottle, only the neck was larger, not much smaller than the body of bothe, only the neck was larger, not much smaller main the body of the vessel; &cc.'  $\beta$ . Origin uncertain; but it may very well have been named from the river Jordan (Lat. lordames, Gk. 'lopdame, Arab. urdunn, Rich. Pers. Dict., p. 56). The explanation is simple enough, and accounts at the same time for the English use of Jordan as a surname. 'We must remember this was the time of the Crusades. It was the custom of all pilgrims who visited the Holy Land to bring back a bottle of water from the Jordan for baptismal purposes. . . . It was thus that Jordan as a surname has arisen. I need not remind students of early records how common is Jordan as a Christian name, such cognomens as 'Jordan de Abingdon' or 'Jordan le Clerc' being of the most familiar occurrence;' Bardsley, Our English Surnames; p. 53. Thus Jordon is merely short for 'Jordan-bottle.' Halliwell further explains how the later sense (as in Shakespeare) came about ; the bottle being, in course of time, occasionally used for baser purposes. ¶ The explanation usually given, that jordan = earthen, from Dan. and Swed. jord, earth, is impossible. The latter syllable was originally long, as in Chaucer's use of Iordánës, riming with Galiánës, and as shewn by the M. E. spelling Iordeyne. Besides which, there is no such word as jord-en; the Dan. and Swed. adj. is jord-isk, which, moreover, does not mean 'earthen,' but rather 'earthly' or 'terrestrial.' The

does not mean 'earthen, but rather 'earthly of 'terrestrial.' The suggestion is, in fact, inadmissible. JOSTILE, JUSTILE, to strike or push against. (F.; with E. suffx.) [Not in P. Reader, p. 66, l. 319. + O. Sax. kaftos, pl. the jaws. Allied to Icel. kjaptr, the mouth, jaw, esp. of a beast; see further under Chaps. The l in A.S. ceaff is a mere suffix, and the word must have originated from a Teutonic form KAF, signifying jaw; this exactly corresponds to the Aryan base GAP, akin to  $\sqrt{GABH}$ , to gape, to yawn; cf. Skt. jabh, to gape, yawn, jambha, the jaws; Fick, i. 69. Another derivative from the Teut. base KAF appears in G. kiefern, the  $\frac{1}{2}$  JUGGLLER, one who exercises sleight of hand. (F., -L.) jaws. ¶ 1. It will be observed that jowl is used rather vaguely, meaning (1) jaw. (2) flesh on the chin. (3) cheek, (4) head. 2. The successive changes in the form of the word are numerous, but persuccessive change commencing form of the word are numerous, but per-fectly regular; commencing with a Teut. dimin. kaf-la, we deduce fectly regular; Cour choyle (weakened to chaffe in Layamon), chavel, chaul, choil, jol, jole, joul. 3. The usual derivation from A.S. ceole, the throat, is impossible; the o in that word is short, A. S. ceole, the two is impositore; the o in that different vowel-and ceole answers to G. kehle, the throat, with a different vowelsound and a different sense. 4. The change from ck to j is well illustrated by the Norfolk jig-by-jole = cheek by jowl = cheek by chowl; see Halliwell. Dor. jol, q.v. JOY, gladness, happiness. (F., - L.) M. E. loye, ioyè (dissyllable), Chaucer, C. T. 1873; earlier, in Ancren Riwle, p. 218. – O.F. joye, joie, 'joy, mirth;' Cot. Oldest form goie; cf. Ital. gioja, joy, a jewel; Span. joya, a jewel. – Lat. ncut. pl. gaudia, which was turned into a fem. sing. as in other cases (see Antiphon); from sing. gaudium, joy. - Lat. gaudere, to rejoice. In Cotgrave. - F. jubilation, 'a jubilation, exultation; 'Cot. - Lat. iubilationers, acc. of iubilatio, a shouting for joy .- Lat. iubilatus, pp. of iubilare, to shout for joy. - Lat. iubilum, a shout of joy.  $\beta$ . There is nothing to connect this with the following word; the resemblance seems to be accidental. The root is perhaps & DIW, to play; see Joke. Der. jubil-ant, from pres. pt. of iubilare.

JUBILIEE, a season of great joy. (F., -L., -Heb.) M.E. Iubilee, Chaucer, C. T. 7444. - O. F. jubile, 'a jubilee, a year of releasing, liberty, rejoicing; 'Cot. - Lat. iubilæus, the jubilee, Levit. xxv. 11; masc. of adj. iubilans, belonging to the jubilee; Levit. xxv. 28. - Heb. yobel, a blast of a trumpet, a shout of joy. There is some doubt as to the origin of the word; see Jubiles in the Concise Dict. of the Bible. • Distinct from the word above.

JUDGE, an arbitrator, one who decides a cause.  $(F_{\cdot}, -L)$  M.E. Iuge, iuge, Chaucer, C.T. 15931.-F. juge, 'a judge;' Cot.-Lat. iudicem, acc. of iudex, a judge.  $\beta$ . Der. judicial-ly; judiciar-y (Lat. iudiciarius); and see below.

JUDICIOUS, full of judgment, discreet. (F., -L.) In Shak. Macb. iv. 2. 16. - F. judicieux, 'judicious;' Cot. - Lat. iudiciouxa, not found, but regularly formed with suffix -osus from iudici-, crude form of iudex, a judge. Der. judicious-ly, judicious-ness. JUG, a kind of pitcher. (Heb.?) 'A iugge, poculum;' Levins, ed. 1570. 'A jugge to drink in;' Minsheu, ed. 1627. Of uncer-tain origin. Mr. Wedgwood's suggestion is probably right; he connects it with 'Jug or Judge, formerly a familiar equivalent of Joan or Jenny.' In this case, the word is of jocular origin; which is rendered probable by the fact that a drinking-vessel was also called a jack, and that another vessel was called a jill. 'A jacke of leather to drink in;' Minsheu. Jack seems to have been the earlier word, and Jill was used in a similar way to go with it. 'Be the Jacks fair within, the Jills fair without;' Tam. of Shrew, iv. I. 51; on which Steevens remarks that it is 'a play upon the words, which signify two drinking-measures as well as men and maid-servants. β. The use of Jug for Joan appears in Cotgrave, who gives: 'Je-hannette, Jug, or Jinny;' and again: 'Jannette, Judge, Jenny, a woman's name.' How Jug came to be used for Joanna is not very

The tree is the Rhamnus zizyphus or Rhamnus jujuba. 'Iniubes, or iubeb-fruit ;' Minsheu, ed. 1627. - O. F. jujubes, 'the fruit or plum called jujubes; Cot. A pl. form. - Lat. zizyfhum, the jujube; fruit of the tree zizyfhus. - Gk. (ifupov, fruit of the tree (ifupos. - Pers. zayzafún, zízfún, zízafún, the jujube-tree ; Rich. Dict. p. 793.

JULIEP, a sweet drink, demulcent mixture. (F., – Span, – Pers.) 'This cordial julep here;' Milton, Comus, 672. 'Good wine . . . made in a iulep with suger;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 18.-F,  $\mu lep$ , 'a julep, or juleb, a drink made either of distilled waters and syrops mixed together; or of a decoction sweetned with hony and sugar, or else mingled with syrops;' Cot. - Span. julete, julep. - Pers. juláb, julep; from guláb, rose-water, also, julep; Rich. Dict. pp. 512, 1239. – Pers. gul, a rose; and db, water; id. pp. 1238.1. JULY, the name of the seventh month. (L.) Chaucer, Treat. on the Astrolabe, calls the month Iulius, Iuyl, Iuylle; pt. i. § 10. July is Englished from Lat. Iulius, a name given to this month (formerly called Quinctilis) in honour of Caius Julius Cæsar, who was ¶ Quinctilis is from quintus, fifth, because this born in this month. was formerly the fifth month, when the year began in March. Quintus is from quinque, five; see Five. JUMBLE, to mix together confusedly. (Scand.) 'I jumbylle,

I make a noyse by removyng of heavy thynges. I jumble as one dothe that can [not] play upon an instrument, je browille;' Palsgrave. Here it means to make a confused noise. Chaucer uses the equivalent form jombren. 'Ne jombre eek no discordaunt thing ytere '= do not jumble discordant things together; Troilus, ii. 1037. But Sir T. More uses the word in the sense of 'to mingle harmoniously;' as in: 'Let vs . . . see how his diffinicion of the churche and hys heresies will jumper and agree together among themselfe;' Works, p. 612a. Comparing this with the phr. 'to jump together' (= to agree with) we may conclude that jumble (or jumber, or jumper) is merely the frequentative form of the verb to jump, used transitively. Thus jumble = to make to jump, i. e. to jolt or shake about, confuse; hence, to rattle, make a discord; or, on the other hand, in-transitively, to jump with, agree with. See Jump (1). ¶ The frequent. suffix appears to be English, not (in this case) borrowed. Der. jumble, sb.; jumbl-ing-ly.

JUMP<sup>(1)</sup>, to leap, spring, skip. (Scand.) In Shak. As You Like It, ii. 1.53. The frequentative form jumper occurs in Sir T. More, and jombren in Chaucer; see quotations s.v. Jumble. Hence the word jump may be referred at least to the 14th century, though, apparently, once a rare word. Of Low German, or Scand. origin .-Swed. dial. gumpa, to spring, jump, or wag about heavily and clum-sily (Rietz); cf. Swed. guppa, to move up and down. + Dan. gumps, to jolt. + M. H. G. gumpen, to jump; gumpeln, to play the buffoon; gempeln, to jump, dimin. form of prov. G. gampen, to jump, spring, hop, sport; see Schmeller's Bavarian Dict.; cf. M. H.G. gampelmann, a buffoon, jester, one who plays antics. + Icel. goppa, to skip. β. Fick (iii. 101) gives the Teut, base as GAMB, and connects these words with Icel. gabba, to mock; see Gab. But I would rather connect jump with jib; see Jib (2), Jib (3). Der. jump, sb., used in the sense of 'lot' or 'hazard,' Antony, iii. 8. 6. Also jumb-le, q. v., and jump (2). JUMP (2), exactly, just, pat. (Scand.) Jump at this dead hour; Hamlet, i. 1. 65; cf. v. 2. 386; Oth. ii. 3. 392. From the verb above, in the sense to agree or tally, commonly followed by Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - F. jurisprudence; Cot. - Lat. iurispru-

JUNCTION, a joining. (Lat.) Used by Addison, according to Todd, who omits the reference. Formed, by analogy with F. sbs. in -ion, from Lat. iunc'ionem, acc. of iunctio, a joining. - Lat. iunctus, pp. of iungere, to join. See Join. JUNCTURE, a union, critical moment. (Lat.) 'Signes workings, planets iunctures, and the elevated poule' [pole]; Warner, Albion's England, b. v. (R.) 'Juncture, a joyning or coupling to-gether;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.-Lat. iunctura, a joining; orig. fem. of fut. part. of iungere, to join. See Join. The sense of 'critical moment' is probably of astrological origin; cf. the quotation from Warner.

JUNE, the sixth month. (Lat.) Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 10, has Iunius and Iuyn; the latter answering to F. Juin. Englished from Lat. Iunius, the name of the sixth month and of a Roman gens or clan. The word is probably from the same root as Junior, q.v.

JUNGLE, country covered with trees and brushwood. (Skt.) Modem; not in Todd's Johnson. - Skt. jaugala, adj. dry, desert. Hence jungle = waste land. ¶ The Skt. short a sounds like u in mud; hence the E spelling. Der. jungl-y. [†] JUNIOR, younger. (Lat.) In Levins, ed. 1570. – Lat. iunior, comparative of incents, young; so that innior stands for innenior. Cf. Skt. yuvan, young. See JUVenile. Der. junior-ship, junior-i-ty. JUNIPER, an evergreen shrub. (L.) In Levins, ed. 1570. Spelt junipere; Spenser, Sonnet 26. – Lat. iuniperus, a juniper-tree.  $\beta$ . The sense is 'young-producing,' i. e. youth-renewing; from its evergreen appearance. From  $i\bar{u}ni = iuueni$ , crude form of iuuenis, young ; and -perus = -parus, from parere, to produce. See Juvenile and Parent. Der. gin (3), q. v.

JUNK (1), a Chinese three-masted vessel. (Port., - Chinese.) •China also, and the great Atlantis, . . . which have now but junks and canoas • [canoes] ; Bacon, New Atlantis, ed. 1639, p. 12. Also in Sir T. 'Junk, a sea-word for any piece of an old cable;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715.-Port. junco, a rush; (in a ship) the junk; Vieyra's Dict. [So called from rush-made ropes.] - Lat. iuncus, a rush. B. Salt [So called from fush-made ropes.]-Lat. uncus, a rush. B. Salt meat is also facetiously termed junk by the sailors, because it is as tough as old rope. ¶ Junk, a lump (Halliwell), is a different word, being put for chunk, a log of wood; see Chump. JUNKET, a kind of sweetmeat. (Ital.,-L.) Also spelt jun-cate; Spenser, F. Q. v. 4. 49. In Shak. Tam. Shrew, iii. 2. 250; Milton, L'Allegro, 102. The orig. sense was a kind of cream-cheese, served up on rushes, whence its name. Also used as a name for various delicacies made of cream. - Ital. giuncata, 'a kind of fresh cheese and creame, so called because it is brought to market upon rushes; also a iunket; 'Florio. [Cf. O. F. jonchée, 'a bundle of rushes; also, a green cheese or fresh cheese made of milk thats curdled without any runnet, and served in a fraile [basket] of green rushes; 'Cot. Also O. JUROR, one of a jury. (F., -L.) In Shak. Hen. VIII, v. 3. 60. Imitated from F. jureur, 'a swearer or deposer, a juror;' Cot. - Lat. iuratorem, acc. of iurator, a swearer. - Lat. iura-, stem of iurare, to swear. See Jury.

JURY, a body of sworn men. (F., -L.) 'I durst as wel trust the truth of one iudge as of two iuries;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 988d. -F. jurée, 'a jury,' Cot.; lit. a company of sworn men. Properly the fem. pp. of F. jurer, to swear. - Lat. iurare, to swear; lit. to bind oneself by an oath. -  $\checkmark$  YU, to bind; cf. Skt. yu, to bind. Der. jury-man, Tw. Nt. iii. 2. 17. From same source, con-jure. And see juror. JURY-MAST, a temporary mast. (Scand.?) 'Jury-mast, a yard set up instead of a mast that is broken down by a storm or shot, and fitted with sails, so as to make a poor shift to steer a ship; Kersey, ed. 1715. Of unknown origin.  $\beta$ . Doubtless a sailor's word, and presumably of Du. or Scand. origin. A probable source is Dan. kiöre, a driving, from kiöre, to drive ; common in compounds, as in kiöre-kesi, a draught horse, kiörevei, a carriage-way. Cf. Norw. kyöre, a drive, a journey without a stoppage; Swed. köra. a vessel drives along. The supposition that it is short for injury-

a vessel drives along. If The supposition that it is short for injury-mast is most unlikely, owing to the difference in accent. JUST (1), righteous, upright, true. (F., -L.) M. E. Iust, iust; Wyclif, Luke, i. 17. - F. juste, 'just;' Cot. - Lat. iustus, just. Ex-tended from ius, right, law, lit. what is fitting. -  $\sqrt{YU}$ , to join; cf. Skt. yu, to join. KEDGE (1), to warp a ship. (Scand.) 'Kedge, to set up the foresail, and to let a ship drive with the tide, lifting up and letting fall the kedge-anchor, as often as occasion serves; 'Kersey's Dict. ed. 1714. And see the longer description in Todd's Johnson. - Swed. dial. keka, to tug at anything tough, to work continually at anything. to drag oneself slowly forward, go softly, drive softly; Rietz. 'Hästen keka fot om fot i ofore, the horse goes slowly, one foot before another, in the bad road; id. This well describes the tedious process of kedging, or making headway when the wind is contrary to the tide. Der. kedg-er, kedge-anchor. 'Kedge-anchors, or Kedgers, small anchors used in calm weather, and in a slow stream;' Kersey. So called because used to assist in kedging ; see Todd's Johnson. Gr Mr. Wedgwood identifies kedge anchor with keg anchor, which he supposes to be named from the key or 'cask which is fastened to the anchor to shew where it lies.' See Key. This seems to me to contradict the evidence, which points to the verb as being the older word; the form kedg-er is almost enough to prove this. But the prov. E. kedge-belly, a glutton, and kedge, to stuff oneself in eating, are undoubtedly derived from the notion of a round keg; cf. Norweg.

kaggje, a keg, a round thick person (Aasen). KEDGE (2), KIDGE, cheerful, lively. (Scand.) 'Kedge, brisk, lively; Ray's Gloss., ed. 1691; see reprint, ed. Skeat (Eng. Dial. Soc.), pref. p. xviii. Also called kidge (Forby). An East Anglian word. 'Kygge, or ioly, kydge, kyde, jocundus, hilaris. vernosus;' Prompt. Parv. - Icel. kykr, corrupter form of kvikr, quick, lively. + G. keck, brisk, lively; M. H. G. quec, quick. Merely another form of Quick, q. v.

KEEL (1), the bottom of a ship. (E. or Scand.) M.E. kele (rare). 'The schippe [Noah's ark] was . . . thritty cubite high from the cule to the hacches vnder the cabans;' i. e. from the bostom to the hatches; where [instead of cule = bottom, from F. cul] another reading is kele = keel; Trevisa, tr. of Higden, ii. 233. The etymology is due to a confusion between two words. 1. The form answers to A.S. ceol, a ship, cognate with Icel. hjóll, O. H. G. cheol, a ship, barge. These are from a Teutonic base KEULA, a ship (Fick, iii. 40), prob. connected with Gk. yaulos, a round-built Phoenician merchant vessel, yauxos, a round vessel, milk-pail, bucket, bee-hive, Skt. gola, a ball. 2. But the sense is that of Iccl.  $kj\delta lr$ , Dan.  $kj\delta l$ , Swed.  $k\delta l$ , the keel of a ship; answering to a Teutonic base KELA; Fick, iii. 47. The G. and Du. kiel, a keel, seem to belong to the latter base.  $\P$  For the change of A.S. ed to mod. E. ee, cf. wheel from A.S. hwedl. Der. heel-ad, heel-age; also heel-son, q. v. Also heel-haul, from O. Du. hielhaalen (mod. Du. hielhalen); Kielhaalen, to careen a ship; eenen matroos hielhaalen, to pull a mariner up from under the keel, a seaman's punishment; 'Sewel. See Haul. KEEL (2), to cool. (E.) 'While greasy Joan doth keel the pot;'

L. L. L. v. 2. 930. The proper sense is not to scum the pot (though it may sometimes be so used) but to keep it from boiling over by stirring it round and round; orig. merely to cool it or keep it cool. Keel, to keep the pot from boiling over; 'A Tour to the Caves, 1781; see Eng. Dial. Soc. Gloss. B. 1. 'Faith, Doricus, thy brain boils ; keel it, keel it, or all the fat's in the fire;' Marston, What You Will, 1607; in Anc. Drama, ii. 199 (Nares). M. E. kelen, to cool. once a common word; see Ormulum, 19584; O. Eng. Homilies, i. 141; Prompt. Parv., p. 270; Court of Love, 775; Gower, C. A. ii. 360; &c. (Stratmann). – A. S. celan, to cool. – A. S. cel, cool; see Cool. ¶ Note the regular change from o to d, as in fot, foot, pl. fet, feet; so also bleed from blood, feed from food, &c.

KEELSON, KELSON, a piece of timber in a ship next to the keel. (Scand.) Keelson, the second piece of timber, which lies right over the keel; 'Kersey, ed. 1715. Spelt kelsine, Chapman, tr. of Homer, Iliad, i. 426. – Swed. kölsvin, the keelson; Dan. kjölsvin; Norweg. kjölsvill (Aasen). + G. hielschwein, a keelson. B. For the former syllable, see Kool. The latter syllable wholly agrees, in appearance, with Swed. svin, Dan. sviin, G. schwein, which - E. swine (see Swine). But this can hardly be the original sense. A better sense is given by Norweg. kjölsvill, where svill answers to G. schwelle, <sup>$$</sup> KENNEL (2), a gutter. (F., -L.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, iv. 3. F. sill: see Sill. The suffix svill, not being understood, was cor- | 98. A corruption of the M. E. canel or canell, of which M. E. chanell

E. int, see Shill. It sums and (2) to son. REFEN, sharp, eager, acute. (E.) M. E. kene, Chaucer, C. T. 1968; Havelok, 1832. – A. S. céne; Grein, i. 157. Here é comes from an older  $\delta$ ; the orig. sense is 'knowing' or 'wise,' or 'able.' + Du. hoen, bold, stout, daring. + Icel. hænn (for hænn), wise. + O. H. G. chuoni, huani, M. H. G. huene, G. hühn, bold. β. All B. Ail The orig. from a Teutonic base KONJA (KONYA), Fick, iii. 41. sense is shewn by the Icel. word, which also implies ability. From Teut. root KANN, to know; see Kon, Can. Der. keen-ly, keenness, Merch. of Ven. iv. 1. 125.

KEEP, to regard, have the care of, guard, maintain, hold, preserve. (L.) M. E. heren, pt. t. hepte, pp. hept; Chaucer, C. T. 514 (or 512). - A. S. cépan (weak verb), another form of cipan, orig. to traffic, sell, hence also to seek after, store up, retain, keep. See Ælfric's Homilies, i. 412, where we find cypa, sb., a merchant, chapman; gecype, adj. for sale; also: 'gif he dysigra manna herunga ecpo on arfæstum weorcum' = if he seek after the praises of men in pious works. 'Geome ves andagan cepton ' - they earnestly awaited prous works. Geome cases and again ceptor in the geamestip dualided the appointed day; AEIf. Hom. ii. 172. 'Cépat's heora timan' = they observe (or keep) their times; id. ii. 324. And see cipan, cépan, gecipan, gecépan; Grein, i. 182, 385; also spelt geceipian, as at the last reference. We find also cipe as a gloss to Lat. wendo, I sell; AEIfric's Colloquy, in Wright's Vocab. i. 8, 1. 8,  $\beta$ . The A.S. cipan ciping are all derivatives from the cip cases. cépan, cyran, ceapian, are all derivatives from the sb. ceap, traffic, barter, price; and it has been shewn (s. v. Cheap) that they are not true English words, but of Latin origin. In fact, keep is a mere doublet of cheapen. The vowel-changes are perfectly regular; if a word contain ed (as cedp), the derivative contains e in Early West Saxon, which passes into i, and later into j; thus the successive forms are cépan, cipan, cipan (Sweet). Der. keep, sb., keep-er, keep-er-ship; keep-ing, As You Like It, i. 1.9; also keep-sake, i. e. something which we keep for another's sake, apparently quite a modern word, added by Todd to Johnson's Dict.

KEG, a small cask or barrel. (Scand.) Formerly also spelt cag. •Cacque, Caque, a cag; •Cot. And in Sherwood's Index to Cotgrave, we find: •A kegge, caque; voyez a Cag.• = Icel. kaggi, a keg, cask; Swed. kagge, •a cag, rundlet, runlet, •Tauchnitz, Swed. Dict.; Norwegian kagge, a keg, a round mass or heap, a big-bellied animal or man (whence prov. E. kedge-bellied, pot-bellied).  $\beta$ . Root uncertain; but probably named from its roundness. Cf. Gk. γογγύλοε, round. And see Kalls, which is probably the dimin. form. KELP, the calcined ashes of sea weed. (Unknown.) Formerly kilp or kilpe. 'As for the reits [sea-weeds] kilpe, tangle, and such like sea-weeds, Nicander saith they are as good as treacle. Sundry sorts there be of these reits, going under the name of Alga;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxii. c. 6. Of unknown origin.

KELSON, the same as Keelson, q. v. (Scand.) KEN, to know. (Scand.) Not E., but Scand. M. E. kennen, to know, discern. 'Men may hem kennen by smelle of brimstoon' -The men may know them by smell of brimstone; Chaucer, C.T. 16353. – Icel. kenna, to know. + Swed. känna. + Dan. kiende. + Du. kennen. + G. kennen.  $\beta$ . The sense 'to know' is Scand.; but it is not the original sense. The verb is, etymologically, a causal one, signifying to make to know, to teach, shew; a sense frequently found in M.E. 'Kenne me on Crist to bileue' = teach me to believe in Christ; P. Plowman, B. i. 81. Such is also the sense of A.S. cennan, Grein, i. 156; and of Goth. kannjan, to make known, John, xvii. 26.  $\gamma$ . This explains the form of the word; kennan = kannian, causal of Teutonic KANN, base of KONNAN, to know, spelt cunnan in A.S. and kunnan in Gothic; see Fick, iii. 40. [The e is the regular substitute for a, when i follows in the next syllable.] For further remarks, see Can (1). Der. ken, sb., Cymb. iii. 6. 6; a coined word, not in early use.

KENNEL (1), a house for dogs, pack of hounds.  $(F_{..}-L_{.})$ Properly 'a place for dogs;' hence, the set of dogs themselves. M.E. kensl (with one n), Prompt. Parv.; Sir Gawayn and Grene Knight, 1140. – Norm. French kenil<sup>9</sup>, answering to O. F. chenil, a kennel.  $\beta$ . The Norman form is proved by the k being still preserved in English, and by the Norman F. kenet, a little dog, occurring in a Norman poem cited in Way's note in Prompt. Parv., p. 271, where the M. E. kenet also occurs. This kenet is dimin. of a Norman F. ken, answering to Picard kien, O. F. chen (Littre), mod. F. chien, a dog. So also in O. F. chen-il, the former syllable = the same O.F. chen.  $\gamma$ . The termination -il is imitated from the Lat. termination -ile, occurring in ou-ile, a house or place for sheep, a sheepfold, from ou-is, a sheep. Hence chen-il = a place for dogs ; Ital. canile, a kennel. 8. The O. F. chen is from Lat. canem, acc. of killel, Dan. kedel, Du. kelel, cani-, a dog, cognate with E. Hound, q.v. Der. kennel, vb.; kettle-drum, Hamlet, i. 4. 11. kennell'd. Shak. Venus, 913.

KEX.

KERBSTONE, CURBSTONE, a stone laid so as to form part of the edging of stone or brick-work. (Hybrid;  $F_{-}L_{-}$ ; and  $E_{-}$ ) 'Kerbstone, a stone laid round the brim of a well; 'Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. A phonetic spelling of curbstone; so called from its curbing the stone-work, which it retains in its place. See Curb and Stone. KERCHIEF, a square piece of cloth used to cover the head; and later, for other purposes. (F., - L.) Better spelt curchief. In Shak. Merry Wives, iii. 3. 62, iv. 2. 74. M. E. couerchef (= coverchef), Chaucer, C. T. 6172; also spelt couerchief (= coverchief), id. 455, or Six text, A. 453. Also kerchef, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, 272. -O. F. cours-chef, later couvre-chef; cf. 'Couvre-chef, a kerchief;' Cot. -O.F. courir, later couvrir, to cover; and chef, chief, the head, which is from Lat. caput, the head, cognate with E. head. See Cover and ¶ A word of similar formation is curfew, q.v. Der. Chief. hand-kerchief, pocket-hand-kerchief.

KERMES, the dried bodies of insects used in dyeing crimson.

(Arab., = Skt.) See Crimson. KERN (1), KERNE, an Irish soldien. (Irish.) In Shak. Macb. i. 2. 13, 30; v. 7. 17. 'The kearne... whom only I tooke to be the proper Irish souldiour; Spenser, View of the State of Ireland; in Globe ed. of Spenser, p. 640. - Ir. cealharmach, a soldier. [+] KERN (2), another spelling of Quern, q. v. KERNEL, a grain, the substance in the shell of a nut. (E.)

M. E. kirnel (badly kirnelle), P. Plowman, B. xi. 253; better curnel, id. C. xiii. 146.-A.S. cyrnel, to translate Lat. granum; Wright's Vocab., i. 80, col. 1, 1. 7. Formed (with dimin. suffix -el, and vowel-change from o to y) from A.S. corn, grain; see Corn. B. The B. The Icel. kjarni, Dan. kierne, kiærne, Swed. kärna, G. kern (O. H. G. cherno), all signifying 'kernel,' are closely related words, from the same  $\sqrt{GAR}$ , to grind. See Fick, iii. 42.

KERSEY, coarse woollen cloth. (E.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 413. The word is certainly English, and the same word as the personal name Kersey; perhaps named from Kersey, 3 miles from Hadleigh, in the S. of Suffolk, where a woollen trade was once carried on. A little weaving still goes on at Hadleigh. B. The usual pretence, that the cloth came from Jersey, and was named after it, is a pure fiction; there is nothing to shew that Jersey was ever called Kersey, and the 'corruption' from j to k is phonetically impossible. I find that the island was already called Jersey in a charter of Edward III, cited in Falle's Account of Jersey, 1694. The place of the manufacture of kersey is now the North of England, but it was once made in the South (Phillips' Dict.). Y. The F. carizé, 'kersie' (Cot.), Du. karsaai, Swed. kersing, are mere corrup-tions of the E. word. [†] KERSEY MERE, a twilled cloth of fine wool. (Cashmere.) A modern corrupt spelling of cassimere, an old name for the cloth also called Cashmere. See Cassimere, Cashmere. The corruption is clearly due to confusion with kersey, a coarse cloth of a very different texture.

KETCH, a small yacht or hoy. (Turkish.) 'Ketch, a vessel like a hoy, but of a lesser size;' Kersey, ed. 1715. The word was picked up in the Mediterranean, as would appear from the following quotation. 'We stood in for the channel: about noon we saw a sail having but one mast; judged it to be a ketch; but, drawing san having but one mast, judged it to be a save, but, diwing nearer, found it was a ship in distress, having lost her main and mizen masts;' Randolph's Islands in the Archipelago, 1687, p. 103 (Todd). Corrupted from Turk. qaiq, qáíq, a boat, skiff, Zenker's Dict., p. 688; whence also Ital. caicco, F. caïque. ¶ We also find F. caiche, quaiche, a ketch (Littré), borrowed from the English; so also is the Du kit a katch in the Eng. Du part of Savel's Dicts, so F. caiche, quaiche, a ketch (Littré), borrowed trom the English, a also is the Du. kits, a ketch, in the Eng.-Du. part of Sewel's Dict. Distinct from cock-boat, or cog, for which see Cock (5). M. E. ketel

KETTLE, a metal vessel for boiling liquids. (L.) M. E. ketel (with one t), Prompt. Parv.; Wyclif, Levit. xi. 35. – A. S. cetel, spelt cytel in Ælfric's Glossary, to translate Lat. cacabus; Wright's Vocab. i. 25, col. 1. But the spelling cetel is authorised by the occurrence of the weakened form chetel in a gloss of the 12th cent.; id. p. 93, col. 1. The Messo-Goth, form is katils, occurring in the gen. pl. katils in Mark, vii. 4 (Gk.  $\chi \alpha \lambda s low$ , Lat. aramentorum, A. V. 'brazen vessels').  $\beta$ . Borrowed from Lat. catillus, a small bowl, also found in the uncontracted form catinulus; dimin. form of Lat. catinus, a bowl, a deep vessel for cooking food. The Lat. catinus is a kindred word to Gk. κότυλου, a cup, κοτύλη, a small cup; see Cotyledon. ¶ From the Lat. catillus were also borrowed Icel. ketill, Swed kittel, Dan. kedel, Du. ketel, G. kessel, and even Russ. kotel. Der.

KEX, hemlock; a hollow stem. (C.) Bundles of these empty kexes;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Elder Brother, iii. 5. 13. M. E. kex, Scand. origin; from Mah, nappe, to snatch, Swed. nappa, to catch. to kix; P. Plowman, B. xvii. 219; Prompt. Parv. - W. eecys, sb. pl., hollow stalks, hemlock; allied to W. cegid, hemlock. + Corn. cegas, hemlock. + Lat. cienta, hemlock. ¶ Hence also prov F. kathing hemlock. + Lat. cienta, hemlock. ¶ Hence also prov. E. kecksis = kexes, in Shak. Hen. V, v. 2. 52; a pl. sb. of which the proper singular form is not kecksy, but kex. See Way's note in Prompt. Parv., s. v. kyz. Note also that kez really = kecks, and is itself a plural; kexes being a double plural.

KEY, that which opens or shuts a lock. (E.) Formerly called kay, riming with may, Merch. of Ven. ii. 7. 59; and with survey, Shak. Sonnet 52. M. E. keye (riming with pleye, to play), Chaucer, C. T. 9918. - A. S. cag, cage, Grein, i. 156; whence M. E. keye by the usual change of g into y, as in day from A. S. dag.  $\rightarrow$  O. Fries. kai, kei, a key. B. The gen. case of the A. S. fem. sb. cage is cagan, so that the base of the word takes the form KAGAN. The remoter origin is unknown, but the form of the base renders any connection with quay extremely improbable. See Quay, a word of Celtic origin. Der. key-board, key-hole, key-no:e, key-stone.

KHAN, a prince, chief, emperor. (Pers., - Tatar.) Common in Mandeville's Travels, spelt Cham, Cane, Chane, Can, Chan; pp. 42, 215, 216, 224, 225. – Pers. khin, lord, prince (a title); Palmer's Pers. Dict., col. 212. But the word is of Tatar origin; the well-known title Chingis Khan signifies 'great khan' or 'great lord,' a title assumed by the celebrated conqueror Temugin, who was proclaimed Great Khan of the Moguls and Tatars, A.D. 1205. He is always known by the sole title, often also spelt Gengis Khan, corrupted (in Chaucer) to Cambuscan. See Introd. to Chaucer's Prioresses Tale, KIBE, a childrain. (C.) In Hamlet, v. I. 153. 'She halted of [owing to] a kybe;' Skelton, Elynour Rummyng, l. 493. 'He haltith often that hath a kyby hele;' id. Garland of Laurell, l. 502.-W. cibust, 'childains, kibes;' Spurrell. B. Explained in Pughe's Welsh Dict. as standing for cib-gust, from cib, a cup, seed-vessel, husk, and gust, a humour, malady, disease. Thus the sense would appear to be 'a malady in the shape of a cup,' from the swelling or rounded form. y. It is clear that E. kibe has preserved the former syllable only, rejecting the latter. 8. We may compare Gael. copan, a cup, a boss of a shield, a dimple. Probably the same word copan, a cup, a boss of a shield, a dimple. Fronably the same word with Cup, q.v. [+] KICK, to strike or thrust with the foot. (C.) M. E. kiken, Chaucer, C. T. 6523; P. Plowman, C. v. 22. -W. cicio, to kick; given in the Eng.-Welsh portion of Spurrell's Dict. + Gael. ceig, to kick; ceigendk. the act of kicking. Der. kick, sb. [+] KICKSHAWS, a delicacy, fantastical dish. (F. -L.) 'Any pretty little tiny kick: haws; ' 2 Hen. IV, v. 1. 29. The pl. is kick: chauses. 'Art thou good at these kickshawses?' Twelfth Nt. i. 3. 122. At a later time kickshaw was incorrectly recarded as being a pl.

At a later time, kickshaws was incorrectly regarded as being a pl. form. Kickshaws is a curious corruption of F. quelque chose, lit. something, hence, a trifle, small delicacy. This can be abundantly proved by quotations. 'Fricandeaux, short, skinlesse, and dainty puddings, or quelkchoses, made of good flesh and herbs chopped together, then rolled up into the form of liverings, &c., and so boiled; 'Cotgrave's F. Dict. 'I made bold to set on the board kickeshoses, and variety of strange fruits;' Featley, Dippers Dipt, ed. 1645, p. 199 (Todd). 'Fresh salmon, and French kickshose; Milton, Animadversions upon Remonstrant's Defence (R.) shall we then need the monsieurs of Paris . . . to send (our youth] over back again transformed into mimicks, apes, and eicshoes; Milton, Treatise on Education (Todd). 'As for French kickshaws, Cellery, and Champaign, Ragous, and Fricasees in truth we've none; Rochester, Works, 1777, p. 143. 'Some foolish French quelquechose, I warrant you. Quelquechose ! oh ! ignorance in supreme perfection ! He means a kek shose !' Dryden, Kind Keeper, A. iii. sc. 1. - F. quelque chose, something. - Lat. qual-is, of what kind, with suffix -quam; and causa, a cause, thing. Qualis answers to E. which; quam is fem. acc. of qui, answering to E. who. See Which, Who, and Cause.

KID, a young goat. (Scand.) M.E. kid, Chaucer, C.T. 3260, 9238; Ormulum, 7804. – Dan. kid, a kid; Swed. kid, in Widegren's Swed. Dict., also kidling; Icel. kid, kidlingr, a kid. + O. H. G. kizzi, β. From the Low G. root K1, to M. H. G. and G. hitze, a kid. germinate, produce, seen in Goth. keian or uskeian, to produce as a shoot.  $- \checkmark GA$ , another form of GAN, to generate. Thus kid means 'that which is produced,' or 'a young one;' a sense still preserved in modern colloquial English. See Chit, Child, Kin. Der. kid, verb ; kid-ling, with double suffix -l-ing ; kid-fox, a young fox, Much Ado, ii. 3. 44; also kid-nap, q. v. KIDNAP, to steal children. (Scand.) 'These people lie in wait for our children, and may be considered as a kind of kidnappers within the law;' Spectator (Richardson, without a reference). Compounded of kid, a child, in thieves' slang ; and nap, more commonly nab, to steal. Kid is of Scand. origin; see Kid. Nap is also of North-Country Words. - Dan. kille, to truss, tuck up. + Swed. dial.

Scand. origin, on; Taylor, Nab. Der. kid-napper. to carcin, to snatch, lay hold gland Nab. Der. kid-napper. KIDNEY, a gland Which secretes the urine. (Scand.) A cor-ruption of M. E. kidnere, the kidney; also spelt kidneer. 'And the two kydneers;' Wyclif, Exod. xxix. 13 (earlier version); 'and twey kidneris;' (later version). The word nere or neere is also used alone, in the same sense. 'Neere of a beest, ren;' Prompt. Parv., p. 253; and see Way's note. Thus the latter syllable means 'kidney; whilst the former means 'belly' or 'womb,' from the position of the glands. 1. Kid is here a corruption of quid = qui h; cf. prov. E. kite, kyte, the belly, which is the same word .- Icel. kvior, the womb; Swed. gved, the womb, in the Swed. tr. of Luke, xi. 37. + A. S. ewid, the womb; used to translate Lat. matrix; Wright's Vocab. i, 45, col. 1.+Goth. kwithus, the womb. All from a Teutonic base KWETHU (Fick, iii. 54), allied to Teutonic KWETHRA, the belly, occurring in Goth. laushwithrs, having an empty [lit. loose] stomach. The latter is further allied to the Aryan base GATARA, the belly, womb, whence Skt. jathara, the belly, womb, Gk. yaothp, Lat. venier (for guenier). See Gastric, Ventral. 2. M. E. nere is also Scand. - Icel. See Gastric, Ventral. See Grabino, Voltaria. 2. M. E. nore is also Scalue - Icet. nyra, a kidney, pl nyru; Dan. nyre, pl. nyrer; Swed. njure. + Du. nier, kidney, loin. + G. niere, pl. nieren. All from a Teutonic base NEURAN (Fick, iii. 163), allied to Gk. reppis, pl. reppoi, Lat. nefrones, nebrundines (see White's Dict.); words which are probably to be referred to a NIW, to be fat; cf. Skt. niv, to be fat, become corpulent; with allusion to the fat in which the kidneys are enclosed. It may be further observed that the Icel. kuidr is freely used in composition; as in kvid-slit, rupture, kvid-verkr, colic, kvid-proti, a swelling of the stomach; &c. Der. kidney-bean. The phrase 'of his kidney' means 'of his size or kind;' see Merry Wives, iii. 5. 116. KILDERKIN, a liquid measure of 18 gallons. (Du.) In Levins, ed. 1570; spelt kylderkin. 'Take a kilderkin... of 4 gallons of beer;' Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 46. The size of the mea-sure appears to have varied. A corruption (by change of the liquid m to 1 of O. Due kinderkin. Kilderkin. in to l) of O. Du. kindelen. Killan gives : 'Kindelen, kinnelen, the eighth part of a vat, the same as kinnelje.' In mod. Du., kinnelje means 'a firkin,' which in English measure is only half a kilderkin.  $\beta$ . The name was obviously given because it is only a small measure as compared with barrels, vats. or tuns. The lit. sense is 'little child.' 'Kindeken, a little child;' Sewel. Formed, with dimin. suffix -ken (= E. -kin = G. -chen), from Du. kind, a child, cognate with E. child; see Child. So also kinnetje = kind-etje, with the common Du. double dimin. suffix -tje. [†] KILL, to slay, deaden. (Scand.) M. E. killen, more commonly cullen; a weak verb. Spelt cullen, P. Plowman, A. i. 64; kullen (various reading, killen), id. B. i. 66. The old sense appears to be simply 'to hit' or 'strike.' 'We kylle of thin heued' - we strike off thy head; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 876. ' fauh a word culle be ful herde up o pine herte ' = though a word strike thee full hard upon the heart; Ancren Riwle, p. 126, l. 13; with which compare: ' cul of per eax '= the stroke of the axe; id. p. 128, l. 1. - Icel. kolla, to hit in the head, to harm; from kollr, top, summit, head, crown, shaven crown, pate. + Norweg. kylla, to poll, to cut the shoots off trees; from Norweg. koll, the top, head, crown; Aasen. Hence also Norweg. kolla, a beast without horns; id. Cf. also Swed. kulle, crown, top, hillock; kullig, without horns, cropped, polled; kullfolla, to fell, cut down. Also Dan. kuldet, having no horns. + Du. kollen, to knock down; kol, a knock on the head; whence kolbijl, a butcher's a kac, lit. 'kill-bill.' B. The verb is clearly a derivative from the sb., viz. Icel. kollr, Norweg. koll, Swed. kulle. Very likely this sb. is of Celtic origin; cf. W. col, a peak, summit, beard of corn, Irish call, a head, perhaps Lat. collis, a hill; the root being perhaps & KAR, to project, be prominent. This etymology was suggested by to project, be prominent. (This etymology was suggested by Dr. Morris. It is usual to regard kill as a mere variant of quell, which, after all, is not impossible; but the history of the word is against this derivation. See Quell. Der. kill-er.

KILN, a large oven for drying corn, bricks, &c.; bricks piled for burning. (L.) 'Kylne. Kyll, for malt dryinge, Ustrina;' Prompt. Parv., p. 274; and Reliquize Antique, ii. 81. – A.S. cyln, a drying-house; 'Siccatorium, cyln, vel ast;' Wright's Vocab i. 58 (where house; Siccatorium, cyn, ver as; Wingit's Vocab I. 56 (where ast = ast = ast = a coast in oast-house, a drying-house). Also spelt cylene, according to Lye, who explains it by culina, fornax, ustrina.  $\beta$ . Merely borrowed from Lat. culina, a kitchen; whence the sense was easily transferred to that of 'drying-house.' The Icel. kylna, Swed. kölna, a kiln, are from the same source ; and probably also W. cylyn, cyl, a kiln. See Culinary.

KILT, a very short petticoat worn by the Highlanders of Scotland. Scand.) The sb. is merely derived from the verb kilt, to tuck up, added by Todd to Johnson's Dict.; he makes no mention of the sb, 'Her tartan petticoat she'll kilt,' i. e. tuck up; Burns, Author's Earnest Cry, st. 17. 'Kilt, to tuck up the clothes;' Brockett's kilta, to swathe or swaddle a child (Rietz). Cf. Icel. kil:ing,  $a^{\bigoplus}$  mice). Hence the M.E. ky (=cows), Barbour, Bruce, vi. 405, and skirt.  $\beta$ . The verb is derived from a sb., signifying 'lap;' occur- still common in Lowland Scotch. 'The kye stood rowtin i' the β. The verb is derived from a sb., signifying 'lap;' occurring in Swed. dial. kilta, the lap; cf. Icel. kjalta, the lap, kjöltu-barn a baby in the lap, kjöltu-rakki, a lap-dog. The oldest form of the sb. occurs in Mœso-Goth. kilthei, the womb. From the same root as ¶ Thus the orig. sense of kilt as a sb. is 'a lap,' E. Child, q. v. hence ' tucked up clothes.' [+]

KIMBO; see this discussed under Akimbo.

KIN, relationship, affinity, genus, race. (E.) M. E. kun, kyn, kin. I haue no kun tere '= I have no kindred there ; P. Plowman, A. vi. 'I haue no hun tere 118, where some MSS. have kyn; spelt kynne, id. B. v. 639. - A. S. 113, where some MSS. have kyn; speit kyun; id. B. v. o30, -A. S. cynn; Grein, i. 177. + O. Sax. kunni. + Icel. kyn, kin, kindred, tribe; whence kynni, acquaintance. + Du. kunne, sex. + Goth. kuni, kin, race, tribe.  $\beta$ . All from a Teut. base KONVA, a tribe, from the Teut. root KAN, equivalent to Aryan  $\checkmark$  GAN, to generate; whence Lat. genus. See Genus, Generate. Dor. from the same source are kind, q. v., kindred, q. v., king, q. v. Also kins-man = kin's man = man of the same kin or tribe, Much Ado, v. 4. 112; kins-woman, id. iv. 1. 103; kins-folk, Luke, ii. 44.

KIND (1), adj., natural, loving. (E.) M. E. kunde, kinde; Chau-cer, C. T. 8478. 'For be kunde folk of be lond '= for the native people of the land; Rob. of Glouc. p. 40, l. 11. A common meaning is 'natural' or 'native.' – A.S. cynde, natural, native, in-born; more usually gecynde, where the common prefix ge- does not alter the sense; Grein, i. 178, 388. The orig. sense is 'born;' as in Goth. twina-kunds, born as a woman, female, Gal. iii. 28. The Teut. base is KONDA (Fick, iii. 39), a past participial form from KAN = Aryan GAN, to generate. See Kin. Der. kind (2), q. v. ; kind-ness, M. E. kindenesse (four syllables), Chaucer, C. T. 5533 ; kind-ly, adv. ; kind-hearted, Shak. Sonnet 10.

KIND (2), sb., nature, sort, character. (E.) M. E. hund, hunde, hind, hinde; Chaucer, C. T. 2453; spelt hunde, Ancren Riwle, p. 14, 1. 10.-A.S. cynd, generally gecynd, Grein, i. 387, 388; the prefix gemaking no difference to the meaning: the most usual sense is 'nature.' From the adj. above. Der. kind-ly, adj., M. E. kyndeli = natural, Wyclif, Wisdom, xii. 10, and so used in the Litany in the phr. 'kindly fruits;' whence also kindli-ness.

KINDLE (1), to set fire to, inflame. (Scand., -E., -L.) M. E. kindlen; Chaucer, C. T. 12415; Havelok, 915; Ormulum, 13442. Formed from Icel. kyndill, a caudle, torch. [The Icel. verb kynda, to light a fire, kindle, may be nothing else than a verb formed from the same sb., and not an original verb. According to Ihre, the Old Swed. has only the sb., occurring in the comp. kyndelmessa, Candleβ. The Icel. has also kyndill-messa, Candlemas; shewing, mass.] indubitably, that the word was borrowed from the A.S. candel, a candle (whence candel-mæsse, Candlemas), at the time of the introy. Again, the A.S. candel duction of Christianity into Iceland. is merely borrowed from Lat. candela; thus explaining the close resemblance of the Icel. to the Lat. word. ¶ An original Icel. word corresponding to Latin words beginning with e would, by Grimm's law, begin with k. See Candle. Der. kindl-er.

KINDLE (2), to bring forth young. (E.) 'The cony that you see dwell where she is kindled;' As You Like It, iii. 2. 358. M.E. 'The cony that you kindlen, kundlen. ' Thet is the uttre uondunge thet kundleo wreode' = it is the outward temptation that produces wrath, Ancren Riwle, p. 194, l. 20: where we also find, immediately below, the sentence: thus beod the inre uondunges the seouen heaued-sunnen and hore iule kundles' = thus the inward temptations are the seven chief sins and their foul progeny. Cf. also: 'Kyndlyn, or brynge forthe yonge kyndelyngis, Feto, effeto;' Prompt. Parv. p. 275. And in Wyclif, Luke, iii. 7, we find 'kyndlis of edderis' in the earlier, and 'kyndlyngis of eddris' in the later version, where the A.V. has 'genera- $\beta$ . The verb kindlen, to produce, and the sb. tion of vipers.' kindel, a generation, are of course due to the sb. kind; see Kind (1). We may probably regard the sb. kindel as a dimin. of kind, and the verb as formed from it. Both words refer, in general, to a numerous progeny, a litter, esp. with regard to rabbits, &c.

KINDRED, relatives, relationship. (E.) The former d is excrescent, the true form being kinred, which occurs occasionally in old cdd. of Shakespeare. 'All the kinred of Marius;' Shakespeare's Plutarch, ed. Skeat, p 47, l. 27. M.E. kinrede, Chaucer, C. T. 2792; spelt cunreden, St. Juliana, ed. Cockayne, p. 60, l. 13. Composed of A. S. cyn, kin (see Kin), and the suffix -råden, signifying 'condition,' or more literally 'law.' The A. S. cynråden does not appear, but we find the parallel word hiurråden, a household, Matt. x. 6; and the same suffix is preserved in E. hal-red. Reden is connected with the verb Boad, q. v. Der. kindred, adj., K. John, iii. 4. 14.

KINE, cows. (E.) Not merely the plural, but the double plural form; it is impossible to regard it as a contraction of cowen, as some have absurdly supposed. a. The A. S. cu, a cow, made the pl. cy, have absurdly supposed. a. The A. S.  $c\dot{u}$ , a cow, made the pl.  $c\dot{y}$ , borrowed from the Scandinavian.  $\gamma$ . Hence kine in Gen. xxxii. 15; &c. See Cow. ¶ Cf. ey ne for ey-en (A. S. eág-an), old pl. of eye (A. S. eáge). KING, a chief ruler, monarch. (E.) M. E. king, a contraction of an older form kining or kyning. Spelt king. Ancren Riwle, p. 138, last line; kining, Mark, xv. 2 (Hatton MS.) = A. S. cyning, also last line; kning, Mark, XV. 2 (riation MS.) = A.S. cyning, also cynincg, cyninc, cynyng, Mark, XV. 2; Grein.i. 179. – A.S. cyn, a tribe, race, kin; with suffix ing. The suffix ing means 'belonging to,' and is frequently used with the sense 'son of,' as in 'Ælfred Æpel-wulfing ' = Ælfred son of Æthelwulf; A.S. Chronicle, an. 871. Thus cyn-ing = son of the tribe, i. e. elected by the tribe, and hence <sup>k</sup> chief. +O. Sax. kuning, a king; from kuni kunni, a tribe +O. Friesic kining, kening; from kan, a tribe, + Icel. konungr, a king; with which cf. O. Icel. konr, a kind, Icel. kyn, a kind, kin, tribe. + Swed. konung. + Dan. konge. + Du. koning. + G. könig. M. H. G. künie, O. H. G. chuning, kunninc; from M. H. G. künne, O. H. G. chunni, a race, kind. See Kin. The Skt. janaka, a father, is from the same root, but expresses a somewhat different idea. Cf. Lat. geniter. Der. king-crab, king-cruft, king-cup, Spenser, Shepherd's Kalendar, April, l. 141; king-fisher (so called from the splendour of its plumage), Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 10; king-less, Rob. of Glouc. p. 105; king-let, a double diminutive, with suffixes -l- and -t; king-like, king-ly, M. E. kingly, Lidgate's Minor Poems, 20; king-li-ness. Also king's bench, so called because the king used to sit in court; king's evil. Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xiii. c. 4, so called because it was supposed that a king's touch could cure it. And see kingdom. KINGDOM, the realm of a king. (E.) M. E. kingdom, kyn<sub>3</sub>- dom; P. Plowman, B. vii. 155. Evidently regarded as a compound of king with suffix -dom. But, as a fact, it took the place of an older form kinedom; 'pene kinedom of heouene' = the kingdom of heaven, Ancren Riwle, p. 148, l. 3. - A.S. cynedóm, a kingdom; Grein, i. 179. β. Really formed (with suffix -dóm) from the adj. cyne, royal, very common in composition, but hardly used otherwise. This adj. answers nearly to Icel. konr, a man of royal or noble birth; and is related to Kin and King. Thus the alteration from kine- to king- makes little practical difference.  $\P$  So also, for king-ly, there is an A.S. cynelic, royal; Grein, i. 179.

KINK, a twist in a rope. (Du. or Swed.) 'Kink, a twist or short convolution in a rope;' Brockett, Gloss. of North Country Words, ed. 1846. - Du. kink, Swed. kink, a twist in a rope. β. From a Low G. base KIK, to bend; appearing in Icel. kikna, to sink at the knees through a heavy burden, keikr, bent backwards, keikja, to bend backwards; whence also Icel. kengr, a crook of metal, a bend, a bight, answering to Swed. kink. The base is well preserved in Norweg. kika, to writhe, keika, to bend back or aside, kinka, to writhe, twist, kink, a twist (Aasen). There is possibly an ultimate relation to Chincough, q. v.

KIPPER, to cure or preserve salmon. (Du.) This meaning is quite an accidental one, arising from a practice of curing kipperguite an accidentatione, arising from a practice of curing super-salmon, i. e. salmon during the spawning season. Such fish, being inferior in kind, were cured instead of being eaten fresh. 'The salmon, after spawning, become very poor and thin, and are called kipper;' Pennant, Zoology, iii. 242 (Todd). 'Kipper-time, a space of time between May 3 and Twelfth-day, during which salmon-fishing in the river Thames was forbidden;' Kersey, ed. 1715. The lit. sense of kipper is 'spawn-er.' – Du. kippen, to hatch; also to catch, eage - horavec, kippen, to snatch, & a - Aasen, + Swed, dial. kippen. scize. + Norweg. kippa, to snatch, &o.; Aasen. + Swed. dial. kippa, to snatch; Rietz. + Icel. kippa, to pull, snatch. [+] KIRK, a church. (Scand., - E., - Gk.) The North. E. form; see

Burns, The Twa Dogs, l. 19. M. E. kirke, P. Plowman, B. v. 1; Ormulum, 3531.- Icel. kirkja; Dan. kirke; Swed. kyrka. Borrowed

KIRTLE, a sort of gown or petticoat. (E. or Scand.) Used rather vaguely. M. E. kirtel, Chaucer, C. T. 3321; kwrtel, Ancren Riwle, p. 10. – A. S. cyrlel, to translate Lat. palla; Ælfred Gloss, in Wright's Vocab., i. 16, col. 2. Also O. Northumbrian cyrlel, to translate Lat. tunica; Matt. v. 40 (Lindisfarne M.S.)+Icel. kyrtill, a kirtle, tunic, gown. + Dan. kiortel, a tunic. + Swed. kjortel, a petticoat.  $\beta$ . Evidently a diminutive, with suffixed -l. I have to suggest that it is probably a dimin. of Skirt, q. v. Thus the Icel. kyrtill may well be a dimin. of Icel. skyrta, a shirt, a kind of kirtle; the Dan. kiortel, of Dan. skiorte, a shirt; and the Swed. kjortel, of Swed. skjorta, a shirt. Shirt and shirt are doublets, so that these words answer to skirt also. Perhaps the A. S. cyrtel was merely KISS, a salute with the lips, osculation. (E.) M. E. cos, kos, eus, kus; later kisse, kiss. The vowel i is really proper only to the verb, which is formed from the sb. by vowel-change. 'And he cam to Jhesu, to kisse him ; And Jhesus seide to him, Judas, with a coss thou bytrayest manys sone; Wyclif, Luke, xxii, 47, 48. The form husse is as late as Skelton, Phylpp Sparowe, 361. In the Ancren Riwle, p. 102, we find cos, nom. sing., cosses, pl., cosse, dat. sing.; as well as cus, verb in the imperative mood. - A.S. coss; Luke, xxii. 48; whence cyssam, to kiss, id. xxii. 47. + Du. kus, sb.; whence kussen, vb. + Icel. koss, sb.; whence kyssa, vb. + Dan. kys, sb., kysse, vb. + Swed. kyss, sb., kyssa, vb. + G. kuss, M. H. G. kus, sb.; whence küssen, O. H. G. chussan, vb.  $\beta$ . All from a Teut. base whence russen, U. H. G. chussan, vb.  $\beta$ . All from a Teut. base KUSSA, a kiss; which is connected with Icel. hostr, choice, Goth. hustus, a proof, test, Lat. gustus, a taste. The connection is shown by Lat. gustus, a small dish of food, a smack, relish, also a kiss; dimin. of Lat. gustus, a taste, whet, relish.  $\gamma$ . The Goth. hustus is from the verb kiusan, to choose, cognate with E. choose. Hence the b, kiss, practically, a doublet of theirs and the control is to the form so, kiss is, practically, a doublet of choice; and the sense is 'some-thing choice' or 'a taste.' See Choice, Choose, Gust. Der. Der. kiss, verb; as shewn above.

KIT (1), a vessel of various kinds, a milk-pail, tub; hence, an outfit. (O. Low G.) 'A kit, a little vessel, Cantharus;' Levins. 'Hoc mul[c]trum, a kytt;' Wright's Vocab. i. 217, col. 2. In Barbour's Bruce, b. xviii. l. 168, we are told that Gib Harper's head was cut off, salted, put into 'a kyt,' and sent to London. - O. Du. kitte, a tub (Kilian) ; Du. kit, 'a wooden can ;' Sewel. Cf. Norweg. kitte, a space in a room shut off by a partition, a large com-bin in the wall of a house (Aasen); Swed. dial. kätte, a little space shut off by a partition (Rietz).  $\beta$ . We find also A. S. cyte, a cell, which may be related; 'Cella, cyte; 'Wright's Vocab. i. 85, col. 2. If so,  $\mathbf{KIT}$  (2), a small violin. (L.,  $-\mathbf{Gk}$ .) I'll have his little gut to string a kit with;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Philaster, Act v. sc. 4 (4th Citizen). Abbreviated from A.S. cytere, a cittern, or cithern; which is borrowed from Lat. cithara. See Cithern, Gittern.

KIT (3), a brood, family, quantity. (E.) See Halliwell ; a variant of Kith, q. v. KIT-CAT, KIT-KAT, the name given to portraits of a particular kind. (Personal name.) a. A portrait of about 28 by 36 in. in size is thus called, because it was the size adopted by Sir Godfrey Kneller (died 1723) for painting portraits of the members of the Kit-kat club.  $\beta$ . This club, founded in 1703, was so named because the members used to dine at the house of Christopher Kat, a pastry-cook in King's Street, Westminster; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. γ. Kit is a familiar abbreviation of Christopher, a name of Gk. origin, from Gk. Χριστο-φόρου, lit. 'Christ-bearing.' [†] KITCHEN, a room where food is cooked. (L.) The t is inserted. M.E. kichene, kychene, kechene, Will. of Palerne, 1681, 1707, 2171 ; hychyne, P. Plowman, B. v. 261. Spelt kuchene, Ancren Riwle, p. 214. - A. S. cicen (put for cycen); we find 'Coquina, vel culina, cicen;' Supp. to Ælfric's Gloss; in Wright's Vocab. i. 57, col. 2. -Lat. coquina, a kitchen - Lat. coquere, to cook; see Cook. Der. kitchen-maid, kitchen-stuff, kitchen garden.

KITE, a voracious bird; a toy for flying in the air. (E.) M. E. kitö, kytö (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 1181. – A. S. cýta; we find the entry 'Butio (sic), cyta' in Ælfric's Gloss. (Nomina Auium). The Lat. butio is properly a bittern ; but doubtless buteo is meant, signi-fying a kind of falcon or hawk. The y must be long, as shewn by the modern sound; cf. E. mice with A.S. m/s.  $\beta$ . The W. name is barcud, barcudan, a buzzard, kite; we find also cudy/l, a sparrow-hawk. If the A.S. c/ta and W. cud are related, this points to loss of initial s, and the most likely root is the Teutonic 🖌 SKUT, to shoot, go swiftly; cf. W. cud, celerity, flight. In this view, cyla stands for scyla, 'the shooter;' the suffix a being the mark of the KITTEN, a young cat. (E.; with F. suffix.) M. E. kyton, P. Plowman, C. i. 204, 207; hitom, id., B. prol. 190, 202. A dimin. of cat, with vowel-change and a suffix which appears to be rather the F. -on than the E. -m. This suffix would be readily suggested by the use of it in the F. chatton. 'Chatton, a kitling or young cat;' Cot. See Cat.  $\bigcirc$  The true E. form is kit-ling, where -ling (= -l+-ing) is a double dimin. suffix. The same vowel-change appears  $\bigcirc$  and in Ps lxxxv. 15, ed. Spelman, where another reading (in the latter 316 KISS. occurs in words related to skirt, viz. in Du. kort = E. s-kort = A. S. <sup>a</sup> in the old verb to kitle, <sup>b</sup> or broduce young as a cat does. Cf. Nor-s-ceort (with which cf. Du. schort, an apron, skirt); and in G. kurz, short. The Lat. curtus, short, is from the same root, and its influence may have contributed to this loss of s. See Shirt, Short, Curt. Market and the state of the kytelleth, I pray? fote in haue a kytlynge (chatton); 'Palsgrave, cited in Way's note in Prompt. Parv. p. 277. The Lat. catvin, though meaning a whelp, is a dimin. from catus, a cat. KINACK, a snap, quick motion, dexterity. trick. (C.) 'The more queinte knakkes that they make' = the more clever tricks they practise; Chaucer, C. T. 4049. On which Tyrwhitt remarks: 'The word seems to have been formed from the knacking or snapping of the fingers made by jugglers.' This explanation, certainly a correct one, he justifies by references to Cotgrave. 'Matassiner des mains, to move, knack, or waggle the fingers, like a jugler, plaier, jeaster, &c.;' Cot. 'Niquet, a knick, tlick, snap with the teeth or fingers a trifle, nifle, bable [bauble], matter of small value; ' id. Faire la nique, to threaten or defie, by putting the thumbe naile into the mouth, and with a jerke (from the upper teeth) make it to knack; id. The word is clearly (like crack, click) of imitative origin; the form being Celtic. - Gael. cnac, a crack, crash, cnac, to crack, crash crack. The English form is Crack, q.v. ¶ A similar succession of ideas is seen in Du. knop, a crack, shappen, to crack, snap; knop, clever, nimble; knaphandig, nimble-handed, dexterous. See Knap, Der. knick-knack, q. v., knag, q. v. GP The F. nique (above) is Bor. Anich-knack, Q. v., Anag, q. v. OF The F. nique (above) is from Du. Anikken, to crack slightly, an attenuated form of knakken. Knack is merely another form of Knock, q. v.

KNACKER, a dealer in old horses. (Scand.) Now applied to a dealer in old horses and dogs' meat. But it formerly meant a saddler and harness-maker, 'Knacker, one that makes collars and other furniture for cart-horses;' Ray, South and East Country Words, 1691 (E. D. S. Gloss. B. 16). - Icel. Anakkr, a man's saddle; cf. hnakkmarr, a saddle-horse.

CI. Madkamarr, a saucie-norse. KNAG, a knot in wood, a peg, branch of a deer's horn. (C.) 'I schall hyt hange on a knagg' = I shall hang it on a peg; Le Bone Florence, I. 1795; in Ritson, Metrical Romances, v. iii. 'A knagge in wood, Bosse; 'Sherwood's Index to Cotgrave. We read also of the 'sharp and branching knags' of a stag's horn; Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 1039. Of Celtic origin. — Irish cnag, a knob, peg. cnag, a knot in wood; Gael. cnag, a pin, peg, knob; with which cf. W. cruce a lump, bump, crucia to form into knobs. A Blutarch with the stage of th enve, a lump, bump, enveio, to form into knobs. B. All these appear to be derived from the verb which appears as Irish enagaim, I strike, knock, Gael. enag, to crack, snap the fingers, knock, rap, W. enocio, to knock, beat. In the same way, the E. bump denotes not only to beat or thump, but also the excressence produced by a blow; so that the orig. sense of knag is 'a bump.' Y. From the same Celtic source we have also Dan. knag, a wooden peg. cog, handle of a scythe; Swed. knagg, a knag, knot in wood. 8. The word is closely related to Knack and Knock. Der. knagg 7;

also (probably) knoll (1), q. v., knuckle, q. v. KNAP, to snap, break with a noise. (Du.,-C.) 'He hathe knapped the speare in sonder; 'Ps. xlvi. 9, in the Bible of 1551; still preserved in the Prayer-book version. 'As lying a gossip as ever knapped ginger;' Merch. Ven. iii. 1. 10. Not found (I think) earlier than about A.D. 1550, and probably borrowed from Dutch; but knap, to knock (K. Lear, ii. 4. 125) preserves the sense of Gael. cnap. - Du. knappen, to crack, snap, catch, crush, eat ; whence knapper, (1) hard gingerbread, (2) a lie, untruth. [This brings out the force of Shakespeare's phrase.] + Dan. kneppe, to snap, crack with the fingers; hnep, a snap, crack, fillip. Cf. Swed. knep, a trick, artifice; bruka knep, to play tricks; which illustrates the use of the parallel word knack, q.v. B. Of imitative origin ; and parallel to Knack ; the source is Celtic, like that of knack ; see further under Knop. Der. knap-sack. [*]

KNAPSACK, a provision-bag, case for necessaries used by ravellers. (Du.) 'And each one fills his knapsack or his scrip;' travellers. (Du.) Drayton, The Barons' Wars, b. i (R.) - Du. knapzak, a knapsack; orig. a provision-bag. – Du. knap, eating, knappen, to crack, crush, eat; and zak, a bag, sack, pocket. See Knap and Sack. KNAPWEED, i. e. knopweed; see Knop.

KNAVE, a boy, servant, sly fellow, villain. (E.; perhaps C.) The older senses are 'boy' and 'servant.' M. E. knaue (with u for v). 'A knaue child '= a male child, boy; Chancer, C. T. 8320, 8323, passage) is enafa. + Du. knaap, a lad, servant, fellow. + Icel. knapi, ?-iht is adjectival, as in stún-iht=stony. Probably en-iht=cyn-iht. a servant-boy. + Swed. knäfvel, a rogue (a dimin. form). + G. knabe, a boy. B. The origin of the word is perhaps Celtic. It appears to be preserved in Gael. cnapach, 'a youngster, a stout smart middlesized boy;' Macleod. This word may safely be connected with the adj. enapach, 'knobby, hilly, lumpy, bossy, stout ;' which is from the sb. enap, a knob. Thus the sense is 'knobby,' hence, stout or wellgrown, applied to a lad. Note also Gael. cnaparra, stout, strong, grown, applied to a lad. Note also Gael. chaparra, stout, strong, sturdy. See Knob. Der. knav-isk, Chaucer, C. T. 17154; knav-isk-ly; k 21, the Lat. fermentaretur is glossed by sie gedærsted vel gecnoeden in the Lindisfame MS., and by sie gedærsted vel eneden in the Rushworth MS.; hence we infer the strong verb cnedan, with pt. t. cnæd, and pp. enoden. We also find the form geenedan, Gen. xviii. 6; where the prefix ge- does not affect the force of the verb. The verb has become a weak one, the pp. passing from knoden to kneded in the 15th century, as shewn by the entry: 'Knodon, knedid, Pistus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 280. + Du. kneden. + Icel. knoba. + Swed. knada. + G. kneten, O. H. G. chnetan. + Russ. gnetate, gnesti, to press, squeeze. B. The Teut. base is KNAD, to press; Fick, iii. 48. Der. knead-ing-Srough, M. E. Aneding-trough, Chaucer, C. T. 3548. KNEE, the joint of the lower leg with the thigh. (E.) M.E. Ane,

All from Aryan base GANU, the knee; Fick, iii. Skt. jánu. 49, i. 69. The root does not appear. ¶ The loss of vowel between k and n is well illustrated by the Gk. γνί-πετος, fallen upon the knees, put for yorbueros. Der. knee-d, knee pan; also kneel, q. v.

And see geni-culate, genu-flection, penta-gon, kexa-gon, &c. KNEEL, to fall on the knees. (Scand.) M. E. knelen, Havelok, 1420; Ormulum, 6138. A Scand. form; as shewn by Dan. knæle, to kneel. [The A.S. verb was encowian (Bosworth).] Formed

KNELL, KNOLL, to sound as a bell, toll. (E.) • Where bells have knolled to church; 'As You Like It, ii. 7. 114. M. E. knillen; And lete also the belles hille; Myrc's Instructions for Parish Priests, ed. Peacock, I. 779. 'Knyllynge of a belle, Tintillacio;' Prompt. Parv., p. 279. 'I knolle a belle, Is frappe du batant;' Palsgrave. The orig. sense is to beat so as to produce a sound. - A. S. cnyllan, to beat noisily; in the O. Northumb. version of Luke, xi. 9, we find: 'enylla's and ontyned bis iow'=knock and it shall be opened to you (Rushworth MS.) We find also A.S. cnyl, a knell, the sound of a bell (Bosworth). + Du. knallen, to give a loud report; knal, a clap, a report. + Dan. knalde (- knalle), to explode, make a report; knalde med en pidsk, to crack a whip; knald (- knall), a report, explosion, crack. + Swed. knalla, to make a noise, to thunder; knall, a report, loud noise; +G. knallen, to make a loud noise; knall, a report, explosion. + Icel. gnella, to scream. β. All words of imitative origin, like knack, knap, knock. ¶ We find also W. cnill, a passing-bell, enul, a knell; but the word does not appear to be of Celtic origin. Der. knell, sb., Temp i. 2. 402.

KNICK-KNACK, a trick, trifle, toy. (C.) A reduplication of back in the sense of 'trick,' as formerly used; or in the sense of 'toy,' as generally used now. 'But if ye use these knick-knacks,' i.e. these tricks; Beaum. and Fletcher, Loyal Subject, ii. I (Theodore). The reduplication is effected in the usual manner, by the attenuation of the radical vowel a to i; cf. elick-clack, ding-dong, pit-a-pat. Cf. Du. knikken, to crack, snap, weakened form of knakken, to crack; also W. enic, a slight rap, weakened form of enoc, a rap, knock. Ultimately of Celtic origin. See further under Knack.

KNIFE, an instrument for cutting. (E.) M. E. knif, cnif; pl. brines (with u = v), Chaucer, C. T. 33. The sing, bring is in the Ancren Riwle, p. 282, last line but one. -A. S. enf, a knife (Lye). + Du. knijf. + Icel. knifr. knifr. + Dan. kniv. + Swed. knif. + G. $(provincial) kneif. a hedging bill, clasp-knife (Flügel). <math>\beta$ . The sense is 'an instrument for nipping' or cutting off. The sb is derived from the verb which appears in Du. knijpen, to pinch, nip; G. kneipen, to pinch, kneifen, to nip, squeeze; from the Teutonic base KNIB (or KNIP), to nip, pinch; Fick, iii. 48. See Nip. ¶ The F. canif is of Teut. origin. Der. knife-edge.

KNIGHT, a youth, servant, man at arms. (E.) M. E. knight; see Chaucer's Knightes Tale. - A.S. cniht, a boy, servant ; Grein, i. 165. + Du. knecht, a servant, waiter. + Dan. knegt, a man-servant, knave (at cards). + Swed. knekt, a soldier, knave (at cards). + G. knecht, a man-servant. Cf. Irish cniocht, a soldier, knight; perhaps obtain, know how to get. + Ö. H. G. chnáan; only in the com-borrowed from English. B. Origin unknown; the A. S. suffix pounds bi-chnáan, ir-chnáan, int-chnáan; cited by Fick, iii. 41. + belonging to the 'kin' or tribe; it would thus signify one of age to be admitted among the tribe. A similar loss of vowel occurs in Gk.  $\gamma v - \eta \sigma \sigma \sigma$ , legitimate, from  $\gamma \epsilon v - \sigma \sigma = kin$ . Der. knight, verb, (Bosworth); knight-hood, M. E. kny3thod, P. Plowman, B. prol. 113, from A.S. enihthad, lit. boyhood, youth (Bosworth); knight-errant,

KNIT, to form into a knot. (E.) M. E. knitten, Chaucer, C. T. 1130; P. Plowman, B. prol. 169. - A. S. enyttan, enittan; the comp. be-cnittan is used in Ælfric's Homilies, i. 476, l. 5. Formed by vowelchange from A.S. cnotta, a knot. + Icel. knýta, knytja, to knit; from knútr, a knot. + Dan. knytte, to tie in a knot, knit; from knude. + Swed. knyla, to knit, tie; from knut. See Knot. Der. knitt-ing. KNOB, a later form of Knop, q.v. (C.) In Levins; and Chaucer, C. T. 635. Der. knobb-ed, kn:bb-y, knobb-i-ness. KNOCK, to strike, rap, thump. (C.) M. E. knocken; Chaucer, KNOCK, to strike, rap, thump. (C.) M. E. knocken; Chaucer, C. T. 3432. - A. S. enucian, later enokien, Matt. vii. 7; Luke, xi. 10. Borrowed from Celtic. - Gael. enac, to crack, crash, break, enag, to crack, snap the fingers, knock, rap; Irish enag, a crack, noise, enagaim, I knock, strike; Corn. enoucye, to knock, beat, strike. Thus knock is the same with knack, both being imitative words corresponding to E. crack; from the noise of bleaking. See Knack, Crack. Der. knock, sb., knock-kneed, knock-er. KNOLL (1), the top of a hill, a hillock, mound. (E.; perkaps C.)

M. E. knol, a hill, mount; Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 1. 4129. -A.S. cnol; 'juise munte cnottas' = the tops of the hills; Gen. viii. 5.+ Du. knol, a turnip; from its roundness.+ Dan. knold, a knoll. + Swed. knöl, a bump, knob, bunch, knot.+ G. knollen, a knoll, clod, lump, knot, knob, bulb (provincially, a potatoe).  $\beta$ . Knoll is probably a contracted word, and a guttural has been lost. It may stand for knok-el, a dimin. of a Celtic knok; the word being ultimately of Celtic origin. We find W. enol, a knoll, hillock ; and the orig. word is seen in Gael. enoc, a hill, knoll, hillock, eminence; Irish cnoc, 'a hill, navew, nape, Brassica napus' (O'Reilly), explaining the Du sense of 'turnip.' The parallel form Gael. cnog, a peg, knob, ex-plains the Swed. knöl. γ. I thus regard knoll, a hillock, as a dimin. of Gael. cnoc, a hill, and G. knollen, a knob, as a dimin. of Gael. cnog, a knob. See Knag. 8. Also, it is a doublet of Knuckle, q. v. KNOLL (2), the same as Knell, q. v. (E.) KNOP, KNOB, a protuberance, bump, round projection. (C.)

Knob is a later spelling, yet occurs as early as in Chaucer, C. T. 635, where we find the pl. knobbes, from a singular knobbë (dissyllabic). Knop is in Exod. xxv. 31, 33, 36 (A.V.) The pl. knoppis is in Wyclif, Exod. xxvi. 11; spelt knoppes, Rom. of the Rose, 1083, 1685, where it means 'rose-buds.' A third form is knap, in the sense of 'hill-top;' as in: 'some high knap or tuft of a mountaine;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xi. c. 10. – A. S. cnæp, the top of a hill; Luke, iv. 29; Numb. xiv. 44. + Du. knop, a knob, pummel, button, bud; knoop, a knob, button, knot, tie + Icel. knappr, a knot, stud, button. + Dan. knap, a knob, button; knop, a knob, bud. + Swed. knopp, a knob; knop, a knot. + G. knopf, a knob, button, pummel, bud. B. But all these appear to be of Celtic origin. - Gael. cnop, a slight blow, a knob, button, lump, boss, stud, little hill; from the verb cnap, to thump, strike, beat. So also W. cnap, a knob, button; Irish cnap, a button, knob, bunch, hillock, from cnapaim, I strike. Here, as in the case of bump, the original sense is 'to strike;' whence the sb. signifying (1) a slight blow, (2) the effect of a blow, a contusion, or anything in the shape of a contusion. Y. The verb enap, to knap, strike, is of imitative origin, from the sound of a blow; cf. Gael. cnapadh, thumping, falling with a great noise; see Knap. It is a parallel form to Knock, q.v.  $\P$  A Celtic c answers to Teut. k; and we find a cognate, not a borrowed form, appearing in Goth. dis-Aniupan, to tear asunder; whence dis-knupnan, to be torn asunder. Knap, in the sense of 'to beat,' occurs in King Lear, ii. 4. 125. Der. knop-weed or knap-weed.

KNOT, a tight fastening, bond, cluster. (E.) M. E. knottë (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 10715. - A. S. cnotta, a knot; Ælfric's Hom. ii. 386, l. 22. + Du. knot. + Icel. knútr. + Dan. knude. + Swed. knut. + G. knoten. + Lat. nodus (for gnodus). Root uncertain; see Fick, iii. 49. Der. knot, verb; knit, q. v.; knots-y, anus-ses, and Russia. KNOUT, a whip used as an instrument of punishment in Russia. (Russian.) Not in Todd's Johnson. - Russ. knute, a whip, scourge. Der. knout, verb. [+]

KNOW, to be assured of, recognise. (E.) M.E. knowen; pt. t. knew, Chaucer, C. T. 5474 ; pp. knowen, id. 5310. - A. S. cnáwan, pt. t. enedw, pp. endwen; gen. used with prefix ge, which does not affect the sense; Grein, i. 386. + Icel. and to know how to, be able; a defective verb. + O. Sax. knégan; only in the comp. bi-knégan, to obtain, know how to get. + O. H. G. chnáan; only in the comRuss. znale, to know. + Lat. noscere (for gnoscere), to know. + Gk.  $\gamma_i$ - $\gamma_i$  (fut.  $\gamma_i$  (fut.  $\gamma_i$  (fut.  $\gamma_i$  (fut.  $\gamma_i$  (fut.  $\gamma_i$ )); a reduplicated form. + Skt. jnd, to know.  $\beta$ . Der know-ing, know-ing-ly; also know-ledge, q. v. KNOWLEDGE, assured belief, information, skill. (E.; with Scand. suffix.) M. E. knowlege, Chaucer, C. T. 12960; spelt knoweliche, knowleche in Six text ed., B. 1220. In the Cursor Mundi, 12162, the spellings are knaulage, knaulage, knauleche, knowleche. The d is a late insertion; and -lege is for older -lech. For know-, see above. As to the suffix, it is a Scand., not an A.S. form; the ch is a weakened form of k as usual; and -lecke stands for -leke, borrowed from Icel. -leikr or -leiki (= Swed. -lek), occurring in words such as kærleikr, love (= Swed. kärlek), sannleikr, truth, heilagleiki, holiness. B. This suffix is used for forming abstract nouns, much as -nets is used in English; etymologically, it is the same word with Icel. leikr (Swed. lek), a game, play, sport, hence occupation, from the verb leika, to play, cognate with A.S. lúcan, Goth. laikan, to play, and still preserved in prov. E. laik, to play, Southern E. lark, a piece of fun, where the r is inserted to preserve the length of the vowel. The A.S. sb. lác is cognate with Icel. leikr, and is also used as a suffix, appearing in wed-lac = mod. E. wedlock. y. It will now be seen that the ledge in knowledge and the lock in wedlock are the same suffix, the former being Northern or Scandinavian, and the latter Southern or Wessex (Anglo Saxon). See further under Lark (2). Wedlock. 8. It may be added that the compound knúleiki actually occurs in Icelandic, but it is used in the sense of 'prowess;' we find, however, a similar compound in Icel. kunnleikr, knowledge. Der. acknowledge, a samtar compound in icel. Manietke, knowledge. Der. acknowledge, a bad spelling of a-knowledge; see Acknowledge. KNUCKLE, the projecting joint of the fingers. (C.) M.E. knokil. 'Knokyl of an honde, knokil-bone, Condilus;' Prompt. Parv. 'Knokylle-bone of a legge, Coxa;' id. Not found in A.S.; the alleged form cnucl, due to Somner, appears to be a fiction. Yet some such form probably existed, though not recorded; it occurs in O. Friesic as knokele, knokle. + Du. knokkel, a knuckle (Sewel); dimin. of knoke, knake, a bone, or a knuckle (Hexham). + Dan. knokkel. + Swed. knoge, a knuckle (in which the dimin. suffix is not added). + G. knöchel, a knuckle, joint ; connected with knochen, a bone. B. All formed, with dimin. suffix -el or -il, from a primitive knok or knak, a bump, knob, projection, still preserved in the form knog, which is of Celtic origin. See Knag. [+] ¶ Knoll(1) is probably a doublet. KNURR, KNUR, a knot in wood, wooden ball. (O. Low G.)

'A knurre, bruscum, gibus; 'Levins, 190. 16. 'Bosse, a knob, knot, or knur in a tree; 'Cot. M. E. knor. 'Without knot or knur, or eny signe of goute; 'Tale of Beryn, ed. Furnivall, l. 2514. Dict. p 1122. – Arab. root qara-a, he read; Rich. Dict. p. 1121. ¶ The a is long, and bears the stress.

KYTHE, to make known. (E.) In Burns, Hallowe'en, st. 3. M. E. hy hen, kithen; Chaucer, C. T. 5056. - A.S. cytan, to make known; formed by regular vowel change from euo, known, pp. of cumnan, to know. See Uncouth, Can.

L.

LABEL, a small slip of paper, &c. (F., - Teut.) Variously used. In heraldry, it denotes a horizontal strip with three pendants or tassels. It is also used for a strip or slip of silk, parchment, or paper. M. E. label, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 22; where it denotes a moveable slip or rule of metal, used with an astrolabe as a sort of pointer, and revolving on the front of it. [Not fitted with sights,' as said in Webster.] - O. F. label, a label in the heraldic sense, later F. lambel; see quotations in Littre. Cotgrave has: . Lambel, a labell of three points.' The doublet of lambel is lambeau ; Cotgrave has: 'Lambeau, a shread, rag, or small piece of stuffe, or of a garment ready to fall from, or holding but little to the whole; also, a labell.' The orig. sense is 'a small flap 'or lappet.' the E. latel being a doublet. O.H.G. lappa, M.H.G. lappe, cited by Fick lafel being a doublet. - O. H. G. lappa, M. H. G. lappe, cited by Fick ILACK (1), want. (O. Low G.) The old sense is often 'failing,' as the older forms of G. lappen, 'a flap, botch, patch, rag, tatter, ear of 'failure,' or 'fault.' M. [The labial letters are p, b, f; closely allied to which is the nasal m.] - Late Lat. labialis, belonging to the lips; coined from Lat. labium, the lip. See Lap (1), Lip.

LABIATE, having lips or lobes. (L.) A botanical term. Coined, as if from a Lat. pp. labiatus, from Lat. labium, the lip. See Labial. LABORATORY, a chemist's workroom, (L.) 'Laboratory, a chymists workhouse;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Shortened from elabora-tory, by loss of e. 'Elaboratory, a work-house;' Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674. Cf. O. F. elaboratory, a work-house;' Blount's Gloss. Cot. Formed, as if from a Lat. elaboratorium*, from elaboratus, pp. of elaborare, to take pains, compounded of Lat. e, out, extremely, and laborare, to work. See Elaborate, Labour.

LABORIOUS, toilsome. (F., = L.) M. E. laborious; Chaucer, C. T. 7010. - F. laborieux, 'laborious;' Cot. - Lat. laborious, toil-some; formed with suffix -osus from labori-, crude form of labor.

See Labour. Der. laborious-ly, -ness. LABOUR, toil, work. (F., - L.) M. E. labour (accented on -our); Chaucer, C.T. 2195. - O. F. labour, later labeur. - Lat. laborem, acc. of labor (oldest form labos), labour, toil.  $\beta$ . Labor stands for an older rabos, akin to Lat. robur, strength. - V LABH, to get, per-form, later form of VRABH, to seize; cf. Skt. labk, to get, acquire, undergo, perform; rabh, to seize; Gk. NaµBáreir, to take. See Fick, i. 192, 751. Der. labour, verb, M. E. labouren, Chaucer, C. T. 186; labour-ed; labour-er, M. E. labouren, Chaucer, C. T. 1411; and see labor-i-ous, labor-at-or-y. Ger The spelling with final -our, answering to O. F. -our, shews that the derivation is not from Lat. nom. labor, but from the acc. laborem.

LABYRINTH, a place full of winding passages, a maze. (F., -L.,-Gk.) In Shak. Troil. ii. 3. 2.-F. labyrinthe; Cot.-Lat. labyrinthus. - Gk. λαβύρινθοs, a maze, place full of lanes or alleys. β. Put for  $\lambda a f \nu \rho \iota \rho o s$ ; from  $\lambda a f \rho a$ , usually  $\lambda a \nu \rho a$ , a lane, alley, Homer, Od. xxii. 128. ¶ Cotgrave spells the E. word 'labor-inth;' so also Low Lat. laborintus, Trevisa, i. 9; by confusion with Lat. labor. Dor. labyrinth-ine, labyrinth-i-an.

LAC (1), a resinous substance. (Pers., -Skt.) A resinous substance produced mainly upon the banyan-tree by an insect called the Coccus lacea. 'Lacea, a kind of red gum ;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. - Pers. lak, luk, ' the substance commonly called gum-lac, being the nidus of an insect found deposited on certain trees in India, and from which a beautiful red lake is extracted, used in dyeing;' Richardson's Pers. Dict. p. 1272. - Skt. lákská, lac, the animal dye; put for rakta, lac, formed from rakta, pp. of the verb ranj, to dye, to colour, to redden; cf. Skt. ranga, colour, paint (Benfey). [Skt. ksh for ht is regular.] Doublet, lake (2). Der. lacquer, gum-lac, thel-lac. LAC (2), a hundred thousand. (Hind., -Skt.) Imported from India in modern times; we speak of 'a lac of rupees' = 100,000 rupees. - Hind. lak. - Skt. laksha, a mark, aim; also a lac, a hundred thousand; prob. standing for an orig. rakta, pp. of the verb ranj, to dye, colour (Benley). See Lac (1). [†] LACE, a cord, tie, plaited string. (F.,-L.) M.E. las, laas, King Alisaunder, 7698; Chaucer, C.T. 394. - O.F. las, lags, a snare; cf. lags courant, a noose, running knot; Cot. - Lat. laqueus, a noose, snare, knot. β. From the same source as Lat. lacère, to allure, used in the comp. allicere, to allude, elicere, to draw out, delicere, to entice, delight. See Delight. Der. lace, verb, Spenser, F. Q. v. 5. 3. Doublet, laso. 697 The use of lace in the orig. sense of 'snare' occurs in Spenser, Muiopotmos, 427. LACERATE, to tear. (L.) In Cotgrave, to translate F. lacerer; and in Minsheu, ed. 1627. - Lat. laceratus, pp. of lacerare, to tear, rend.

-Lat. lacer, mangled, torn. + Gk. Dakepos, torn; cf. Dakis, a rent. -WRAK, to tear; cf. Skt. vracek, to tear; whence also Gk. paros, a rag; see Rag. See Curtius and Benfey. Der. lacerat-ion, lacerat-ive. LACHRYMAL, LACRIMAL, pertaining to tears. (L.) The usual spelling lachrymal is false; it should be lacrimal. In anatomy, we speak of 'the lachrymal gland.' Not an old term; but we find 'lachrymable, lamentable,' ' lachrymate, to weep,' and ' lachrymatory, a tear-bottle' in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. All formed from Lat. lacryma, a tear, better spelt lacruma or lacrima. β. The oldest form is dacrima (Festus); cognate with Gk. dánpu, a tear, and with E. tear. See Tear, sb. Der. from the same Lat. lacrima are lachrym-ose, lachrymat-or-y.

lakkes is in P. Plowman, B. x. 262. Not found in A. S., but an Old LADE (1), to load. (E.) 'And they laded their asses with the Low G. word. Cf. Du. lak, blemish, stain; whence lakin, to blame. com; 'Gen. xlii. 26. M. E. laden, pp. laden, Genesis and Exodus, We also find Icel. lakr, defective, lacking. β. Fick connects Icel. lakr with Icel. leka, to leak (iii. 261). In this view lack is a defect or leak; see Leak. We find A. S. læe, wounded (Grein, ii. 161), a rare word, which agrees with the Du. adj. lek, leaky, G. leck, leaky. There is no reason for connecting E. lack with Goth. laian, to revile : for this answers to A.S. lean, to revile, which is quite a different word. Der. lack, verb; see below.

LACK (2), to want, be destitute of. (O. Low G.) M. E. lakken, Chaucer, C. T. 758, 11498; P. Plowman, B. v. 132. The verb is formed from the sb., not vice versa; this is shewn by the O. Fries. lakia, to attack, blame, where the suffix -ia is the usual one in the case of a causal verb formed from a sb. Hence the verb is a weak one; and the pt. t. is lakkede, as in Chaucer. See therefore Lack (1) above. LACKER, another form of Lacquer, q. v.

LACKEY, LACQUEY, a footman, menial attendant. (F., Span.?-Arab.?) In Shak. As You Like It, iii. 2. 314; Tam. Shrew, iii. 2. 66.-O. F. laquay, 'a lackey, footboy, footman;' Cot. Mod. F. laquais. There was also an O. F. form alacay; see Littré, who shews that, in the 15th cent., a certain class of soldiers (esp. crossbow-men) were called alagues, alacays or lacays. The prefix -a is for al, and due to the Arab. def. article. - Span. lacayo, a lackey; cf. Port. lacaio, a lackey, lacaia, a woman-servant in dramatic perform-B. The use of a- (for al) in O. F. alacays points to an Arab. ances. origin. - Arab. luka, worthless, slavish, and, as a sb., a slave. The fem. form lak'a, mean, servile (applied to a woman) accounts for the Port. lacaia. Allied words are lakú', lakí', abject, servile, laká'i, slovenly. See Richardson, Pers. Dict. pp. 1272, 1273. y. However, this is but a guess; the etymology is quite uncertain; Diez connects it with Ital. leccare, G. lecken, to lick; see Lick. Der.

Lackey, verb, Ant. and Cleop. i. 4. 46. LACONIC, brief, pithy. (L., - Gk.) 'Laconical, that speaks briefly or pithily;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'Quitting the thrifty style laconic;' Denham, A Dialogue between Sir J. Pooley and Mr. Killigrew (R.) [Denham died A. D. 1668.] - Lat. Laconicus, Laconian. - Gk. Autowicks, Laconian. - Gk. Astrow, a Laconian, an inhabitant of Lacedæmon or Sparta. These men were proverbial for their brief and pithy style of speaking. Der. laconic-al, laconic-al-ly, laconic-ism; also lacon-ism, from Gk. Adrew.

LACQUER, LACKER, a sort of varnish. (F., - Port., -Pers., - Skt.) 'Lacker, a sort of varnish;' Kersey, ed. 1715. 'Lacquer'd chair;' Pope, Horace, Ep. ii. 1. 337. 'The lack of Tonquin is a sort of gummy juice, which drains out of the bodies or limbs of trees. The cabinets, desks, or any sort of frames to be lackered, are made of fir or pine-tree. The work-houses where the lacker is laid on are accounted very unwholesome ; ' Dampier, Voyages, an. 1638 (R.) - F. lacre, 'a confection or stuffe made of rosin, brimstone, and white wax mingled, and melted together,' &c.; Cot. - Port. lacre, sealing-wax. - Port. laca, gum-lac. - Pers. lak, luk, lac. - Skt. laksha, lac. See Lac (1). Der. lacquer, verb.

LACTEAL, relating to milk, conveying chyle. (L.) 'Lacteal, or milky plants, which have a white and lacious [read laciary] or milky plants, which have a white and lacious [ice; 'Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. vi. c. 10. § 2. Formed with suffix -al from Lat. lacteus, milky. - Lat. lact-, stem of lac, milk. + Gk. yalart- stem of yaka, milk. β. From a base GLAKT or GALAKT, milk; Der. lacte-ous (= Lat. lacteus); lactesc-ent, from root unknown. pres. part. of lactescere, to become milky; whence lactescence. Also lacti-c, from lacti-, crude form of lac; whence also lacti-ferous, where the suffix is from Lat. -fer, bearing, from ferre, to bear, cognate with E. bear. Also lettuce, q. v.

LAD, a boy, youth. (C.) M.E. ladde, pl. laddes; Havelok, 1. 1786; P. Plowman, B. xix. 32; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 36. Of Celtic origin; W. llawd, a youth; Irish lath, a youth, champion, which O'Reilly connects with Irish luth, nimble, active, also yearning, strength; cf. Gael. laidir, strong, stout, luth, strength. B. The word may very well be cognate with Goth. lauths, used in the comp. jugga-lauths, a young lad, young man; from Goth. liudan, to grow, spring up, Mark, iv. 29. The Goth. base LUD = Celt. base LUTH; Fick, i. 757. Der. lass, q. v. 657 The word cannot be connected with G. lasse, a vassal of a lord, as G. ss = E. t.

LADANUM, the same as Laudanum, q. v.

LADDER, a frame with steps, for climbing up by. (E.) M. E. laddre, P. Plowman, B. xvi. 44; Rob. of Glouc. p. 333. The word has lost an initial A. – A. S. Alæder, a ladder; Grein, ii. 80. + Du. ladder, a ladder, rack or rails of a cart. + O. H. G. hleitra, G. leiter, a ladder, scale. B. Perhaps allied to Lat. clathri, s. pl. a trellis, grate, set of bars, Gk.  $\kappa \lambda \epsilon i \theta \rho \sigma r$ ,  $\kappa \lambda j i \theta \rho \sigma r$ , a bar, bolt. The latter is from Gk.  $\kappa \lambda \epsilon i \epsilon i r$ , to shut. See Cloistor. In this view, a ladder is a set of bars.

ed. Morris, l. 1800. – A. S Aladan, to lade, load; Grein, ii. 79. Der. lad-ing, a load, cargo, Merch. Ven. iii. 1. 3. And see Lade (2); also the Addenda. [+]

LADE (2), to draw out water, drain. (E.) 'He'll lade it [the sea] dry; '3 Hen. VI, iii. 2. 139. M. E. kladen, laden; 'lkaden out thet weter' = lade out the water, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 178, l. 19 [where  $l_A$  is written for M]. = A.S. Aladan, (1) to heap together, (2) to load, (3) to lade out; Grein, ii. 79. 'Hidd water' = drew water; Exod. ii. 19. The same word as Lade (1); see above. Der.

lad-le, q. v. LADLE, a large spoon. (E.) So called because used for lading or dipping out water from a vessel. M. E. ladel, Chaucer, C. T. 2022; P. Plowman, B. xix. 274. Formed with suffix -el from M. E. laden or kladen, to lade; see Lado (2). [The A. S. klædle has not been established; it is due to Somner, and may be a fiction.]  $\beta$ . The suffix -el in this case denotes the means or instrument, as in E. sett-le (= A. S. set-l), a seat, a thing to sit upon.

LADY, the mistress of a house, a wife, woman of rank. (E.) M.E. lady. Chaucer, C.T. 88, 1145. Older spellings læfdi, Layamon, 1256; lefdi, leafai, Ancren Riwle, pp. 4, 38; lheuedi (= hlevedi), Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 24; lafdi, Ormulum, 1807. - A.S. Aldfdige, a lady; Grein. ii. 81; O. Northumb. Alafdia, in the margin of John, xx. 16. in the Lindisfame M.S. \beta. Of uncertain origin; the syllable h/a/fis known to represent the word hlaf, a loaf; see Loaf, Lord. But the suffix -dige remains uncertain; the most reasonable guess is that which identifies it with A.S. dagee, a kneader, from the root which appears in Goth. digan or deigan, to knead. This gives the sense 'bread-kneader,' or maker of bread, which is a very likely one; see Lord. The A. S. dagee occurs in the accus. case in the following passage. 'Godwig ... hæfð geboht Leofgife þá dægean æt Norðstoke and hyre ofspring - Godwig has bought Leofgifu the dough-woman at Northstoke, and her offspring; Thorpe, Diplomatarium Ari Saxonici, p. 641. Cf. Icel. drig, a, a dairy-maid; and see further under Dairy, Dough. ¶ The Icel. laft, a lady, is merely borrowed from English. B. The term Lady was often used in a special sense, to signify the blessed Virgin Mary; hence several derivatives, such as lady-bird, lady-fern, lady's-finger, lady's-mantle, lady's-slipper, lady's-smock, lady't-tresses. Cf. G. Marien-käfer (Mary's chafer), a lady-bird ; Marien-blume (Mary's flower), a daisy ; Marienmantel (Mary's mantle), lady's-mantle; Marien-schik (Mary's shoe), lady's-slipper. Der. A. (in the general sense), lady-love; lady-ship, M.E. ladithip, Gower, C. A. ii. 301, last line, written lefdischip (= deference), Ancren Riwle, p. 108; lady like. B. (in the special sense) lady-bird, &c., as above. Also lady-chapel, lady-day. which strictly speaking are not compound words at all, since lady is here in the gen. case so that lady chapel = chapel of our Lady, and <math>lady day = day of our Lady. The M.E. gen. case of this word was lady or ladie, rather than ladies, which was a later form ; this is remarkably shewn by the phrase 'in his lady grace' = in his lady's favour, Chaucer, C. T. 88; where Tyrwhitt wrongly prints ladies, though the MSS. have lady. The contrast of Lady day with Lord's day is striking, like that of Fri-day with Thur-s-day, the absence of s marking the. like that of Fri-acy will a set is Aldefdig-an. fem. gender; the A.S. gen. case is Aldefdig-an. in the set of the set of LAG, sluggish, coming behind. (C.) 'Came too lag [late] to see him buried;' Rich. III, ii. 1. 90. Cf. prov. E. lag. late, last, slow; lag-last, a loiterer; lag-teeth, the grinders, so called because the last in growth; Halliwell. - W. llag, slack, loose, sluggish. + Gael and Irish Lag, weak, feeble, faint + Corn. lac, adv. loose, remiss, lax, out of order, bad (Williams). + Lat. laxus, lax, loose; cf. Lat. languor, languor; languidus, languid. Cf. Icel. lakra, to lag β. The form of the root is LAG, to be slack or loose; behind. whence also E. lan, languid; and Gk. Layapós, slack; see Languish. Der. lag, verb, Spenser, F. Q. i. 1. 6, with which cf. Corn. lacea, to faint away, Gk. Afrew, to cease; also lagg-ing-ly, lagg-er, lag-end, 1 Hen. IV, v. 1. 24; lagg-ard (a late word), where the suffix -ard is French (of Teut. origin) and is affixed even to English bases, as in drunk-ard. [+]

LAGOON, LAGUNE, a shallow lake. (Ital., -L.) Modern; we may speak of 'the lagoons of Venice; '-Ital. lagon;, a pool; also laguna, a pool. The former is an augmentative form of Ital. lago, a lake; the latter is from Lat. lacuna, a pool. Both are from Lat. lacus, a lake; see Lake (1).

LAIC, LAICAL, pertaining to the people. (L., -Gk.) 'A Laicke, or Lay-man;' Minsheu, ed. 1627. - Lat. laicus; of Gk. origin. See Lay (3), the more usual form of the word.

LAIR, the den or retreat of a wild beast. (E.) M. E. leir ; the dat. case leire occurs in O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, 2nd Series, p. 103, l. 11, where it means 'bed.' Spelt layere, meaning 'camp,' Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, l. 2293 - A.S. leger, a lair, couch, bed ; Grein, ii. 167; from A. S. liegan, to lie down. See Lie (1). + Du leger, a bed, couch, lair; from liggen, to lie. + M. H. G. leger, O.H.G. legar, now spelt lager, a couch; from O.H.G. liggan, to lie. + Goth. ligrs, a couch; from ligan, to lie. Doublet, leaguer

LAITY, the lay people. (F., -L., -Gk.; F. suffix.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. A coined word; from the adj. lay, with suffix -ty in imitation of the F. suffix -te, due to Lat. acc. suffix -tatem. Formed by analogy with gais-ty from gay, du-ty from due; &c. See Lay (3). LAKE (1), a pool. (L.) In very early use; and borrowed immediately from Latin; not through the French. A. S. lac, a lake; ' bas meres and laces' = these meres and lakes; in an interpolation in the A. S. Chron. an. 656 or 657; see Thorpe's edition, vol. i. p. 57, vol. ii. p. 27. – Lat. lacus, a lake (whence also F. lac). The lit. sense is 'a hollow' or depression. + Gk.  $\lambda \acute{a}\kappa \kappa \sigma_s$ , a hollow, hole, pit, pond. Der. lag-oon, q. v.

LAKE (2), a colour, a kind of crimson. (F., – Pers., – Skt.) A certain colour is called 'crimson lake.' 'Vermillian, lake, or crimson;' Ben Jonson, Expostulation with Inigo Jones, l. 11 from end. = F. lague, 'sanguine, rose or rubic colour;' Cot. = Pers. ldk, lake pro-duced from lac; Rich. Dict. p. 1253. = Pers. lak, lac; see Lac (1). LAMA (1), a high priest. (Thibetan.) We speak of the Grand

LAMA (1), a high priest. (Thibetan.) We speak of the Grand Lama of Thibet. The word means 'chief' or 'high priest' (Webster). LAMA (2), the same as Llama, q. v. LAMB, the young of the sheep. (E.) M. E. lamb, lomb; Chaucer,

C. T. 5037. - A. S. lamb, Grein, ii. 154. + Du. lam. + Icel. lamb. + Dan. lam. + Swed. lamm. + G. lamm. + Goth. lamb.  $\beta$ . All β. Aiι from Teut. base LAMBA (Fick, iii. 267); root unknown. Der. lamb, verb, lamb-like, lamb-skin; also lamb-k-in (with double dimin. suffix), Hen. V, ii. 1. 133.

'Was but a lambent flame;' LAMBENT, flickering. (L.) Cowley, Pindaric Odes, Destiny, st. 4. - Lat. lambent-, stem of pres. part. of lambere, to lick, sometimes applied to flames; see Virgil, En. ii. 684. + Gk. Advrew, to lick.  $\beta$ . Both from a base LAB, to lick; whence also E. labial, lip, and lap, verb. See Lap (1). LAME, disabled in the limbs, esp. in the legs. (E.) M. E. lame, Wyclif, Acts, iii. 2; Havelok, 1938. - A. S. lama, Matt. viii. 6. + Du. lam. + Icel. lami, lama. + Dan. lam, palsied. + Swed. lam. + M. H. G. lam; G. lahm. B. The orig. sense is maimed, bruised, broken; from the base LAM, to break, preserved in Russ. lomate, to break; Fick, iii. 267. Cf. Icel. lama, to bruise, prov. E. lam, to Der. lame, verb; lame-ly, lame-ness. beat.

LAMENT, to utter a mournful cry. (F.,-L.) Though the sb. is the orig. word in Latin. the verb is the older word in English, occurring in John, xvi. 20, in Tyndal's version, A. D. 1526. - F. lamenter, 'to lament;' Cot. - Lat. lamentari, to wail. - Lat. lamentum, a mournful cry; formed with suffix -mentum from the base la-, to utter a cry, B. Cf. Goth. laian, to which appears again in la-trare, to bark. revile ; Russ. laiate, to bark, snarl, scold ; Gk. hafen, to bark. All from  $\checkmark$  RA, to bark, make a noise; Fick, iii. 259. Of imitative origin ; cf. Lat. raucus, hoarse. Der. lament, sb.; lament-able; lamentat-ion, Chaucer, C. T. 937, from F. lamentation.

LAMINA, a thin plate or layer. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674 .- Lat. lamina, a thin plate of metal. Root uncertain. Der. lamin-ar, lamin-at-ed, lamin-at-ion.

LAMMAS, a name for the first of August. (E.) M. E. lam-masse; P. Plowman, B. vi. 291; see note on the line (Notes, p. 173). A.S. Mafmassa, Grein, i. 80; A.S. Chron. an. 921; at a later period spelt Mammassa, A.S. Chron. an. 1000. β. The lit. sense period spelt Mammæsse, A. S. Chron. an. 1009. is 'loaf-mass,' because a loaf was offered on this day as an offering of first-fruits; see Chambers, Book of Days, ii. 154. - A. S. klaf, a loaf; and masse, mass. See Loaf and Mass (2). ¶ Not from lamb and masse, mass. See Loaf and Mass (2). and mass, as the fiction sometimes runs.

LAMP, a vessel for giving light. (F., -L., -Gk.) In early use. M. E. lampe; St. Margaret, ed. Cockayne, p. 20, l. 21. - O. F. lampe, 'a lampe;' Cot. - Lat. lampas. - Gk.  $\lambda a \mu \pi \Delta s$ , a torch, light. - Gk.  $\lambda \Delta \mu \pi \epsilon w$ , to shine. - Gk. and Lat. base LAP, to shine; Fick, iii. 750; whence also E. lymph, limpid. Der. lamp-black ; lantern, q. v

LAMPOON, a personal satire. (F., -O. Low G.) In Dryden, Essay on Satire, 1. 47. - F. lampon, orig. a drinking song; so called from the exclamation lampons l = let us drink, frequently introduced into such songs. (See Littre, who gives an example.) - F. lamper, to drink; a popular or provincial word; given in Littré.  $\beta$ . This is a nasalised form of O. F. lapper, 'to lap or lick up;' Cot. Of

O. Low G. origin; see Lap (1). Dor. lampoon-er. LAMPREY, a kind of fish. (F., -L.) M. E. laumprei, laumpree; Havelok, ll. 771, 897. - O. F. lamproie, spelt lamproye in Cot. Cf. Ital. lampreda, a lamprey. - Low Lat. lampreda, a lamprey, of which an older form was lampetra (Ducange). B. So called from its cleaving to rocks; lit. ' licker of rocks;' coined from Lat. lambere, to lick, and petra, a rock. See Lambent and Petrify. Scientifically named Petromyzon, i. e. stone-sucking.

LANCE, a shaft of Wood, With a spear-head. (F., -L.) M. E. LANCE, a shall under, 1. With a spear-head. (F., -L.) M. Dimin. of F. lancette, 'a sur-geon's launcet, and the archive of Tommer and the surgeon surgeon and the surgeon surgeon and the surgeon surg LANCH, another spelling of Lance, verb, and of Launch.

LAND, earth, soil, country, district. (E) M.E. land, lond; Chaucer, C. T. 4912, 4914. - A. S. land; Grein, ii. 154. + Du. land. + Icel., Dan., and Swed. land. + Goth. land. + G. land; M. H. G. lant. Cf. Russ. liada, a field overgrown with brushwood. Root unknown; perhaps related to Lawn (1). Der. land, verb, A.S. lendan (= landian), Grein, ii. 168; land-breeze, land-crab, land-flood, land-grave, q.v., land-holder, land-ing, land-lady; land-lord, Tyndal's Works, p. 210, col. 1; lands-man (= land-man, Ant. and Cleop. iv. 3. 11); land-mark, Bible, 1551, Job, xxiv. 2; land-rail, q.v.; land-scape, q.v.; land-slip, land-steward, land-tan, land-waiter, land-ward.

LANDAU, a kind of coach. (G.) Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. Supposed to be named from Landaw, a town in Bavaria. Here, Land = E. land; on -aw, see Island.

LAND-GRAVE, a count of a province. (Du.) 'Landgrave, or Landsgrave, the earl or count of a province, whereof in Germany there are four; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Du. landgraaf, a landgrave. - Du. land, land, province; and graaf, a count, earl. So also G. landgraf, from land and graf. B. The word was borrowed from the Du. rather than the G., as is easily seen by the E. fem. form landgravine, which answers to Du. land gravin rather than to G. land graffina. See Land and Margrave. Der. landgrav-in, as above; landgrav-i-ate, 'that region or country which belongs to a landgrave; 'Blount. LANDRAIL, a kind of bird ; see Rail (3).

LANDSCAPE, the aspect of a country. (Du.) In Milton, L'Allegro, l. 70. Formerly spelt landship; see Trench, Select Glossary. And see Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674, which makes it clear that it was orig. a painter's term, to express 'all that part of a picture which is not of the body or argument;' answering somewhat to the mod. term back-ground. It was borrowed from the Dutch painters. - Du. landschap, a landscape, province; cf. landschap schilder, a landscape painter. - Du. land, cognate with E. land; and -schap, a suffix = A.S. -scipe = E. -ship (in friend-ship, wor-ship), derived from the verb which in Eng. is spelt shape. See Land and Shape.  $\P$  The Du. sch is sounded more like E. sk than E. sh; hence the mod. sound. [†]

LANE, an open space between hedges, a narrow passage or street. (E.) M. E. lane, lone; Chaucer, C. T. 16126; P. Plowman, A. ii. 192, B. ii. 216. - A. S. láne, lone, a lane; Codex Diplomaticus, ed. Kemble, vol. i. p. 1. l. 13; vol. iii. p. 33 (no. 549). [Cf. Prov. E. lone (Cleveland), lonnin (Cumberland).] + O. Friesic lona, lana, [Cf. Prov. a lane, way; North Fries. lona, lana, a narrow way between houses and gardens (Outzen). + Du. laan, an alley, lane, walk. B. Of unknown origin; perhaps allied to Icel. lon, an inlet, a sea-loch, Lena, a hollow place, a vale. LANGUAGE, speech, diction. (F., -L.) M. E. langage, King Alisaunder, l. 6857; Chaucer, C. T. 4936. -F. langage, language; -Lat. lingua, the tongue. See Lingual, Tongue. LANGUID, feeble, exhausted, sluggish. (L) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. languidus, languid. - Lat. languere, to be weak. See Languigh. Des. longuidus.

[Now accommodated to the Lat. spelling.] = F. langueur, 'langor; 'Cot. = Lat. languörem, acc. of languor, hanguor. = Lat. languere, to be weak. See Languish. LANIARD, the same as Lanyard, q. v. T.ANIFEROUTS wool-hearing (L.) A scientific term in LANIFEROUS, wool-bearing. (L.) A scientific term in zoology. Coined from Lat. lanifer, producing wool. - Lat. lani-, for lana, wool; and ferre, to bear. β. The Lat. lana (= lak-na) is cognate with Gk. λάχνη, down, wool; Lat. ferre is cognate with E. bear. Der. So also lani-gerous, wool-bearing, from Lat. gerere, to bear.

LANK, slender, lean, thin. (E.) M.E. lank, lonk; spelt lone, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 249, l. 9: 'lone he is ant leane' = he is lank and lean. - A.S. klane, slender; Grein, ii. 80. B. The orig. sense was probably 'bending,' weak; cf. G. lenken, to turn, bend; see further under Link (1). Der. lank-ly, lank-ness. LANSQUENET, a German foot-soldier; a game at cards.

LANSQUENET, a German foot-soldier; a game at cards. (F.,-G.) Corruptly spelt lonesknight in old authors, by a popular blunder. See Ben Jonson, Every Man, ed. Wheatley, A. ii. sc. 4. 1. 21. – F. lansquenet, 'a lanceknight, or German footman; also, the name of a game at cards;' Cot. – G. (and Du.) landsknecht, a foot-soldier. – G. lands, put for landes, gen. case of land, land, country; and knecht, a soldier. Land = E. land; and knecht = E. knight. Thus the word is lands-knight, not lance-knight. ¶ The term means a soldier of the flat or Low Countries, as distinguished from the men who came from the highlands of Switzerland; see Revue Britannique, no. for Sept. 1866, p. 29 (Littré).

Revue Britannique, no. for Sept. 1866, p. 29 (Littré). LANTERN, a case for carrying a light. (F., = L., = Gk.) M. E. lanterne, Floriz and Blancheflur, ed. Lumby, l. 238. = F. lanterne. = Lat. lanterna, läterna, a lantern ; the spelling lanterna occurs in the Lindisfame MS., in the Lat. text of John, xviii. 3. Lanterna = lamterna = lampterna; not a true Lat. word, but borrowed from Gk.  $\lambda a \mu \pi \tau h \rho$ , a light, torch. = Gk.  $\lambda \delta \mu \pi \epsilon \mu$ , to shine. See Lamp. ¶ Sometimes spelt lan'horn (Kersey), by a singular popular etymology which took account of the horn sometimes used for the sides of lanterns.

LANYARD, LANIARD, a certain small rope in a ship. (F., The spelling laniard is the better one, since the word has nothing to do with yard. The d is excrescent; the old spelling was lannier. 'Lanniers, Lanniards, small ship-ropes that serve to slacken or make stiff the shrowds, chains,' &c. ; Kersey, ed. 1715. 'Laniers, yox nautica;' Skinner, ed. 1671. 'Lanyer of lether, lasniere;' Palsgrave. - O.F. laniere, 'a long and narrow band or thong of leather; Cot.  $\beta$ . Origin uncertain, but prob. Latin; yet it is not clear how it is connected either with Lat. lanarius, woollen, made of wool, or with laniarius, belonging to lanius, a butcher. [+] LAP (1), to lick up with the tongue. (E.) M.E. lappen, lapen, Wyclif, Judges, vii. 7; Gower, C. A. iii. 215. – A. S. lapian, to lap; rare, but found in Ælfric's Grammar (Lye), and in Glosses to Prudentius (Leo). The derivative læpelder, a spoon, is in Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 244, l. 4. + Icel. lepja, to lap like a dog. + Dan. labe, to lap. + M. H. G. laffen, O. H. G. laffan, to lap up. + W. llepio, to lap up. + Lat. lambers (with inserted m), to lick. + Gk. λάντειν, to lap with the tongue ; Fick, i. 751, iii. 266. All from a base LAB, LAP, to lap, lick up. Der. from the same base are lab-i-al, lamb-ent, lip. LAP (2), the loose part of a coat, an apron, part of the body LAP (2), the loose part of a coat, an apron, part of the overy covered by an apron, a fold, flap. (E.) M. E. lappe (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 688; P. Plowman, B. ii. 35, xvi. 255; often in the sense of 'skirt of a garment;' see Prompt. Parv., and Way's note. - A. S. lappa, a loosely hanging portion; 'lifre lappan' = portions of the liver; Ælfric's Gloss., in Wright's Vocab. i. 45, col. 2, 1. 18, +O. Fries. lappa, a piece of a garment.+Du. lap, a remnant, shred, rag, patch. + Dan. lap, a patch. + Swed. lapp, a piece, shred, patch. +G. lappen, a patch, shred.  $\beta$ . The Teut. base is LAPAN, a shred, patch (Fick, iii. 266); a sb. formed from the Teut. base LAP, to hang down, occurring in Icel. lapa, to hang down (not circuit or Clercher). given in Cleasby, but cited by Fick and others). Y. This Teut. base = Aryan 🗸 RAB, to hang down, fall, glide or slip down. From this root are Skt. lamb (oldest form ramb), to hang, fall down; Lat. lābi, to glide, &c. See Lobe, Limbo, Lapse, Limp (1). Der. lap-jul; lap-el, i. e. part of a coat which laps over the facing (a mod. word, added by Todd to Johnson), formed with dimin. suffix -el; lapp-et, dimin. form with suffix -et, used by Swift (Johnson); lap-dog, Dryden, tr. of Juvenal, Sat. vi. 853; also lab-el, q. v. Gr Doubtless the verb to lap (see Lap (3)) has often should be kept quite distinct. In the phrase 'to lap over,' it is probable that the verb really belongs to the present sb. Cf. lop-cared = lap-eared, with hanging ears, applied to rabbits.

fused with the word above, but originally quite distinct from it. M. E. lappen, to wrap, fold. Will. of Palerne, 1712; 'lapped in cloutes' = wrapped up in rags, P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, 1. 438.  $\beta$ . This word has lost an initial w; an older form was wlappen; thus in Wyclif, Matt. xxvii. 59, the Lat. involui is translated in the later version by 'lappide it,' but in the easilier one by 'wlappide it.'  $\gamma$ . Lastly, the M. E. wlappen is a later form of wrappen, to wrap. by the frequent change of r to l; so that lap is a mere corruption or later form of wrap. See Wrapp. Ger The form wlappen explains the latter part of the words develop, envelop, q. v.

LAPIDARY, one who cuts and sets precious stones. (L.) Cotgrave translates F. lapidaire by 'a lapidary or jeweller.' Englished from Lat. lapidarius, a stone-muson, a jeweller. - Lat. lapid-, stem of lapis, a stone. Allied to Gk.  $\lambda i mas$ , a bare rock,  $\lambda emis$ , a scale, flake. From the base LAP, to scale off, peel; seen in Gk.  $\lambda i mein$ , to peel, Russ. lupite, to peel; see Leaf. Der. from the same source, lapidi-fy, lapid-esc-ent, lapid-esc-ence, lapid-esc-enc-y, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 23, 5 s. Also di-lapid-ate. o. y.

LAPWING, the name of a bird. (E.) M. E. lappewinke (four syllables), Gower, C. A. ii. 230; later lapwinke, Prompt. Parv. p. 288; spelt lhapwyncke, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 61, 1. 31.–A. S. Meispewince, Wright's Vocab., i. 62, col. 1, 1. 22.  $\beta$ . The first part is Alsuipe-, connected with kleapan, to run, spring, leap; see Leap.  $\gamma$ . The second part of the word is, literally, 'winker;' but we must assign to the verb wink its original sense. This origsense appears in the O. H. G. winchan, M. H. G. winken, to move from side to side, a sense preserved in mod. G. wanken, to totter, stagger, vacillate, reel, waver, &c. Thus the sense is 'one who turns about in running or flight,' which is (I believe) fairly descriptive of the habit of the male bird. The G. wanken and Wink.  $\P$  Popular etymology explains the word as 'wing-flapper;' but lap does not really take the sense of flap; it means, rather, to droop, hang down loosely; see Lap (2). This interpretation is wrong as to both parts of the A. S. form of the word, and is too general. [†]

LARBOARD, the left side of a ship, looking from the stern. (E. or Scand.) Cotgrave has: 'Babort, the larboord side of a ship.' It is also spelt larboord in Minsheu, ed. 1627. The spelling is probably corrupt; the M. E. spelling appears to be laddeburd, if indeed this be the same word. In Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. l. 106, some sailors are preparing to set sail, and after spreading the mainsail, ' pay layden in on ladde-borde and the lofe wynnes' = they laid in [hauled in?] on the larboard and set right the loof (see Luff).  $\beta$ . It is certain that board is the same as in star-board, and that the word is of E. or Scand. origin, probably the latter. The only word which answers in form to ladde is Swed. ladda, to lade, load, charge, answering to Icel. Alača, A. S. Madan, E. lade. Ladda is pronounced laa in prov. Swed. and Norw. (Rietz, Aasen). We find Icel. Alača  $\gamma$ . Beyond this, all is uncertainty; we seglum = to take in sail. may conjecture that the sails, when taken down, were put on the left side of the ship, to be out of the way of the steersman, who originally stood on the starboard (= steer-board) or right side of the ship. See Starboard.  $\P$  The F. babord = G. backbord, where back means 'forecastle,' orig. placed on the left side (Littré). [†] LARCENY, theft, robbery. (F.,-L.) In Cotgrave, who ex-plains O. F. larrecin by 'larceny, theft, robbery.' An old law term; see Blount's Nomolexicon. = O. F. larreein, larcin (both forms are in Cotgrave); mod. F. larcin. The spelling larreein occurs in the Laws of William the Conqueror, § xiv; in Thorpe's Ancient Laws of England, i. 472. [The suffix -y appears to be an E. addition, to conform the word to forger-y, burglar-y, felon-y, and the like; but it is unnecessary]. - Lat. latrocinium, freebooting, marauding, robbery; formed with suffix -cinium (occurring also in tiro-cinium) from latro, a robber. B. Curtius (i. 453) considers latro as borrowed from Gk. At any rate it is equivalent to Gk. Aárpus, a hireling, used in a bad sense. The suffix -tro or - rous denotes the agent, and the base is λaf, to get, seen in dro-λaύ eur, to enjoy, get ; cf. ληίs, λεία, booty, spoil, lu-crum, gain. See Lucre. Der. larcen-ist. The word burg-lar contains a derivative from latro.

LARCH, a kind of tree like a pine. (F., -L., -Gk.) Spelt larchs in Minsheu, ed. 1627.-O. F. larege, 'the larch, or larinx tree;' Cot. - Lat. laricem, acc. of larix, the larch-tree. - Gk.  $\lambda \delta \rho i \xi$ , the larch-tree. [†]

LARD, the melted fat of swine. (F., -L.) 'Larde of flesche, arda, vel lardum; 'Prompt. Parv. p. 238. -O. F. lard, 'lard; 'Cot.

-Lat. larda, shortened form of lärida (also läridum), lard, fat of of joint, jointed piece, when we have Du. lasschen. bacon. Akin to Gk. Aapo's, pleasant to the taste, nice, dainty, sweet, λaparós, íst. Der. lard, verb, M. E. larden (Prompt. Parv.), from F. larder, to lard (see note to Ben Jonson, Every Man, ed. Wheatley, A. iii, sc. 4, 1. 174); lard-er, Gower, C. A. iii, 124, with which cf. O. F. lardier, 'a tub to keep bacon in' (Cotgrave), hence applied to a room in which bacon and meat are kept; lard-y, lard-ac-e-ous; inter-lard.

LARGE, great, bulky, vast. (F., -L.) In early use. M.E. large (which usually has the sense of liberal), O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 143, l. 33.-F. large.-Lat. largus, large, long. Root uncertain. Der. large-ly; large-ness, King Alisaunder, l. 6879; large-keart-ed; large-kand-ed, Timon of Ath. iv. 1. 11; and see largess, en-large. LARGESS, a liberal gift, donation. (F., -L.) M. E. largesse, P. Plowman, A. vi. 112; Ancren Riwle, p. 166. - F. largesse, bounty; Cot.-Low Lat. largitia * (not found), put for Lat. largitio, a bestowing, giving. - Lat. largitus, pp. of largiri, to bestow. - Lat. largus, large, liberal; see Large.

LARK (1), the name of a bird. (E.) Lark is a contraction of larock; see Burns, Holy Fair, st. I. M.E. larke, Chaucer, C. T. 1493; spelt laverock, Gower, C. A. ii. 264. - A.S. lawerce, later lawerce, laverce, laferce. The spelling lawerce is in Wright's Vocab. i. 62, col. 2; laverce (for laverce) in the same, i. 29, col. 1, i. 77, col. 2. Laferce is in the comp. lafercan-beork, a place-name cited in Leo. + Icel. lavirki, a lark. + Low G. lewerke (Bremen Wörterbuch). + O.H.G. lerekka; G. lerche. + Du. leeuwrik, leeuwerik. + Swed. lärka. + Dan. lærke. β. The Icel. læ-wirki = skilful worker or worker of craft, from læ, craft, and virki, a worker; cf. Icel. læ-vísi, craft, skill, la-viss, crafty, skilful; and (as to virki), ill-virki, a worker of ill, spell-virki, a doer of mischief. Similarly, the A.S. lawerce may be decomposed into law-werea = guile-worker; cf. lawa, a traitor, betrayer, Mark, xiv. 44: also Goth. lew, an occasion, opportunity (Rom. vii. 8, 11), whence lewjan, leiwjan, to betray. The name points to some superstition which regarded the bird as of ill omen. LARK (2), a game, sport, fun. (E.) Spelt lark in modern E., and now a slang term. But the r is intrusive, and the word is an old one; it should be laak or lakk, where as has the sound of a in father. M.E. lak, lok; also laik, which is a Scand. form. See Will. of Palerne, 678; P. Plowman, B. xiv. 243; Ormulum, 1157, 2166; Ancren Riwle, p. 152, note b; &cc. (Stratmann). -A.S. lac, play, contest, prey, gift, offering; Grein, ii. 148. + Icel. leikr, a game, play, sport. + Swed. lek, sport. + Dan. leg, sport. + Goth. laiks, a sport, dance.  $\beta$ . All from a Teut. base LAIK, to dance, skip for joy, play; cf. Goth. laikan, to skip for joy, Luke, i. 41, 44, A.S. lácan, Icel. leika, to play; Fick, iii. 259. Dor. wed-lock; know-ledge; see these words.

LARUM, short for Alarum, q. v. In Shak. Cor. i. 4. 9.

LARVA, an insect in the caterpillar state. (L.) A scientific term. - Lat. larua, a ghost, spectre, mask; the insect's first stage being the mask of its last one; a fanciful term. Root uncertain.

Der. larv-al, Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. LARYNX, the upper part of the windpipe. (L.-Gk.) In Kersey, ed. 1715 .- Lat. larynz. - Gk. Adpurge, the larynx, throat, gullet; gen. case. λάρυγγου. Der. laryng-s-al, laryng-s-an, laryng-ilis. LASCAR, a native E. Indian sailor. (Pers.) Modern. – Pers. lashkar, an army; whence lashkari, a soldier, camp-follower; Rich.

Pers. Dict. p. 1265. LASCIVIOUS, lustful. (L.) In Shak. Rich. II, ii. 1. 19. Corrupted (prob. by the influence of the F. form lascif) from Lat. lascivus, lascivious. Lengthened from an older form lascus \* (not found), as fest-iuus is from fest-us. Cf. Gk. Adorpus, Adoraupos, lecherous; Russ. laskate, to caress, flatter, fawn; Skt. lask, to desire, covet, akin to las, to embrace, sport; all from the base LAS =  $\checkmark$  RAS, to desire, extended form of LA; cf. Gk.  $\lambda d\omega$ , I wish, will. Der. lascivious-ly, lascivious-ness.

LASH (1), to fasten firmly together. (Du.) 'Lask (in sea affairs), to fasten or bind up anything to the ship's sides; ' Kersey, ed. 1715. - Du. la schen, to join, scarf together; lasch, sb., a piece, joint, seam, notch. Cf. Swed. laska, to stitch, lask, a scarf, joint; Dan. laske, to  $\beta$ . The true sense is to scarf or join together scarf, lask, a scarf. two pieces that fit; hence, to bind tightly together in any way, to tie together. The verb appears to be formed from the sb., which further appears as Low G. laske, a flap (Bremen Wörterbuch), G. lasche, a flap, scarf or groove to join timber. Y. I should propose to refer the orig. form LASKA, a flap (which would probably stand for LAKSA by the usual interchange of sk and ks, as in E. ax = aks =ask) to a Teut. base LAK, to droop, hang down, answering by Grimm's law to the Lat. and Gk. base LAG. to droop, appearing in Lat. "raws and languere; see Lax, Languid. We thus get, from LAK, of joint, jointed provided by the use of Lash (2), q. v. Der. lashing, LASH (2), a thong, (O. Low G. or Scand.) Hexible part of a whip, a stroke, stripe. (O. Low G. or Scand.) M. E. lasche. 'Lasche, stroke, stripe. M. E. lasche. 'Lasche, stroke, ligula, flo-grum;' Prompt. Parv. p. 288. 'Whippes lasshe;' Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, 178. β. The lask is the part of the matter that the stripe.  $\beta$ . The lask is the part of the whip that is flexible and droops; this is best explained by comparison with O. Low G. laske, a flap (see Bremen Wörterbuch), answering to G. lasche, a flap. y. Lask in the sense of ' thong ' may be explained by its being used for tieing or lasking things together; cf. Swed. laska, to stitch. See further under Lash (1), which is ultimately the same word. Der. lash, verb, to flog, scourge; cf. 'Laschyn, lashyn, betyn, ligulo, verbero; ' Prompt. Parv.

LASS, a girl. (C.) M. E. lasse, spelt lasce in Cursor Mundi, L. 2608. Lass may be regarded as short for laddess, where, however, the suffix -ess does not represent a French, but a Welsh ending. The W. fem. suffix is -es, as in Ilew-es, a she-lion, from Ilew, a lion ; Ilanc-es, a young woman, from llane, a youth. Contracted from W. llodes, a girl, wench, fem. form of llawd, a lad. See Lad.

LASSITUDE, weariness. (F., - L.) 'The one is called cruditie, the other lassitude;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iv. c. 1 (R.)-F. lassitude; Cot. - Lat. lassitudo, faintness, weariness. - Lat. las. from lassus, tired, wearied; with suffix tu-don. (Schleicher, Comp. § B. Lassus is put for lad-tus, where lad- corresponds to las-227). in Goth. lais, slothful, cognate with E. late. See Late. Fick, i. 750. LASSO, a rope with a noose. (Span., -L.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. -O. Span. laso (Minsheu, 1623); Span. lazo, a snare, slip-knot; and cf. F. lacs. - Lat. laqueus, a snare. See Lace. ¶ Not from mod. Spanish, for the Span. z is sounded like the voice-less th. Der. lasso, verb. [†]

LAST (1), latest, hindmost. (E.) Last is a contraction of latest, through the intermediate form last (= las'st), for which see Ormulam. 1. 4168. See Late. Cf. Du. Instst. last, which is the superl. of laat, late. ¶ For the phrase at last, see Addenda.

LAST (2), a wooden mould of the foot on which shoes are made. (E.) The form is E., but the peculiar sense is rather Scand. M.E. last, leste. 'Hec formula, a last;' Wright's Vocab i. 196; in a glossary of the 15th cent. 'Leste, sowtarys [shoemaker's] forme, formula;' Prompt. Parv. p. 298. – A. S. list; lests, a foot-track, path, trace of feet; Grein, ii. 160. + Du. lesst, a last, shape, form. + Icel. leistr, the foot below the ancle. + Swed. läst, a shoemaker's last. + the Goth. laist-, and the original sense is foot-track, trace of a man's path. Formed from Goth. lais, I know (Phil. iv. 12); the trace being that whereby a man's path is known. This word lais was orig. used in the sense 'I have experienced,' and it is the pt. t. of Goth. leisan, to find out. From Teut. base LIS, to find out ; see Fick, iii.

272. See Loarn. Der. last (3). LAST (3), to endure, continue. (E.) M. E. lasten, Havelok, 538; also lasten, Prompt. Parv. p. 299. – A.S. lástan, to observe, perform, last, remain; the orig. sense being 'to follow in the track of,' from list, a foot-track; see Last (2). + Goth. laistian, to follow, follow after; from laists, a foot-track. + G. leisten, verb, to perform, follow out, fulfil; from leisten, sb., a form, model, shoemaker's last. Der. ¶ The train of ideas in learn, last (2), last-ing-ly, ever-last-ing. and last (3) is: learn, know, trace, foot-track, follow out, fulfil, continue.

LAST (4), a load, a large weight, ship's cargo. (E.) M. E. last. A thousand last quad yere '= a thousand cargoes of bad years; Chaucer, C. T. 13368; and see Deposition of Rich. II, ed. Skeat, iv. 74. - A. S. klast, a burden; Grein, ii. 81. - A.S. kladan, to load; see Lade, Load. + Icel. lest, a load, hlass, a cart-load; from klasa, to load. + Dan. last, a weight, burden, cargo, lass, a load; from lade, to load. + Swed. last, a burden, lass, a cart-load; from ladda, to load. + Du. and G. last; from laden, to load. LATCH, a catch, fastening. (E.) M. E. laceke, used by Walter de Biblesworth to translate O. F. cliket; Wright's Vocab. i. 170. [See elitet in Chaucer, C. T. 9920.] 'Latche, lakche, lakch, or snekke, Clitorium, vel pessula;' Prompt. Parv. p. 283. From M. E. verb lacchen, to seize, catch hold of, Will. of Paleme, 666, 671; P. Plowman, B. xviii. 324. - A. S. laccan, to seize, lay hold of, Grein, ii. 161; also ge-laccan, Ælfric's Homilies, i. 182, ii. 50, 90, 506. B. A.S. læccan is a weak verb (pt. t. læhle), of a causal form, standing for lak-ian, from a base lak-. It is just possible that it was formed from Lat. laqueus, a snare; but this is by no means certain. The assertion in Trench's Select Glossary that lace and latch are 'the same word,' is a mere guess; in fact, the history of the words, as far as we can trace them, shews that they were quite distinct ; latch being of A.S. rop, the sb. LAKSA, LASKA, a flap; with the extended sense ! origin, and lace of F. origin. Der. latch, verb, to fasten with a

also latch-ke

LATCHET, a fittle lace, a thong. (F., -L.) In the Bible, Mark, i. 7, Isa. v. 27. The former t is intrusive. M. E. lacket, as in 'lacket of a schoo;' Prompt. Parv. p. 284. 'Lacket outher loupe' = latchet or loop; Sir Gawayne and the Grene Knight, l. 591. -O. F. lacet, 'the lace of a petticote, a woman's lace or lacing, also a snare or ginne; Cot. Dimin. (with suffix -et) of O.F. lays, a snare. See Lace. Description of lace, and distinct from lates.

LATE, tardy, coming behind, slow, delayed. (E.) 1. M. E. lat, rare as an adj. in the positive degree. 'A lat mon'= a man slow of belief; Joseph of Arimathie, ed. Skeat, l. 695. The adv. is late, as in 'late nor early, P. Plowman, B. iii. 73. 2. The compar. form is later or latter, spelt lættere in Layamon, l. 5911. 8. The superl. is latest, latst, or last, the intermediate form appearing in the Ormulum, 1, 4168. - A.S. let, slow, late; Grein, ii. 165. + Du. loat, late. + Icel. latr, slow, lazy. + Dan. lad, lazy, slothful. + Swed. lat, lazy, idle. + Goth. lats, slothful, Luke, xix. 22. + G. lass, weary, indolent. + Lat. lassus (= lad-tus), weary.  $\beta$ . All from Teut. base LAT (=Lat. LAD), to let, let go, let alone; so that late means let alone, neglected, hence slothful, slow, coming behindhand. See Let (1). Dor. laie-ly, late-ness, lai-isk, latt-er, lati-er-ly, last, q. v., last-ly. Also let (2). From the same source, lassitude, q. v.

LATENT, lying hid, concealed. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. Intent., stem of pres. pt. of latere, to lie hid. + Gk. λαθ., base of λανθάγειν, to lie hid. - A RADH, to quit, leave, abandon; cf. Skt. rak (for orig. radk), to quit, leave; Benfey, p. 763. Der. latent-ly, latency. And see lethe, lethargy.

LATERAL, belonging to the side. (L.) In Milton, P.L. x. 705. - Lat. lateralis, belonging to the side. - Lat. later-, stem of latus, the side. Root uncertain. Der. lateral-ly.

LATH, a thin slip of wood. (E.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. iv. 2. 136. In the North of England, the form used is lat; see Ray, Halliwell, and the Holderness Glossary (E. D.S.). This corresponds with M.E. latte, a lath. 'Hic asser, a latt;' Wright's Vocab. i. 235, col. 1. – A.S. lattu, pl. latta; 'Asseres, latta;' Ælfric's Gloss., in Wright's Vocab. i. 26, col. 2, l. 7; also latta, pl., id. i. 58, col. 2, l. 2. + Du. lat, a latb. ' Latta', 'Asseres', latta', ' Ælfric's Gloss., in Wright's Vocab. lath. + G. latte, a lath, whence F. latte is borrowed. . The exact correspondence of the dental sound in A.S. lætty and G. latte presents a difficulty, and raises the suspicion that the words are borrowed. Perhaps they are of Celtic origin; cf. W. llath, a rod, staff, yard, as to which, however, it is difficult to say whether the E. or the W. word is the original. Dor. latt-ice, q. v., latt-en, q. v. [†] LATHE (1), a machine for 'turning' wood and metal. (Scand.) 'Could turn his word, and oath, and faith, As many ways as in a lathe; 'Butler, Hudibras, b. iii. c. 2. ll. 375, 376. Cotgrave explains F. tournoir by 'a turner's wheel, a lathe or lare. - Icel. lod (gen. sing. and nom. pl. ladar), a smith's lathe. Perhaps the pl. ladar accounts for the E. form lare.  $\beta$ . Perhaps löð stands for klöð, from klada, to lade, load; see Liade (2). This is rendered probable by wheel of a well, to draw water (Bosworth); also of A.S. Alædtrendel, a wheel for drawing water (Leo); which are clearly derived from A.S. kladan, to lade out water. The transference of name from the water-wheel to the lathe was easy. y. Some consider lathe cognate with G. lade, a chest, linen-press; this is from G. laden, to store up (E. lade), and leads to the same source.

LATTHE (2), a division of a county. (E.) Kent is divided into five lathers or portions; see Pegge's Alphabet of Kenticisms; E. D. S. Gloss. C. 3. - A.S. lat or lat, a portion of land; 'ne gyme ic pines, ne lardes ne landes'=I covet not thine, neither lathe nor land; Thorpe's Ancient Laws, i. 184. 'In quibusdam vero provinciis Anglice vocabatur 160, quod isti dicunt tilkings;' id. i. 455, note 3; and see Glossary in vol. ii.  $\beta$ . I suspect it to stand for lego, from licgan, to lie. Cf. Dan. lagd, a division of the country (in Denmark) for military conscription; we also find Dan. lagd, a site.

LATHER, foam or froth, esp. when made with soap and water. M. E. lather, for which Stratmann gives no reference; but we find the derived verb letherien, as in 'he leperede a swote' = he was in a lather with sweat; Layamon, l. 7489 (later text). - A.S. leador, lather; occurring in the comp. ledbor-wyrt, lit. lather-wort, i. e. soapwort; Gloss. to A.S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne; whence the verb leorian, to anoint, John, xi. 2 (Lindisfame MS.). + Icel. landr, later Cot. - F. lance, a lance; see Lance. Doublet, lance, verb.

latch, merely formed from the sb., and not the same as M.E. lacchen; # lack, forth, foam, scum of the sea, soap; whence laudra, lödra, to foam, also to drip with blood; leybra, to wash. From a Teut, base LAU, to wash; see Lye. Cf. Lat. laware, to wash; for which see Lave. Der. lather, vb. [+]

LATIN, pertaining to the Romans. (F., -L.) M.E. Latin; Chaucer, C. T. 4939; and earlier, in St. Juliana, p. 2. -F. Latin. -Lat. Latinus, Latin, belonging to Latium. - Lat. Latium, the name of a country of Italy, in which Rome was situate. Der. Latin-ism, Latinist, Latin-i-ty, Latin-ise. Also latim-er = Latin-er, an interpreter, Layamon, 14319; well known as a proper name. Also laten, q. v. LATITUDE, breadth, scope, distance of a place N. or S. of the equator. (F., -L.) M.E. latitude; Chaucer, C. T. 4433. - F. latitude. - Lat. latitudo, breadth. - Lat. latus, broad; from an O. Lat. stlatus, appearing in stlata, a broad ship. Stlatus = stratus, spread out, from sternere, to spread abroad, stretch out. - V STAR, to spread, strew; see Street, Strew, Star. Der. latitudin-al, from stem latitudinof the sb. latitudo; latitudin-ar-i-an, latitudin-ar-i-an-ism, latitudin-ous, LAPTEN, a mixed metal, a kind of brass or bronze. (F., -G.?) 'This latten bilbo;' Merry Wives, i. 1. 165. M. E. latoun, laton; Chaucer, C. T. 701, 11557. - O. F. Jaion (13th cent., see Littre); mod. F. laiton. Cotgrave has: 'Laiton, lattin (metall).' Cf. Span. laton, latten, brass ; Port. latão, brass ; Ital. ottone (corrupted from lottone or lattone), latten, brass, yellow copper. B. According to Diez, the O. F. laton is from latte, a lath (also spelt late, as in Cotgrave) : β. According to Diez, because this metal was hammered into thin plates. This is rendered almost certain by the Ital. latta, tin, a thin sheet of iron tinned, answering in form to Low Lat. latta, a lath (occurring in Wright's Vocab. i. 235, col. 1, last line); so also Span. latas, laths, hoja de lata, tin-plate, tinned iron plate [where hoja = foil, leaf]; also Port. lata, tin plate, latas, laths. Y. If this be right, these words are of G. origin, viz. from G. latte, a lath; see Lath.

LATTER, another form of later; see Late. (E.) LATTICE, a network of crossed laths. (F.,-G.) Here, as in other words, the final ce stands for s; a better form is lattis, as in Spenser, F. Q. iii. 12. 15. M. E. latis, latys; Wyclif, Prov. vii. 6.– F. lattis, lath work (Hamilton).–F. latte, a lath.–G. latte, a lath; see Lath. Der. lattice-work.

LAUD, to praise. (L.) M.E. lauden. 'If thou laudest and ioyest any wight ;' Test. of Love, b. i. last section ; in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 294, back, col. 2. - Lat. laudare, to praise. -Lat. laud-, stem of laws, praise. Root uncertain. Der. laud-er, laud-able, laud-able-ness, laud-abl-y; also laud-at-or-y (from pp. laud-atus); land, sb., Troil, iii, 3. 179; Hamlet, iv. 7, 178. And see allow (2). IAUDANUM, a preparation of opium. (L., -Gk., -Pers.) 'Laudanum or Opiate Laudanum, a medicine so called from its ex-cellent qualities;' Kersey, ed. 1715. This remark refers to an absurd supposed connection with Lat. laudare, to praise; on which Mahn (ii) Wahter) remarks the medicine so the second state of t (in Webster) remarks: 'this word cannot be derived from Lat. laudandum, to be praised, nor was it invented by Paracelsus, as it pre-viously existed in Provençal.' The name, in fact, was an old one; but was transferred from one drug to another. 'Laudanum, Ladanum, or Labdanum, a sweet-smelling transparent gum gathered from the leaves of Cistus Ledon, a shrub, of which they make pomander; it smells like wine mingled with spices; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Spelt ladanum, Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, v. 2 (Perfumer). Lat. ladanum, ledanum, the resinous substance exuding from the shrub lada ; Pliny, xxvi. 8. 30, § 47 ; xii. 17. 37. § 45.—Gk. λήδανον, λάδανον, the same.—Gk. λήδον, an oriental shrub, Cistus Creticus.— Pers. ladan, the gum-herb lada; Rich. Pers. Dict., p. 1251, col. 2, last line

LAUGH, to make the noise denoting mirth. (E.) M. E. laughen, Chaucer, C. T. 3847. Various spellings are lawhwen, lawhen, laghen, lehzen, lihzen, &c.; see Stratmann. - A. S. hlehhan, hlihhan, hlihan, klykhan, pt. t. klúk; Grein, ii. 81. + Du. lagehen. + Icel. klæja, pt. t. hlo. + Dan. lee. + Swed. le. + G. lachen. + Goth. hlahjan, pt. t. hloh.  $\beta$ . All imitative words from a Teut. base HLAH, corresponding to an Aryan base KARK, to make a noise, an extension of 🗸 KAR, to call; see Fick, iii. 87, i. 42. Allied words are Gk. κλώσσειν, to chuckle as a hen, κλώζειν, to cry as a jackdaw, κρώζειν, to caw, κλάζειν, to clash, κράζειν, to croak, &c.; Lat. erocitare, glocire; and cf. E. crake, creak, crack, click, clack, cluck, &c. Dor. laugh, sb., laugh-er, laugh-able, laugh-abl-y, laugh-able-naise, laugh-ing-ly, laugh-ing-gas, laugh-ing-stock. Also, laugh-ter, Chancer, Troil. ii. 1169, from A. S. hleahtor, Grein, ii. 82, cognate with Icel. klátr, Dan. latter, G. lachter.

LAUNCH, LANCH, to throw forward like a spear, hurl, send forth, send (a ship) into the water. (F., -L.) M. E. launcen, to hurl, Will. of Palerne, 1. 2755; cf. P. Plowman's Crede, 551. Lawneyn, lawnchyn, or stynge with a spere or blode-yryne, lanceo; Prompt. Parv. - F. lancer, 'to throw, fling, hurle, dart; also, to prick, pierce;'

LAUNDRESS, a washerwoman. (F., -L.) Formerly launderess (see below), formed by adding the F. suffix -ess to the old word launder or lawender, which had the same sense. M. E. launder, Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, l. 358; spelt lauender, laynder, Chaucer, Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat, xvi. 273, 202. -O. F. lavandiere, 'a launderesse or washing-woman;' Cot. - Low Lat. lauanderia, a washerwoman; occurring A. D. 1333; Ducange. - Lat. lauanderia, a washerwoman; occurring A. D. 1333; Ducange. - Lat. lauand-us, future pass. part. of lauare, to wash; see Lave. Der. laundr-y (- launder-y), spelt lauendrye in P. Plowman, B. xv. 182. LAUREATE, crowned with laurel. (L.) M. E. laurat.

LAUREATE, crowned with laurel. (L.) M. E. laureat, Chaucer, C. T. 14614. – Lat. laureatus, crowned with laurel. – Lat. laurea, a laurel; fem. form of adj. laureus, from laurus; see Laurel. Der. laureate-skip. LAUREL, the bay-tree. (F. – L.) In Shak, Troil. i. 3. 107.

LAUREL, the bay-tree. (F., -L.) In Shak. Troil. i. 3. 107. Formed, by the common substitution of l for r, from M. E. laurer, a laurel, Chaucer, C. T. 9340; spelt lorer, Gower, C. A. i. 337; lorel, Will. of Palerne, l. 2983. – F. laurier, 'a laurell, or bay-tree;' Cot. -Low Lat. laurarius* (not found), an adjectival formation with suffix -arius. – Lat. laurus, a laurel-tree. Der. laurell-ed; also laure-ate; see above.

LAVA, the matter which flows down a burning mountain. (Ital., -L.) A late word; added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. – Ital. lawa, 'a running gullet, streame, or gutter sodainly caused by raine;' Florio's Ital. Dict., ed. 1598. – Ital. laware, to wash. – Lat. laware; see Lave.

LAVATORY, a place for washing. (L.) In Levins. Cotgrave explains F. lavatoire as 'a lavatory, a place or vessell to wash in.'-Lat. lavatorium, a lavatory; neut. of lawatorius, belonging to a washer. -Lat. lavator, a washer. - Lat. lavatus, pp. of laware; see Lave.

-Lat. lauator, a washer. = Lat. lauatus, pp. of lauare; see Lave. LAVE, to wash, bathe. (F., -L.) M. E. lauar; 'And laueth hem in the lauandrie' [laundry]; P. Plowman, C. xviii. 330; cf. Layamon, 7489. = F. laver, to wash. = Lat. lauare, to wash. + Gk. Aoueur, to wash. From the Gk. and Lat. base LU, to wash. Der. lav-er (Exod. xxxviii. 8), M. E. lavour, lauour, Chaucer, C. T. 5869, from O. F. lavoir, 'a washing poole' (Cot.) And see lavender, lawadress, lotion. From the same base are de-luge, al-luvial. LAVEINDER, an odoriferous plant. (F., = Ital., -L.) M. E. lavendre, Reliquize Antiquze, i. 37 (Stratmann); cf. Shak. Wint. Ta. iv. 104. The r is an E. addition. = F. lavende, 'lavender;' Cot. =

LAVENDER, an odoriferous plant. (F, -Ital., -L.) M. E. lavendre, Reliquiæ Antique, i. 37 (Stratmann); cf. Shak. Wint. Ta. iv. 104. The r is an E. addition. - F. lavande, 'lavender;' Cot. - Ital. lavanda, lavender; we find also Ital. lavendula, - Ital. lavanda, a washing; cf. Lat. lavandria, things to be washed (White).  $\beta$ . The plant is so called from its use in washing, esp. from its being laid with fresh-washed linen. - Lat. lavanda, fem. of fut. pass. part. of lavare, to wash; see Lave.

LAVISH, adj., profuse, prodigal. (E.) c. The adj. is older than the verb, and the word is English ; the suffix answers to A.S. -isc, not to the suffix -isk in flour-isk, which is of F. and L. origin. This is shewn by the co-existence of the North of E. lavy, lavish (Halliwell), where the suffix is the A.S. -ig (E. -y) as in ston-y. Law-ish and lawy mean ' profuse' or abundant, and are formed from the obsolete verb law, to pour out. This verb being uncommon, the adj. was ill-understood, and was sometimes spelt laves. β. Examples of the adj. are as follows. 'In al other thing so light and lows [are they] of theyr tong;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 250 b. 'Punishing with losse of life the loweness of the toung;' Brende, Durating Continue of the content of the toung;' Brende, Quintus Curtius, fol. 67 (R.) 'Although some lawisks lippes, which like some other best;' Gascoigne, In Praise of Lady Sandes, 1. 7 (Poems, ed. Hazlitt, vol. i. p. 53). 'Lavisk Nature;' Spenser, Muiopotmos, 1. 163. Spelt lavas in 'Romeus and Juliet,' p. 20 (Halliwell). Y. The verb lave, to pour out, lade out water, is given in Richardson; and occurs as late as in Dryden. 'A fourth, with labour, laves The intruding seas, and waves ejects on waves;' Dryden, tr. of Ovid, Metam. b. xi. 488; where the Lat. text has: 'Egerit hic fluctus. secuorque refundit in secuor:' lib. xi. v. 488. 8. From fluctus, sequorque refundit in sequor;' lib. xi. v. 488. M. E. lawn, to draw water out of a well, to pour forth. Examples of this rare word are as follow. And [Orpheus] spak and song [sang] . . . alle pat ever he had resceyued and lawed oute of he mobile swelles of hys modir Calliope; ' Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. met. 12, 1. 3037. 'Mony ladde per forth-lep to law & to kest' = many a lad leapt forward there to bale and cast out the water (in a description of a storm at sea); Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 154. Note especially the following, which clearly shews the metaphorical use, and the source of the modern word. 'He lawer hys gyfter as water of dyche' = God lavishes his gifts as (freely as one would take) water out of a ditch; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 607; see the whole passage, which treats of God's profuseness of reward to the souls in heaven. c. Not found in A. S., unless (which is very doubtful) it can be connected with the verb gelafian, to refresh, which only occurs once, viz. in Beowulf, ed. Grein, 2722; this A. S. gelafian appearing to be the same as Du. laven, G. Lax. Dor. laxative ness.

 $\epsilon$  laber, to refresh. But we may assume lave to be an E. word, from a Teut. base LABH; for this would answer to a Gk. base LAP, of which there seems to be good evidence in  $\lambda a = \dot{\alpha} \langle \alpha \rangle$ , to empty out, to Purge,  $\lambda \dot{\alpha} = \alpha f \omega v$ , to exhaust. CP I see no reason for connecting this word with the ordinary E. lave, to wash, though there may have been some confusion with it. Mr. Wedgwood's suggestion that lavisk = O. F. lavaee, an inundation (Cotgrave) does not help us; for (1) lavisk is not a sb., and (2) this F. word does not at all explain the M. E. verb to lave. Der. laviskly, lavisk-ness, lavish-ment; also lavisk, verb (Levins). [†] LAW, a rule of action, edict, statute. (E.) M. E. lawe (two syllables), Chaucer, C. T. 1167. = A.S. lagu, Grein, ii. 153; the compound fork-lagu (= loss of life, death) occurs in Beowulf, ed.

Grein, 1. 2800; the simple form is not common. + O. Sax. lag (pl. lagu), a statute, decree. + Icel. log (s. pl., but used in the sing. sense), a law; it is the pl. of lag, a stratum, order, due place, lit. 'that which lies' or is placed. + Swed. lag. + Dan. lov. Cf. Lat. lex (stem leg), law; whence F. loi.  $\beta$ . The sense is 'that which lies' or is in due order; from Teut. base LAG, to lie; see Fick, iii. 261, i. 749. – European / LAGH, to lie; see Lie (1). ¶ Not from the verb ' to lay,' since that is a longer, derivative, and more complex form, as explained s. v. Lay (1). Der. law-ful, M. E. laweful, Trevisa, iii. 193; law-ful-ly, M. E. lawefulliche, P. Plowman, C. x. 59; law-ful-ness, see Owl and Nightingale, ed. Stratmann, l. 1741; law-giver; law-less, M. E. laweles, Trevisa, iii, 73; law-less-ly, law-less over the law less, denormality of the law less of the law less. less-ness; law-book, see Ormulum, 1. 1953; law-suit; also law-yer, q.v. LAWN (1), a space of ground covered with grass in a garden. (F.,-G. or C.) Properly an open space, esp. in a wood; a glade (see Glade). The spelling lawn is not old; the older spelling is invariably laund, which was still in use in the 18th century. ' Laund invariably tound, which was still in use in the 18th century. Land or Lown, in a park, plain untilled ground; 'Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Spelt laund in Shak. Venus, 813; 3 Hen. VI, iii. 1. 2. M. E. laund, Chaucer, C. T. 1691; (observe that Dryden substitutes laun in his Palamon and Arcite, l. 845); P. Plowman, C. i. 8. – O. F. lande, 'a land or laund, a wild, untilled, shrubby, or bushy plain;' Cot. Cf. Ital. and Span. landa, a heath, tract of open country.  $\beta$ . Of disputed origin; Littré refers it to G. land, open country, the same word with E. land; see Land. Diez refers it to Bret. lann, a bushy shrub, of which the pl. lannon is only used to signify waste land, like the F. landes. Note also W. llawnt, a smooth hill, a lawn. Y. But does it not come to the same thing? The Bret. lann is also used in a variety of senses, corresponding to those of Gael. and Irish lann, and W. llan; one of these senses is land or territory, though most often used of an inclosure. Spurrell gives W. Ilan, 'an area, yard, church;' but the Gael. lann means ' an inclosure, a house, a church, a repository, land; ' and the Irish lann is ' land, a house, church, repository.' Perhaps, then, the Irish lann and E. land are cognate words.

LAWN (2), a sort of fine linen. (F.?-L.?) In Shak. Wint. Ta. iv. 4. 209, 220. 'In the third yeare of the raigne of Queene Elizabeth, 1562, beganne the knowledge and wearing of laume and cambric, which was then brought into England by very small quantities;' Stow, King James, an. 1604 (R.) The word is supposed to be a corruption of the F. linon (or Span. linon) which has the same sense. 'Linon, Linomple, a fine, thin, or open-waled linnen, much used in Picardie (where it is made) for womens kerchers and churchmen's surplesses; also, laume;' Cot. The F. linon is formed (with suffix -on) from F. lin, flax, linen. - Lat. linum, flax. See Linen. ¶ See, however, the Addenda, where it is shewn that Stow is wrong, and another solution is proposed. [#]

LAWYER, one versed in the law, one who practises law. (E.) M. E. lawyer, lawier; P. Plowman, B. vii. 50. From law, with suffix -yer. This suffix originated in the use of the suffix -ien in place of -en in causal verbs, and verbs derived from sbs. Thus, from the A.S. lufu, love, was formed the vb. lufigan or lufan, to love, which became low-ien in M. E. Hence the sb. low-ier or low-yer, a lover, another form of low-er or low-ere, a lover; see the readings in the Petworth and Lansdowne MSS. in Chaucer, C.T. Group A, 1347 (of 1349, ed. Tyrwhit). By analogy, from lawe, law, was formed law-ier or law-yer. So also bow-yer, one who uses a bow; saw-yer, one who uses a saw.

LAX, slack, loose, soft, not strict. (L.) In Milton, P. L. vii. 162. – Lat. laxus, lax, loose. – Lat. base LAG, to be weak; whence also langueers, to be languid, with inserted n. From the same base is E. lag, a Celtic word. See Lag, Languid. Der. lax-ly, laxness; lax-i-ty, from F. laxité (Cot.), which from Lat. acc. laxitatem; and see lax-at-ive.

LAXATIVE, loosening. (F., - L.) M.E. lanatif, Chaucer, C.T. 14949. - F. laxatif, 'laxative;' Cot. - Lat. laxatinus, loosening. - Lat. laxatius, pp. of laxare, to render lax. - Lat. laxus; see Lax. Dor. laxative-ness.

LAY (1), to cause to lie down, place, set. (E.) The causal of  $\hat{\varphi}$  lay till I return ; 'Love's Pilgrimage, A. iii. sc. 3 (Sanchio). M.E. Lie, from which it is derived. M. E. leggen; weak verb, pt. t. leide, pp. leid; from which it is derived. M. E. leggen; weak verb, pt. t. leide, pp. leid; Chaucer, C. T. 3935, 81. – A. S. leggen (where cg = gg), to lay; pt. t. legde, pp. gelegd; Grein, ii. 166. Formed (by vowel-change of a to e) from lag, orig. form of A. S. læg, pt. t. of liegan, to lie; see Life (1). + Du. leggen, pt. t. legde, leide, pp. gelegi. + lcel. leggia, pt. t. lagdi, pp. lagior, lagor. + Dan. lægge, pt. t. lagde, pp. leid + Swed läggen pt. t. legde, derive pt. t. legde, t. lagde, pp. lead + Swed läggen pt. t. legde + Goth lagior t. pp. lagi. + Swed. lägga, pt. t. lade, pp. lagd. + Goth. lagjan, pt. t. lagida, pp. lagiths. + G. legen, pt. t. legte, pp. gelegt. Der. lay-er, q. v. LAY (2), a song, lyric poem. (F., - C.) M. E. lai, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 199, l. 167; lay, P. Plowman, B. viii. 66. – Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 199, l. 167; lay, P. Plowman, B. viii. 66. – O. F. lai, spelt lay in Cotgrave; cf. Prov. lais, a lay.  $\beta$ . The lay was regarded as specially belonging to the Bretons; Mr. Wedgwood cites from Marie de France: 'Les cuntes ke jo sai verais Dunt li Breton unt fait lor lais Vus cunterai assez briefment' = the tales which I know to be true, of which the Bretons have made their lays. I will briefly relate to you. See further in note 24 to Tyrwhitt's Introductory Discourse to the Cant. Tales; and see Chaucer, C. T. 11021, 11022. The word is not preserved in Breton, but it answers to W. llais, a voice, sound; Irish laoi, laoidh, a song, poem, hymn; Gael. laoidh, a verse, hymn, sacred poem. y. These Celtic words may be akin to A. S. leoo, lioo, Icel. ljoo, O. H. G. liod, G. lied, a There is no song; cf. Goth. liuthon, to sing, Rom. xv. 9.

A.S. ley, as pretended. LAY (3), LAIC, pertaining to the laity. (F., - L., - Gk.) M. E. lay; 'Lered men and lay' = learned men and laymen; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 171, last line. - O. F. lai, 'lay, secular, of the laity;' Cot. - Lat. laicus, belonging to the people (whence the E. laic). - Gk.  $\lambda auxos$ , belonging to the people. - Gk.  $\lambda aos$  (Ionic  $\lambda \eta cs$ , Attic  $\lambda cos$ ), the people. Root uncertain. Der. laic-al, *lay*man; also lai-ty, used by Cotgrave (as cited above), formed with suffix -iy by analogy with words such as chasti-iy, quan'i-iy, &c. LAYER, a stratum, row, tier, bed. (E.) 'Layer, a bed or channel in a creek, where small oisters are thrown in to breed; among gardeners, it is taken for a young sprout covered with mould, in order to raise its kind ;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Lay-er = that which lays, hence a place for laying or propagating. It is extended to mean anything carefully laid in due order. See Lay (1). ¶ Or else it is a mere corruption of lair; see Addenda. [†] Der. layering. LAZAR, a leper. (F., - L., - Gk., - Heb.) M. E. lazar, Chaucer, C. T. 242. - F. Lazare; see Littré. - Lat. Lazarus. - Gk. Ad(apos, the name of the beggar in the parable; Luke, xvi. 20; contracted from the Heb. name Eleazar. - Heb. El'ázár, he whom God helps. Der. lazar-like, Hamlet, i. 5. 72; lazar-house, Milton, P. L. xi. 479; also lazar-etto, from Ital. lazzeretto, a plague-hospital. LAZY, slow, sluggish, slothful. (F. - L.) In Shak. Temp. iii. 1. 28; spelt lassie in Spencer, Shep. Kal. July, 33; lazie in Minsheu, ed. 1627. We also find the verb to laze. 'S'endormir en sentinelle, to sleep when he hath most cause to watch; to laze it when he hath most need to looke about him; ' Cot. Thus the suffix -y is the usual E. suffix, gen. added to shs. (as in ston-y), but in rare instances to verbs and adjectives, as in shin-y, murk-y.  $\beta$ . In the present case, laze is a corruption of the M. E. lasche, lache, lash, laish, vapid, insipid; see Prompt. Parv. p. 288, and note 1. It also meant 'slow,' as in Palsgrave, who has : 'lashe, not fast, lache.' The word has the authority of Chaucer. 'And yif he be slowe and astoned and lacks, he lyue as an asse ' = and if he be slow and stupid and lazy, he lives like an ass; tr. of Boethius, bk. iv. pr. 3, 1. 3470. We also find that lazy in the North of England means 'bad, wicked;' Halliwell. This sense is noticed by Skinner, ed. 1671. All the uses of the word are explained by its F. original. - O. F. lasche (F. lache), 'slack, loose, wide, flagging, weak, faint, unlusty, languishing, remisse, lither, slow, cold, cowardly, faint-hearted, un-manly, effeminate, lewd, unworthy, base, treacherous; 'Cot. F. låcke = Ital. lasco, 'lazy, idle, sluggish, heavy;' Meadows. - Low Lat. lascus \* (not found), a corrupted pronunciation of Lat. lazus (-lacsus), by the interchange of sc with cs or x, as in prov. E. ax ask. See Lax. ¶ More might be said in support of this etymology, which was suggested by Minsheu. Cf. Isle of Wight lass = lazy (Halliwell); M. E. lasken ( - laschen), to relax, mitigate, Will. of Palerne, 950, Myrc's Parish Priest, 1736. The G. lässig, weary, is quite a different word, being from G. lass, weary, cognate with E. late, which would have produced an E. lat-y. Of course we did not borrow words from German in the 16th century, except in very rare and peculiar instances, such as carouse. Der. lazi-ly, lazi-ness.

LEA, LEY, LAY, a meadow. (E.) On the watry lea,' i. e. plain; Spenser, F. Q. iv. 2. 16. Often spelt ley, leigh, in E. placenames, as in Brom-ley, Haw-ley, Had-leigh. Lay occurs in Beaum. and Fletcher, where it means unemployed; 'Let wife and land Lie ley, P. Plowman, B. vii. 5; Lay, untilled land, Prompt. Parv. p. 285; on which see Way's note. – A.S. leáh. leá, gen. case leáhe, leáge; see Thorpe, Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, p. 109, l. 8, p. 292, l. 4; also p. 526, where the place-name Had-leah (Hadleigh) occurs; also p. 658. β. Just as A.S. fleak (= E. flea) is cognate with G. flok, so lea is cognate with prov. G. lok, a morass, bog, wood, forest (Flügel), which also appears in place-names, such as Hohen-lohe, i. e. high leas. So also we find the Low G. loge, which in place-names near Bremen signifies a low-lying tract, a grassy plain; Bremen y. The various Wörterb, iii. 80. So also Water-loo = water-lea. Teut. forms furnish a primitive Teut. base LAUHA (Fick, iii. 275), from the Teut. root LUH, to shine. Further cognates occur in Lithuanian laukas, an open field (Nesselmann); Lat. lucus, a grove, glade, open space in a wood [derived a lucendo !]; and prob. Skt. loka, a space, the world, universe, from loch, to see, a derivative of ruch, to shine. All are from the Aryan 🖌 RUK, to be bright, to shine; see Lucid.  $\P$  No connection whatever with lay (1).

LEAD (1), to bring, conduct, guide, precede, direct, allure. (E.) M. E. leden, pt. t. ladde, ledde, pp. lad, led ; Chaucer, C. G. loup, leaves, G. laub, leaves, foliage. B. All from Teut. base LAUBA, a leaf, a neut. sb., unchanged in the pl. in A. S. and O. H. G.; Fick, iii. 261. Again, this Teut. form is cognate with Russ. lepeste, a leaf, Lithuanian lápas, a leaf (Nesselmann), with which cf. Gk.  $\lambda \notin ros$ , a scale. The orig. sense of Russ. lepete is a shred, strip, which thus furnishes also the orig. sense of E. leaf. Y. All these words are from the European base LAP or LUP, to strip, peel; appearing in Gk. λίπειν, to scale, peel, Russ. lupite, to peel, Lithuanian lùpii, to strip, flay (as above). See Leper. Sax. linón [better linón], to learn; contracted form of lissón.+O. H. G. lirnan, G. lernen. B. These are neuter (or passive) forms answering to a primitive Teut. form lis-n-an, in which LIS is the base, and -n- is a formative element used in certain verbs. Verbs ending in -nan have a passive or neuter signification, as in Goth. full-nan, to become full, and-bund-nan, to become unbound, af-lif-nan, to be left remaining, ga-hail-nan, to become whole, ga-wak-nan, to become awake; 'Skeat, Mœso-Goth. Glossary, p. 303. The change from primitive s to a later r is common; see Iron, Hare.  $\gamma$ . From the same base LIS was formed the causal verb LAISYAN, to make to know, to teach; appearing in Goth. laisjan, to teach, A.S. Ideran, Icel. læra, Du. leeren, Swed. lära, Dan. lære, G. lehren, to teach; of which the Icel. læra, Du. leeren, and Swed. lära are also sometimes improperly used in the sense of 'learn; ' cf. Dan. lare sig, to teach oneself, to learn. Similarly, the M. E. leren, to teach, was sometimes improperly used in the reflexive sense, just as the opposite mistake also occurs of the use of learn in the sense of 'teach;' see Ps. xxv. 4(Prayer Book).  $\delta$ . The base LIS probably meant 'to find out;' whence the Goth. verb leisan, to find out, only used in the pt. t. lais

Cf. G. ge-leise, a refer as, itut; Lat. lira, a furrow. To the primitive sense we may perhaps refer A.S. leoran, to go away, depart (per-haps orig. to find one's way, go along); Grein, ii. 179. LIEATHER, the prepared skin of an animal. (E.) M. E. lether, Chaucer, C. T. 3250. – A. S. lever, in comp. geweald-lever, lit. 'wield-leather,' i. e. a bridle; Grein, i. 478. 'Bulgæ, leper-coddas,' i. e. leathern bags; Ælfric's Gloss, in Wright's Vocab. i. 21, col. 2. + Du. leder. + Icel, ledr. + Dan. leder. + Swed. läder. + G. leder. β. The Teut. base is LETHRA; Fick, iii. 278. Root unknown. Der. leather.n, M. E. letheren, P. Plowman, B. v. 192, formed with suffix -en, as in gold-en; also leather-y.

LEAVE (1), to quit, abandon, forsake. (E.) M. E. leven (with u = v), pt. t. lafte, lafte, pp. laft, left; Chaucer, C. T. 8126, 14204, 10500. – A. S. lafan, Grein, ii. 162. The lit. sense is 'to leave a heritage,' to leave behind one. – A. S. laf, a heritage, residue, remnant. - A. S. liftan, to be remaining, hence, to live; see Live. Or we may simply regard leave as the causal of live.+Icel. leifa, to leave, leave a heritage; from leif, a leaving, patrimony; which from lifa, to be left, to live. + M. H. G. leiben, to leave ; from M. H. G. leibe, O. H. G. leipa, that which remains; which from O. H. G. liban, lipan, only used in the comp. beliban, belipan, M. H. G. beliban, G. β. The Goth. form is laibjan, but the bleiben, to remain, be left. word is uncertain; we find, however, the sb. laiba, a remnant, from the verb liban, to live. We may also compare Swed. lenna, to leave; Dan. levne, to leave. See further under Live. ¶ Fick (iii. 271) confidently rejects the off-cited connection with Gk. Activear, to leave, and considers the similarity in form to be merely accidental. Curtius, ii. 61, thinks that he is probably right in this suggestion. The Gk. λείπειν really answers to Lat. linguere, and to Goth. leikwan, G. leiken, to lend (orig. to let go). See Curtius, as cited. Der. leaw-ings.

LEAVE (2), permission, farewell. (E.) a. In the phr. 'to take leave,' the word appears to be the same as leave, permission. The leave, the word appears to be the same as leave, permission. The orig, sense was, probably, 'to take permission to go,' hence, 'to take a formal farewell.' Cf. 'to give leave.' We may, then, remember that the sb. is entirely and always independent of the verb above. M. E. leave, leave (with u = v). 'By your leave' — with your permission; Chaucer, C. T. 13377. 'But taketh his leave' = but takes his leave; id. 1319. — A. Tale, ed. Skeat, 1. 1873. The orig. sense of leave is 'that which is  $\overset{\oplus}{}$  times spelt ligier (see Richardson); and Howell goes so far as to acceptable or pleasing,' and it is closely connected with A. S. ledf, luse a leger-book in the sense of a portable memorandum-book, appa-pleasing, lief, dear; see Lief. We may further remark that the rently from thus mistaking the true sense. Of Scand. origin; allied to Norweg. logg, the lowest part of a vessel, pl. legger, and written larges the provided in composition. Swed legge the rim of a cest. lagge when used in composition; Swed. lagg, the rim of a cask; Icel. logg, the ledge or rim at the bottom of a cask. We may also note Norweg. lega, a lying, couch, lair, bed, a support upon which anything rests. Both logg and lega ar from Norweg. liggja = Dan. ligge, to lie; Aasen. See Lie (1). LEDGER, a book in which a summary of accounts is preserved.

(Du.) Formerly called a ledger-book ; Kersey, ed. 1715. The word had other meanings, most of them involving the sense of 'lying down.' Thus a ledger was a horizontal slab of stone (Halliwell); leger ambassadors were such as remained for some time at a foreign court ; see leiger in Shak. Meas. iii. 1. 59. A ledger-bait was a bait that was 'fixed or made to rest in one certain place;' I. Walton, Angler, pt. i. c. 8. 'A rusty musket, which had lien long leger in his shop;' Fuller's Worthies, London (R.) See further in Richard-son. – Du. legger, 'one that lyes down' (Sewel); hence mod. Du. legger, the nether mill-stone [answering to E. ledger, a horizontal slab of stone]. - O. Du. leggen, to lie, once in common use, though the true form is liggen, and the proper sense of leggen is to lay. We know how these words are constantly confused in English. 'Te bed leggen, to ly a-bed. Neer leggen, to lie down. Waar legt hy t'huys, where does he ly, or lodge?' Sewel. See Lie (1). Thus a ledger-book is one that lies always ready in one place. Thus a leager-book is one that has always that, it was confused The etymology of the word was ill-understood, and it was confused with O. F. legier, light; see Lodgor-line. Hence it was some xxiii. c. 2. A pl. sb., from a sing. lee, not used. - F. lie, 'the lees, small leger-books fairely bound up table-book-wise,' i. e. like a memorandum-book; Howell, Forraine Travell, sect. iv, ed. Arber, p. 27. LEDGER-LINE, the same as Leger-line, q.v. (F., -L.)

LEEE, a sheltered place, shelter; part of a ship away from the wind. (Scand.) M. E. lee, shelter. We lurked vndyr lee, we lay hid under shelter; Mort Arthure, ed. Brock, l. 1446. A-lee = on the lee; Deposition of Rich. II., ed. Skeat, iv. 74. The word and its use are both Scand.; the true E. word is lew, a shelter, still in use provincially; see Halliwell. - Icel. Ale, lee, used (as in England) only provincially; see frailing i... - ICCL As  $i_i$ , iec, used (as in England) only by seamen; sigla  $\dot{a}$  kl $\dot{a}$ , to stand to leeward;  $h\dot{a}$ -bord, the leeside. +Dan. la; Swed.  $l\ddot{a}$ , +Du.  $l\dot{j}$ , +A.S. Alea, Aleow, a covering, pro-tection, shelter; Grein, ii. 82. Hence prov. E. lew, a shelter, also, as adj., warm; see Lukewarm. +O. Sax. Aleo, a protection, cover-ing. And cf. Goth. hlija, a tent, tabernacle. B. Allied to A.S. as adj., waim; see Hukhswarm, +O. Sar, Aleo, a protection, cover-ing. And cf. Goth. hlija, a tent, tabernacle. B. Allied to A. S. Aleo's, Aleowo's, a shelter (Grein, ii. 83); the same word as prov. E. Isuth, shelter, warmth (Halliwell). With these forms we may com-pare Icel. hly, warmth, klær, hlyr, warm, klyja, to shelter, klána, to thaw. From a Teut. base HLAWA, warm; whence also G. Iaw, tepid (Fick, iii. 87). ¶ Note the pronunciation lene-ard, for lee-ward. Der. lee-thore, lee-side, lee-way. Also lee-ward, allied to O. Du. lywaard, lee-ward (Sewel); the mod. Du. form being lijwaarts. tepid (Fick, iii. 87).

LEBECH (1), a physician. (E.) In Shak. Timon. v. 4. 84. M. E. lecke, Chaucer, C. T. 15524. – A. S. lece, a physician; Matt. ix. 12; Lu. iv. 23. Connected with A.S. lácnian, to heal; Grein, ii. 150.+ Lu. 19. 23. Connected with A.S. taentan, to near; Grein, n. 150. – Icel. læknir, a physician; lækna, to cure, heal. + Dan. læge, a physician; from læge, to heal. + Swed. läkare, a physician; from läka, to heal. + Goth. leikeis, lekeis, a physician, Lu. iv. 33; con-nected with leikinon, lekinon, to heal. + O. H. G. lákhi, láchi, a phy-sician; connected with O. H. G. lákhinón, to heal, M. H. G. láchenen, to employ remedies, M. H. G. láchen, a remedy. β. We may further compare Irish and Gael. leigh, a physician, leigheas, a cure, remedy. Root unknown. LEECH (2), a blood-sucking worm. (E.) M. E. leske, Prompt. Parv. p. 291. – A.S. Idee; we find 'Sanguisuga, vel hirudo, Idee' in Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Insectorum. Lit. 'the healer;' and the same word as the above.

LEECH (3), LEACH, the border or edge of a sail at the sides. (Scand.) LeseA, the edge of a sail, the goring; Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. 'The lestA of a sail, vox nautica; Skinner, ed. 1671. - Icel. lik, a leech-line; Swed. lik, a bolt-rope, stdende liken, the leeches; Dan. lig, a bolt-rope, staaende lig, a leech. + O. Du. lyken, a boltrope (Sewel).

LIELEK, a kind of onion. (E.) M. E. leek, Chaucer, C. T. 3877; P. Plowman, B. v. 82. - A. S. leác; in Ælfric's Gloss, Nomina Herbarum, + Du. look, + Icel. lawk, + Dan. lög: + Swed. lök. +G. lawch.  $\beta$ . All from Teut. base LAUKA, a leek (Fick, iii. 200). Root unknown; but answering in form to LUK, to lock. Cf. W. llysiau, herbs, plants. Der. gar-lic, char-lock, hem-lock.

LEER, a sly or arch look. (E.) The verb is a later development from the sb., which is an old word. The M. E. lere means the cheek, also the face, complexion, mien, look. 'A loveli lady of lere' = a lady of lovely mien; P. Plowman, B. i. 3. It was orig. almost always used in a good sense, and with adjectives expressive of beauty, but in Skelton we find it otherwise in two passages. 'Her lothely lere Is nothing clere, But vgly of chere' = her loathsome look is not at all clear, but ugly of aspect; Elynoure Rummynge, l. 12. 'Your lothesum lere to loke on;' and Poem against Garnesche, l. 5. Shakespeare has it in two senses; (1) the complexion, aspect, As You Like It. iv. 1. 67, Titus Andron. iv. 2. 119; (2) a winning look, Merry Wives, i. 3, 50. At a later period it is gener-ally used in a sinister cense. = A. S. Aleor, the check; hence the face, look, Grein, ii. 85.  $\pm$  O. Sax. Alior, the cheek; O. Du. lier (Oudemans).  $\pm$  Icel. Alyr, the cheek.  $\beta$ . The orig. sense may have been 'slope,' from the Teut. base HLl, to lean; see Lean (1). Fick (iii. 88) supposes A. S. kleor = Teut. HLIURA = HLLWRA, so that the base would be HLI, not HLU. ¶ The Tauchnitz Du. Dict. gives loeren, 'to peep, peer, leer, lurk.' This may mislead, as I believe two verbs are here mixed together, viz. loeren, 'to peep, peer, leer;' and loeren, 'to lurk.' Of these, the former may very well be cognate with E. leer; but the latter is clearly cognate with Dan. lure, Swed. lura, to lurk, and has no connection with the other word. Moreover, the former may be related to Lower (2); whilst the latter is perhaps related to Lure or Lurk. Der. ler, verb, of which an early use is in Shak. L. L. v. 2. 480, 2 Hen. IV, v. 2. 7, Troil v. i. 97, only in the sense 'to simper,' to give a winning glance. LEES, dregs of wine. (F.) In A. V. Isa. xxv. 6, Jer. xlviii. 11.

'Verily the lees of wine are so strong;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b.

hydrof; Col. Of unknown origin; the Low Lat. form is that the phr. fecla sive lias uini occurs in a MS. of the 10th century (Littré). LEET, a term applied to the (usually) weaker hand. (E.) M. E. left, lift, lift Spelt left, Chaucer, C. T. 2955; lift, Will. of Palerne, 2961; luft, P. Plowman, A. ii. 5. 7; Layamon, 24461. The word may be considered as E., being certainly of O. Low G. origin. It can scarcely be found in A.S., which has the term winster instead; see Grein, ii. 716. We do, however, find 'inanis, left,' in a Gloss (Mone, Quellen, i. 443), and the same MS. has senne for synne (sin); so that left may stand for lyft, with the sense of 'worthless' or 'weak.'+ N. Friesic leeft, leefter k nd (left hand); Outzen. + O. Du. luft, left (Oudemans); Kilian also gives the form lucht, which does not, however, seem to be the original one.  $\beta$ . The t is a later suffix, and the base appears to be LUB, perhaps related to Lop, q. v. y. It is difficult to trace any connection with Russ. lieuuii, left, lieuska, the left hand ; Lat. lævus. Gk. Aaiós (for Aaifós), left, which are from a base LAIWA. ¶ This satisfactory etymology is due to Mr. Sweet; see the Addenda. For A.S. lyft, see lyftidd, palsy, Cockayne's Leechdoms, ii. 338. Der. left-handed, -ness. [+] LEG, one of the limbs by which animals walk, a slender support. (Scand.) M. E. leg (pl. legges), Chaucer, C. T. 593; Layamon, l. 1876 (later text, the earlier text has sconken = shanks). - Icel. leggr, a leg, hollow bone, stem of a tree, shaft of a spear. + Dan. leg, the call of the leg. + Swed. läve, the call of the leg.  $\beta$ . Recalf of the leg. + Swed. lägg, the calf or bone of the leg.  $\beta$ . Referred by Fick (iii. 262) to the Europ. base LAK, to bend; this is unsatisfactory, as the Icel word seems to involve the notion of stiffness; cf. Icel. hand-leggr (lit. hand-stem), the fore-arm, arm-leggr, the upper-arm. Der. leg-less, legg-ings. LEGACY, a bequest of personal property. (L.) M. E. legacie. 'Her legacie and lamentatioun;' Henrysoun, Complaint of Cresside, 3rd st. from end. Cf. O. F. legat, 'a legacy;' Cot. A coined word (as if from a Lat, legatia) from Lat, legatum, a legacy, bequest; orig. neut. of pp. of Lat. legare, to appoint, bequeath. - Lat. leg-, stem of lex, law. See Logal. Der. legacy-hunter; also legat-ee, a barbarously formed word, coined by adding the F. suffix  $-\phi$  (= Lat. -atus), denoting the pp., to the stem of Lat. legat-us, pp. of legare. LEGAL, pertaining to the law. (F., -L.) In Minsheu's Dict., ed. 1627. - F. legal, legall, lawful; 'Cot. - Lat. legalis, legal. -Lat. leg., stem of lex, law, which is cognate with E. law. B. The lit. sense is ' that which lies,' i e that which is settled or fixed, as in the Gk. phrases cl vóµoi ol neíµevoi, the established laws, neírai vóµos. the law is fixed, from keiµos, I lie. From European base LAGH, to lie, whence also Gk. Nexos, a bed, Lat. lec-tus, a bed. See Fick, i. 748, 749. See Law, and Lie (1). Der. legal-ly, legal-ice; legal-i-ty, from F. legalité, 'lawfulness' (Cot.), which from Low Lat. acc. legalitatem. And see legacy, legate, allege, delegate, relegate, college, colleague, privilege, &c.

LIEGATE, a commissioner, ambassador. (F., -L.) M. E. legate, legat; Rob of Glouc. p. 499, l. 23; Layamon, l. 24501. -O. F. legat, 'a legat, the pope's ambassador;' Cot. -Lat. legatus, a legate, deputy; pp. of legare, to appoint, send. - Lat. leg., stem of lex, law. See Logal. Dor. legate-ship; legat-ion, from F. legation, 'a legateship' (Cot.), which from Lat. acc. legationem; also legat-ine, adj. Hen. VIII. iii. 2. 339.

LEGATEE; see under Legacy.

LEGEND, a marvellous or romantic story. (F., -L.) M. E. legende, Chaucer, C. T. 3143; P. Plowman, C. xii. 206. - O. F. legende, 'a legend, a writing, also the words that be about the edge of a piece of coyne ;' Cot. - Low Lat. legenda, as in Aurea legenda = the Golden Legend. – Lat. legenda, neut. pl. of fut. pass. part. of legere (pp. leetus), to read, orig. to gather, collect. + Gk.  $\lambda \epsilon \gamma \epsilon i \nu$ , to collect, gather, speak, tell.  $\beta$ . From a base LAG, to gather; whence, probably, by the extension of the Teutonic form lak to laks and subsequent loss of k (producing las), we have also Goth. lisan, to collect; see Lease (2). Cf. also Lithuanian lesti, to gather, pick up grains as birds do, cited by Curtius, i. 454; whom see. Der. legenda-ry; also (from Lat. leg-ere) leg-ible, leg-ible, leg-ible, leg-ible). ness, leg-i-bili-ly; together with numerous other words such as legion, lecture, lesson, lection, col-lect, de-light, di-lig-ent, e-leg-ant, e-lect, rections, tersion, tection, correct, using an using end, engeball, engeball

-O.F. legier de main, lit. light of hand; see Leger-line below. The F. main is from Lat. manum, acc. of manus, the hand; see Manual.

LEGER-LINE, LEDGER-LINE, in music, a short line adr dregs, grounds, thick substance that settles in the bottome of Line.] Properly spelt leger-line, as in Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. Not "wares" for Of unknown origin: the Low Lat. form is lia; the in Todd's Johnson, These lines are very small and light. - F. leger, light; formerly legier, as in Cotgrave. Cf. Ital. leggiere, leggiero, light. Formed as if from a Lat. leuiarius\*, made by adding -arius to leui-, crude form of leuis, light. See Levity. Dor. from the same source, leger-i-ty, lightness, Hen. V, iv. 1. 23; see legiereté in Cotgrave. LEGIBLE, that can be read. (F., -L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. -O. F. legible, 'legible, readable;' Cot. - Lat. legiblis, legible. - Lat. legere, to read; see Legend. Der. legibl-y, legibl-ness, legibl-i-y. LEGION, a large body of soldiers. (F., -L.) In early use. M. E. legiun, Layamon, 6024; later, legioun, legicn. - O. F. legion, 'a Roman legion;' Cot. - Lat. legionem, acc. of legio, a Roman legion, a body of troops of from 4200 to 6000 men. - Lat. legere, to gather, select, levy a body of men. See Legend. Der. legion-ar-y. LEGISLATOR, a law-giver. (L.) In Bacon, Life of Henry VII, ed. Lumby, p. 69, l. 30. - Lat. legis-lator, lit. proposer of a law.-Lat. legis, gen. case of lex, a law; and lator, a proposer of a law, lit. Lat. latum stands for latum, to bear, used as supine of ferre, to bear, but from a different root.  $\beta$ . For Lat. lax. see Legal. Lat. latum stands for latum, from  $\sqrt{TAL}$ , to lift; see Tolerate. Der. legislat-ive, legislat-ure ; hence was at last developed the word to legislate; whence also legislation. And see Legist. LEGIST, one skilled in the laws. (F., -L.) 'A great inryst and legyst; Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 210 (R.) - O. F. legiste, in use in the 13th century; mod. F. legiste; Littré. - Low Lat. legista, a legist. - Lat leg-, stem of lex, law; with (Gk.) suffix -ista.

ista. See Logal. ILEGITIMATE, lawful, lawfully begotten, genuine, authorised. (L.) In Shak. K. John, i. 116. - Low Lat. legitimatus, pp. of legitimare, to declare to be lawful. - Lat. legitimus, pertaining to law, legitimate; formed with suffix -timus (Aryan -ta-ma) from legi-, crude form of lex, a law; see Logal. Der. legitimate-ly, legitimac-y, legitim-ist (from legitim-us).

LEGUME, a pod. (F. -L.) A botanical term. In Todd's Johnson. Formerly, the Lat. legumen was used, as in Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. - F. légume, pulse; in botany, a pod. - Lat. legumen, pulse, bean-plant; applied to that which can be gathered or picked, as opposed to crops that must be cut. - Lat. legere, to gather; see Legend. Der. legumin-ous, from stem legumin- (of legumen).

LEISURE, freedom from employment, free time. (F., - L) M. E. leyser, leyser; Chaucer, Book of the Duchess, l. 172; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 229, l. 1. – O. F. leisir (Burguy), later loisir (Cot.), leisure. The O. F. leisir was orig. an infin. mood, signifying ' to be permitted ; ' Littré. - Lat. licere, to be permitted. See Licence. Der. leisure-ly. . We may note the bad spelling ; it should be leis-er or leis-ir.

LEMAN, LEMMAN, a sweetheart, of either sex. (E.) In Shak. Merry Wives, iv. 2. 172; Tw. Nt. ii. 3. 26. M. E. lemman, Havelok, 1283; older form leofmon, Ancren Riwle, p. 90, l. 14. – A. S. leóf, dear; and mann, a man or woman. See Lief and Man.

LEMMA, in mathematics, an assumption. (L., - Gk.) Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. - Lat. lemma. - Gk. λημμα, a thing taken ; in logic, a premiss taken for granted. - Gk. εί-λημμαι, perf. pass of λαμβάνειν, to take (base λαβ-). - VRABH, to take, seize; cf. Skt.

rabh, to take, seize (Vedic). LEMMING, LEMING, a kind of Norwegian rat. (Norwegian.) Described as 'the leming or Lapland marmot' in a translation of Buffon's Nat. Hist., London, 1792. Not in Todd's Johnson. - Norweg. lemende ; also used in many various forms, as læmende, limende, lemende, lömende, lemming, lemelde, &cc. ; see Aasen. + Swed. lemel. There is also, according to Ihre (Lexicon Lapponicum), a Lapp form, loumek.  $\beta$ . Origin obscure; Aasen thinks that the word means 'laming,' i. e. spoiling, very destructive, and connects it with Norweg. lemja, to palsy, strike, beat, Icel. lemja, to beat, thrash, maim, disable, Dan. Lamme, to paralyse: cf. slang E. Lam, to beat. See Lame.  $\gamma$ . But perhaps it is of Lapp origin, after all. LEMON, an oval fruit, with acid pulp. (F., – Pers.) Formerly spelt (more correctly) limon; as in Levins, ed. 1570. – F. limon, 'a lemmon ; ' Cot. - Pers. limún, limúnó, a lemon, citron ; Richardson's Pers. Dict., p. 1282, col. 1. Cf. Turk. limún; Arab. laimún, a lemon; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 517. Der. lemon-ade, from F. limonade. [†] LEMUR, a nocturnal mammal. (L.) From its habit of going about at night, it has been nicknamed 'ghost' by naturalists. - Lat. lemur, a ghost.

LEND, to let for hire, allow the use of for a time. (E.) The final d is excrescent, as in sound from F. son. M. E. lenen, pt. t. lenede, lende, lende, lente, pp. lened, lend, lent. Thus the mod. final d was E, LEDGER-LINE, in music, a short line 'w the staff. (F.,-L.) [On the word line, see the hire lend is the lent [granted] her this land; Layamon, 1.228. A.S. lánan, to lend, also, to give, grant; Grein, ii. 163. – A.S. lán, a 🕇 loan, Grein, ii. 163. + Du. leenen, to lend ; from leen, a fee. fief. + Icel. dana, to lend; from lån, a loan; a loan; a loan international dana, to lend; from lån, a fiel, + Dan. laane, to lend; from laane, a loan. + Swed. läna, to lend; from län, a fee, fiel. + G. lehnen, to lend (a provincial word); from lehen, lehn, a fiel. See further under Loan. Der. lend-er; lend-ings, K. Lear, iii, 4, 113. LENGTH, extent, the quality of being long. (E.) M. E. lengthè (two syllables), Chaucer, C. T. 83, 448. – A.S. lengt; the buffy and the syllables of the syllable of t dat. leng Se occurs in the A.S. Chron. an. 1122. Formed with suffix -5 and vowel-change of a to e from A.S. lang, long. + Du. lengte, from lang.+Dan. langde, from lang.+Swed. längd, from läng.+Icel. lenged, from langr. See Long. Der. length-en, in which the final -en has a causal force, though this peculiar formation is conventional and unoriginal; in the M.E. lengthen, the final -en merely denoted the infinitive mood, and properly produced the verb to length, as in Shak. Passionate Pilgrim, l. 210. Also length-y, length-i-ly, length-i-Length-wise, length-ways. LENIENT, mild, merciful. (L.) In Milton, Samson, 659. – Lat.

Lenient- stem of pres. part. of lenire, to soften, soothe. - Lat. lenis, soft, mild. See Lenity, Lithe. Der. lenient-ly, lenienc-y. LENITY, mildness, clemency. (L.) In Shak. Hen. V, iii. 2. 26, 6. 118. Formed, by analogy with F. words in -ity (F. -ité), from Lat. lenitatem, acc. of lenitar, softness, mildness. - Lat. leni-, crude form of lenis, soft, gentle, mild; with suffix -tas. Root uncertain; but re-lent and lithe are related words. Der. lenit-ive = O. F. lenitif, a 'lenitive' (Cot.), as if from a Lat. lenitiums. And see Lenient.

LENS, a piece of glass used for optical purposes. (L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. So called, from the resemblance in shape to the seed of a lentil, which is like a double-convex lens. See Lentil. Der. lenticul-ar, from Lat. lenticula, a little lentil.

LENT, a fast of forty days, beginning with Ash Wednesday. (E) The fast is in the spring of the year, and the old sense is simply 'spring.' M. E. lenten, lente, lent; spelt lenten, P. Plowman, B. xx. 359. – A. S. lenten, the spring; Grein, ii. 167. + Du. lente, the spring. + G. lenz, spring; O. H. G. lenzin, lengizen. β. Supposed to be derived from A. S., Du., and G. lang, long, because in spring the days lengthen; this is possible, but not certain. Der. lenten, di Unitable and the spring for the spring is not certain. adj., Hamlet, ii. 2. 329; here the suffix -en is not adjectival (as in gold-en), but the whole word is the M. E. lenten fully preserved; so also Lenten-tide = A. S. lencten-fid, spring time, Gen. xlviii. 7.

LENTIL, an annual plant, bearing pulse for food. (F., - L.) M. E. lentil; Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 1488. - O. F. lentille, 'the lintle or lentill;' Cot. - Lat. lenticula, a little lentil; double dimin. (with suffix -cu-l-) from lenti-, crude form of lens, a lentil. See Lons. Der. lenticul-ar, resembling a lens or lentil.

LENTISK, the mastic-tree (F., -L.) In Cotgrave. - F. lent-isque, 'the lentiske or mastick-tree;' Cot. - Lat. lentiscum, lentiscus, a mastic-tree; named from the clamminess of the resin yielded by it. -Lat. lenti-, crude form of lentus, tenacious, sticky, pliant. See Relent and Lithe.

LEO, a lion. (L., -Gk.) As the name of a zodiacal sign; Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, ed. Skeat, i. 8. 2. We even find A.S. leo, Grein, ii. 171. - Lat. leo, a lion ; see Lion. Der. leon-ine = F. leonin (Cot.), from Lat. leon-in-us, from leon-, stem of leo.

LEOPARD, the lion-pard, an animal of the cat kind. (F., - L., -Gk.) M. E. leopard, leopart, P. Plowman, B. xv. 293. - O. F. leopard, 'a leopard, or libbard, a beast ingendred between a lion and Cot. - Lat. leopardus, a leopard. - Gk. Leómapõos, a panther; Acorrómapõos, a leopard; supposed to be a mongrel between a pard or panther and a lioness; Pliny, Nat. Hist. b. viii. c. 16. - Gk. Aco.,  $\lambda$  corro-, shortened form or crude form of  $\lambda$  corr, a lion; and  $\pi a \rho \delta o_{2}$ , a pard. See Lion and Pard.

LEPER, one afflicted with leprosy.  $(F_{.,-}L_{.,-}Gk_{.})$  The form of the word is founded on a mistake; the word properly means the disease itself (2 Kings, v. 11), now called leprovy; the old term for 'leper's was leprous man. 'And lol a leprous man cam. . And anon the lepre of him was clensid;' Wyclif, Matt. vii. 2, 3. This confusion first appears (perhaps) in Henrysoun's Complaint of Creseide, where we find 'after the lawe of lepers,' l. 64; 'the lepre-folk,' l. 110, 'a lepre-man,' l. 110. &c.; see Richardson. - F. lepre, 'a leprosie;' Cot. -Lat. lepra. - Gk. Aérpa, leprosy. So called because it makes the skin scaly. - Gk. λέπροs, scaly, scabby, rough. - Gk. λέποs, a scale, shift scale,  $d_{k}$ ,  $d_{k}$ idary, Limpet. Der. lepr-ous = O. F. lepreux, from Lat. leprosus, adj.; whence was coined the sb. lepros-y, Matt. viii. 3.

LEPIDOPTERA, s. pl., a certain order of insects. (Gk.) form of lethum, and -fer-ous = -fer-us, bearing, from ferre, to bear. Modern, and scientific. Used of the butterfly, and other insects LETHARGY, heavy slumber, great duluess. (F., -L., -Gk.)

whose four wings are covered with very fine scales. Coined from Gk. Acriso-, crude form of Acris, a scale; and wrepá, pl. of wrepór, a wing. As is from  $\lambda$  in the scale (see Leprosy); and  $\pi\tau \epsilon \rho \delta \nu = \pi \epsilon \tau \cdot \epsilon \rho \delta \nu$ , cognate with E. feather, from  $\sqrt{PAT}$ , to fly; see Feather, Pen. Der. lepidopter-ous.

Featurer, Fen. Der. isplaopier-ous. LEPORINE, pertaining to the hare. (L.) Modern, and scientific. Either from F. leporin, 'of or belonging to a hare' (Cot.), or more probably directly from Lat. leporinus, with same sense. - Lat. lepori-, crude form of lepus, a hare. See Leveret. LEPROSY; see under Leper. (F., -L., -Gk.) LESION, an injury, wound. (F., -L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - F. lesion, 'hurt, wounding, harme;' Cot. - Lat lesionem, acc. for the intermediate to but the Boot uncern of læsio, an injury. - Lat. læsus, pp. of lædere, to hurt. Root uncer-tain. Dor. (from Lat. lædere), col-lide, e-lide, il-li-sion.

LESS, smaller. (E.) Used as compar. of little, but from a different root; the coincidence in the first letter is accidental. M.E. lesse, lasse, adj., les, adv. 'The lesse luue' = the less love : Ancren Riwle, p. 92, 1. 7. Les as adv., id. p. 30, 1. 7. - A. S. lassa, adj., las, adv. ; Grein, ii. 164. + O. Fries, lessa, less. B. Lassa stands for las-ra, by assimilation, or we may regard las-ta as preserving the orig. s of the comparative suffix; see Worso. It is the compar. form from a base LAS, feeble, which appears in Goth. lasius, feeble (2 Cor. x. 10), and in Icel. lasinn, feeble, ailing, lasna, to become feeble, to decay.

LEAST, the superl. form, is the M. E. leste, laste, adj., P. Plowman, B. iii. 24; lest, adv., Gower, C. A. i. 153, l. 5. - A.S. lasast, læ-est (whence læst by contraction). Grein, ii. 164; from the same base las-, feeble, with the usual suffix -ast or -est. + O. Fries. lerest (for lesest), leist. See Koch, Eng. Gramm. i. 448; March, A.S. Gramm. p. 65. Der. less, sb.; less-er, a double comparative, Gen. i. 16; less-en, vb., M. E. lassen, Sir Gawain and the Grene Knight. 1.1800, lessin (for lessen), Prompt. Parv., p. 298, where the suffix -m appears to be merely the suffix of the M. E. infin. mood retained for greater distinctness. And see lest. -LIESS, suffix. (E.) A. S. -Leás, the same word as LOOSE, q. v.

-LESS, suffix. (L.) A. S. 4ras, the same word as LOOSE, q. v. LESSEE, LESSOR; see under Lease. LESSON, a reading of scripture, portion of scripture read, a task, lecture, piece of instruction. (F., - L.) M. E. lesson, Chaucer, C. T. 9069; spelt lescun, Ancren Riwle, p. 282, l. 3. – F. legon. – Lat. lectionem, acc. of lectio, a reading. – Lat. holus, pp. of legere, to read; see Legend. Doublet, lection.

LEST, for lear that, that not. (E.) Not for least, as often erroneously said, but due to less. It arose from the A. S. equivalent expres-sion by less be, as in the following sentence. 'Nelle we bás race ná leng teón, őý læs ös hit eów æþryt þynce' = we will not prolong this story farther, lest it seem to you tedious; Sweet's A S. Reader, p. 94. 1. 311. Here by las de literally = for the reason less that, where by (= for the reason) is the instrumental case of the def. article ; las = less; and  $\delta e$  (= that) is the indeclinable relative. B. At a later period by was dropped, las became les, and las de, coalescing, became one word lesike, easily corrupted to leste, and lastly to lest, for ease of pronunciation. The form leste occurs in the Ancren Riwle, Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 117, l. 2 from bottom; so that the word took its corrupted form about the beginning of the 13th century. See Nevertheless. Cf. Lat. quominus.

LET (1), to allow, permit, suffer, grant. (E.) M. E. leten (with one t), a strong verb; pt. t. lat, let, leet; pp. laten, leten, lete. In Chaucer, C. T. 128, 510, Tyrwhitt misprints lette for leet, and in 1. 4344, letten for leten. - A. S. latan, letan, to let, allow; pt. t. let, q.v. Fick, iii. 263. Cf. Lith. leidmi, I let (base LAD). And see Let (2).

LET (2), to hinder, prevent, obstruct. (E.) M. E. letten (with double t), a weak verb. 'He letted nat his felawe for to see '=he hindered not his fellow from seeing; Chaucer, C. T. 1894. – A. S. lettan, to hinder; also geletan; Grein, ii. 108. A causal verb, with the sense 'to make late,' just as binder is derived from the -kind in bekind. – A. S. lat, slow; see Late. + Du. letten, to impede; from laat.+ Icel. letja, from latr. + Goth. latjan, intrans., to be late, to tarry; from lats, slothful.

LETHAL, deadly, mortal. (F., -L.; or L.) Spelt lethall in Minsheu, ed. 1627. - F. lethal, 'deadly, mortal;' Cot. [Or directly from Latin.] - Lat. lethalis, better letalis, mortal. - Lat. letum, death. Root uncertain. Der. lethi-ferous, deadly; from lethi- = letho-, crude Introd. to Brachet, Etym. Dict., § 195; it is here used merely with a dimin. sense. Cf. Ital. lepretta, a leveret. The base levr- is from Lat. lepor, stem of lepus, a hare. Root uncertain. See Leporine.

LEVIATHAN, a huge aquatic animal. (L., - Heb.) In Min-sheu, ed. 1627; and in Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 174. - Late Lat. leviathan, Job, xl. 20 (Vulgate). - Heb. livyáthán, an aquatic animal, dragon, serpent; so called from its twisting itself in curves. -Heb. root lawa, to cleave; Arab. root lawa, to bend, whence lawá, the twisting or coiling of a serpent; Rich. Dict. pp. 1278, 1275. LEVIGATE, to make smooth. (L.) Perhaps obsolete. [Rich-ardson cites an example from Sir T. Elyot, where levigate = lightened, from Lat. leuigare, to lighten, which from leuis, light ; see Levity. But this is quite another word.] 'When use hath levigated the organs, and made the way so smooth and easie; ' Barrow, vol. iii. ser. 9 (R.) = Lat. leuigatus, pp. of linigare, to make smooth. = Lat. line, stem of linis, smooth; with suffix -ig- weakened from ag-ere, to drive. The Lat. leuis is cognate with Gk.  $\lambda eios$ , smooth. Der. levigat-ion.

LEVITE, one of the tribe of Levi. (L., -Gk., - Heb.) In A. V. Lu x. 32. - Lat. Lewita, Lu. x. 32. - Gk. Acutrys, Lu. x. 32. Formed with suffix -rys from Aevt, Rev. vii. 7. - Heb. Levi, one of the sons of Jacob. Der. Levit-i-c-us, Levit-i-c-al.

LEVITY, lightness of weight or of conduct. (L.) In Shak. All's Well, i. 2. 35. Not a French word, but formed by analogy LIBERAL, generous, candid, free, noble-minded. [+] LEWD, ignorant, base, licentious. (E.) Contracted for leved. M. E. leved, Chaucer, C. T. 576. = A. S. leveed, adj. lay, i.e. be-longing to the laity; 'beet leveed fole' = the lay-people, Ælfric's Homilies, ed. Thorpe, ii. 74, l. 17. The word thus originally merely meant 'be laity' been a meant is originally merely meant 'the laity,' hence the untaught, ignorant, as opposed to the clergy. The phrase lered and lewed - clergy and laity, taught and untaught, is not uncommon ; see P. Plowman, B. iv. 11. B. The form lawed is a pp., and it can only be the pp. of the verb lawar, of which one sense was to weaken, debilitate, enfectle, so that the orig. sense was 'feeble;' a sense which appears again in the comp. iléwed, feeble (Lye). The word geléwed (which is merely another spelling of geléwed or léwed, the prefix ge-making no difference) is used to translate the Lat. debilitatum (enfeebled) in Exod. xxii. 10, 14; where Grein (unnecessarily and without any authority) has substi-tuted gelefed in place of the reading in Thwaites' edition. Cf. lenus "Lat. inopia, Ps. 1xxvii, 9, ed. Spelman. The change of sense from 'feeble' or 'weak' to 'ignorant, untaught,' causes no diffi-culty. Y. The more usual sense of lawan is to betray; see Matt. xxvi, 15, 16; and Ettmüller's A.S. Dict., p. 169. It is cognate with Goth lewjan, to betray, Mark, xiv. 44, John, xviii. 5; which is a mere derivative of Goth. lew, an occasion, opportunity (hence opportunity to betray), used to translate the Gk. dooput) in Rom. vii. 8, 11, 2 Cor. v. 12, Gal. v. 13. 8. Thus the train of thought can 8. Thus the train of thought can be deduced in the order following, viz. opportunity, opportunity to betray, betrayal, enfeeblement, ignorance, baseness, vileness, licen-tiousness. ¶ It may be added that any connection with the A.S. leod, M.E. lede, people, is absolutely out of the question. a. The etymology is disguised by a change both of O. H. G.) sense and usage. We now say 'a liege vassal,' i. e. one bound to his lord; it is easy to see that this sense is due to a false etymology which connected the word with Lat. ligatus. bound, pp. of ligare, to  $\beta$ . But the fact is, that the older phrase bind; see Ligament. B. But the fact is, that the older phrase was 'a liege lord,' and the older sense 'a free lord,' in exact contra-diction to the popular notion. Y. The popular notion even cor-rupted the spelling; the M. E. spelling lege or liege being sometimes altered to lige or lyge. The phrase 'my lege man' occurs twice, and 'my lege men' once, in Will. of Palerne, 1174, 2663, 3004. The ex-pression 'onre lyge lord' occurs in Rob. of Glouc. p. 457, 1.7, and in Chaucer, C. T. 12271 (Six-text, C. 337, where the MSS. have lige, lege, liege). In Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat, v. 165, we find both the old spelling and the old sense. 'Bot and Liff in lege nonita' - but iff corbind ; see Ligament. spelling and the old sense. 'Bot and I lif in lege pouste' = but if I survive in free and undisputed sovereignty or power. - O. F. lige, 'liege, leall, or loyall; Prince lige, a liege lord; Seigneur lige, the same;' Cot. Also (better) spelt liege in the 12th cent. (Littre.) - O. H. G. ledec, ledic, also lidic, lidig (mod. G. ledig), free, unfettered, free from all obligations. The expression ' ligius homo, quod Teutonice dicitur ledigman' occurs A. D. 1253; Ducange. 'A liege lord' seems to have been a lord of a free band; and his lieges, though serving under him, were privileged men, free from all other obligations; their name being due to their freedom, not to their service. B. Further : the O. H. G. lidic is, properly, free of one's way, free to travel where one pleases, from O. H. G. lidam, to go, depart, experience, take one's way; cognate with A.S. liban, to go, travel. Also, the cognate Icel. lib.gr, ready, free, is from Icel. liba, to travel; see Lead (1). For further information on this difficult word, see Diez, Scheler, and Littré; and the O. Du. ledig, free, in Kilian. Some have ob-served that the O. Du. spelling of leee for ledig throws an additional light upon the word; to which may be further added that the M. E. spelling lege is of some importance. Diez and Scheler, who incline to the derivation given above, would (I should suppose) have been confirmed in their opinion had they known that form. 'Leechevt [ = ledigheid] is moeder van alle quaethede' = idleness is mother of all vices; O. Du. Proverb, cited in Oudemans. Ducange's attempt to connect the word with Low Lat. litus, a kind of vassal, is a failure ; and all other attempts are worse.

LIEGER, LEIGER, an ambassador; see Ledger.

LIEN, a legal claim, a charge on property. (F., -L.) A legal word; not in Todd's Johnson; preserved as a law term from olden times. - F. lien, 'a band, or tye, ... anything that fasteneth or fet-tereth;' Cot. - Lat. ligamen, a band, tie. - Lat. ligare, to tie; see Ligament.

Du. lijf, the body. <math>\beta$ . All from Teut. base LIBA, life; body. Cf. Du. lijf, the body.  $\beta$ . All from Teut. base LiBA, life; Fick, iii. 271. This sb. is a derivative from Teut. base LIB, to remain, occurring in Icel. lifa, to be left, to remain, to live, A.S. lifian, to be remaining, to live; O. H. G. liban, lipan, only used in the comp. belikan, M. H. G. beliken, G. bleiken, to remain, be left.  $\gamma$ . Perhaps the sense 'remain' arose from that of 'to cleave ;' and thus life may be connected with Lithuanian lipti, to cleave, stick, Skt. lip, to anoint, smear, Gk. dAsiqesu, to anoint; the form of the European root being LIP; Fick, i. 754. Dor. life-blcod, life-boat, life-sestate, life-guard, q. v., life-hold, life-insurance, &c ; also life-les, life-less-ly, life-less-ness, life-long. Also live, live-ly, live-lihood, live-

LIFEGUARD, a body-guard. (Hybrid; E. and F.) 'The Cherethites were a kind of lifeguard to king David; 'Fuller, Pisgah Sight of Palestine, ed. 1650, p. 217. From Life and Guard. ¶ See Trench, Eng. Past and Present. The word is not borrowed from the G. leibgarde, a body-guard; and it is much to the purpose to observe that, if it were so, it would make no difference; for the G. leib is the G. spelling of the word which we spell life, despite the in sense. The M. H. G. lip meant 'life' as well as 'body.' man, B. xvii. 64.

332 LIEGE. (from the same root) love, leave (3). lib-eral, lib-erate, lib-5 LIFELONG, Lifelong a life-time. (E.) Also spelt livelong, ertine, lib-idinous; also de-liver; perhaps clever. T.TERGE faithful, subject, true, bound by feudal tenure. (F., -T.TERGE faithful, subject, true, bound by feudal tenure. (F., -US and is, in fact, a mere modern revival of the orig. form of livelong, the store true form it as to be the orig. form of livelong, the store true form of livelong. and is, in fact, a if it as to sense.

differentiated 1701 elevate, raise. LIFT (1), to elevate, raise. (Scand.) M. E. liften, to raise; Prompt. Parv. p. 303; P. Plowman, B. v. 359; Havelok, 1028; Prompt. Parv. P. J. Flowman, B. V. 359; Flavelon, 1020; spelt leften (leffienn), Ormulum, 2658, 2744, 2755, 6141, 7528, &c. The orig. sense is to raise aloft, to exalt into the air. - Icel. lypta (pronounced lyfta), to lift; from loft, the air. + Dan. lofte, to lift; from loft, a loft, a cock-loft, orig. the air.' + Swed. lyfta, to lift; from loft, a loft, garret, orig. the air.' Thus lift is a mere deriv. of from loft, a loft, garret, orig. the art. Loft, q.v. The i=y, mutation of w (o). LIFT (2), to steal. (E.) 'But if night-robbers lift [steal from] the well-stored hive;' Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 228, l. 916. We have the focurs in Shak., Troil. i. 2, 129. This verb is unconnected with the verb above, though doubtless early confused with it. Strictly, it should be liff, the -t denoting the agent, and rightly employed in the sb. only. We still speak of 'a shop-lifter.' An E. word, but only preserved in Gothic, Gk., and Latin. Cf. Goth. Alifan, to steal, 'to liff,' Matt. vi. 19, Mk. x. 19; Lu. xviii. 20; whence the sb. Aliftus (= hliftus), a thief, John, x. I.  $\beta$ . The Goth. hlifan is exactly equivalent to the cognate Lat. clepere, to steal; and Goth. hliftus = Gk. «Aénrys, a thief, connected with «Aénreu» (base #Aem-), to steal; the form of the root being KLAP-KARP.

LIGAMENT, a band, the membrane connecting the moveable bones. (F., -L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627; and in Cotgrave. - F. ligament, 'a ligament, or ligature; 'Cot. - Lat. ligamentum, a tie, band. - Lat. ligare, to tie; with suffix -mentum. Root uncertain. Der. ligament-al, ligament-ous. From Lat. ligare we have also ligature, liable, lictor, lien, ally, alligation.

LIGATURE, a bandage. (F.,-L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627, and in Cotgrave. - F. ligature, 'a ligature, tie, band; 'Cot. - Lat. ligatura, a binding, bandage; properly fem. of fut. part. of ligare, to bind; see Ligament.

LIGHT (1), illumination. (E.) M. E. light, Chaucer, C. T. 1989, 1991. – A. S. ledht, Grein, ii. 177; cf. lýhtan, lihtan, to shine, id. ii. 200. [The vowel i = A.S. i = y, due to mutation of e = Goth. iu.] + Du. licht. + G. licht, O. H. G. linkta. + Goth. linkatk, light.  $\beta$ . Observe that the t is a mere suffix; A. S. leoh-t = O. H. G. link-ta = B. Ob-Goth. linh-ath; thus the base is LUH, to shine, Fick, iii. 274. y. Neglecting the final t, we have cognate words in Icel. ljós (= liuh-sa), light, Icel. logi, a flame (whence Lowland Scotch lowe, a flame), Lat. lux (= luc-sa), light, Lat. lumen (= luc-men), light, lune. (-luc-na), the moon; with numerous connected terms, such as Lat. lacubrare, lucus, lustrare, illustris, &c. So also Gk. Aeve-6s, white, bright, Xuxros (= Aueros), a light, lamp, &c. 8. All from KUK, to shine ; cf. Skt. ruch, to shine, whence ruck, light, splendour, the exact equivalent of Lowland Scotch lowe. Der. light house. Also light, verb, M. E. lighten, Chaucer, C. T. 2428, A.S. lýhtan, líhtan, Grein, ii. 200; whence light-er, sb. Also light-en (1), q. v., light-ning, q. v. Connected words are luc-id, luc-i-fer, e-luc-idate, il-lu-minate, lu-nar, lu-natic, luc-ubration, lea (q. v.), lustre, il-lu-strate, il-lu-strious, lu-minous, lynx, &c

LIGHT (2), active, not heavy, unimportant. (E.) M. E. light, Chaucer, C. T. 9087; lightly, adv., id. 1463. - A. S. leuht, adj., Grein, ii. 176. Here ed = 1; and leoke = likt. + Du. ligt. + Icel. lettr. + Dan. let. + Swed. lätt. + Goth. leikts, 2 Cor. i. 17. + G. leicht, M. H. G. likte. O. H. G. lihti, liht. O. H. G. likti, likt.  $\beta$ . The t is a suffix (= -ta), and the base like appears to be equivalent to link, the long i being due to loss of ; also, the form link is a nasalised form for lak, answering to the Gk. Lax-, appearing in &-Lax-bs, light. 'Linta stands, according to rule, for link-ta, and comes from the same root as Lithuanian Langwas, light, Church Slavonic ligükü, light [Russ. légkü], Gk. ε-λαχ-is and Skt. lagku, light; 'Fick, iii. 264. To which may be added Lat. leuis, light. usually supposed to stand for leguis, from the Y. The common ground-form is LAGHU or same base. RAGHU, light, as evidenced by the preceding forms, esp. by the Gk. and Skt.; to which add Skt. raghu, the Vedic form for laghu; Benfey, p. 753: 8. All from the VRAGH, to spring, run, hasten; appearing in Skt. rangk, to move swiftly, langk, to jump over, rank, to move swiftly; Irish lingim, I spring, skip, bound. See Fick, i. 190. Thus the orig. sense is 'springy,' active, nimble; from which the other senses are easily deduced. Der. light-ly, lightness, lights, q.v., light-fingered, light-headed, light-heatted, light-minded, &c.; light-some, Rom. of the Rose, 1.936; light-some-ness; light-en (2), q. v.; light-er, q. v. From the same root we have (from Lat. lew-is) lev-ant, lev-er, lev-ity, lev-y, al-lev-iate, &c. And see Long.

LIGHT (3), to settle, alight, descend. (E.) M. E. lighten, likten; 'adun heo gunnen lihten' = they alighted down; Layamon, 26337; 'he lighte a-doun of lyard' = he lighted down from his horse, P. Plow- $\beta$ . The sense is to relieve a horse of his burden, and the word is identical with M. E. lighten in the sense of to relieve ? ligure, which is a precious stone unknown in modern mineralogy; of a burden. The derivation is from the adj. light, not heavy; see Light (2). Y. When a man aligk's from a horse, he not only relieves the horse of his burden, but completes the action by descending or alighting on the earth; hence light came to be used lighted on a heaven-kissing hill; 'Hamlet, iii. 4. 59; 'this murder-ous shaft Hath yet not lighted;' Macb. ii. 3. 148. Hence this verb is really a doublet of Lighten (2), q. v., as well as of Lighten (3).

Der. light-er, q. v. And see Alight, verb. LIGHTEN (1), to illuminate, flash. (E.) The force of the final -en is somewhat dubious, but appears to be due rather to the intransitive than to the transitive form. 1. Intrans. to shine as lightning; 'it lightens,' Romeo, ii. 2. 120. M. E. lightenen, Prompt. Parv. p. 304; more correctly, lightnen, best shown by the derived word lightn-ing. In this word lightn-en the n gives the word a neuter sense, the sense being 'to become light;' this is clearly evidenced by the use of the same letter in Mœso Gothic, which has full-n-an, to become full, and bund-n-an, to become unbound; see note on Goth, verbs in nan in Skeat's Goth. Dict., p. 303. 2. Trans. The trans. use is in Shak. Hen. VIII, ii. 3. 79. Titus And., ii. 3. 227, with the sense 'to illuminate.' This is really no more than the intrans. verb incorrectly used. The correct trans. form is to light, as in: 'the eye of heaven that lights the lower world ;' Rich. II, iii. 2. 38. This is the M. E. lighten, lighted (where the final -m is merely the mark of the infin. mood, often dropped); Chaucer, C. T. 2428. - A. S. leóhtan, to illuminate; Grein, ii. 178.

- A.S. lookt, light; see Light (1). Der. lightn-ing. LIGHTEN (2), to make lighter, alleviate. (E.) The final -en is merely formative, as in strength-en, length-en, short-en, weak-en. It is intended to have a causal force, though, curiously enough, its original sense was such as to make the verb intrans, or passive, as noticed under Lighton (1). The true form should rather have been to light merely, as it answers to M.E. lighten, lighte (in which the final en is merely the mark of the infin. mood, and is often dropped). 'Lygh'eyn, or make weyhtys [weights] more esy, lightyn burdens, heuy weightis, Allevio; Prompt. Parv. p. 304. 'To lihten ower heaued '= to take the weight [of hair] off your head; Ancren Riwle, p. 422. From the adj. light ; see Light (2), and Light (3). So also Dan. lette, to lighten, from let, light.

LIGHTEN (3), to descend, settle, alight. (E.) 'O Lord, let thy mercy lighten upon us; 1 c Louin, a. Light (3), q.v. 'fiat'). Here lighten is a mere extension of Light (3), q.v. In Skinner, ed. thy mercy lighten upon us;' Te Deum, in the Prayer-book (Lat.

LIGHTER, a boat for unlading ships. (Du.) In Skinner, ed. 1671; and in Pope, Dunciad, ii. 287. Not really E., but borrowed from Du. ligter, a lighter (Sewel); spelt lichter in Skinner. Hence also lighter-man, from Du. ligterman, a lighter-man (Sewel). - Du. Light, light (not heavy); see Light (2). Thus the sense is the same as if the word had been purely English; it means 'unloader;' from the use made of these vessels. Der. lighter-man (as above); lighter-age. [†] LIGHTNING, an illuminating flash. (E.) See Lighton (1).

LIGHTS, lungs. (E.) M.E. lightes, Destruction of Troy, 10705; a likta = the lights, Layamon, 6499, answering to A. S. Sá liktan, i. e. the light things. So called from their lightness. So also Russ. legkoe, lights; from legkii, light. See Light (2). LIGN-ALOES, a kind of tree. (Hybrid; L. and Gk.) In Numbers, xxiv. 6 (A. V.) 'A kind of odoriferous Indian tree, usually identified with the Aquilaria Agallochum which supplies the aloes-wood of commerce. Our word is a partial translation of the Lat. lignum aloes, Gk. {v/aλóŋ. The bitterness of the aloe is pro-verbial; Bible Wordbook, ed. Eastwood and Wright. Chaucer has: 'As bitter...as is ligne aloes, or galle;' Troilus, iv. 1137.-Lat. lignum, wood; and aloës, of the aloe. gen. case of aloë, the aloe, a word borrowed from Gk.  $d\lambda \delta \eta$ , the aloe.  $\P$  On the complete difference between alos and alos-wood, see note to Alos. And see Ligneous. LIGNEOUS, woody, wooden, wood-like. (L.) 'Of a more ligneous nature;' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 504. Formed by mere change of Lat. -us into E. -ous (as in ingenuous, arduous, and many others), from Lat. ligneus, wooden. - Lat. lignum, wood ; a word of disputed origin. Der. from crude form ligni- (for ligno-) we have ligni-fer-ous = wood-producing (from ferre, to bear); ligni-fy = to turn to wood; and from the stem lign- has been formed lign-ite, coal retaining the texture of wood, where the suffix -ite is Gk. LIGULE, a strap-shaped petal. (L.) A mod. botanical term; also applied to the flat part of the leaf of a grass. - Lat. ligwla, a little tongue, a tongue-shaped extremity; also spelt lingula. Dimin. of lingun. a tongue; see Lingual.

LIGURE, a precious stone. (L.,-Gk.) In the Bible, A. V., Ex. xxviii, 19, xxxix, 12. 'Our translators have followed the Septuagint the utmost border of the disk or body of the sun or moon, when Aryborov and Vulgate ligurius in translating the Heb. leshem by Bible Wordbook, by Eastwood and Wright. - Lat. ligurius. - Gk. λιγύριον, also spelt λιγγούριον, λιγκούριον, λυγκούριον, a sort of gem; acc. to some, a reddish amber, acc. to others, the hyacinth (Liddell). LIKE (1), similar, resembling. (E.) M. E. lyk, lik; Chaucer, C. T. 414, 1973. – A. S. lic, in comp. ge-lic, like, in which form it is common; Grein, i. 422. The prefix ge-was long retained in the weakened form i- or y-; Chaucer has yliche as an adv., C. T. 2528. + Du. ge-lijk, like; where ge- is a prefix. + Icel. likr, glikr, like; where  $g' = ge_{*}$ , prefix + Dan. lig. + Swed. lik. + Goth. ga-leiks, Mark, vii. 8.+G. gleick, M. H. G. ge-lich, O. H. G. ka-lik.  $\beta$ . All from Teut. base GA-LIKA, adj., signifying 'resembling in form,' and derived from the Teut. sb. LIKA, a form, shape, appearing in A.S. lic, a form, body (whence Lich-gate), O. Sax. lik, Icel. lik, Goth. leik, the body, &c. Hence the form of the Teut. base is LIK, perhaps with the sense ' to resemble ;' Fick, iii. 268. y. A further haps with the sense to reschible; Fich, in soc. trace of the word perhaps appears in Gk.  $\tau\eta$ - $\lambda kr-os$ , such, of such an age, Lat. ta-li-s, such, Russ. to-li-s, is uch, Lat. que-li-s, of what sort. Der. like-ly, M.E. likely, Chaucer, C. T. 1174; like-li-kood; M. E. likliked, id. 13526; like-li-ness, M. E. liklines, id. 8272; like-ness, M. E. liknes, P. Plowman, B. i. 113, formerly i-liknes, Ancren Riwle, p. 230, from A.S. ge-licnes; like-wise, short for in like wise (see Wise, sb.); like (2), q. v.; like, sb.; lik-en, q. v. Gr All adjectives ending in -ly have adopted this ending from A.S. -lie, lit. 'like ;' all adverbs in -ly take this suffix from A.S. -lice, the same word with the adverbial final -e added. The word like-ly = like-like, a reduplication.

LIKE (2), to approve, be pleased with. (E.) The mod. sense is evolved by an alteration in the construction. The M. E. verb lyken (or liken) signified 'to please,' and was used impersonally. We have, in fact, changed the phrase it likes me into I like, and so on the unit Path and the phrase it likes me into I like, and so on throughout. Both senses are in Shak.; see Temp. iii. 1. 43. Hamlet, v. 2. 276. Chaucer has only the impers. verb. And if you liketh --and if it please you; C. T. 779; still preserved in the mod. phrase 'if you like.' 'That oughte liken you' = that ought to please you; id. 13866. - A. S. Ilcian, to please, rarely lican; Grein, ii. 182. The lit. sense is to be like or suitable for. - A.S. lic, ge-lic, like; see Like (1).+ Du. lijken, to be like, resemble, seem, suit; from ge-lijk, like. + Icel. lika, to like; from likr, like. + Goth. leikan, ga-leikan, like, + Icel. iwa, to like; Irom iwr, like, + Ooth, estant, gottaken, to please; from ga-leiks, like, + M. H. G. lichen, ge-lichen, to be like; from ge-lich, like (G. gleich). Der. lik-ing, M. E. likinge, P. Plowman, B. xi. 20, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 271. Also well-liking = well-pleasing. Ps. xcii. 13, Prayer-book.

LIKEN, to consider as similar, to compare. (Scand.) M. E. liknen. 'The water is likned to the worlde; 'P. Plowman, B. viii. 39, A. ix. 34. 'And lyknez hit to heuen lyste' = and likens it to the light of heaven; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 500. But the true sense is probably intransitive, as in the case of Goth. verbs in -nan, and several Swed. verbs in -na; and the peculiar use and form of the word is Scand., not E. It appears to be intrans. in Allit. Poems, B. 1064. - Swed. likna, (1) to resemble, (2) to liken ; from lik, like. + Dan. ligne, (1) to resemble, (2) to liken; from lig, like. See Like (1). LILAC, a flowering shrub. (Span., - Turkish, - Pers.) Spelt lilach in Kersey, ed. 1715. - Span. lilac, lila, a lilac. Of Oriental origin. - Turk. leilaq, a lilac; Zenker's Turk. Dict. p. 797, col. 3. Borrowed from the Pers. Iilaj, Iilanj, or Iilang, of which the proper sense is the indigo-plant; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1282. Here the initial I stands for n, and the above forms are connected with Pers. nil, the indigo-plant; whence nilak (dimin. form), blueish; Rich. Dict. pp. 1619, 1620. Cf. Skt. nila, dark-blue, nili, the indigo-plant. [+] LILY, a bulbous plant. (L., -Gk.) M. E. lilie; Chaucer, C. T. 15555, 15559. - A. S. lilie, pl. lilian; Matt. vi. 28; Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Herbarum. - Lat. lilium; Matt. vi. 28. - Gk. Aelpior, a lily; the change of Gk. p to Lat. I being quite in accordance with usual ¶ The more usual Gk. name is spiror, as in Matt. vi. 28. laws. Der. lili-ac-e-ous = Lat. liliaceus.

LIMB (1), a jointed part of the body, member, branch of a tree. (E.) M. E. lim, pl. limmes; Chaucer, C. T. 4881, 9332.-A. S. lim, pl. leomu; Grein, ii. 188. + Icel. limr. + Dan. and Swed. lem. We also find Icel. lim, foliage of a tree, pl. limar, boughs; limi, a rod; Dan. lime, a twig.  $\beta$ . The orig. sense seems to have been a twig, a branch broken off, fragment; from A.S. lemian or lemman, to oppress, orig. to break, Grein, ii. 167; cf. Icel. lemja, to beat, break (=slang E. lam, to thrash); Russ. lomate, lomite, to break, whence lom', fragments, débris. From Teut. base LAM, to break; see Lame. See Fick, iii. 267. Der. limber (2), strong-limbed, &c.

LIMB (2), the edge or border of a sextant, &c. (L.) 'Limb, in mathematics, the outermost border of an astrolabe; . . in astronomy, LIMBECK.

LIMBECK, the same as Alembic, q.v. LIMBECK, the same as Alembic, q.v. LIMBECK, the same as Alembic, q.v. LIMBER (1), flexible, pliant. (E.) Not found very early. 'With limber vows;' Wint. Tale, i. 2. 47. Richardson quotes an earlier and better example. 'Ne yet the bargeman, that doth rowe With long and limber oare;' Turbervile, A Myrrour of the Fall of Pride. Closely allied to limp, flexible, and similarly formed from the same Tent. base LAP, to hang loosely down; the p being weakened to b for ease of pronunciation. The suffix or is adjectival, as in bittor, fair (= A. S. fag.er), &c.; see Mätzner, Engl. Gramm. i. 435; it answers to the Aryan suffix -ra. See Limp (1).

LIMBER (2), part of a gun-carriage consisting of two wheels and a shaft to which horses are attached. (Scand.) Taken up from prov. E. 'Limbers, thills or shafts (Berkshire); Limmers, a pair of shafts (North); ' Grose's Prov. Eng. Glossary, ed. 1790. It is obvious that b is excrescent, and the form limmers is the older one.  $\beta$ . Further, limm-er-s is a double plural, like child-r-en (=child-r-en). The true orig. singular is limm, a shaft or thill of a cart. preserved only in the old sb. limm-er, a thill-er, a thill-horse, given in Sherwood's Index to Cotgrave; he translates it into F. by limonier, but the resemblance between the words is purely accidental; see F. limon in Littré. [That is, it is accidental unless the F. limon, a word of somewhat doubtful origin, be orig. Scandinavian.] The pl. form limm-er is explained by the etymology. - Icel. limar, boughs, branches, pl. of lim, foliage, a word closely related to limr, a limb. The latter word is cognate with A.S. lim, a limb, also used in the sense of a 'branch of a tree' at the earliest period; see Beowulf, ed. Grein, 1. 97. See Limb (1). ¶ We may conclude that the original cart-shafts were merely rough branches. Der. limber, veb. LIMBO, LIMBUB, the borders of hell. (L.) In Shak. All's Well, v. 3. 261. The orig. phrase was in limbo, Com. Errors, iv. 2. 32; or more fully, in limbo patrum, Hen. VIII, v. 4. 67. - Lat. limbo (governed by the prep. in), abl. case of limbus, a border; see Limb (2). 'The limbus patrum, in the language of churchmen, was the place bordering on hell, where the saints of the Old Testament remained till Christ's descent into hell; Schmidt. B. The word limbo came to be used as a nominative all the more readily, because the Ital. word is limbo, derived (not from the ablative, but) from the acc. limbum of the same Lat. word. Hence Milton's 'limbo large and broad;' P. L. iii. 495. But it began its career in E. as a Latin word. Doublet, limb (2). LIME (1), viscous substance, bird-lime, mortar, oxide of calcium.

(E.) The orig. sense is 'viscous substance.' M. E. lym, liim, lyme. 'Lyme, to take with byrdys [to catch birds with], viscus; Lyme, or mortare, Cals;' Prompt. Parv. p. 305. And see Chaucer, C. G. lim, bird-lime. + Lat. limus, mud, slime.  $\beta$ . Formed with suffixed -m (= Aryan -ma) from the base LI, to pour, smear, appearing in Lat. linere, to smear, daub, Russ. life, to pour, flow, Skt. li, to melt, to adhere; allied to Skt. ri, to lite, to pour, flow, Skt. 14, to meit, to achere; and to bat. ..., to distil. - / RI, to pour, distil. 'Linden-tree or Line-tree;' Kersey, ed. 1715. 'In the line-growe' (modern edd. lime-growe); Shak. Temp. v. 10. The change from line to lime does not seem to be older than about A. D. 1700. The form lime is in Balley's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. β. Again, line is a corruption of lind, the older name, by loss of final d. See Linden. Der. lime-tree.

LIMUS (3), a kind of citron. (F., -Pers.) 'Lime, a sort of small lemmon;' Phillips, ed. 1706. - F. lime, a lime; Hamilton. - Pers. limú, a lemon, citron; Rich. Dict. p. 1282. Also called limún; see Lemon. Dozy gives Arab. límak, a lime; made from a collective form lim.

LIMIT, to assign a boundary; a boundary. (F.,-L.) The verb is in older use in E. than the sb. limit, though really the younger word. M. E. limiten, to limit, 'To lymyte or assigne us; 'Chaucer, Tale of Melibeus, Six-text, B. 2956. [Hence the sb. limit-or, Chaucer, C. LIMP (1), flaccid, flexible, pliant, weak. (E.) 'Limp, limber, supple;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Scarce in books, but known to our mod. E. dialects, and doubtless an old E. word. A nasalised form from the base LIP, which is a weakened form of Teut. LAP, to hang loosely down, whence the sb. lap, a flap; see Lap (2).  $\beta$ . Allied words are Icel. limpa, limpness, weakness; Icel. Dict. Appendix, p. 776; 'Swiss. lampig, lampelig, faded, loose, flabby, hanging,' and similar words, cited in Wedgwood. Also Bavarian lampecht, flaccid, lampende Ohren, hanging ears (answering to E. lop-ears, as in ' a lopeared rabbit'); from the verb lampen, to hang loosely down; Schmeller, Bav. Dict. 1474. Also Skt. lamba, depending, lambana, falling; from the verb lamb, to fall, hang downwards. y. Without Y. Without the nasal we find W. lleipr, flaccid, flabby, llibin, limber, soft, drooping, llipa, limp, flabby. Thus the base is (as was said) the Teut. LAP, to hang down. –  $\sqrt{RAB}$ , RAMB, to hang down; cf. Skt. ramb, to hang down, Vedic form of lamb cited above; Fick, i. 192. Dor. limp-ness; cf. limber (1). LIMP (2), to walk lamely. (E.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. iii. 2.,

130. Not easily traced earlier, and the orig. form is uncertain. Probably the same as A.S. lemp-healt, limp-halting, halting, lame, given in Lye, with a reference that I cannot verify; the word wants confirmation.  $\beta$ . Such confirmation appears to some extent in M.H.G. limphin, to limp; whence lempeil, hastening in a limping manner. Possibly connected with Limp (1), rather than (as some think) with Lame.  $\P$  We also find Low G. lumpen, lumschen, to limp (Bremen Wörterbuch); Dan. dial. lumsa, to limp, hobble (Aasen); Swed. dial. loma, lomma, to walk with heavy steps, lumra, to limp. Note also prov. E. lumper, lumber, to stumble, lummack, to tumble (Suffolk); Halliwell. These words can hardly be connected with limp, on account of the difference of the vowel. They seem rather to go with Lump, q. v. [†] LIMPET, a small shell-fish, which cleaves to rocks. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) Cotgrave explains O. F. berdin by the shellfish called a lympyne or a lempet.' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxii. c. 9, translates Lat. mituli by 'limpins.' There is a missing link here, but there can be small doubt that the word came to us, through a F. form lembe small doubt that the word came to us, along a r. For the tempette\* or lempine\* (not recorded); from the Lat. lepad., crude form of lepas, a limpet. Cf. Span. lepada, a limpet. [The insertion of m causes no difficulty; cf. F. lambrucke, the wild vine, from Lat. labrusca.] = Gk.  $\lambda e \pi a$ , a shell-fish, limpet; allied to  $\lambda e \pi i$ s, a scale; see Leper, Leaf.

LIMPID, pure, clear, shining. (F., -L.) In Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674. - F. limpide, 'clear, bright;' Cot. - Lat. limpidus, limpid, clear. Allied to Lat. lympha, pure water; see Lymph. B. Further allied to Gk.  $\lambda a \mu \pi \rho \delta s$ , bright,  $\lambda \dot{a} \mu \pi \epsilon i \nu$ , to shine. From a base LAP. to shine; cf. Lithuanian lepsnd, flame, Old Prussian lopis, flame, cited by Fick, i. 750. Der. limpid-i-19, limpid-ness. LINCH-PIN, a pin to fasten the wheel on to the axle. (E.) Formerly also spelt lins-pin; see Kersey, ed. 1715; Coles, ed. 1684; Skinner, ed. 1671. [Linek appears to be a corrupted form, obviously by confusion with link.] The pl. lines in Will. of Shoreham's Poems, p. 109, seems to mean 'axles.' -A. S. lynis, an axle-tree, in a gloss, Wright's Voc. ii. 7.+Du. lans, a lunch-pin; whence lanzen, to put the linch-pin to a wheel + Low G. Iwnes, a linch-pin; Bremen Wörterbuch. + G. Iwnes, a linch-pin. β. Cf. also Dan. Iundesikke, Iunstikke, Iuntestik, a linch-pin; O. Swed. Iunta, Iuntsticka, a linch-pin (Ihre); M. H. G. lun, lune, O. H. G. lund, a linch pin. y. The orig. sense of lins (linck) was perhaps a rounded bar, hence, an axle; cf. Gael. lunn, the handle of an oar, a staff; Irish lung, the handle of an oar; and perhaps Icel. Munnr, a wooden roller for launching ships.

LIND, LINDEN, the lime-tree. (E.) Here (as in the case of asp-en) the true sb. is lind, whence lind-en was formed as an adjective, with the suffix en as in gold-en, birch-en, beech-en. The true name is lind, or, in longer phrase, linden tree. Lind was in time corrupted to line, and later to lime; see Lime (2). M. E. lind, lynd; Chaucer, C. T. 2924. - A. S. lind, Grein, ii. 128. Seno vel tilia, lind; 'Ælfric's Gloss, Nomina Arborum. Hence the adj. linder Grein, ii. 189), as in linden bord = the linden shield, shield made of ind. + Du. linde, linde-boom. + Icel. lind. + Dan. lind, lind-træ. + Swed. lind. +G. linde, O. H. G. lintá. β. The wood is white and smooth, and much used for carved work; indeed the most usual meaning of A.S. lind is 'a shield,' i.e. one made of linden wood. The word is to be connected, accordingly, with G. gelind, gelinde, linds, gentle, pliant; see Lithe. LINE, a thread, thin cord, stroke, row, rank, verse. (L.; or F.,- L.) In all senses, the word is of Lat. origin; the only difference is that, in some senses, the word was borrowed from Lat. directly, in other senses through the French. We may take them separately, as follows. 1. Line = a thin cord or rope, a thread, rope of a ship. M. E. lyne; P. Plowman, B. v. 355. - A.S. line, a cord; Grein, ii. 189. - Lat. linea, a string of hemp or flax, hempen cord; properly the fem. of adj. lineus, made of hemp or flax. - Lat. linum, flax. Prob. rather cognate with than borrowed from Gk. Airor, flax. Root unknown. [The G. lein, &c. are probably borrowed from Latin.] 2. Line = a verse, rank, row; Chaucer, C. T. 1553; P. Plowman, B. vii. 110. -F. ligne, a line. - Lat. linea, a line, stroke, mark, line of descent ; the same word as the above. Der. line, verb, in various senses; to line garments is properly to put linen inside them (see Linen); also lin-ing; lineal, q. v., linear, q. v., lineage, q. v., lineament, q. v. And see linnet, linseed, linsey woolsey, lint, de-lineate.

LINEAGE, race, family, descent. (F., - L.) M.E. linage (without the medial e), Chaucer, C. T. 1552; Romance of Partenay, 5033; lignage, Gower, C. A. i. 344. – F. lignage, 'a lineage;' Cot. [Here E. me=F. gn.] Made with suffix -age (= Lat. -aticum) from F. ligna, a line. – Lat. linea, a line; see Line.

LINEAL, belonging to a line. (L.) In Spenser, F. Q. iv. 11. 12. 'Lineally hir kinred by degrees;' Lidgate, Story of Thebes, pt. iii. ed. 1561, p. 373, col. 1. - Lat. linealis, belonging to a line. - Lat. linea, a line: see Line. Der. lineal-ly. Doublet, linear.

LINEAMENT, a feature. (F.,-L.) 'In the liniamentes and fauor of his visage;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 61 b. – F. lineament, 'a lineament or feature;' Cot. – Lat. lineamentum, a drawing, delineation, feature. - Lat. lineare, to draw a line; with suffix -mentum. Lat. linea, a line ; see Line.

LINEAR, consisting of lines. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. linearis, belonging to a line. - Lat. linea; see Line. Doublet, lineal, which is an older word. Der. linear-ly.

Doubles, inteal, which is an older word. Der, intear-ly. LINEN, cloth made of flax. (L.) Used as a sb., but really an adj., with adj. suffix -en as in wooll-en, gold-en; the orig. sb. was lin, preserved in lin-seed. M. E. lin, sb., linen, adj. 'The sb. is rare. 'The bondes... That weren of ful strong lins' = the bonds that were of very strong flax; Havelok, 539. The adj. is common. 'Clothid with lynnum cloth... he lefte the lynnyn clothing;' Wyclif, Mark, xiv. 51, 52. It was also used as a sb., as now. 'In lynnem velothed' = clothed in linen : P. Plowman, B i 2 - A S. lin flax yclothed ' = clothed in linen ; P. Plowman, B. i. 3. - A. S. lin, flax, linen; in comp. lin-wedd, a linen garment; John, xiii. 5. Thence was formed the adj. linen, as in linen hragi = a linen cloth, John, xiii. 4. = Lat. linum, flax; cognate with Gk.  $\lambda$ iror, flax. See Line. And see linued, linnet.

LING (1), a kind of fish. (E.) 'Lynge, fysshe;' Palsgrave. Spelt leenge in Prompt. Parv. p. 296; and see Way's note. Spelt lenge, Havelok, l. 832. Not found in A.S., but answering to A.S. lenga, weakened form of langa, i. e. ' the long one,' definite form of lang, long; see Long. So called from its slender shape. + Du. leng, a ling; from lang, long. + Icel. langa, a ling; from langr, long. + Norweg. langa, longa (Aasen). + Swed. långa. + G. lünge, a ling; also Norweg. langa, longa (Aasen). + Swed. långa. + G. länge, a ling; also called längfisch, i.e. long fish. LING (2), heath. (Scand) 'Lynge, or heth;' Prompt. Parv. p. 305; and see Way's note. 'Dede in the lyng' = lying dead on the heath; Sir Degrevant, l. 336, in Thornton Romances, ed. Halliwell. (Not A. S.) – Icel. lyng, ling, heather; Dan. lyng. + Swed. ljung, ling, heather; Swed. dial. ling (Rietz). Root unknown. LINGER, to loiter, tarry, hesitate. (E.) 'Of lingring doutes such hope is sprong, perdie;' Surrey, Bonum est mihi, l. 10; in Tottell's Miscellany, ed. Arber, p. 31. Formed by adding the fre-quentative sufix -er or -r to the M. E. longen, to tarry; with further thinning of e to i. This M. E. verb is by no means rare. 'I nay no lenger lange' = I may no longer linger; P. Plowman, B. i. 207. no lenger lenge' = I may no longer linger; P. Plowman, B. i. 207. Cf. Will. of Paleme, 5431; Havelok, 1734. - A. S. lengan, to pro-long, put off; Grein, i. 168; formed by the usual vowel-change (of a to e) from A. S. lang, long; see Long. Cf. Icel. lengia, to lengthen, from langr, long; G. verlängern, to prolong, from lang, long; Du. lengen, to lengthen, verlengen, to prolong. LINGUAL, pertaining to the tongue. (L.) A late word, not in Todd's Johnson. Coined, as if from an adj. lingualis, from Lat. lingua, the tongue, of which the O. Lat. form was dingua (see White's Dict.); cognate with E. Tongue, q. v. Der. (from Lat.

Lingua) lingu-ist, q. v., language, q. v. LINGUIST, one skilled in languages. (L.) In Shak. Two Gent. iv. 1. 57; and in Minsheu, ed. 1627. Coined, with suffix -ist (= Lat. -ista, from Gk. -iorrya), from Lat. lingu-a, the tongue; see Lingual. Der. linguist-ic, linguist-ic-s. LINIMEENT, a salve, soft ointment. (F.,-L.) The word without a reference. However, it is easily concluded that lint was smooth, Icel. linr, smooth, soft, Lat. lentus, pliant, A.S. live [=  $\oint$  occurs 3 or 4 times in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxii. c. 21.-F. lini-lintos], gentle, pliant; see Lithe. ing-stuff, ointment. Formed, with suffix -mentum, from linere, to smear. Cf. Gk. AciBeir, to pour forth, AiBpos, dripping ; Skt. ri, to distil, ooze, drop; 11, to melt, adhere. - VRI, to distil, ooze; see Libation, Liquid, River.

LINING, a covering on the inner surface of a garment. (L.) In Shak. L. L. v. 2. 791. Formed, with E. suffix ing, from the verb to line, meaning to cover the inside of a garment with line, i. e. linen ; see Line, Linen.

LINK (1), a ring of a chain, joint. (E.) In Shak. Cor. i. 1. 73. Cf. 'Trouth [truth] and mercy linked in a chain;' Lydgate, Storie of Thebes, pt. ii (How trouth is preferred). - A. S. klence or klenca, an uncertain word in the passage cited by Grein, ii. 82; but one meaning was 'link,' as appears from the derived verb gehlencian in Cockayne's A.S. Leechdoms, ii. 343, also from the comp. sb. walhlence, a slaughter link, i. e. linked coat of mail, Grein, ii. 646. + Icel. klekkr (by assimilation for hlenkr), a link. + Dan. lænke, a chain, fetter. + Swed. länk, a link. + G. gelenk, a joint, link, ring; cf. G. leaker, to turn, bend.  $\beta$ . Closely connected with A. S. Aline, a hill, but esp. a balk or boundary, a sense still preserved in mod. provincial E. linck (see Halliwell); with which cf. O. Lat. clingere, to surround. y. The A.S. Aline may well be connected with A.S. kring, a ring; and similarly clingers may be connected with Gk. Rolnos and Lat. circus, words cognate with A.S. kring. See Ring, Circus; of which link is little else than a third form. ¶ We can hardly connect it with Lithuan. lenkti, to bend, linkus, pliant, because the A. S. & requires an initial k in Lithuanian, Der. link, verb. LINK (2), a torch. (Du.) 'A link or torch; 'Minsheu's Dict., ed. 1627. 'Links and torches;' Shak. 1 Hen. IV, iii. 3. 48. A corruption of lint, as it appears in lint-stock, old form of lin-stock; see Linstock. B. And again, lint is a corruption of lunt, by confusion with lint in the sense of scraped linen. A lant is a torch, a match, a rag for lighting a fire; see Jamieson's Scot. Dict. The word (like linstock) is borrowed from Dutch. - Du. lont, a match for a gun; whence loni-stok, 'a lint-stock;' Sewel. + Dan. lunte, a match; whence lunte-stok, a linstock. + Swed. lunta, a match, an old bad book (fit to be burnt); whence luntstake, a linstock; O. Swed. lunta, ' funis igniarius,' Ihre. Der. lin-stock.

LINNET, a small singing-bird. (F., -L.) M. E. lynet, Court of Love, ed. 1561, 5th stanza from end. - F. linotte, 'a linnet;' Cot. [So called from feeding on the seed of flax and hemp, as is clearly shewn by similar names in other languages, e.g. G. könfling, a linnet, from kanf, hemp, G. lein-finke, a linnet (cited by Wedgwood), lit. a lin-finch, flax-finch.] - F. lin, flax. - Lat. linum, flax; see Linen, ¶ The E. name is lintukite, Scotch lintqukit; see Com-Line plaint of Scotland, ed. Murray, p. 39, l. 24. From A. S. linetwige, a linnet; Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Avium. This name is also (probably) from Lat. linum, flax. So also W. Ilinos, a linnet; Ilin, flax. [+]

LINSEED, flax-seed. (Hybrid; L. and E.) M.E. lin-seed; spelt Jynne-seed in P. Plowman, C. xiii. 190; linseed (to translate O.F. lynois) in Walter de Biblesworth; Wright's Vocab. i. 156. From M. E. lin = A. S. lin, flax, borrowed from Lat. linum, flax; and E. seed. See Line, Linen, and Seed. Der. linseed-oil, linseed-cake. LINSEY-WOOLSEY, made of linen and wool mixed. (Hybrid; L. and E.) Used facetiously in Shak. All's Well, iv. 1. 13; Minsheu (ed. 1627) has: 'linsie-woolsie, i. e. of linnen and woollen. Made up from M. E. line, linen; and E. wool; with -sey as a suffix twice over. See Linen and Wool. LINSTOCK, LINTSTOCK, a stick to hold a lighted match.

(Du.) In Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 188. 'Lint-stock, a carved stick (about half a yard) with a cock at one end to hold the gunner's match, and a sharp pike at the other, to stick it anywhere; Coles' Dict., ed. 1684. - Du. lontstok, 'a lint-stock; ' Sewel. - Du. lont, a match; and stok, a stick, for which see Stock. + Dan. lunte-stok, a lint-stock; from lunte, a match, and stok, a stick, + Swed, lunt-stake; from lunta, a match, an old bad book (fit to be burnt), and stake, a stick, candlestick.  $\beta$ . The derivation of Du. low, Swed, lunta, is uncertain; but it would appear from Kilian that Du. lomp, a rag, tatter, O. Du. lompe, was also used in the same sense as lont, O. Du. lonte. And, as we find in the Teutonic languages the occasional interchange of mp with nk, nt (cf. E. hunch = hunk with hump, and link (2) with lint in lint-stock) we may perhaps suppose that O. Du. lonte, a match, rag = O. Du. lompe, a rag, tatter; and that Swed. lunta, a match = Swed. lumpor, rags (only used in the plural). See Ihre, s. v. lusse. Y. If so, we may further regard Du. lompe, a tatter, as a nasalised form of Du. lop, a remnant, shred, rag, tatter, LINTEL, the head-piece of a door or casement. (F., -L.) M. E. lintel, lyntel; Wyclif, Exod. xii. 22. – O. F. lintel (see Littré), later F. linteau, 'the lintell, or head-piece, over a door;' Cot. – Low Lat. dimin. of Lat. limes (stem limit-) a boundary, hence a border; see ¶ A similar contraction is found in Span. linde = Lat. Limit. limitem, a boundary.

LION, a large and fierce quadruped. (F., -L., -Gk.) In early use. In Layamon, 1463, we find leon in the earlier text, lion in the later. A still earlier form was leo, but this was borrowed from the Latin directly; see Leo. - O. F. leon, lion. - Lat. leonem, acc. of leo, a lion. [Hardly a Lat. word, but borrowed from Gk.] - Gk. New, Root unknown; we also find G. lowe, O. H. G. leo, lewo; a lion. Russ. lev'; Lithuanian levas, lavas; Du. leeuw; &c. Cf. Heb. labi', a lion. Der. lion-ess. As You Like It, v. 3. 115, from F. lionnesse; lion-hearted; also lion-ise, orig. to show strangers the lions which used to be kept in the Tower of London.

LIP, the muscular part forming the upper and lower parts of the mouth. (E.) M. E. lippe, Chaucer, C. T. 128, 133. – A. S. lippa, lippe. 'Labium, ufeweard lippa' = upper lip; Ælfric's Gloss., in Wright's Vocab. i. 42, col. 1. 'Labrum, nivera lippe' = nether lip; id. + Du. lip, + Dan. lübe. + Swed. läpp. + G. lippe, lefze; O. H. G. lefs, leffur. Further allied to Lat. labrum, labium, the lip; Irish lab, Gael. liob, the lip; Lithuan. lupa; Pers. lab, the lip, Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 511.  $\beta$ . The orig. sense is 'lapper,' or that which laps or sucks up; from the Teut. base LAI', to lap = Lat. base LAB, seen in lambere, to lick. See Lap (1). Der. lipp-ed; from the same

LIQUEFY, to become liquid. (F.,-L.) Also 'to make liquid,' but this is prob. a later sense. 'The disposition not to liquefe' = but this is pices a latter which will be the second secon in -fy, which answers properly to F. -fer = Lat. -ficare, used in place of facere, to make. But in sense the word really corresponds to Lat. liquefieri, to become liquid, used as pass. of liquefacere, to make liquid. -Lat. lique, from liquere, to be fluid; and facere, to make. See Liquid and Fact. Der. lique-fact-ion, Minsheu, ed. 1627; formed from liquefactus, pp. of liquefacere. LIQUESCENT, melting. (L.) Modern ; in Todd's Johnson. – Lat. liquescent, stem of pres. pt. of liquescere, to become liquid; inceptive form of liquere, to be liquid. See Liquid. Der. liquescenc-y, de-liquescent.

LIQUEUR, a cordial. (F., -L.) A modern F. version of the older term Liquor, q. v.

block term Liquid, q.v. LiQUID, fluid, moist, soft, clear. (F., -L.) 'The playne [flat] and liquide water; 'Tyndal, Works, p. 265, col. 2. - F. liquide, 'liquid, moist, wet;' Cot. - Lat. liquidus, liquid, moist. - Lat. liquere, to be liquid or moist. The base is L1K, an extension of L1, to flow, melt. -  $\checkmark$  RI, to distil; cf. Skt. ri, to distil, ooze, drop, li, to melt, dissolve, liquefy. See Rivulet. Der. liquid, sb., liquid-i-ty, liquid-ness; also liquid-ate, q.v.; liquor, q.v., liquefy, q.v. LIQUIDATE: to make clear or pay off on account (I.)

LIQUIDATE, to make clear, clear or pay off an account. (L.) Bailey has liquidated, vol. ii. ed. 1731. - Low Lat. liquidatus, pp. of liquidare, to clarify, make clear. - Lat. liquidus, liquid, clear; see Liquid. Der. liquidat-ion = F. liquidation; liquidat-or.

LIQUOR, anything liquid, moisture, strong drink. (F.,-L.) The word is really F., but has been accommodated to the orig. Lat. spelling; yet we retain somewhat of the F. pronunciation, the qu being sounded as c (k). M.E. licour, Chaucer, C.T. 1. 3; spelt licur, Ancren Riwle, p. 164, l. 13.-O. F. ligeur (Burguy), later ligueur, 'liguor, humor;' Cot.-Lat. liguõrem, acc. of liguor, moisture.-Lat. liquere, to be liquid; see Liquid. Doublet, liqueur. LIQUORICE, the same as Licorice, q. v.

LISP, to pronounce imperfectly, utter feebly, in speaking. (E.) M. E. lispen, lipsen; Chaucer, C. T. 266 (Six-text, A. 264. where 5 MSS. have lipsed for lisped). – A.S. wlisfian *, to lisp; not found, but regularly formed from the alj. wile, imperfect in utterance, lisping. 'Blesus, wlisp;' Ælfric's Gloss., in Wright's Vocab. i. 45, col. 2. + Du. lispen, to lisp. + Dan. læspe, to lisp. + Swed. läspa. + G. lispeln, to lisp, whisper. B.  made of linen. - Lat. linum, flax. See Lino, Linon.
 LINTEL, the head-piece of a door or casement. (F., -L.) M. E.
 The older sense is the latter, viz. border; hence it came to mean a strip, roll, list of names. - O. H. G. lista, G. leiste, a border; cognate with A. S. list, whence list, a border. See List (1). Thus list (1) and list (2) are the same word, but the latter is used in the F. sense. Der. list, verb, en-list.

In the P, sense. Doc. its., vero, en-its. LIST (3), gen. used in the pl. Lists, q. v. LIST (4), to choose, to desire, have pleasure in. (E.) In Shak. I Hen. VI, i. 5. 22. Often used as an impers. verb in older authors. M. E. listen, lusten; 'if thee lust' or 'if thee list' = if it pleases thee; Chaucer, C. T. 1185; cf. l. 1054. – A. S. lystan, to desire, used im-personally; Grein, ii. 200. Formed (by regular vowel-change from the back of the list of the list is the list of the list. u to y) from A. S. lust, pleasure; see Lust. + Du. lusten, to like;

u to y) from A. S. lust, pleasure; see LUST. + Du. lusten, to like; from lust, delight. + Icel. lysta, to desire; from losti, lust. + Dan. lyste; from lyst. + Swed. lysta, from lust. + Goth. luston; from lusts. + G. gelüsten; from lust. Der. list, sb., Oth. ii. I. 105. And see list-less. LIST (5), to listen. (E.) In Hamlet, i. 5. 22. See Listen. LISTEIN, to hearken, give ear. (E.) In Shak. Macb. iv. 1. 89; ii. 2. 29. We also find list, as above. So we also find both M. E. lustnen or listnen, and lusten or listen. 1. 'Or lysteneth to his reson.' P. Plowman, B. xiv. 307; where the Trinity MS. has listneth, ed. Wright 1. 0224. Here lively and the stands for the Older listneth the Wright, 1. 9534. Here list(e) neth stands for the older listneth, the e mod. E. spelling, though seldom sounded. We further find the pt. t. lustnede, Layamon, 26357; and the pp. lustned, id. 25128. The form lustn-en is derived from lust-en by the insertion of n, not uncommonly thus introduced into verbs to give them a passive or neuter sense; this most clearly appears in Mœso-Gothic verbs in nan, such as full-n-an, to become full, &c.; see Skeat's Morso-Goth. Glossary, p. 303. 2. The form lusten is in Layamon, 919; and is derived from A. S. klystan, klistan, ge-klystan, to hear, listen to; Grein, ii. 90. – A. S. klyst, hearing, the sense of hearing; id. + Icel. klusta, to listen; from klust, the ear. Cf. W. clust, the ear. B. The sb. hlyst (= hlust) is formed with the usual formative suffix -t (= Aryan -ta) from the base HLUS, to hear; cf. A. S. Alos-niam. O. H. G. Alos-en, to hearken, Grein, ii. 88. γ. Again, HLUS Y. Again, HLU-S is an extension of Teut. base HLU, to hear, appearing in Goth. Aliu-ma, hearing, A. S. hlá-d, loud, Icel. hlera or hlöra, to listen; and HLU=Lat. and Gk. KLU, appearing in Lat. cluere, to hear, Gk. sklow, to hear. - √ KRU, to hear; cf. Skt. eru, to hear. See Loud. Der. listen-er. Doublet, lurk, q. v. [†] LISTLESS, careless, uninterested. (E.) The lit. sense is 'devoid of desire.' Not really derived from the verb to list (see List (4)), but put in place of the older form lustless. We find lystles in Prompt. Parv. p. 307; but lustles in Gower, C. A. ii. 111. Formed from lust with the suffix -less. See Lust and -less. Cf. Icel. lystar laws, having no appetite, from lyst = losti, lust. Dor. list-less-ly, list-less-ness. LISTS, the ground enclosed for a tournament. (F., -L.) Scarcely used in the singular. Used to translate O F. lices in the Rom. of the Rose, 4199. M. E. listes, pl. sb., the lists, Chaucer, C. T. 63, 1861. The t is excrescent; the correct form would be lisses, but we often find t added after s in E. words; cf. uhili-t, amongs-t, letwix t. The sing. form would be lisse, in old spelling. - O. F. lisse, lice (mod. F. lice), 'a list or tiltyard;' Cot. Cf. Ital. liccia, a barrier, palisade, list; Span. liza, a list for tilting; Port. liça, liçada, list, enclosed ground in which combats are fought. - Low Lat. liciæ, s. pl., barriers, palisades; licia duelli, the lists.  $\beta$ . Etym. disputed; in spite of the difference in sense, it seems best to suppose a connection with F. lice, ' the woofe or thread of the shittle [shuttle] in weaving' (Cot.), Ital. liccio, woof, texture, cloth, yarn, Span. lizo, a skein of silk; all due to Lat. licium, a thread, a small girdle. There seems to have been an O. Lat. phrase illicium wocare, put for in licium uocare, to call together into an enclosure; which may account for the peculiar use of the word. Root uncertain.

LITANY, a form of prayer. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) M. E. letanie, Ancren Riwle, p. 20, l. 4; altered to li anie, litany, to bring it nearer to the Lat. spelling. - O. F. letanie, a litany; so spelt in the 13th century (Littre); mod. F. litanie. - Lat. litania. - Gk. Airaveia, a prayer. - Gk. Airaiveir, to pray. - Gk. Airoman, Airoman, I beg, pray, beseech ; cf. λιτόs, praying ; λιτή, prayer, entreaty.

LITERAL, according to the letter.  $(F_{..}-L)$  'It hath but one simple litterall sense; 'Tyndal, Works, p. 1, col. 2. – O. LITHARGE, protoxide of lead. (F., -L., -Gk.) Lit. 'stone-silver.' M. E. litarge, Chaucer, C. T. 631, 16243. - F. litharge, 'litargie, white lead;' Cot. - Lat. lithargyrus. - Gk. λιθάργυροα, litharge. - Gk. Aid-, stem of Aidos, a stone (root unknown); and άργυρος, silver (see Argent). LITHE, pliant, flexible, active. (E.) M. E. lithe, Chaucer, Ho. of μ. 183 : Fame, i. 118. - A.S. libe (for linbe), gentle, soft; Grein, ii. 183; lib, gentle, id. 182.+G. ge-linde, ge-linde, O. H. G. lindi, soft, tender. + Lat. Instrue, pliant.  $\beta$ . Shorter forms appear in Icel. linr, soft, Lat. lenis, gentle; see Loniont. Der. lind (the linden-tree); lithe-ness; lissom = lithe-some. And see lenity, lenitisk, re-lent.

LITHOGRAPHY, writing on stone. (Gk.) Modern. Coined from Gk. Allo-, crude form of Allos, a stone; and ypapeur, to write. Der. lithograph-er, lithograph-ic; lithograph.

LITHOTOMY, the operation of cutting for stone. (L.,-Gk.) Englished from Lat. lithotomia, the form given in Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. – Gk. λιθοτομία. – Gk. λίθο-, crude form of λίθοs, a stone; and τομ-, for ταμ-, base of répreir, to cut; see Tome. Der. lithotom-ist.

LITIGATION, a contest in law. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Formed, by analogy with F. words in -ion, from Lat. litigatio, a disputing. - Lat. litigatus, pp. of litigare, to dispute. - Lat. lit-, stem of lis, strife; and ig., weakened form of ag-ers, to drive, conduct (see Agont). β. The Lat. lis was in O. Lat. stlis (Festus), cognate with E. Strife, q.v. Der. litigate, a late verb. really due to the sb.; litigant=Lat. litigant-, stem. of pres. pt. of litigare; also litigious, q. v. LITIGIOUS, contentious. (F.,-L.) In old authors it also means 'debatable' or doubtful; see Trench, Select Glossary. Litigious = precarious; Shak, Pericles, iii. 3, 3. = F. litigious, 'litious, debatefull; 'Cot. = Lat. litigiosus, (1) contentious, (2) doubtful. = Lat. litigium, strife. - Lat. litigare, to dispute; see Litigation. Der. litigious-ly, litigious-ness.

LITMUS, a kind of dye. (Du.) Spelt litmose-blew in Phillips ed. 1706. Put for lakmose. - Du. lakmoes, a blue dye-stuff (Sewel). - Du. lak, lac; and moes, pulp. So also G. lackmuss, litmus; from lack, lac, and mus, pulp. See Laso. [†] LITTER (1), a portable bed. (F., - L.) M. E. litere, Cursor Mundi, 13817; Wyclif, Isa. lxvi. 20. Spelt lytier in Caxton, Rey-nard the Fox, ed. Arber, p. 61, l. 1. - O. F. litiere (F. litière), 'a horse-litter ; 'Cot. - Low Lat. lectaria, a litter. - Lat. lectus, a bed. Cf. Gk. Xénrpor, a bed, Xéxos, a couch. - Lat. and Gk. base LAGH, to lie ; see Lie (1). Allied to Lectern.

LITTER (2), materials for a bed, a heap of straw for animals to lie on, a confused mass of objects scattered about; &c. (F.,-L.) Really the same word as the above; with allusion to beds of straw for animals, and hence a confused heap. Thus Cotgrave has : Litiere, a horse-litter, also litter for cattell, also old dung or manue.

See Litter (1). Der. litter, verb, Temp. i. 2, 282. [†] LITTER (3), a brood. (F., -L.) In Shak Merry Wives, iii. 5. 12. Really the same as litter (2). In the Prompt. Parv., we have: 'lytere, or strowynge of hors,' and: 'lytere, or forthe brynggynge of beestys.' Cf. F. accowcker, and the phrases 'to be brought to bed,' and 'to be in the straw.' [+] LITTLE, small. (E.) M. E. litel, lutel (with one t); Chaucer, C. T. 492; Havelok, 481; Layamon, 9124. – A. S. lytel, litel; Grein, ii. 201. A lengthened form from A. S. lyt, sb. a little; lyt, adv. little; id. 200.+Du. luttel, little, few; cf. lutje, a little, a bit.+ Icel. litill, little; cf. litt, adv. little. + Dan. liden, little; also found as lille (=litle). + Swed. litten. + Goth. lsitils. + M. H. G. lützel; O. H. G. luzil; also M. H. G. luzic, luzig (base luz).  $\beta$ . All from a base LUT, to deceive, in connection with which we also find A.S. lytig, deceitful, Ælfric's Colloquy, in Wright's Vocab. i. 12, l. 14; also A.S. lot, deceit, Grein, i. 194; and the Goth. liuts, deceitful, liuta, dissembler, luton, to betray. Thus the old sense of little is 'deceitful' or 'mean;' a sense still retained. Y. Further, the Teut. base LUT meant orig. to stoop, to bow down (hence to creep, or sneak), as in A. S. lútan, to stoop, 'lout,' incline to; see Lout. See Fick, iii. 276. Der. little-ness. Or The forms less, least, are from a different source. But see Loiter.

LITTORAL, belonging to the sea-shore. (L.) Spelt littoral in Kersey; litoral in Blount, ed. 1674. Mere Latin. – Lat. littoralis, better litoralis, belonging to the sea-shore. – Lat. litor., stem of litus, the sea shore. Root uncertain. LITURGY, public worship, established form of prayer. (F., -Low Lat., - Gk.) Spelt litturgie in Minsheu, ed. 1627. - O. F. lyturgie, 'a liturgy, or form of service;' Cot. - Low Lat. liturgia. -Gk. Auroupyia, public service. - Gk. Auroupyos, performing public service or duties. - Gk. Aeiro-, crude form of Aeiros, public; and loyor, work, cognate with E. Work.

Lalty. Der. liturgi-c, liturgi-c-al, liturgi-st. LIVE (1), to continue in life, exist, dwell. (E.) M. E. livien, liven (with u for v); Chaucer, C. T. 508; Havelok, 355. – A. S. lifian, lyfian; Grein, ii. 185; also libban, lybban, id. 179; where bb stands for ff, due to fi.+Du. leven; also used as sb., with sense of 'life.' + Icel. lifa, to be left, to remain behind; also to live. + Dan. leve. + Swed. lefva. + Goth. liban. + G. leben, to live (whence leben, sb. life), M. H. G. leben, lepen, to live (also spelt libian, lipian); allied to b-leiben, M. H. G. beliben, O. H. G. beliban, to remain, be left.  $\beta$ . The sense of 'live' is unoriginal; the older sense is to remain, to be left behind. See further under Life. Der. liv-er, liv-ing; and see live (2). LIVE (2), adj. alive, having life. active, burning. (E.) 'Upon the next live creature that it sees;' Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. I. 172. The use of this adj. is really due to a mistake; it is merely short for alive, which is not a true adj., but a phrase consisting of a prep. and a dat. case; see Alive.  $\beta$ . The use as an adj. arose the more easily owing to the currency of the words live-ly and liv-isk. The former is still in use, but the latter is obsolete; it occurs in Gower,

C. A. iii. 93. Der. live-stock. LIVELIHOOD, means of subsistence. (E.) G. Cotgrave translates F. patrimoine by 'patrimony, birthright, inheritance, livelikood.' And Drayton speaks of a man 'Of so fair livelikood, and so large rent;' The Owl (R.) The metre shows that the word was then, as now, trisyllabic. β. But it is a singular corruption of the M. E. livelode, livelode, i. e. life-leading, means of living; due to confusion with livelihood in the sense of 'liveliness,' as used (quite correctly) in Shak. Venus, 26; All's Well, i. 1. 58. Y. Again livelode is better spelt liftode, as in P. Plowman, B. prol. 30. Cf. 'Lyflode, liyflode, lyuelode, or warysome, Donativum;' Prompt. Parv. p. 308; indeed, we find livelode as late as in Levins, ed. 1570. An older spelling is in St. Mathemate ad Coulomb and the line of the second in St. Marharete, ed. Cockayne, p. 20, 1. 16, where we find liffade, meaning 'way of life,' lit. leading of life. 8. Compounded of lif -A. S. lif, life ; and lade - A. S. lad, a leading, way, also provisions to live by, Grein, ii. 150. Another sense of A. S. lad is a course, as preserved in mod. E. lode. See Life and Lode.

LIVELONG, long-lasting, long as life is. (E.) 'The livelong night; Mach. ii. 3. 65. Put for life-long, as live-ly is for life-ly. See Life and Long.  $\beta$ . The use of life-long has, in modern times, been revived, but only in the strict sense of 'lasting through life;'

Whereas the sense of live-long (really the same word) is wider. [†] LIVELY, vigorous, active. (E) A corruption of lifely. 'Lyvely, liyfly, or qwyk, or fulle of lyyf, Vivax;' Prompt. LOAD, a quantity carried, a burden. (E.) Most probably this word has been extended in meaning by confusion with the unrelated verb to lade. Load is common in Shakespeare both as a sb, and verb, but in M.E. it is a sb. only, and is identical with Lode, q.v., notwith-standing the difference in sense. The A.S. lide means only way, course, journey; but M. E. lode has also the sense of 'burden.' I can find no earlier example of this use than carte-lode, a cart-load, in Havelok, 1.895. It should be particularly noticed, however, that the derived verb to lead is constantly used in prov. E. in the sense 'to carry corn'; and, in the Prompt. Parv. p. 62, we find : 'Cartyn, or leds wythe a carte, Carruco. Chaucer has i-lad = carried, Prologue, 530. Hence load = M.E. lode = A.S. lad, a derivative from lad, pt. t. of the strong LOAD-STAR, LOAD-STONE, the same as Lode-star, Lode-stone.

LOAF, a mass of bread; also of sugar. (E.) M. E. lof, loof. 'A pese-lof' = a loaf made of peas; P. Plowman, B. vi. 181; pl. looues (=loves), Wyclif, Matt. iv. 3. – A. S. Mdf, a loaf; Grein, ii. 79. + Icel. Meifr. + Goth. Mais, or Maibs. + G. laib, M. H. G. leip. Cf. also Lithuanian Möpas, Lettish Maipas, bread; cited by Fick, iii. 86. Also Russ. khlieb', bread. Der. loaf-sugar.

LOAM, a mixed soil of clay, sand, &c. (E.) M. E. lam, dat, lame; Cursor Mundi, 11985; where one MS has eley (clay). - A. S. lam; Grein, ii. 153.+Du. leem.+G. lekm, O. H. G. leim.  $\beta$ . The B. The A.S. lám (= laim) is a strengthened form of lim, lime, to which loam is closely allied. See Lime (1). Der. loam-y, M. E. lami, Holi Meidenhad, ed. Cockayne, p. 47, l. 28.

LOAN, a lending, money lent. (E.) M. E. lone, Chaucer, C. T. 7443; P. Plowman, B. xz. 284. This would correspond to an A. S. form Idn, but we only find Idn, Grein, ii. 163; Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 176, last line. There was, no doubt, also a form lán. [We find a similar duplication of forms in dole and deal, answering to A.S. ddl and dal respectively; see those words. And cf. the Icel. forms given below: |+Du. lean, a fief; lit. 'a grant.' +Icel. ldn, a loan; len, a fief, + Dan. laan, a loan. +Swed. ldn. + G. lehn, a fief, 0. H. G. lehn, a thing granted.  $\beta$ . These words answer to a Teut. form LAIHNA, i.e. a thing lent or granted; from the base LIHW (LIH), to grant or lend; appearing in Goth. leitwan, to lend (Luke, vi. 34), A.S. likan, to lend, give (Grein, ii. 187), Icel. ljá, to lend, G. leiken, O. H. G. Y. This base exactly answers to the base LIQU (LIK), of likan. the Lat. linguere (pt. t. liqu-i), to leave; which is closely related to to leaf, dear, willing), Chaucer, C. T. 1839; Havelok, 261. - A. S.165, hateful (very common), Grein, ii. 150. + Icel. leidr, loathed, dis-liked. + Dan. led, loathsome. + Swed. led, odious. + O. H. G. leit, odious.  $\beta$ . All from a Tent. form LAITHA, painful; from the Tent here LITH to get a prove the part of the part of the part. Teut. base LITH, to go, pass, move on, hence to go through, undergo, experience, suffer. This base appears in A. S. liban, to go, travel, Icel. liba, to go, pass, move on, also to suffer. O. H. G. liban, to go, experience, suffer, mod. G. leiden, to suffer. From the notion of experience the sense passed on to that of painful experience, suffering, pain, &c. From the same base is Load (1), q, v. Der. loath-ly = A.S. latile, Grein, ii. 151; loathe, verb = A.S. latian, Ælfric's Hom. ii. 506, l. 24; loath-ing, sb., Prompt. Parv. p. 316; loath-some, Prompt. Parv. p. 314, where the suffix -some = A.S. -some as in win-:ome; also loath-some-ness. [+]

LOBBY, a small hall, waiting-room, passage. (F. or Low Lat., – G.) In Hamlet, ii. 2, 161, iv. 3. 39. [We can hardly suppose that the word was taken up into E. directly from the Low Lat.; it must have come to us through an O. F. lobie \*, not recorded.] - Low Lat. Lobia, a portico, gallery, covered way, Ducange; also spelt lobium. M. H. G. loube, an arbour, a bower, also an open way up to the upper story of a house (Wackernagel). The latter sense will be at once intelligible to any one who has seen a Swiss chalet; and we can thus see also how it easily passed into the sense of a gallery to lounge or wait in. The same word as mod. G. laube, a bower. So called from being formed orig, with branches and foliage. - M. H. G. loub, loup, O. H. G. loup, mod. G. loub, a leaf; cognate with E. Leaf, q.v. Doublet, lodge. LOBIE, the flap or lower part of the ear, a low of the lungs or brain. (F., -Low Lat., -Gk.) In Cotgrave. -F. lobe, 'the lap or lowest part of the ear, also a lobe or lappet of the liver;' Cot. -Late Lat. lobus, not given in Ducange, but it may (I suppose) be """ud in old works on medicine as a transliteration of the Gk. word. -and philosophy. - Lat. locus, a place; a corruption from O. LOBSTER, a kind of shell-fish. (L.) M. E. lopstere, loppester, loppister. 'A loppyster or a crabbe;' Wright's Vocab. i. 176, l. 21. 'Hic polipus, lopstere;' id. i. 189, col. 2. – A. S. loppestre; Wright's Vocab, i. 56, col. 1, l. 2; i. 77, col. 2; better spelt lopystre, as in Ælfric's Colloquy, id. p. 6, l. 11.  $\beta$ . The sense of the word is said to be 'leaper' in Richardson, but this can hardly have been the case, since the A. S. for ' leap' is kledpan ; the fact is rather that the word had no sense in A. S., logsure being a mere corruption of Lat. locusta, meaning (1) lobster. (2) locust; see Locust. [Prov. E. log. A.S. loppe, a flea, is a Scand. form; cf. Dan. loppe, a flea.] ¶ The interchange of k and p is well shown in Schleicher, Compend. § 123; thus the root KAK, to cook, becomes pack in Skt., coquere in Lat., néwrer in Gk., &c. The Skt. ap = Lat. aqua; Gk. Innos = Lat. oquar. So here, the c turns to p the more readily because the yowel a fol-The A.S. y represents a modified w, as usual. [+] lows.

LOCAL, belonging to a place. (F., -L.) Spelt locall in Frith, Works, p. 139, last line. - F. local, 'locall;' Cot. - Lat. localis, local. - Lat. locus, a place; see Locus. Der. local-is, local-iss, localis-at-ion, local-i-ty, Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; also loc-ate, q. v.

LOCATE, to place. (L.) A late word, added by Todd to John-son's Dict. - Lat. locatus, pp. of locare, to place. - Lat. locus, a place; see Local. Der. locat-ion; locat-ive. LOCH, a lake. (Gaelic.) In place-names, as Lock Lomond, Lock Ness. - Gael. and Irish lock, a lake, arm of the sea. + W. limes (Spurrell, p. 183). + Corn. Io. + Manx logk.+Bret. lowck (with guttural ck).+Lat. lacus ; see Lake. Doublote, lake, lough.

LOCK (1), an instrument to fasten doors, an enclosure in a canal; &c. (E.) M. E. loke, Prompt. Parv. p. 311; pl. loken, also locun, Layamon, 5926. – A. S. loca, pl. locan; Grein, ii. 191. + Icel. loka, a lock, latch; lok, a cover, lid of a chest. + Swed. lock, a lid. + G. lock, a dungeon, hole; orig. a locked up place. B. The Teut. form is LUKA (Fick, iii. 274) from the Teut. base LUK, to lock, enclose, appearing in the strong verb lúcan, to enclose, Grein, ii. 194; also in Icel. lúka, to shut, finish (strong verb); M. H. G. lúchan, to shut; Goth. galukan, to shut, shut up. Remoter relations doubtful; see suggestions in Fick, as above. Dor. lock, verb, M. E. lokken, locken, Chaucer, C. T. 5899 (observe that this verb is a secondary formation from the sb., and not to be confused with the old strong verb luken, louken = A.S. lúcan, now obsolete, of which the pp. loken occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 14881); also tool-er, a closed place that locks = M. E. tokere, Prompt. Parv. p. 311, answering to O. Flemish loker, a chest (Kilian) ; also lock-jaw, put for locked-jaw ; lock-keeper ; lock-smith ; lock-up. And see lock-et.

LOCK (2), a tuft of hair, flock of wool. (E.) M. E. lok; pl. lokkes, lockes, Chaucer, C. T. 81. - A. S. loce, loe, Grein, ii. 191; pl. loceas. + Du. lok, a lock, tress, curl. + Icel. lokkr. + Dan. lok. + Swed. lock. + O. H. G. lock, G. locks. B. The form of the Teut. word is LUKKA (Fick, iii. 274); from a Teut. base LUK, to bend, which perhaps appears in Icel. lykkr, a loop, bend, crook. y. The corresponding Aryan base is LUG; whence Gk. Xiryos, a pliant twig, withy; AvyiGer, to bend. But this does not seem to be quite certain.

LOCKET, a little gold case worn as an ornament. (F., -Scand. or E.) The old sense is a small lock, something that fastens. With wooden lockets 'bout their wrists,' with reference to the pillory; Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. I. l. 808. - F. loquet, 'the latch of a door; 'Cot. Dimin. of O. F. loc, a lock; Burguy. Borrowed either from Icel. loka, a lock, latch; or from English. LOCKRAM, a cheap kind of linen. (F.,-Breton.) In Shak.

Cor. ii. 1. 225; see Nares and Halliwell. - F. loerenan, the name given to a sort of unbleached linen; named from the place in Brittany where it is manufactured; Dict. de Trévoux. - F. Loc-renan, also called S. Renan, the name of a place in Basse Bretagne, a few miles N. by W. from Quimper. - Bret. Lok-ronan, the Bret. name for the same place. The sense of the name is 'St. Ronan's cell; ' from Bret. 16k, a cell, and Ronan, St. Ronan ; see Legonidec's Bret. Dict., where this very name is cited as an instance of the use of Lob- as a prefix in place names. [†]

LOCOMOTION, motion from place to place. (L.) 'Pro-gression or animal locomotion; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 1. § 2. Coined from Lat. loco-, crude form of locus, a place ; and motion. See Locus and Motion. Der. locomot-ive, adj., Kersey's

Carew's Survey of Cornwall, p. 10 (R.) An old mining term. The lit. sense is 'course.' = A. S. lid, a way, course, journey; on lids = in the way, Beowulf, ed. Grein, 1. 1987. = A. S. liban, to go, travel. + Icel. lid, a lode, way, course; from liba, to go, pass, move. + Dan. led, a gate; from lide, to glide on. + Swed. led, a way, course; from lide, to pass on.  $\beta$ . The Teut. base is LAITHA, a course, from Teut. verb LITHAN, to go, pass on ; Fick, iii. 270. See Lead (1).

Der. lode-star, lode-stone; also lead (1). LODESTAR, LOADSTAR, the pole star. (E.) Lit. 'way-star;' i. e. the star that shews the way, or that leads. M. E. lodesterre, Chaucer, C. T. 2061. Compounded of lode, a way, course; and star. See Lode and Star. + Icel. leidar-stjarna; from leidar, gen. case of leid, a way, and sijarna, a star. + Swed. led-sijerna. + G. leit-stern. ¶ Not to be derived from the verb to lead, because that word is a mere derivative of lode, as shewn by the vowel-change; but the words are, of course, connected. LODESTONE, LOADSTONE, an ore that attracts pieces of iron. (E.) 'For lyke as the lodestone draweth unto it yron;' Udall, on S. Mark, c. 5. And see Robinson's tr. of More's Utopia (1556), ed. Arber, p. 32. Spelt lodestone, loadstone, in Minsheu, ed. 1627. Compounded of lode and stone, in imitation of the older word lodestar; see above. ¶ It may be remarked that it is an incorrect formation; it is intended to mean 'a leading or drawing stone,' whereas the lit. sense is 'way-stone.' The same remark applies to the cognate Ice) leilarsteins.

LODGE, a small house, cottage, cell, place to rest in. (F., - Low Lat., -G.) M. E. loge, logge; Chaucer, C. T. 14859; Seven Sages, ed. Weber, 2603. - O. Webster gives : ' logger, one engaged in getting timber.'

The true sense is 'to stoop,' and figuratively to sneak: and the word is formed with the frequentative suffix -er from the Teut, base LUT, to stoop, appearing in A.S. lutan, Icel. luta, to stoop, give way, lutr, stooping, and in E. Lout, q. v. Thus to loiter is ' to act like a lowt. The Dan. form is weakened to lude, to stoop, with which perhaps cf. Icel. loddari, a loiterer, a tramp, O. Du. lodderen, 'to lie lazie in bedd,' Hexham; &c. ¶ Loiter comes also very near to A.S. gelutian, to crouch (Grein), whence M. E. lotion, to creep about, lurk, lie hid, Chaucer, C. LOLLARD, a name given to the followers of Wyclif. (O. Du.). The history of the word is a little difficult, because it is certain that several words have been purposely mixed up with it. 1. In the first place, the M. E. word most commonly in use was not lollard, but loller = one who lolls, a lounger, an idle vagabond. 'I smelle a loller in the wind, quod he;' Chaucer, C. T. 12914. That 'lounger' is the true sense of this form of the word, is clear from a passage in P. Plowman, C. x. 188-218, the whole of which may be consulted. The most material lines are: 'Now kyndeliche. by Crist, beth suche called lolleres. As by englisch of oure eldres of olde mennes techynge; He that lolletk is lame other his leg out of ioynte Other maymed in som membre,' i. e. such fellows are naturally called lollers in the English of our forefathers; he that lolls about is lame, or broken-jointed, or maimed : see Loll. 2. At the same time, the name lollard was also in use as a term of reproach; and this was an O. Du. term, Latinised as Lollardus. It had been in use before Wyclif. Ducange Latinised as Lollardus. It had been in use by ore regulation of the second seco lieres nobiles deceperunt ;' i. e. In this year certain vagabond hypocrites, called Lollards or God-praisers, deceived certain noblewomen in Hainault and Brabant. He adds that Trithemius says in his Chronicle, under the date 1315: 'ita appellatos a Gualtero Lolhard, Germano quodam.' This latter statement makes no difference to the etymology, since Lolhard as a sumame (like our sumames Fisher, Baker, or Butcher) is precisely the same word as when used in the sense of 'God-praiser.' The lit. sense is 'a singer,' one who chants. -O. Du. lollaerd (1) a numbler of prayers or hymns (Lat. mussi-tator), one who hums; (2) a Lollard; Kilian, Oudemans. This is a mere dialectical variation of a form lull-ard, formed regularly from the O. Du. lullen (also lollen), to sing, hum, with the suffix -ard as in E. drunk-ard, slugg-ard, &c., denoting the agent. This O. Du. lullen is our E. word Lull, q. v. 8. Besides the confusion thus introduced, it was common to compare the Lollards to tares, by help of a bad pun on the Lat. lolia, tares; this has, however, nothing to do with the etymology. See my note on Chaucer, C. T. Group B. 1173, in the Prioresses Tale, &c. (Clarendon Press). ¶ Since loll and lull are allied words, it makes no very great difference to which verb we refer loller and Lollard; still loller = loll-er, and Lollard = Inll-er

LONE, solitary, retired, away from company. (E.) Not in early use; the word does not appear in Minsheu or Levins, and I find no example much earlier than Shakespeare, who has: 'a poor lowe woman; ' 2 Hen. IV, ii. I. 35. It probably was at first a colloquial or vulgar word, recommended by its brevity for more extended use. It seems to be a mere corruption of alone, as has generally been explained by lexicographers; even Shakespeare brings it in as a pun: 'a long loar for a poor lone woman to bear.' Observe: 'I go alone, Like to a lonely dragon;' Cor. iv. 1. 30. Todd cites a slightly earlier instance. 'Moreover this Glycerie is a lone woman ;' Kyffin, transl. of Terence, ed. 1588. See Alone.  $\boldsymbol{\beta}$ . Other examples of loss of initial a occur in the words mend, purtenance, limbeck, vanguard. The Icel. laun, secrecy, has nothing to do with lone ; the Icel. a laws properly means 'secretly,' rather than 'alone.' Alone is for al-one, as is proved in its due place. Der. lone-ly, Cor. iv. I. 30; lone-li-ness, Hamlet, iii. 1. 46; also lone-some, spelt lonesom in Skinner, ed. 1671; lone-some ness; also lone-ness: 'One that doth wear himself away in long-ness,' Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess, A. i. sc. 2 (Amarillis).

LONG (1), extended, not short, tedious. (E.) M. E. long, Northern lang; Chaucer, C. T. 3031; Pricke of Conscience, I. 632. -A. S. lang, long; Grein, ii. 156.+Du. lang.+ Icel. langr. + Dan. lang. + Swed. lång. + Goth. laggrs (= langrs). + G. lang. + Lat. longws. β. Further allied to M. H. G. lingen, to go hastily, G. er-langen, to attain, reach; and to Skt. langh, to jump over, surpass. 'The orig. signification of langh was prob. to overtake by jumping, then, to attain;' Benfey, p. 786.  $\gamma$ . The orig. notion seems to have had reference to the stride taken in jumping or fast running; and, as an active runner commonly moves lightly over the ground, we get Skt. laghu, Gk. iAaxis, E. light, Lat. lewis, from the same root; with the singular result that the Gk. thaxis also means 'short.'  $\delta$ . An older Skt. spelling appears in the verb rangk, to move swiftly; giving  $\checkmark$  RAGH, to run, hasten, as the common source, appearing without the nasal in Skt. and Gk., but nasalised to RANGH for other languages. See Light (2), Lovity. Der. long, adv.; long-boat. long-measure, long-run, long-sight-ed, long-stop, In= e-suffering. Also (from Lat. longus) long-evity, q. v., long-itude, LOON.

'Than longen folk to Son on pilgrimages' - then people desire, drc.; Chaucer, C. T. 12. That to the sacrifice longen shal' - that are to belong to the sacrifice; id. 2280. - A. S. longian, longian, to lengthen, also to long after, crave. 'Fonne se dæg longað' = when the day lengthens; Popular Treatises on Science, ed. Wright, p. 9. 'Hæleð longode' = the hero longed; Grein, ii. 157. The orig. sense is to become long, herne to stratch the mind after to crave a slev to is to become long, hence to stretch the mind after, to crave ; also to apply, belong. - A. S. lang, long, long; see Long (1). Der. long-apply, belong. - A. S. lang, long, long; see Long (1). Der. long-ing, sb.; long-ing, adj., long-ing-ly. LONGEVITY, length of life. (L.) 'In longevity by many con-sidered to attain unto hundreds' [of years]; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 9. § 1. Spelt longamitie in Minsheu, ed. 1627. Coined, by analogy with F. words in -ité (-E. -ity), from Lat. longamitas, long life. - Lat. long., stem of longus, long; and amitas, full form of the word commonly written atta, age. See Long and Acce LONGITUDE, lit. length; distance in degrees from a given meridian. (F.,-L.) 'Longitudes and latitudes;' Chaucer, On the Astrolabie, Prol. 1. 53. – F. longitude. – Lat. longitudo (gen. longi-tudin-is), length, long duration; in late Lat., longitude. – Lat. longi-= longo-, crude form of longus, long; with suffix -tudo. See Long.

Der. longitudin-al (from stem longitudin-); longitudinal-ly. LOO, a game at cards. (F.) Spelt lu in Pope, Rape of the Lock, c. iii. 1. 62 (l. 350). Formerly called Lanterloo (Engl. Cycl. Supp.) - F. lanturelu or lanturlu, interj. nonsense | fiddlestick | fudge ! (Hamilton); also a game at cards, jeu de la béte (i. e. loo); see Littré and Hamilton. [The more usual F. name for loo is mouche.]  $\beta$ . The expression was orig. the refrain of a famous vaudeville in the time of Cardinal Richelieu (died 1642); hence used in order to give an evasive answer. As the expression is merely nonsensical, it admits, accordingly, of no further etymology. [†] LOOF, another spelling of Luff, q.v. LOOK, to behold, see. (E.) M. E. lohen, lohien; Chaucer, C. T.

1697. - A. S. lócian, to look, see, Grein, ii. 192. + O. H. G. luogén, M. H. G. luogen, to mark, behold. β. The O. H. G. verb is said to mean 'to peep through a hole,' mark; and to be derived from O. H. G. loor, M. H. G. luor, G. lock, a hole. If so, the A.S. locian is to be connected with A. S. loca, a prison, enclosure, and loc, a lock; The resemblance to Skt. lok, to see, is perhaps see Look. Der. look, sb., M. E. loke, Chaucer, C. T. 3342; look! accidental. interj.; look-er, look-out, look-ing, look-ing-glass.

LOOM (1), a machine for wearing cloth. (E.) In Spenser, Muiopotmos, l. 272. M. E. lome, a tool, instrument; P. Plowman, C. vi. 45; and see Prompt. Parv., p. 312. The pl. longen = implements for tilling the soil, occurs in the Ancren Riwle, p. 384, - A.S. golome, a tool, implement, Ælfred, tr. of Beda, iv. 28, ed. Whelock, p. 351; cf. A.S. and-loma, a tool, implement, utensil, in a gloss (Lye). Root uncertain.

LOOM (2), to appear faintly or at a distance. (Scand.) The orig. sense is to glimmer or shine faintly. Rare; and usually used of a \* Looming of a skip, is her prospective [appearance] or shew. ship. Hence it is said, such a ship looms a great sail, i. e. she appears or seems to be a great ship; 'Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. So also Skinner, ed. 1671, who adds : 'she looms but small,' i. e. looks small. M. E. lumen, to shine. 'Hire lure lumes liht, Ase a launterne a nyht' = her face looms brightly, like a lantern in the night; Spec. of Lyric Poetry, ed. Wright, p. 52. – Icel. ljóma, to gleam, shine, dawn as the day does; from the sb. ljómi, a beam, ray.  $\beta$ . The sb. is cognate with A. S. looma, a beam, ray (Grein, ii, 178); whence M. E. looma, Chaucer, ed. Tyrwhitt, C. T. 14936. This would have given a later form leem or leam, but it became obsolete. A similar substitution of a Scand, for an E. form occurs in the case of Boon, q. v.  $\gamma$ . Both Icel, and A. S. sbs. are from a Teut, form LEUHMAN (Fick, iii, a Scand. for an E. form occurs in the case of Boon, q.v. 275), due to the Teut. base LUH, to shine; see Light (1). There does not appear to be any real connection with gloom or gleam, which are from a different root. Der. loom-ing, sb. [+] LOON (1), LOWN, a base fellow. (O. Low G.) Spelt loon in Macbeth, v. 3. 11; loum in Oth. ii. 3. 95. The latter passage is 'he Macbeth, v. 3. 11; lowm in Oth. ii. 3. 95. The latter passage is 'he called the tailor lown,' cited from an old ballad. In the Percy Folio MS, ed. Hales and Furnivall, ii. 324, 1.53, the line appears as: therfore he called the taylor cloume. Jamieson gives lown, loon, lown, and says that the word is used by Dunbar. β. Just as in the case of Loon (2), the form lown stands for an older lowm or lowm. This is shewn by M. E. lowmyske, old spelling of lowmyske, Prompt. Parv., p. 316, and by the etymology. Cf. Scot. loamy, dull, slow; Jamieson.  $\gamma$ . Of O. Low G. origin; as appears from

Kilian also gives O. Du. lome, slow, inactive; noted by him as an old word. That m is the older letter is to be seen from the derived words, viz. Du. lummel, Dan. lömmel, Swed. lymmel, G. lümmel, a lown, lubber. 8. An older form appears in O. H. G. luomi (only used in compounds), yielding, mild; and all the forms are from a Teut. base which appears in M. H. G. luomen, lomen, to droop, be weary; which is prob. connected with E. Lame, q. v. And see Loon (2)

LOON (2), a water-bird, diver. (Scand.) A corruption of the Shetland name loom; see Gloss, of Shetland Words by T. Edmondston; Phil. Soc. 1866. - Icel. lomr, a loon. + Swed. and Dan. lom. Root unknown; but not improbably the same word as Loon (1), from the awkward motion of such birds on land. For derogatory use of the names of birds, cf. booby, gull, goose, owl, &cc.

LOOP, a bend, a bend in a cord leaving an opening. noose. (C.) Spelt loupe in the Bible of 1551, Exod. xxvi. 4, 5. The M. E. loupe is only used in the sense of 'loop-hole,' but it is prob. the same word, denoting a small hole in a wall shaped like a loop in a piece of string. In this sense it occurs in P. Plowman, C. xxi. 288; and Romance of Partenay, l. 1175. - Irish and Gael. lub, a loop, bow, staple, fold, noose; the orig. sense being a bend or curve. - Irish and Gael. 1sb, to bend, incline. Cf. Skt. ropa, a hole. Der. loop, verb; loop-ed, full of holes, K. Lear, iii. 4. 31; loop-hole, Shak. Lucr. 1383, the older term being M. E. loupe, as above; loop-hol-ed. [+] LOOSE, free, slack, unfastened, unconfined. (E.) M. E. laus, loose, Chaucer, C. T. 4062; where the Camb. MS. has los, and the Petworth MS. has louse. Spelt louse, lousse, in the Ancren Riwle, p. 228, note d. a. It is difficult to account for the vowel-sound of the word; it is a dialectal variety of M. E. lees, false; see Prompt. Parv. p. 298. The latter is from A. S. leds, (1) loose, (2) false; cognate with Icel. lauss, loose, vacant, Dan. and Swed. los, β. The E. loose is better represented by O. Sax. los, loose. O. Du. loos, (1) loose, (2) false (Oudemans) ; the mod. Du. separates the two senses, having los, loose, and loos, false. Further cognate words appear in Goth. laws, empty, vain; G. los, loose. Y. All are from a Teut. adj. LAUSA, loose (Fick, iii. 273); from Teut. base LUS, to lose; see LOSO. ¶ We may, however, fairly assume that the vowel-sound in loose was due to the influence of the loosen, which was in much commoner use than the adj., and naturally affected it; see Loosen. Der. loose-ly, loose-ness. Note that loose is the commonest suffix in E., but is always spelt -less; see -less. And see Leasing LOOSE, LOOSEN, to make loose, set free. (E.) The suffix on is due to analogy with words like lengthen, strengthen, and is less common in early than in later times. M. E. losen, lowsen, lowsen; where the final n is very commonly dropped, and merely marks the infinitive mood, without having the causal force which is implied by the final n at present. 'The boondis of alle weren lowsid' = the bonds of all were loosed; Wyclif, Acts, xvi. 26. - A. S. losian, to lose, to become void, almost always used in a neut. sense, Grein, ii. 194. We find, however, losade = Lat. dissipauit, Luke, ix. 26; and the cognate O. Sax. losian is transitive, and signifies ' to make free.' So also Du. lossen, to loosen, release; Icel. Leysa, to loosen; Swed. losa; Dan. lose ; G. lösen ; Goth. lausjan ; all active.  $\beta$ . In every language but E. the verb is derived from the adj. signifying 'loose;' thus O. Sax. Idsian is from Ids; Du. Iossen, from Ids; Icel. Isysa, from lauss ; Swed. lösa, from lös ; Dan. löse, from lös ; G. lösen, from los ; and Goth. lausjan, from laus.  $\gamma$ . In E., the verb losian (= E. loose) has affected the vowel of the adjective; the A.S. for 'loose' being leas, which should have given a mod. E. adj. less. The verb losian itself is from A.S. los, destruction, Ælfred, tr. of Beda, lib. v.

c. 9 (or c. 10, ed. Whelock); see Loss, Loose, adj., and Lose. LOOT, plunder, booty. (Hindi. - Skt.) A modern term, imported from India. - Hindi lút (with cerebral i), loot, plunder. The cerebral t shews that an r is elided [Prof. Cowell so informs me]. - Skt. lotra, shorter form of loptra, booty, spoil. - Skt. lup, to break, spoil; the pp. lupta is also used in the sense of 'booty,' like the deriv. loptra ; see Benfey, p. 798. - ARUP, to break ; whence Lat. rumpere, G. rauben, and E. rob. See Rob, Rupture. Thus loot = that which is robbed. Der. loot, verb.

LOP, to maim, to cut branches off trees. (O. Du.) In Levins, ed. 1570; and in Shak. Cymb. v. 4. 141. - O. Du. luppen, to maim, cas-trate (Oudemans); whence mod. Du. lubben, with the same sense; cf. obsol. E. lib, used by Massinger, City Madam, A. ii. sc. 2 (see Nares). Cf. Lithuan. lup-ti, to peel; see Leaf. Der. lop, sb., small branches cut off, Henry VIII, i. 2. 96. And see glib (3), left. LOQUACIOUS, talkative. (L.) In Milton, P. L. x. 161. A

Also lo-quac-i-ty, from F. loquacité, which from Lat. acc. loquacitatem. From the same root are col-loqu-ial, e-loqu-ence, ob-loqu-y, soli-loqu-y, ventriloqu-ist; also (from Lat. pp. locut-us) al-locut-ion, circum-locut-ion, e-locut-ion, inter-locut-ion.

LORD, a master, ruler, peer. (E.) M.E. lowerd (= loverd), Havelok, l. 96; gen. contracted to lord, Chaucer, C. T. 47. – A.S. kláford, a lord; Grein, ii. 80. B. It is certain that the word is a  $\beta$ . It is certain that the word is a compound, and that the former syllable is A. S. klof, a loaf. It is extremely likely that ord stands for weard, a warden, keeper, master; whence klaf-weard = loaf-keeper, i.e. the master of the house, father of the family. See Loaf and Ward. ¶ The etym. sometimes given, from ord, a beginning, is impossible, the proper sense of ord being 'point;' loaf-point could only mean the corner of a crust; and loaf-beginning could only refer to flour or grain. The simple word weard, however, is used nearly synonymously with the comp. Alaf-weard; and cf. kord-weard, a treasure-keeper, lord (Grein). Der. lord, verb (gen. used with it), 2 Hen. VI, iv. 8. 47; lord-ed, Temp. i. 2. 97; lord-ing (with dimin. suffix -ing), Wint. Ta. i. 2. 62 = M. E. lauerd-ing, Layamon, 27394; lord-ling (with double dimin.), Bp. Hall's Satires, b. ii. sat. 2, 1. 12 = M. E. lowerd-ling, Layamon, 12664, later text; lord-ly = M. E. lordlich, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 302; lord-li-ness, Shak. Ant. v. 2. 161; lord-ship = M. E. lord-schip, P. Plowman, B. iii. 206.

LORE, learning, doctrine. (E.) M. E. lore, Chaucer, C. T. 529, 4424, 12202. [The final e is unessential, and due to the frequent use of the dat. case.] - A. S. lár, lore ; Grein, ii. 158. Here lár stands for laisa *, from Teut. base LIS, to find out; so that laisa * = lár means 'what is found out,' knowledge, learning. + Du. leer, doc-trine. + Swed. lära. + Dan. läre. + G. lehre, M. H. G. lére, O. H. G. léra. And cf. Goth. laisjan, to teach; laiseins, doctrine. See further under Learn.

LORIOT, the golden aureole.  $(F_{.,-}L.)$  'Loriot, a bird otherwise called a witwall; 'Kersey, ed. 1715. – F. loriot, 'the bird called a witwall, yellowpeake, hickway;' Cot. Corruptly written for l'oriot, l'orion, the prefixed l being the def. article (= Lat. ille). Cotgrave has: 'Oriot, a heighaw, or witwall;' also spelt Oriol, id.

The latter form is the same as E. Oriole, q. v. LORN, old pp. of the verb to lose. (E.) See Lose, Forlorn. LORY, a small bird of the parrot kind. (Malay.) In Webster. Also called lury. – Malay lúri, a bird of the parrot kind, also called núri; Marsden's Malay lúri, a bird of the parrot kind, also called núri; Marsden's Malay Dict., p. 311. Núri, the lury, a beautiful bird of the parrot kind, brought from the Moluccas; id. p. 350. LOSE, to part with, be separated from. (E.) The mod. E. lose appears to be due to confusion between two M. E. forms, viz.

1. Losien is recorded in Stratmann, 3rd ed., at (1) losien, (2) leosen. p. 372; it commonly means 'to loose' or 'loosen,' but we also find it in the sense 'to be lost,' or 'to perish,' as in O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 117, ll. 28, 35; and in Layamon, 20538, it is used exactly in the sense of 'lose.' - A. S. losian, to become loose, to escape, Grein, ii. 194. See Looson. 2. The M.E. leosen, more commonly lesses, is in Stratmann, at p. 360. This is the verb which in-variably has the force of 'lose,' but it should rather have produced a mod. E. leese. It is a strong verb, with pt. t. lees, and pp. loren, lorn; see Chaucer, C. T. 1217, 3536; P. Plowman, B. v. 499. – A. S. ledsan, to lose; pt. t. leds, pp. loren; perhaps only used in comp. for-ledsan, to lose entirely, Luke, xv. 4, 9, Grein, i. 328. + Du. liezen, only in comp. ver-liezen, to lose; pt. t. verloor, pp. verloren. + G. lieren, only in comp. ver-lieren, pt. t. verlor, pp. verloren, + Goth. liusan, only in comp. fra-liusan, to loose, Luke, xv. 8, with which cf. fra-lusnan, to perish, 1 Cor. i. 18.  $\beta$ . Both A. S. losian and lessan are from the Teut. base LUS, to lose, become loose (Fick, iii. 273). This base is an extension of the older base LU, to set free, appearing in Gk. Aber, to set free, release; Lat. luere, to set free. A still older sense, 'to set free by cutting a bond,' is suggested by Skt. lú, to cut, clip; Benfey, p. 799; Fick, i. 755. The Note the double form of the pp., viz., lost, lorn; of which lost (- los ed) is formed from M.E. losien: but lorn (-lor-en) is the regular strong pp. of leosen = A. S. leosan. Der. los-er, los-ing; from the same Teut. base are loose, vb., also spelt loosen, q. v., loose, adj.; leasing, q. v.; lorn, for-lorn; loss, q. v.; louse, q. v. From the base LU we also have solve, solution, ana-ly-sis, para-ly-sis, palsy.

LOSS, a losing, damage, waste. (E.) M. E. los, Chaucer, C. T. 4447, 4448. – A. S. los, destruction; to lose wurdon, i. e. perished, Ælfred, tr. of Beda, lib. iv. c. 9 (or c. 10). O. Northumb. los, Matt. vii. 13 (Lindisfarne MS.). – A. S. ledsan, to lose; see Loso.

LOT, a portion, share, fate. (E.) M. E. lot, a share; Rich. Cuer de Lion, 4262, in Weber's Met. Romances. - A. S. Mor; Matt. xxvii. ou-ly been introduced into the language from F. loquacité, 'loquacity;' 35, Luke, xxiii. 34; more usually (and better) spelt klyt, Grein, ii. 90. to cast lots. + Icel. kluti, a part, share, klutr, a lot; from the strong verb Aljóta, to obtain by lot. + Dan. lod, a lot. + Swed. lott, a lot; lotta, to cast lots. +G. loos, a lot; loosen, to cast lots +Goth. Alauts, a lot; Mark, xv. 24.  $\beta$ . All the sbs. answer to Teut. HLUTA or HLUTI, a lot; from the Teut. base HLUT, to obtain by lot; Fick. iii. go. Der. lot, vb.; lott-er-y, q. v.; al-lot, q. v. [+] LOTH, reluctant; the same as Loath, q.v.

LOTION, a washing, external medicinal application. (L.) 'Lot-ion, a washing or rinsing;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Formed, by analogy with F. words in -ion, from Lat. lotio, a washing. - Lat.

botus, pp. of laware, to wash; see Lave. LOTO, LOTTO, the name of a game. (Ital., - Teut.) Modern; the spelling lotto is the correct Ital. spelling; loto is a F. form of the Ital. word. - Ital. lotto, a lot, lottery. Of Teut. origin; cf. O. H. G. Aloz (G. loos), a lot; see Lot.

LOTTERY, a distribution by lot or chance. (E., with F. suffix.) In Levins, ed. 1570; and in Shak. Merch. Ven. i. 2. 32, ii. I. 15. Formed, by analogy with words like brew-ery, fish-ery, scull-ery, and others, directly from E. lot; the suffix ary is of F. origin, answering to Lat. -arium, -erium. The F. loterie is plainly borrowed from E; it is in much later use; thus it is omitted by Cotgrave, and Sherwood's index to Cotgrave only gives balotage, sort, as equivalent words to E. lottery. The words brew, fisk, are E. words, just as lot See Lot.

LOTUS, the Egyptian water-lily. (L., -Gk.) 'Lotos, or Lotus, the lote-tree; 'Kersey, ed. 1715. Minsheu, ed. 1627, speaks of the lothe-tree or lote-tree. It is spelt lote by Chapman, tr. of Odyssey, ix. 163. - Lat. lotus, lotos. - Gk. λωτόs, a name given to several shrubs; (1) the Greek lotus; (2) the Cyrenean lotus, an African shrub the eaters of which were called Loto-pkagi = Lotus-caters. from Gk. φαγείν, to eat; (3) the lily of the Nile; see Liddell and Scott. Der. Loto-phagi; lotus-eater.

LOUD, making a great sound, noisy. (E.) M. E. loud; more common in the adv. form loude = loudly; Chaucer, C. T. 674, 15339. -A.S. Alúd, loud, Grein, ii. 88. + Du. luid. + G. lawt, O. H.G. Alút. β. Cf. Lat. elutus, in comp. in-elutus, renowned. + Gk. «λυτόε, renowned. + Skt. gruta, heard. γ. The Teut. form is HLUDA. a pp. form from HLU, to hear, answering to Skt. gru, to hear, Gk. atteu. - KRU, to hear; later form KLU; Fick, i. 62, 552. Der. loud-ly, loud-ness; from the same root are cli-ent, glo-ry, slave, and prob land. al-low (2).

LOUGH, a lake. (Irish.) The Irish spelling of lake. - Irish lock, a lake, lough, arm of the sea ; see Loch.

LOUNGE, to loll about. move about listlessly. (F.,-L) In Skinner's Dict., ed. 1671. Not an early word. 'A very flourishing society of people called lowngers, gentlemen whose observations are mostly itinerant; ' The Guardian, no. 124, dated Aug. 3, 1713. The verb is formed from a sb., being a corruption of the term lungis, defined in Minsheu, ed. 1677, as meaning 'a slimme, a tall and dull slangam, that hath no making to his height ;' and even as late as in Kersey, ed. 1715, we find lungis explained as 'a drowsy or dreaming fellow.' It was once a well-known term, and occurs in Decker's Satiromastix; Beaum. and Fletcher, Knight of the Burning Pestle, Act ii. sc. 3, speech 1; Lyly's Euphues and his England, ed. Arber, p. 325; and the Play of Misogonus, written about 1560; see Nares and Halliwell. – F. longis, 'a lungis; a slimme, slow-back, dreaming luske [idle fellow]. drowsie gangrill; a tall and dull slangam, that hath no making to his height, nor wit to his making; also, one that being sent on an errand is long in returning;' Cot. β. Littré supposes that the sense of F. longis was due to a pun, having reference to Lat. longus, long; see Long. For, strictly, Longis was a proper name, being the O. F. form of Lat. Longiss, or Longinus, the name of the centurion who pierced the body of Christ. This name Longinus first appears in the Apocryphal Gospel of Nicodemus, and was doubtless suggested by the Gk.  $\lambda\delta\gamma\chi\eta$ , a lance, the word used in John, xix. 34. See my note to P. Plowman. C. xxi. 82. See John, xix. 34. See my note to P. Plowman. C. xxi. 82. See the word Lunge, which is certainly due to Lat. longus. Der.

Du lot. a lot: loten, F. Q. i. 10. 44. Note: the stoop, bow down; Chaucer, C. T. F. Q. i. 10. 44 E. louten, to stoop, bow down; Chaucer, C. T. 14168; P. Plowman, B. iii. 115. - A. S. lutan, to stoop, Grein, ii. 14108; P. Luto, to bow down; whence lutr, adj. bent down, stoop-ing, which may have suggested our modern lout. + Swed. luta, to ing, which may <sup>μ</sup>ave suggested our modern lout. + Swed. suma, we lean. + Dan. laude, to stoop. β. All from Teut. base LUT, to stoop: whence also Little, q. v. Der. lout-isk, lout-isk-ness, loit-er. LOUVER, LOOVER, an opening in the roois of ancient houses. (F., -L.) M. E. lower, Prompt. Parv. p. 315; see Way's note. He cites: 'A lower, or tunnell in the roofe, or top of a great hall, to auoid smoke, fumarium, spiramentum;' Baret. Also in P. Plowman C. vii 288: Romance of Partenay, 1175. In the P. Plowman, C. xxi. 288; Romance of Partenay, 1175. In the latter passage we find: 'At louers, lowpes, archers had plente, To cast, draw, and shete, the diffence to be' - it (the town) had plenty of archers at openings and loop-holes. to cast, draw (bow), and It is translated from a French text, which has: 'Murshoot. drieres il a a louvert Pour lancier, traire, et deffendre' = it had pierced loop-holes [see meurtrieres, Cot.] to cast lances, &c.-O. F. lowvert (written lowvert in the 15th cent. MS. just cited), put for lowvert - the open (space), opening; from le, def. art., and owert, open. The older spelling lower (lover) is due to the old F. spelling lowert, which is still preserved in E. Overt, q. v. ¶ The ¶ The ingenious suggestion of a derivation from Icel. Ijóri, explained as 'a louvre or opening in the roof of ancient halls for the smoke to escape by and also for admitting light,' is, I think, to be rejected; it does not agree with the M.E. spelling, and the explanation is a forced one, written to suit the supposed etymology of louver. The etymology of the Icel. ljóri shews that the true old sense was not a hole for permitting smoke to escape, but for the admission of light, which further accounts for the fact mentioned in the Icel. Dict., that men were accustomed to watch, sitting by the ljóri, i. e. by the window, not up a lantern-tower. That is, the word ljóri is from ljós, light, by the common change of s into r; and ljos (-liwksa) is from the Teut. base LUHS, to shine, an extension of LUH, to shine; see Light (1) and Lucid. β. Still more clearly, the F. origin of louver is shewn by the prov. E. luffer-boards, a name given to the sloping boards of a beliry-tower window (looking like a Venetian blind) which have openings to admit (not of the escape of smoke or the entrance of light, but) of the escape of the sound of the bells; see Webster. This term shews that the word luffer merely meant opening, and its form is close enough to that of O.F. lossert, whilst it is far removed from ljóri.

LOVAGE, an umbelliferous plant. (F.,-L.) In Levins, ed. 1570, and in Cotgrave. From O.F. lovesche (mod. F. livecke). common lovage, Lombardy lovage,' Cot.; spelt linvesche in the 13th cent. (Littre); also invesche, as in Wright's Vocab. i. 139, col. 3, whence the E. form. Cf. Ital. levistico, lovage. - Lat. ligusticrum, lovage, a plant indigenous to Liguria; whence its name. - Lat. Liguisticus, belonging to Liguria. - Lat, Liguria (prob. formerly Liguisa), a country of Cisalpine Gaul, of which the principal town was Genua, the modern Genos. Similarly, we have Etruscan from Etruria [Etrusia?]. LOVE, affection, fondness, attachment. (E.) M. E. low (with w for v), Chaucer, C. T. 1137, 1161, 1167, 1170. – A. S. lufu, love; Grein, ii. 196. + G. liebe, O. H. G. liupa, liupi, love. + Russ. liobov', love. + Skt. lobka, covetousness.  $\beta$ . Closely allied to lief, dear; from Teut. base LUB = Skt. base LUBH, to covet, desire. See Der. love, verb. M. E. loven (- loven), older forms louisen, Lief Invien, A.S. Infran, Infran, Grein, ii. 195; also low-able, low-sr (Chaucer, C. LOW (1), inferior, deep, mean, humble. (Scand.) M. E. Low, pl. louse; Chaucer, C. T. 17310; older spellings loud, Ancren Riwle, p. 140, l. 2, lak, Ormulum, 15246, loogk (in the comp. biloogk -below), Allit. Poems, B. 116. [Not found in A.S.] - Icel. lagr, low; Swed. ldg; Dan. lav. + Du. laag. B. The Teut. form is LAGA, low (Fick, iii. 262); the orig. sense is 'lying flat,' used of the aspect of a country, as when we distinguish lowlands from highlands. - Teut. base LAG, to lie; see Lie (1). Der. low-ness, P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, l. 513; low-ly, Chaucer, C. T. 99, low-li-ness; low-r, verb - to make or become more low, formed from the comparative of the adj. (cf. better), Shak. Ant. i. 2. 129; low-church, low-land, lowlander, low-spirited.

LOW (2), to bellow as a cow or ox. (E.) M.E. loowen, lowen, Wyclif, Job, vi. 5; Jer. li. 52. - A. S. Alówan, to bellow, resound : and the first destroying; from readt base Los, to set the asso to cause to perish; cf. Goth. lausjan, to make of none effect, I Cor. i. 17. See Looge, Loosen, Losse. XV. 14. LOW (3), a hill. (E.) In place-names; thus Lud-low = people's hill. - A. S. klów, a hill; also spelt klów, Grein, ii. 81. It also Coth klow, a grave, tomb; allied to means a mound, a grave. + Goth. Alaiw, a grave, tomb; allied to Goth. Alains, a hill. Further related to Lat. clinus, a hill; clinare, to lean; and E. lean, verb. See Lean (1); the Teut. base being HLI, to lean.

LOW (4), flame. (Scand.) In Burns, The Weary Pund o' Tow, 1. 10. M. E. loyke, Ormulum, 16185. – Icel. log, a flame; allied to Lat. how; see Lucid.

LOWER (1), to let down, abase, sink. (E.) See Low (1). LOWER (2), to frown, look sour. (E.?) M. E. louren, Chaucer, C. T. 6848; P. Plowman, B. v. 132; spelt luren, K. Horn, ed. Lumby, l. 270. Of uncertain origin. a. The usual etymology is to connect it with O. Du. loeren, which Hexham explains by 'to leere; also, to frowne with the fore-head;' similarly, we find Low German luren identified with E. lower in the Bremen Wörterbuch, iii. 101. So also mod. Du. lorren, to peer, leer (which is, I believe, quite a different word from Du. lorren, to lurk; see note on Leer). B. But these words (at least when used in the sense of E. lower) are probably from the Teut. form HLIURA, the cheek, face, given by Fick, iii. 88. It seems easiest, therefore, to deduce M. E. Juren directly from M.E. lure, an occasional form of the word which is better known as M. E. lere, the cheek. We have at least one instance of it. 'Hire lure lumes liht'=her face shines bright; Specimens of Lyric Poetry, p. 52; (a quotation already noticed, s. v. Loom (2)). Lastly, lure is allied to A. S. Aleór.  $\gamma$ . In this y. In this view, lower is merely a variant of leer; which is, in fact, the usual opinion (see Webster, Wedgwood, E. Müller); the only difference being that I regard both lear and lower as English words, instead of looking on them as having been borrowed from Dutch. The orig. sense was merely to look, to glance; afterwards used in a sinister sense. See Leer. Der. lower-ing or lowr-ing, Matt. xvi. 3. LOYAL, faithful, true. (F., -L.) Common in Shak. Rich. II, i. 1. 148, 181; &c. - F. loyal, 'loyall;' Cot. - Lat. legalis, legal. Doublets, leal, legal, q. v. Der. loyal-ly, loyal-ty, loyal-ist.

LOZENGE, a rhombus; a small cake of flavoured sugar, &c., orig. of a diamond shape. (F.) Formerly spelt losenge; and esp. used as an heraldic term, to denote a shield of a diamond shape; see Romaunt of the Rose, I. 893. The word losinges in Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 227, is prob. the same word. - O.F. losenge, lozenge, 'a losenge, a lozenge, a little square cake of preserved herbs, flowers, &c.;' Cot. Mod. F. losange. Of uncertain origin; see Littre, Diez, and Scheler. B. The Spanish form is lozanje, a lozenge or figure in the shape of a diamond or rhombus; and the most likely connection is with Span. losa, a flag-stone, marble-slab, a square stone used for paving; whence losar, to pave. So also we find O. F. lauze, Port. lousa, a flat stone, a slate for covering roofs. y. Perhaps these words can be referred back to Lat. pl. laudes, praises, as suggested by Diez, who observes the use of Span. landa in the sense of a tomb-stone with an epitaph ;' Meadows. This connects it with O. F. losange, losenge, praise, flattery (Burguy), formed from O. F. los, loz, praise (Cot.) = Low Lat. laudes, lauds, pl. of Lat. laus, praise ; see Laud. In this case the word meant epitaph or encomium, then grave-stone, square slab, and finally a flat square cake. Cf. E. hatchment for achievement.

LUBBER, a clumsy fellow, dolt. (C.) Another form is looby. M. E. lobre, lobur, P. Plowman, A. prol. 52; B. prol. 55; where some MSS. have loby. Of Celtic origin; cf. W. llob, a dolt, blockhead; llabi, a stripling, looby.  $\beta$ . The orig, sense is perhaps flabby, feeble, inefficient, from the notion of hanging loosely down, being slack. Cf. W. lieipr, flabby, feeble, llibin, flaccid, drooping, llipa, flaccid, limp; all from the Aryan base LAB, to hang loosely down; see Lap (1). We find similar forms in Du. lobbes, a booby; Swed. dial. lubber, a thick, clumsy, lazy man (Rietz). It is probable, however, that the author of P. Plowman borrowed the word from the Welsh directly. Shak has lob, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 16, which is exactly the W. word; also to lob down = to droop. Hen. V, iv. 2. 47. Der. lubber-ly, Merry Wives, v. 5. 195. And see lump.

LUBRICATE, to make smooth or slippery. (L.) Used by Ray, On the Creation, pt. ii. (R.) Kersey, ed. 1715, has lubricitate, to make slippery. The adj. lubrick occurs in Cotgrave to translate F. lubrique; and the sb. lubricity, for F. lubricité. - Lat. lubricatus, pp. of lubricare, to make alipery. - Lat. lubricas, slippery (whence F. lubricase). Root uncertain. Der. lubricat-ion, lubricat-or; also F. lubrique). Root uncertain. lubricity = F. lubricité, as above.

LUCE, a fish, prob. the pike. (F., -L.) 'Luce, fysche, Lucius;' Prompt. Parv.; and see Chaucer, C.T. 352. - O.F. lua, 'a pike;' Cot. -Lat. lucius, a fish, perhaps the pike. in Shak. Merry Wives, i. 1. 16, means a louse ; see note in Schmidt. LUCID, bright, shining, clear. (L.) 'Lucid firmament;' Spenser, & Bavarian laffen, the blade of an oar, flat part of a rudder (Schmeller), shining. - Lat. lucere, to shine. - Lat. luce, stem of lux, light. - RUK, to shine; whence also Skt. ruck, to shine, ruck, light, Gk. Acondo, white, &c. Der. lucid-ly, lucid-ness, lucid-i-ty. Also Luci-fer, Chaucer, C. T. 14005, from Lat. luci-fer (bringer of light, morningstar), from Lat. luci-, crude form of lux, and fer-re, to bring. Also lucent, Ben Jonson, Epigram 76, 1. 8, from Lat. lucent-, stem of pres. pt. of lucere, to shine. Also lucubration, q.v. From the same root we have lu-nar, lu-min-ary, e-lu-cid-ate, il-lu-min-ate, pel-lu-cid, lu-etrat-ion, il-luss-trate, lustre (1), lynn. And see Light (1). LUCK, fortune, chance, good hap. (O. Low G.) 'Lurke [prob. a misprint for lukke], or wynnynge, luk, Lucrum; 'Prompt. Parv. p. 316. [It would seem as if the writer wrongly identifies the word with Lat. lucrum.] Not found in A.S.; but we find O. Fries. luk, luck, good fortune; Du. luk, goluk, good fortune; happiness. +Swed. lycka. + Dan. lykke. + G. glück, contr. from M. H. G. gelück.  $\beta$ . The orig. sense is favour or enticement; the above words being derived from a Teut. verb LUK, to entice, allure, ap-pearing in Du. lokken, Swed. locka, Dan. lokke, G. locken, M. H. G. lucken, O. H. G. lucchen, to entice, allure, decoy; also in the Shetland word luck, to entice, to entreat (Edmondston). Der. luck-y, Much Ado, v. 3. 32; luck-i-ly, luck-i-ness, luck-less, luck-less-ly, -ness. LUCRE, gain, profit. (F.,-L.) M. E. lucre, Chaucer, C. T. 16870.-F. lucre.-Lat. lucrum, gain. Allied to Irish luack, value, price, wages, hire; G. loke, a reward; Gk. λεία, booty; Russ. low', catching of prey, lovite, to capture. All from  $\sqrt{LU}$ , to win, capture as booty; Fick, i. 755. Der. lucr-at-ive, from F. lucratif. 'lucrative,' Cot. - Lat. lucrations, from lucratus, pp. of lucrari, to gain, which from lucrum, sb.; also lucrative-ly, -ness.

LUCUBRATION, a production composed in retirement. (L.) 'Lucubration, a studying or working by candle light;' Phillips' Dict. ed. 1706. Coined, in imitation of F. words in -tion, from Lat. lucubratio, a working by lamp light, night-work, lucubration. - Lat. lucubratus, pp. of lucubrare, to bring in lamps, to work by lamp-light. -Lat. lucubram * (not given in White), prob. a faint light; clearly formed from luc-, stem of lux, light. See Lucid, Light (1).

LUDICROUS, laughable, ridiculous. (L.) 'Some ludicross schoolmen;' Spectator, no. 191, l. 1. Formed (like ardsous, &c.) immediately from Lat. Iudicrus, done in sport; by change of -us to -ous. - Lat. ludi- = ludo-, crude form of ludus, sport. - Lat. luders, to play. Root unknown. Der. ludicrous-ly, -ness; also (from ludere) e-lude, de-lude, inter-lude, pre-lude; and (from pp. lusus), al-lus-ion, col-lus-ion, il-lus-ion.

LUFF, LOOF, to turn a ship towards the wind. (E.) The pp. loofed is in Shak. Ant. iii, 10. 18. 'To loof, usually pron. to luff;' Phillips' Dict. ed. 1706. Shak. prob. took the word from North's Plutarch, since we find 'he was driven also to loof off to have more room' in the description of the battle of Actium; see Shakespeare's Plutarch, ed. Skeat, p. 212, note 1. The verb answers to Du. loeven, to luff, to keep close to the wind. B. But the verb is due to an older sb., found in Mid. E. more than once. This is the M. E. lof, a 'loof,' the name of a certain contrivance on board ship, of which the use is not quite certain. We find it in Layamon, II. 7859, 9744; the pl. being lowes (= loves), 20949, 30921; see Sir F. Madden's remarks in vol. iii. p. 476 of his edition. See also Richard Cuer de Lion, l. 71; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 106; Ancren Riwle, p. 104, l. I (though this passage is of doubtful mean-ing). The word seems to have had different senses at different times; thus the mod. Du. loef is 'weather gage,' like mod. E. luff; but Kilian explains the O. Du. loef by scalmus, i. e. a thole-pin. In Falconer's Marine Dict. we find loof explained as ' the after-part of a ship's bow;' whilst in Layamon and other passages in M.E. we find (as Sir F. Madden says) that it is 'applied to some part of a ship, the agency of which was used to alter its course.' Sir F. Madden quotes from the Supplement to Ducange, s. v. dracena, which Lat. word is used as equivalent to E. loof, and explained by gubernaculum. The reader should consult Sir F. Madden's note. The loof was certainly, as Mr. Wedgwood remarks, 'a timber of considerable size, by which the course of the ship was directed.' It was not, however, what we now call a rudder. O. In my opinion, the passages in which the word occurs go to prove that it was orig. a kind of paddle, which in large ships became a large piece of timber, perhaps thrust over the after-part of a ship's bow (to use Falconer's expression) to assist the rudder in keeping the ship's head right. D. In any case, we may safely infer that the orig, sense was 'paddle; ' and the word is really an English one, though we may have also re-borrowed the word, in the 16th century, from the cognate Du. losf. Cf. also Dan. law, luff, weather-gage; laws, to luff; Swed lof, weather-gage; but these may have been borrowed from Dutch. We find, however, the cognate 344 LUG. allied to Icel. löpp (gen. lappar), the paw of an animal; see Fick, <sup>6</sup> to babble (lit. to gail be ball, ball flat hand, Goth. 16fa, the flat hand, palm of the hand, Russ. lapa, a paw; the Lowland Scotch form being loof, the very same form as that with which we started. See Glove. E. Recapitulating. we may conclude that the flat or palm of the hand was the original loof which, thrust over the side of the primitive canoe, helped to direct its course when a rude sail had been set up; this became a paddle, and, at a later time, a more elaborate piece of mechanism for keeping the ship's head straight; which, being constantly associated with the idea of the wind's direction, came at last to mean 'weathergage,' esp. as in the Du. loef houden, to keep the luff, de loef afwinnen, to gain the luff, te loef, windward; &c. A similar idea is seen in Lat. palma, (1) the palm of the hand, (2) the blade of an oar. werb is from the older sb. ¶ We must not connect Du. loss The ¶ We must not connect Du. loef, luff, with Du. lucht, air; nor with our own word loft. Der. a-loof, q. v. LUG, to pull, haul, drag. (Scand.) 'To lugge, trahere, vellere;' Levins. The old sense was 'to pull by the hair.' In Gower, iii. 148, 149, we have : 'And by the chin and by the cheke She luggeth 140, 149, we have: 'And by the chin and by the checke She luggeth him right as she list,' i.e. she pulls him by his beard and whiskers as she pleases. So also: 'to-lugged of manye' = pulled by the hair by many people; P. Plowman, B. ii. 216. – Swed. lugga, to pull by the hair; from Swed. lugg, the fore-lock, which is prob. merely a corrupter form of Swed. lock, a lock of hair; see Lock (2). + Norweg. lugga, to pull by the hair; from lugg, the hair of the head.  $\beta$ . The older k (for g) appears in O. Low G. luken, to pull, esp. to pull by the hair; Brem. Wörterbuch, iii. 97, and in prov. E. lowk, to weed, pull up weeds (see lowkers = weeders, in Halliwell); cf. Icel. lok, a weed; A.S. lyccan, to pull. 'Ceorl of his secre lycd yfel wedd monig '= a peasant lugs many an evil weed out of his field : Ælfred's tr. of Boethius, met. xii. 28. This word becomes in Danish luge, to weed, by the usual Dan. habit of putting g for k between two vowels. Thus Swed. lugga is from Swed. lugg, which again is from the base LUK, to pull; cf. Skt. ruj, to break, from  $\checkmark$  RUG, to break.  $\gamma$ . The Lowland Sc. lug, the ear, orig. the lobe of the ear, is the same word as Swed. lugg, the fore-lock; it appears to be a later use of it. Der. lugg-age (with F. suffix -age), Temp. iv. 231. And see Lugsail. The alleged A. S. geluggian, due to Somner, is unauthorised, and perhaps a fiction.

LUGSAIL, a sort of square sail. (Hybrid; Scand. and E.) "Lugsail, a square sail hoisted occasionally on a yard which hangs nearly at right angles with the mast;' Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. does not mention lugger, which appears to be a later word; the Dan. lugger, Du. logger, a lugger, may be borrowed from E.] Apparently from the verb to lug, it being so easily hoisted by a mere pull at the rope which supports the yard. Der. lugg-er, a ship rigged with lug-sails. LUGUBRIOUS, mournful. (L.) Spelt lugubrous and lugubrious in Kersey, ed. 1715; but lugubrous only in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Imitated from Lat. lugubris, mournful. = Lat. lugere, to mourn. Gk. λυγρόε, sad, λοιγόε, destruction. - 4 RUG, to break, bend; whence also Skt. ruj, to break, bend. Der. lugubrious-ly, -ness. LUKEWARM, partially warm, not hot. (E.) Luke means

'tepid,' and can correctly be used alone, as by Sam. Weller, in Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. 33: 'let me have nine penn'orth o' brandy and water luke.' It is sufficient to trace this word alone. M. E. leuk, leuke, luke, warm, tepid. 'Als a leuke bath, nouther hate ne calde; ' = as a tepid bath, neither hot nor cold; Pricke of Con-science, l. 7481 (Harl. MS.). 'Tha blod com forð luke' = the blood came forth warm; Layamon, 27557.  $\beta$ . The word is a mere extension of the older word lew, with the same sense. 'Thou art lew, nether cold nether hoot;' Wyclif, Rev. iii. 16. where one MS.  $\beta$ . The word is a mere has lewk. This adj. is closely allied to A. S. Aleo, Aleow, a shelter, a place that is protected from cold wind, &c., still preserved in mod. E. lee; see Leo. Cf. Icel.  $\lambda lika, a$  thaw;  $\lambda liana$ , to thaw;  $\lambda lar$ ,  $\lambda lýr$ , warm, mild;  $\lambda lýja, \lambda liaa$ , to shelter.  $\gamma$ . The addition of k may have been suggested by A.S. wlac, tepid ; see Sweet's A.S. Reader. It is usual, indeed, to derive luke from A.S. wlæc immediately, but it is difficult to explain so extraordinary a change; it is more reasonable to take into account both words, viz. Aleo and wlæc, the former being the more important. It is curious that, whilst Du. has the extended form leukwarm, G. has the shorter form lauwarm, O. H. G. láo. ¶ The old sense of A. S. wlac seems to have been 'weak ;' cf. Goth. thlakwus, flaccid, tender, Mk. xiii. 28; and perhaps Lat. flaccidus. Der. luke-warm-ly, luke-warm-ness. [+]

LULL, to sing to rest, quiet. (Scand.) M. E. Inllen, Chaucer, C. T. 8429, 9697. Not found much earlier.-Swed. lulla, to hum, to lull; Dan. lulle, to lull. + O. Du. lullen, to sing in a humming voice, sing to sleep; Oudemans.  $\beta$ . Purely an imitative word, from the repetition of lu lu, which is a drowsier form of the more loin. See LULL LUMBAR, belonging to the loins. (L.) 'Lumbar or Lumbary, belonging to the loins;' Phillips, ed. 1706. – Lat. lumbaris, adj., only found in the neut. lumbare, used as sb. to signify 'apron;' Jerem. xiii. I (Vulgate). - Lat. lumbus, the loin. Cf. A. S. lendenu, pl. the loins, Matt, iii. 4; Du. lendenen, s. pl.; Swed. land, Dan. lend, the loin; G. lende, the haunch. Root unknown. Der. (from Lat. lumbus) lumb-ago; also loin, q.v.

LUMBER (1), cumbersome or useless furniture. (F., -G.) See Trench, Select Glossary, where we find: 'The lumber-room was orig. the Lombard-room, or room where the Lombard banker and broker stowed away his pledges. ... As these would naturally often accumulate here till they became out of date and unserviceable, the steps are easy to be traced by which the word came to possess its present meaning.' [I see no point in Mr. Wedgwood's objections to this etymology, which is clear enough.] 'To put one's clothes to lumber, pignori dare;' Skinner's Dict., ed. 1671. 'Lombardeer, an usurer or broaker, so called from the Lombards ... hence our word lumbar, which signifies refuse household stuff. Lombard is also used for a bank for usury or pawns; ' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. This shews that the word lombard had so completely passed into the name of a place or room, that the word Lombardeer was actually coined out of this sense of it, merely to express the original sense of the word Lombard itself! Even in Shak, we find Mrs. Quickly pronouncing Lombard as Lumbert, 2 Hen. IV, ii. I. 31. Minsheu, ed. 1627, gives Lumbar, Lombar, or Lombard, 'a bancke for vsury or pawnes.' He also gives : 'Lumber, old baggage of houshold stuffe, so called of the noise it maketh when it is remoued, lumber, lumber, Scc. ;' and if any reader prefer this fancy, he may do so; see Lumber (2). B. The Lombards were early known as lenders of money on pawn; see P. Plowman, C. vii. 241, B. v. 242, and the note. - F. Lombard, 'a Lombard;' Cot. (It also formerly meant a pawn-broker's shop: Hamilton.) -G. Langbart, Long-beard ; a name given to the men of this tribe (Littre). See Long and Beard. Der. lumber-room.

LUMBER (2), to make a great noise, as a heavy rolling object. (Scand.) 'The lumbering of the wheels;' Cowper, John Gilpin, st. 6 from end. 'I lumber, I make a noise above ones head, le fais bruit. You lumbred so above my head I could not sleep for you; Palsgrave. 'They lumber forth the lawe;' Skelton, Colin Clout, l. 95. A frequentative verb of Scand. origin; preserved in Swed. dial. lomra, to resound, frequent. of ljumma, or ljomma, to resound, thunder; from ljumm, a great noise; Rietz. [Similarly lumber (with excrescent b) stands for lumm-er, where -er is the frequentative suffix.] β. The Swed. ljumm is cognate with Icel. hljómr, a sound, tune, voice; but differs from A.S. klyn, a loud noise (Grein), in the suffix and quantity. The Goth. kliuma means 'hearing;' Mk. vii. 35. Y. Swed. ljumm, Icel. kljómr, Goth. kliuma, are from a Teut. base HLEU-MA or HLIU-MA (Fick, iii. 89); from the Teut. verb HLU, to hear = KRU, to hear. From the same Teut. verb is the Teut. adj. HLUDA, A. S. hlud, E. loud; see Loud.

LUMINARY, a bright light. (F., -L.) 'O radiant Luminary; Skelton, Prayer to the Father of Heaven, l. 1.-O.F. luminarie (Littré); later luminaire, 'a light, candle, lampe;' Cot. - Lat. luminare, a luminary, neut. of luminaris, light giving. - Lat. lumin-, stem of lumen (-luc-men), light. Cf. Lat. lucere, to shine; see Lucid. And see Luminous.

LUMINOUS, bright, shining. (F., -L.) 'Their sunny tents, and houses luminous; Giles Fletcher, Christ's Triumph after Death (R.) - F. lumineux, 'shining;' Cot. - Lat. luminosus, luminous. - Lat. lumin-, stem of lumen, light; see Luminary. Der. luminous-ly, ness. Also (from Lat. lumen) lumin-ar-y, il-lumin-ate. See Lucid. ¶ Perhaps taken directly from Latin. LUMP, a small shapeless mass, clot. (Scand.) M. E. lompe, lumpe; 'a lompe of chese' = a lump of cheese; P. Plowman, C. x. 150. Of Scand. origin; cf. Swed. dial. lump, a piece hewn off a log (Rietz); Norweg. lump, a block, knop, stump (Aasen). B. Allied words are Du. lomp (O. Du. lompe), a rag, tatter, lump; Du. lomp, clumsy, dull, awkward; Norweg. lopputt, lumpy (Aasen); Icel. loppinn, with hands benumbed with cold; as well as Swed. dial. lubber, a thick, awkward, slow fellow, lubba, to be slow (Rietz). y. Thus it is easily seen that lump is a nasalised form of lup (weakened form lub), from a Scand. base LUP, to be slow or heavy: see Lubber. 8. This base LUP is a by-form of the Teut. base LAP, to droop, hang loosely down, Fick, iii. 266. The notion of drooping, or flapping heavily and loosely, is the fundamental one throughout. See Lap (2). The likeness to elump is accicheerful la 1 la ! used in singing. Cf. G. lallen, to lisp as children do, dental, but the latter word may easily have affected the sense of

Two Gent. iii. 2. 62; lump-y, lump-fish. Also lunch, q.v. LUNAR, belonging to the moon. (L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. [The older word was lunary, used by Cot. to tr. F. lunaire.] - Lat. Ismaris, lunar. - Lat. lüna (-luc.na), the moon, lit. light-giver. Cf. Lat. lucere, to shine; see Lucid. Der. (from Lat. luna) lun-ate, i. e. moon-shaped, crescent-like; lun-at-ion, in Kersey, ed. 1715; lun-at-ic, q. v.; lun-ette, 'in fortification, a small work gen. raised before the courtin in ditches full of water,' Phillips = F. lunette, dimin of F. lune, the moon. Also inter-lunar. LUNATIC, affected with madness. (F., -L.) M. E. lunatik, P. Plowman, C. x. 107; used as sb. id. B. prol. 123. - F. lunatique, "lunatick;' Cot. - Lat. lunaticus, insane; lit. affected by the moon, which was supposed to cause insanity. - Lat. lunatus, moon-like. - Lat. luna, the moon; see Lunar. Der. lunac-y, Hamlet, ii. 2. 49, iii. 1. 14.

LUNCH, a lump, large piece of bread, &c. (Scand.) 'Lunches, slices, cuts of meat or bread; 'Whitby Glossary. Minsheu (ed. 1627) mentions lunch, as being equivalent to 'gobbet, or peece.' The word presents no real difficulty, being a mere variant of lump; just as bunck, hunck, are variants of bump and hump; see those words.

And see Lump. Der. linch-con, q. v. LUNCHEON, LUNCH, a slight meal between breakfast and dinner. (Scand.) Lunch, in the modern sense, is a mere abbreviation of luncheon, though we shall trace the latter back to lunch in the sense mentioned in the article above. Cotgrave translates O. F. caribot by 'a lunchion, or big piece of bread, &c.;' also O. F. Aorion by 'a dust, cuff, rap, knock, thump, also, a luncheon, or big piece.' We may suspect the spellings lunch-ion, lunch-eon, to be merely literary English for lunch-in. A huge lunshin of bread, i. e. a large piece; 'Thoresby's (Yorkshire) Letter to Ray, 1703 (E. D. S. Gloss. B. 17, p. 103). And this lunchin is probably nothing but lunching, with the g obscured, just as curmudgeon (q. v.) is nothing but cornmudging. At any rate, luncheon, lunchion, or lunchin, is nothing but an old provincial word, and a mere extension of lunch, a lump, without, at first, any change of meaning. It was easily extended to mean a slight meal, just as we now say 'to take a snack,' i.e. a snatch of food. ¶ Many and silly are the conjectures that have been made concerning this word; Wedgwood has it rightly, as above. It is quite distinct from Nuncheon, q. v. Dor. lunch, verb. LUNG, one of the organs of breathing. (E.) Gen. in the pl. LUNG, one of the organs of breathing. (L.) Gen. in the pl. lungs. M. E. lunge (sing.), Gower, C. A. iii. 100; lunges (pl.), id. iii. 90. Also longes, pl., Chaucer, C. T. 2754. – A. S. lunge, neut. sing.; lungan, pl., of which lungen is a weakened form. 'Pulmo, lungen;' Wright's Gloss., i. 45, col. 1, l. 12.+Du. long, s. pl., lungs, lights.+Icel. lunga.neut. sing.; usually in pl. lungu. + Dan. lunge; pl. lunger.+Swed. lunga.+G. lunge, pl.  $\beta$ . Allied to A. S. lungre, quickly (orig. lightly), Grein, ii. 196; also to E. long, which has been shewn to be related to Gk.  $\lambda \lambda \alpha \chi \omega_s$ , Skt. laghu, light; see Long (1). Thus the lungs are named from their lightness; indeed, they are also colled light. Einstly lunger (light lewith are all from they are also called lights. Finally, lungs, light, levity are all from the same root. Fick, iii. 265. Der. lung-wort, A.S. lungenwyrt, Gloss. to Cockayne's A.S. Leechdoms.

LUNGE, a thrust, in fencing. (F., -L.) In Todd's Johnson; formerly longe, used by Smollett (Johnson). The E. a longe is a mistaken substitute for F. allonge (formerly also alonge), 'a lengthening,' Cot. So named from the extension of the body in delivering the thrust. - F. allonger (formerly alonger), to lengthen; cf. Ital. allongare, allungare, to lengthen (Florio). Compounded of F. à (Lat. ad) and longare*, only in comp. e-longare, to lengthen; see Elongate. [+]
 LUPINE, a kind of pulse. (F., -L.) The pl. is both lupines and lupins in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxii. c. 25. - F. lupin, 'the pulse lupines;' Cot. - Lat. lupinum, a lupine, kind of pulse; neut. of lupinus, wolfish, though the reason of the name is not apparent; perhaps 'because it eagerly penetrates the soil' (Webster). - Lat. lupus, a wolf; cognate with Gk.  $\lambda i \kappa \sigma s$ , a wolf.  $\beta$ . Both Lat. lupus (for lukus) and Gk. Aunos have lost initial w (w or F), which is preserved in Skt. wrika, Russ. wolk', Lithuan. wilkas, and E. wolf; see Wolf. Curtius, i. 197.

LURCH (1), to lurk, dodge, steal, pilfer. (Scand.) Merely a variant of lurk, due to a weakened pronunciation; see Lurk. The senses are: (1) to lie in wait, lurk, Merry Wires, ii. 2. 16; (2) to pilfer, steal, rob, plunder, Cor. ii. 2. 105. Der. lurch-er, 'one that lies upon the lurch, or upon the catab, also a kind of hunting-dog,' Phillips, ed. 1706. [+]

LURCH(2), the name of a game.  $(F_{.,-}L.?)$  The phr. 'to leave in the lurch' was derived from its use in an old game; to lurch is still used in playing cribbage. 'But rather leave him in the lurch;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3. l. 1151. The game is mentioned in + Du. lust, delight. + 1 Cotgrave. - F. lourche, 'the game called Lurche, or, a Lurch in Goth. luctus. + G. lust.

lump, and probably did so. See Clump. Der. lump-ing; lump-ish, game; il demoura lourche, he was left in the lurch; 'Cot. He also gives: 'Ourche, the game at tables called lurch.' β. This suggests that lourche stands for lourche, the initial I being merely the def. article. A lurch is a term esp, used when one person gains every point before another makes one; hence a plausible derivation may be obtained by supposing that ourche meant the 'pool' in which stakes were put. The loser's stakes remained in the lurch, or he was stakes were put. The loser's stakes remained in the turch, on he was left in the lurch, when he did not gain a single piece from the pool, which all went to others.  $\gamma$ . If this be so, the sense of ourche is easily obtained; it meant the 'pool,' i. e. the vase or jar into which the stakes were cast. Roquefort gives O. F. ourcel, a little vase, also spelt orcel, shewing that O. F. orree, ource, or ourche meant a vase; cf. Ital. orcio, a jar. The etymology is then obvious, viz. from Lat. urceus, a pitcher, vase. But this is a guess.

LURCH (3), to devour; obsolete. (L.) Bacon says that proximity to great cities 'lurcheth all provisions, and maketh every thing deare;' Essay xlv, Of Building. That is, it absorbs them, lit. gulps them down. 'To lurch, deuour, or eate greedily, Ingurgito; 'Baret, haps Lurch (3) is really Lurch (1), to filch; the Lat. verb being falsely mixed up with it. [†] LURCH (4), a sudden roll sideways. (Scand.?) Not in Todd's Johnson. 'A lee lurch, a sudden roll to the leeward, as when a heavy sea strikes the ship on the weather side;' Webster. A sea term. Of obscure origin; but prob. nothing but lurch (1) or lurk in the sense of to stoop or duck like one who skulks or tries to avoid notice. See Lurch (1), Lurk.

LURE, a bait, enticement, decoy. (F., -G.) M.E. lure, Chaucer, C.T. 17021. The pp. lured, enticely, occurs in P. Plowman, B. v. 439; cf. Chaucer, C. T. 5997. A term of the chase; and therefore of F. origin. – O.F. loerre, loirre (see Littré), later leurre, 'a faulconer's lure;' Cot. – M. H. G. luoder (G. luder), a bait, decoy, lure. B. A derivation from M. H. G. and G. laden, to invite, is not impossible; since that verb makes lud in the past tense. See Lade, Load. Der. lure, vb.

IURK, to lie in wait, skulk, lie hid. (Scand.) M. E. lurken, lorken, Chaucer, C. T. 16126; P. Plowman, B. ii. 216. Of Scand. origin. By the usual corruption of s to r, lurken stands for an older lusken; still preserved in Swed. dial. luska, to lurk, to sneak about in order to listen, to play the eaves-dropper; Dan. luske, to sneak, skulk about ; cf. G. lauschen, to listen, lurk, lie in wait ; O. Du. luschen, to lurk (Oudemans). B. By the common interchange of sk with is, we see that Dan. lusks is merely another form of A. S. kly: san, to listen; see Liston. Y. That M. E. lurken has lost initial h, and stands for klurken, and that r is a later substitution for s, further appears from the shortened forms in Swed. Iura, Dan. Iure, to lurk, outwit, G. lauern, Icel. hlera, klöra, to stand eaves-dropping, to listen, Du. loeren, to peep, peer, lurk, cheat, gull, senses which appear under the form lurch; see Lurch (1). So also Du. op den loer liggen, to lie in ambush, corresponds to the sense seen in lurcher, also given under Lurch (1). 8. Thus the Teut. base is HLU, to hear; answering to  $\checkmark$  KRU, to hear. See Loud, Liston. Doublet, lurch (1); perhaps lurch (4); and perhaps even lurch (3). LURY, the same as LOTY, q.v. LUSCIOUS, delicious, very sweet. (E.; with F. suffix.) Also spelt lushious, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 12. 54; and in Skinner. Wedgwood cites from Palsgrave: 'Fresh or lussyouse, as meate is that is not well seasoned or hath an unpleasant swetnesse in it, fade.' The word cannot be traced further back, but it evidently arose (I think) from attaching the suffix -ous to the M. E. lusty, pleasant, delicious. The phonetic change from lust-i-ous to lussious and lusk-i-ous is a most easy corruption; in fact, the word could not have lasted long with a pure pronunciation, as it requires care to say it. [Similarly, the M. H. G. lussam stands for an older lust-sam (Wackernagel); fashion is a doublet of faction, and t is lost after s in listen, hasten, waistcoat, Charistmas, &c.]  $\beta$ . Observe the peculiar use of M. E. lusty; thus Chaucer speaks of 'a lusty plain,' 'lusty wether' [weather], 'the lusty seson,' &c. ; C. T. 7935, 10366, 10703. See Lust. y. Shakespeare has lush (short for lush-ious) in the sense of luxuriant in growth, where Chaucer would certainly have said lusty; the curious result being that Shak. uses both words together. 'How lush and lusty the grass looks, 'Temp. ii. 1. 52. The equivalence of the words could not be better exemplified. Der. luscious-ness.

LUST, longing desire. (E.) The old sense is 'pleasure.' M.E. lust, Chaucer, C. T. 192, 7956. - A. S. lust, pleasure; Grein, ii. 196. + Du. lust, delight. + Icel. lyst. losti. + Dan. lyst. + Swed. lust. + B. We find a Goth fraluets, destruction, from the verb fraliusan, to lose utterly, as also G. verlust, destruc-tion, from verlieren (= verliesen). This suggests a possible deri-vation from the verb to lose; see Lose. Y. The sense gives no difficulty; the Teut. base LUS meant 'to set free' or release; thus the orig. sense of lust was release, relaxation, perfect freedom to act loosely or at pleasure, or to do as one lists; see List (4). 5. The base LUS is an extension of LU, to release, cut loose; seen in Lat. lurre, Gk.  $\lambda i \in \mathcal{W}$ , to release, Skt.  $i \neq i$ , to cut, cut away. See Loose.  $\P$  This seems to me better than to connect lust with Skt. lask, to desire, for which see Lascivious; the vowel is against it. However, such is the view taken by Cartius, i. 450. Der. luss, verb, K. Lear. iv. 6. 166, the older form being list = A. S. lystan; lust-y, M. E. lust-y, Chancer, C. T. 80; lust-i-ly. lust-i-ness; lust-ful, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 80; lust-ful-ness, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 21; lust-less (= lust-less), Gower, C.A. ii. 111, Prompt. Parv. p. 307;

List-less-ness. And perhaps lus-cious, q. v. LUSTRATION, a purification by sacrifice, a sacrifice. (L.) 'The doctrine of lustrations, amulets, and charms;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. i. c. 11. sect. 12. Formed, by analogy with F. words in -tion, from Lat. lustratio, an expiation, sacrifice. - Lat. lustrore, to purify. - Lat. lustrum, an explatory sacrifice. See Lustre (2)

LUSTRE (1), splendour, brightness. (F., -L.) 'Lustre of the dyamonte;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 73e. Spelt luster in Minshen, ed. 1627. - F. lustre, 'a luster, or gloss;' Cot. - Low Lat. lustrum, a window; lit. a place for admitting light; and hence, the light itself; connected with Lat. lustrare, to enlighten, illumine.  $\beta$ . This verb lustrare appears to be quite distinct from lustrare, to purify; for which see Lustre (2). It is prob. formed from a lost adjective lustrus \*, shining, an abbreviation of luc-strus; in any case, it is to be connected with lucere, to shine; see Lucid. Der. lustr-ous, All's Well, ii. 1. 41; lustrous-ly; lustre-les; also lutetring, q. v. LUSTRE (2), LUSTRUM, a period of five years. (L.) Spelt lustrum in Minsheu, ed. 1627; which is the Lat. form. At a later period it was changed to lustre, rather as being a more familiar form than because it was the F. spelling; the F. form lustre is given in Cotgrave. - Lat. lustrum, an expiatory offering, a lustration ; also a period of five years, because every five years a lustrum was per-formed.  $\beta$ . The orig. sense is 'a washing' or purification; connected with Lat. laware, to wash, luere, to cleanse, purify ; see Lave. Der. lustr-al, adj.; lustr-at-ion, q. v.

LUTE (1), a stringed instrument of music. (F., - Arab.) M. E. lute, Chaucer, C. T. 12400. It is not easy to say how the word came to us; but prob. it was through the French. The forms are: O. F. luz, leus (Roquefort), lut (Cot.), mod. F. lutk; Prov. laut, Span. laud, Port. aloude, Ital. linto, leuto; also O. Du. luyte (Kilian), Du. luit, Dan. lui, G. laute.  $\beta$ . The Port. form alaude clearly shews the Arab. origin of the word, the prefix al- being the Arab. def. article, which in other languages appears merely as an initial l. The sb. is Arab. 'sid (with initial ain), wood, timber, the trunk or branch of a tree, a staff, stick, wood of aloes, lute, or harp; Rich. Dict. p. 1035, col. 1. Der. lute string, Much Ado, iii. 2. 61.

LUTE (2), a composition like clay, loam. (F., -L.) Chaucer has enluting, Six-text, Group G, I. 766, on which see my note. We also find the pp. luted, i. e. protected with lute; see Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 99; Massinger, A Very Woman, iii. I. 38. - O.F. lut, 'clay, mould, loam, durt;' Cot. - Lat. lutum, mud, mire; lit. that which is washed over or washed down. - Lat. luere, to wash, lave; see Lave. Der. lut-ing. LUTESTBING, a lustrons silk. (F., - Ital., -L.) In Skinner, ed. 1671. 'The price of lutestring;' Spectator, no. 21. A curious corruption of lustring or lustring. 'Lustring or Lutestring, a sort of silk; Kersey. - F. lustrine, lustring; Hamilton. - Ital. lustrino, lutestring (a shining silk), tinsel; Meadows. B. So called from its glossiness. - Ital. lustrare, to shine. - Lat. lustrare, to shine; see Lustre (1). W Distinct from lute-string under lute (1). LUXURY, free indulgence in pleasure, a dainty. (F., - L.) M. E. luxurie, Chaucer, C. T. 12418.-O. F. luxurie (?), F. luxure, 'luxury;' Cot. = Lat. luxuria, luxury. An extended form from Lat. luxus, pomp. excess, luxury.  $\beta$ . Prob. connected with pollucere, to offer in sacrifice, serve up a dish, entertain; and from the same root as licere, to be lawful; see License. Der. luxuri-ous, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 4, 1. 498; luxuri-ous-ly, -ness; luxuri-ate, from Lat. luxuriatus, pp. of luxuriare, to indulge in luxury; luxuri-ant, Milton, P. L. iv. 260, from Lat. luxuri-ant-, stem of pres. pt. of luxuriare; luxuri-ant-ly, luxuri-ance, luxuri-anc-y.

-LY, a common adj. and adv. ending. (E.) As an adj. ending, in man-ly, &c., the A.S. form is -lic. As an adv. ending, the A.S. form is -lice. The suffix -lic is the same word as A. S. lic, like; see Like. LYE, a mixture of ashes and water, water impregnated with alka-'rom wood-ashes. (E.) 'Ley for waschynge, lye, npt. Parv. p. 294. – A. S. leók, 'lie, lee' [lye], line

Fick, iii. 260. [4] LYMPH, a colourless fluid in animals. (L.) A shortened form of lympha, the older term. 'Lympha, a clear humour;' Kersey, ed. 1715. - Lat. lympha, water, lymph; also, a water-nymph.  $\beta$ . The spelling with y is due to a supposed derivation from the Gk. vipon. a nymph, which is probably false. The word is rather to be connected with Lat. limpidus, clear; see Limpid. Der. lymph-at-ic. from Lat. lymphaticus.

LYNCH, to punish summarily, by mob-law. (E.) 'Said to derive its name from John Lynch, a farmer, who exercised it upon the fugitive slaves and criminals dwelling in the "dismal swamp." N. Carolina... This mode of administering justice began about the end of the 17th century; 'Haydn, Dict. of Dates. The name Lynck is from A. S. kline, a ridge of land; see Link (1). Der lynck-lane. MACADAMISE, to pave a road with small, broken stones. (Hybrid; Gael. and Heb.; with F. suffix.) 'Macadamising, a system of road-making devised by Mr. John Macadam, and published by bim in an essay, in 1819, '&c. ; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. Macadame son of Adam ; from Gael. mae, son ; and Heb. ádam, a man, from the root adam, to be red.

MACARONI, MACCARONI, a paste made of wheat flour. Ital., -L.?) 'He doth learn to make strange sauces, to eat anchovies, maecaroni, bovoli, fagioli, and caviare; ' Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, A. ii (Mercury). 'Macaroni, gobbets or lumps of boyled paste,' &cc. ; Minsheu, ed. 1627. - O. Ital. maccaroni, 'a kinde of paste meate boiled in broth, and drest with butter, cheese, and spice ; Florio. The mod. Ital. spelling is maccheroni, properly the plural of maccherone, used in the sense of a 'macarone' biscnit. B. Of somewhat doubtful origin; but prob. to be connected with Gk. μακαρία, a word used by Hesychius to denote βρώμα in ζωμού real dapliture, a mess of broth and pearl-barley, a kind of porridge, This word is derived by Curtius (i. 405) from Gk.  $\mu\dot{\alpha}\sigma\sigma\epsilon w$ , to knead, of which the base is  $\mu\alpha\kappa$ ; cf. Gk.  $\mu\dot{\alpha}\zeta\alpha$ , dough, Russ. muka flour, y. Similarly the Ital. macaroni is prob. from O. Ital. meal. maccare, 'to bruise, to batter, to pester ;' Florio. And, again, the Ital. maccare is from a Lat. base mac-, to knead, preserved in the deriv. macerare, to macerate, reduce to pulp. See Macerate.  $\delta$ . Thus the orig. sense seems to have been 'pulp; 'hence anything of a pulpy or pasty nature. Der. Macaron-ic, from F. macaronique, a macaronick, a confused heap or huddle of many severall things (Cot.), so named from macaroni, which was orig. a mixed mess, as described by Florio above. The name macaroni, according to Haydn, Dict. of Dates, was given to a poem by Theophilo Folengo (otherwise Merlinus Coccaius) in 1509; macaronic poetry is a kind of jumble, often written in a mixture of languages. And see macaroon.

MACAROON, a kind of cake or biscuit. (F., - Ital., - L.?) Formerly macaron, as in Cotgrave. - F. macaron; pl. macarons, macarons, little fritter-like buns, or thick losenges, compounded of sugar, almonds, rose-water, and musk, pounded together and baked with a gentel fire; also [the same as] the Ital. macaroni; Cot.-Ital. macarone, a macaroon. See further under Macaroni. (more The sense of the word has somewhat altered.

MACAW, a kind of parrot. (Caribbean?) Said to be the native name in the Antilles, i. e. the Caribbean Islands (Webster). [†]

MACE (1), a kind of club. (F., -L.) In early use. M. E. mace, King Alisaunder, 1901. - O. F. mace, mache (Burguy), mod. F. mase, a mace. - Lat. matea *, a beetle, only preserved in the dimin. mateola, a beetle, mallet; Pliny, 17, 18, 29. Prob. connected with Skt. math. to churn, crush, hurt, kill. Der. mace-bearer.

MACE (2), a kind of spice. (F., - L., - Gk., - Skt.?) The pl. maces occurs in Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 10. - F. macis, 'the spice called mace;' Cot. [Much more probably from this F.

 $\beta$ . The etym. is a little obscure; the Lat. macis is a doubtful word. It is most likely that the F. macis was confused with O. F. macer, of which Cot. says that it ' is not mace, as many imagine, but a reddish, aromaticall, and astringent rind of a certain Indian root." This O.F. macer is the word concerning which we read in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xii. c. 8, that 'the macir is likewise brought out of India; . a reddish bark or rind it is of a great root, and beareth the name of the tree itselfe.' In all likelihood, the mass and the mass are kindred words, named from some common quality, as, possibly, from their fragrance. - Lat. macer, i. e. 'macir;' Pliny. - Gk. µárep; doubtless a borrowed word from the East. Prob. from a Skt. source ; cf. Skt. makar-anda, the nectar of a flower, a kind of jasmine; mahura, mukura, a bud, a tree (the Mimusops elengi), Arabian jasmine. [+]

MACERATE, to soften by steeping, to soak. (L.) In Spenser, Virgil's Gnat, 1. 94. - Lat. maceratus, pp. of macerare, to steep; a frequentative from a base mac .. + Russ. mochite, to steep. + Gk. µdoresu (base  $\mu as-$ ), to knead, wipe; Curtius, i. 405. + Skt. mack, to pound (very rare; see Fick, i. 707). -  $\checkmark$  MAK, to pound, knead; whence also Russ. muka, meal. Der. macerat-ion. From the same root, mass (1), q. v.; perhaps macaroni, meagre, e-maciated. MACHINE, a contrivance, instrument. (F., - L., - Gk.) In Shak. Hamlet. ii. 2. 124. Rare in earlier times, but we find the spelling machune in Layamon, 1 15478. - F. machine. - Lat. machina. Gk. µŋ xavn, a device, machine; cf. µŋ xos, means, contrivance. B. From the base  $\mu\eta\chi$ , answering to an Aryan  $\checkmark$  MACH, and ACH. MAG, to have power; whence also the E. verb may; Curtins. i. 416. The E. make is also an allied word. See May (1), Make. Der. machin-ery, machin-ist; machin-te, from Lat. machinatus, pp. Der. machin-ery, machin-ist; machinatus, from the sb. machinatus, mac From the base  $\mu\eta\chi$ , answering to an Aryan  $\checkmark$  MAGH, and Teut. at ion, K. MACKEREL, the name of a fish. (F.,-L.) M.E. makerel, Havelok, 758. = O. F. makerel, in Neckam's Treatise de Utensilibus; Wright's Vocab. i. 98, l. I. (Mod. F. maquereau.)  $\beta$ . It is usual to derive O. F. makerel from Lat. macula, a stain; 'from the dark blotches with which the fish is marked' (Wedgwood). It is rather from the original Lat. word (macus or maca) of which macula is the extant diminutive form, and of which we find a trace in Span. maca, a stain, a bruise on fruit. Y. That this is the right etymology of the word is clear from another sense of O. F. maquersau; Cotgrave gives : ' Maquersaux, red scorches or spots on the legs of such as use to sit neer the fire. [The name of the brill arose in a similar way; see Brill.]  $\gamma$ . The right etymology of Lat. macula is perhaps that given by Fick, i. 707; viz. from  $\sqrt{MAK}$ , to pound, whence also E. macerate; see Macerate. This is sustained by Ital. ammaccare, to crush, bruise, Span. machar, to pound, and other words mentioned by Diez (s. v. macro). The senses 'pound, bruise, beat black and blue, stain,' are thus arranged in what is probably their ¶ The suggestion in Mahn's Webster, that the F. right order. maquereau, a mackerel, is the same word as O. F. maquereau, a pandar (Cotgrave), from 'a popular tradition in France that the mackerel, in spring, follows the female shads, which are called vierges or maids, and leads them to their mates,' is one which I make bold to reject. It is clear that the story arose out of the coincidence of the name, and that the name was not derived from the story. The etymology of O. F. maquereau, a pandar, is from the Teut. source preserved in Du. makelaar, a broker, pandar, from Du. makelen, to procure, bring about, frequentative form of makes, to make.

MACKINTOSH, a waterproof overcoat. (Gael.) From the name of the inventor.

MACROCOSM, the whole universe. (Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Spelt macrocosmus in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Coined from Gk. µaspo-, crude form of µaspoe, long, great ; and so µos, the world. See Microcosm.

MACULATE, to defile. (L.) Used as a pp. in The Two Noble Kinsmen, ed. Skeat, v. 1. 134. – Lat. maculatus, pp. of maculare, to spot. – Lat. macula. a spot. –  $\sqrt{MAK}$ , to pound, bruise, hence, to mark with a bruise. See further under Mackerel. Der. maculat-ion. Shak. Troil. iv. 4. 66 ; im-maculate, q. v. And see mail (1).

MAD, insane, foolish. (E.) The vowel was formerly long. M. E. mad, spelt maad in Li Beau Disconus, l. 2001, in Ritson's Met. Romances, vol. ii.; made in The Seven Sages, ed. Wright, 2091. Stratmann also cites 'I waxe mod' (MS. mot) from Specimens of Lyric Poetry, ed. Wright, p. 31, where it rimes with blod = blood. Cf. medschipe = madness; Ancren Riwle, p. 148, l. 1. - A. S. ge-mad, ge-maad, in a gloss (Lye); cf. A. S. mid-mid, madness, Grein, ii. 202. + O. Sax. ge-med, foolish. + O. H. G. ka-meit, gi-meit, vain. + Icel. widdr, pp. of milda, to maim, hurt. + Goth. go-maids, bruised, maimed; Luke, iv. 19, xiv. 13, 21.  $\beta$ . Thus the orig. sense appears to be 'damaged,' or 'seriously hurt.' Root uncertain. I tribe (Herod. i. 101), hence, an enchanter, wirard, juggler. Properly, one of the priests or wise men in Persia who interpreted dreams, &c. (Liddell.)  $\beta$ . The orig. sense was probably 'great;' from the Not connected with Ital. matto, mad (see Mate(2)); nor with  $\frac{1}{2}$  Zend maz, great (Fick, i. 168), cognate with Gk.  $\mu$ eyas, Lat. magnues.

MADREPORE, the common coral. (F.,-Ital.,-L. and Gk.) Modern ; not in Todd's Johnson. - F. madrépore, madrepore. - Ital. madrepora, explained in Meadows as 'a petrified plant.' B. Of somewhat uncertain origin; but prob. the first part of the word is Ital. madre, mother, used in various compounds, as madre-selva (lit. mother-wood), honeysuckle, madre-bosco (lit. mother-bush), woodbine (Florio), madre perla, mother of pearl (Florio); from Lat. matrem, acc. of mater, mother; see Mother. y. The part -pora appears to be from the Gk. www.a light, friable stone, also a stalactite. Hence madre-pore - mother-stone, a similar formation to madre perla (lit. mother-pearl). ¶ If this be right, it has nothing to do with F. madré, spotted, nor with pore. But it has certainly been understood as connected with the word pore, as shewn by the numerous similar scientific terms, such as eatenipora, tubipora, dentipora, gemmipora, &c. ; see the articles in Engl. Cycl. on Madrephyllias and Madreporcea. It does not follow that the supposed connection with pore was originally right; it only shews that this sense was substituted for that of the Gk. wwpos.

MADRIGAL, a pastoral song. (Ital., - L., - Gk.) 'Melodious birds sing madrigals;' Marlowe, Passionate Shepherd; cited in Shak. Merry Wives, iii. 1. 18, 23. – Ital. madrigale, pl. madrigal, madriali, 'madrigals, a kind of short songs or ditties in Italie;' Florio. It stands for mandrigale, and means 'a shepherd's song;' cf. mardriale, mandriano, 'a heardesman, a grasier, a drover; [also] as madrigale;' Florio. – Ital. mandra, 'a herde, drove, flock, folde; 'Florio. – Lat. mandra, a stall, stable, stye. - Gk. µávôpa, an inclosure, fold, stable. + Skt. mandurá, a stable for horses; prob. from mand, to sleep. MAGAZINE, a storehouse, store, store of news, pamphlet. (F.,-Ital., - Arab.) In Milton, P. L. iv. 816. - O. F. magazin, 'a magazin,' Cot.; mod. F. magasin. - Ital. magazzino, a storehouse. [Cf. Span. magacen, also almagacen, where al is the Arab. article.] - Arab. makazan (pl. makazin), a storehouse, granary, cellar; Rich. Dict. p. 1366. Cf. also khizanat, a magazine, treasure-house; from Adam, a laying up in store; id. pp. 600, 610. MAGGOT, a grub, worm. (W.) M.E. magot, magat (with one g), given as a variant of 'make, mathe, wyrm in the fleshe; ' Prompt. Parv. p. 321. Spelt maked in Wright's Vocab. i. 255, col. 1, to translate Lat. tarinus [misprint for tarmus] or siman [= Lat. cimex.] -W. macai, maceiad, a maggot; cf. magiaid, worms, grubs. The latter form is clearly connected with magiad, breeding, rearing, Inter form is clearly connected with magina, bleeding, realing, magad, a brood; from magu, to breed, cognate with Bret. maga, Corn. maga, to feed, nourish. Thus a maggot is 'a thing bred."  $\beta$ . Perhaps W. magu is connected with Lat. magnus, Gk.  $\mu \epsilon \gamma as$ , great, from the notion of 'growth;' see May (I). This word maggot is quite distinct from M. E. make, cited above; the latter is more commonly written mawk, as in Wright's Vocab. i. 190, col. 1; and is still in use in prov. E. Mawk is a contraction from maček, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 326; from Icel. mačkr. a maggot; see Mawkish. Cf. Dan. maddik, madike, a maggot. Icel. mao-kr. Dan. mad-ike, are merely diminutives of the word which appears in E. as moth; see Moth. (Fick, iii, 224.) Der. maggor-y.

MAGI, priests of the Persians. (L., -Gk., -Pers.) In P. Plowman, C. xxii. 85. Borrowed from Lat. magi, Matt. ii. 1 (Vulgate). -Gk. μάγοι, Matt. ii. 1; pl. of μάγοι, a Magian, one of a Median MAGNANIMITY, greatness of mind. (F., - L.) M. É. magnanimitee, Chaucer, C. T. 15578. - F. magnanimité, 'magnani mity; ' Cot. - Lat. magnanimitatem, acc. of magnanimitas, greatness of mind. - Lat. magn., stem. of magnus, great; and animus, the mind. See Magnate and Animus. See Magnanimous.

MAGNANIMOUS, high-minded, noble. (L.) In Shak. All's Well, iii. 6. 70. Formed (by changing -us to -out, as in ardu-ous, contemporane-ous, &c.) from Lat. magnanimus, great-souled. - Lat. magn-, stem of magnus, great ; and animus, the mind. See Magnanimity. Der. magnanimous-ly.

MAGNATE, a great man, noble. (F.,-L.) A late word; not in Todd's Johnson. - F. magnat. - Lat. magnatem, acc. of magnas, a prince. – Lat. magn., stem of magnus, great.  $\beta$ . Lat. magnus, is cognate with Gk.  $\mu\nu\gamma$ as, great, Skt. makant, great, and E. much; see Much. ¶ Magnate is a Hungarian and Polish use of the Lat. word ; the F. magnat is, more strictly, due to the pl. magnats = Lat. magnates. For derivatives from Lat. magnus, see Magnitude.

MAGNESIA, the oxide of magnesium. (Late Lat., - Gk.) Modern. Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. Coined from some supposed resemblance to the mineral called by a similar name in Gk., from Lat. Magnesia, fem. of Magnesius, of or belonging to the country called Magnesia. (The name magnesia, for a mineral, occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 16923.) - Gk. Mayrington, belonging to Magnesia, in Thessaly; whence Livos Mayvhrys or Livos Mayvhouss, lit. Magnesian stone, applied to (1) the magnet, (2) a metal that looked like silver. Der. magneti-um. MAID, MAIDEN, a girl, virgin. (E.) 1. Mayde occurs in Rob. of Glouc. p. 13, l. 14. It is not common in early M. E., and is, practically, merely a corruption of maiden, by the loss of final n, rather than a form derived from A. S. mægð or mægeð, a maiden (Grein, ii. 216). 2. The usual early M. E. word is maiden or meiden, Ancren Riwle, pp. 64, 166. – A. S. mægden, a maiden (Grein, ii. 216); also mæden, Mark, iv. 28, later text maigden. 8. We also find M. E. may in the same sense ; Chaucer, C. T. 5271. - A. S. mag, a female relation, a maid; Grein, ii. 215. B. Both A.S. mag-den and mag-eo are extensions from the older word mag, also spelt máge, Grein, ii. 216. Moreover, mag-den = mag-ed-en = maget-en is the dimin. form of magets; see March, A. S. Gram. art. 228. Y. Magets is cognate with Goth. magains, a virgin, maid, where the suffix the answers to Aryan suffix ta. A.S. mag or máge is the fem. of A.S. mág, a son, kinsman (Grein, ii. 214). a very common word, and cognate with Goth. magus, a boy. child, Luke, ii. 43; also with Icel. mögr, a boy, youth, son. 8. The orig. sense of magues is a growing lad, one increasing in strength; from the Teut. base MAG, to have power, whence also might. main. See May (1). Der. maiden-hood = A. S. magdenhad, Grein, ii. 216; also spelt maiden-head = M.E. meidenhed or meidenhede, Gower, C.A. ii. 230, 1.8, which is a mere variant of maiden-hood; maiden-ly, Mids. Nt. E. mainteinen, to aid and abet, P. Plowman, B. iii. 90, and note. - Lat. manu, abl. case of manus, the hand ; and tenere, to hold. See Manual and Tenable. Der. maintain-able, maintain-er; mainten-ance, M. E. meintenaunce, spelt mentenaunce in Shoreham's Poems, p. 100, l. 19, from O. F. maintenance, ' maintenance ; ' Cot.

MAIZE, Indian corn or wheat. (Span., -W. Indian.) 'Indian maiz; 'Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 49; and in Essay 33. Also in Dampier's Voyages. an. 1681 (R.) – Span. maiz, maize. – W. Indian makiz, makis, in the language of the island of Hayti (S. Domingo); Mahn (in Webster).

MAJESTY, grandeur, dignity. (F., - I.) M. E. magestee, Chaucer, C. T. 4330. - O. F. majestet, majeste, later majesté, 'majesty;' Cot. - Lat. maiestatem, acc. of maiestas, dignity, honour. -Lat. maies-, put for mag-ias-, with suffix -tas significant of state or condition. Here mag-ias = mag-yans- is from the base mag- of Lat. mag-mus, great, with the addition of a comparative suffix; see Schleicher, Compendium, § 232. The sense of maiestas is the 'condition of being greater,' hence, dignity. See Major, Magnitude. Der. majest-ie, a coined word, Temp. iv. 118; majest-ie-al, L. L. v. 2. 102 ; majest-ic-al-ly, I Hen. IV, ii. 4. 479.

MAJOR, greater; the title of an officer in the army. (L.) Chiefly used (as an adj.) as a term in logic, as in 'this maior or first proposition;' Fryth, Works, p. 147, col. 1. 'The major part;' Cor. ii. 1. 64. – Lat. maior, greater; comparative of magnus, great; see Magnitude. See Schleicher, Compendium, § 232. Der. major-ship, major-general; major-domo, imitated from Span. mayordomo, a house-steward (see Domostic); also major-i-ty, 1 Hen. IV, iii. 2. 109, from F. majorité, 'majority;' Cot. Doublet, mayor. [+]

MAKE, to fashion, frame, cause, produce. (E.) M.E. maken, makien; pt. t. makede, made, pp. maked, maad, mad; Chaucer, C. T. 9, 33, 396. – A. S. macian, pt. t. macode, pp. macod; see Sweet. A. S. Reader; also ge-macian (Grein). + G. machen, O. H. G. machón, to make.  $\beta$ . From the Teut. base MAK, another form of MAG, to have power; see May (1). Der. make, sb., Gower, C. A. ii. 204, 1. 10 (see Spec. of Eng. ed. Morris and Skeat, sect. xx. 1. 24) ; mak-er, P. Plowman, B. x. 240; make-peace, Rich. II, i. 1. 160; make-shift, make-weight; and see match (1). MALACHITE, a hard green stone. (Gk.) Malachites, Molo-

MALACHITE, a hard green stone.  $(GK_{*}) \sim malacensies, noisekites, a kind of precious stone of a dark green colour, like the herb mallows; Phillips, ed. 1706. Formed, with suffix-ites (=GK_-1778) from GK. <math>\mu a \lambda d_X \cdot \eta$ , a mallow. See Mallow. MALADMINISTRATION, bad administration. (F., -L.) Spelt maleadministration in Swift, Sentiments of a Church of Eng. Man, s. 2 (R.) = F. male, fem. of mal (=Lat. malus), bad; and F. administrations. See Mallow and Administer. ¶ So also maladjustment, mal-adroit, mal-apert, mal-conformation, mal-content, &c.; these have the same F. adj. as a prefix.

MALADY, disease, illness. (F., -L.) M. F. maladie, maladye, Chaucer, C. T. 421, 1375. Also earlier, in O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 31, l. 13. - F. maladie, 'malady;' Cot. - F. malade. sick, ill; oldest spelling malabde (Littré). Cf. Prov. malaptes, malautes, malaudes, sick, ill; Bartsch, Chrestomathie. - Lat. male kabitus, out of condition; see White, s. v. habitus. - Lat. male, adv., badly, ill, from malus, bad; and habitus, held, kept, kept in a certain condition, pp. of kabere, to have. See Malice and Habit. ¶ The usual derivation is that given by Diez, who imagined F. malade to answer to male aplus; there appears to be no authority for the phrase, which (like ineptus) would mean ' foolish' rather than 'ill.' See Mr. Nicol's letter in The Academy, April 26, 1879. We find male habens, sick, in the Vulgate, Mrit. iv. 24, Luke, vii. 2, &c.

MALAPERT, saucy, impudent, ill-behaved. (F., -L.) The true sense is 'ill-skilled,' 'ill-bred.' In The Court of Love, 737 (about A D. 1500). O. F. mal apert. - O. F. mal = Lat. male, adv. badly, ill; and apert (also ill-spelt appert), 'apparant (sic), open, evident, plain, manifest; also expert, ready, dexter, prompt, active, nimble; feat, handsome in that he does; 'Cot.  $\beta$ . The O. F. apert, open, acquired the sense of 'skilful' or 'well-behaved;' see Littré, s.v. acquired the sense of 'skilful' or 'well-behaved;' see Littré, s.v. apertement, where he cites from Joinville: 'Mal apertement's partirent les Turs de Damiete' = the Turks departed from Damietta in a very Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 253, l. 12; melle, Hampole, Pricke of Con-tot acertes Qu'au mangier soies molt apertes' = take care, ladies, for a certainty, that ye be very well-bred at meal-time ; Bartsch, Chrestomathie, col. 279, l. 5. Y. Hence the O. F. apert is simply derived from Lat. aperius, open, pp. of aperire, to open; see Aperient.

Der. malapert-ly, malapert-ness. MALARIA, miasma, noxious exhalation. (Ital., -L.) Modern. Not in Todd's Johnson. - Ital. mal' aria, for mala aria, bad air. Mala is fem. of malo, bad, from Lat. malus, bad; see Malice. Aria is noticed under Debonair. [†] MALCONTENT, MALECONTENT, discontented. (F., -L) In Shak. 3 Hen. VI, iv. I. 10, 60. - O. F. malcontent, 'male-content; 'Cot. - F. mal, adv., from Lat. male, badly; and F. content. See Malice and Content.

MALE, masculine. (F., -L.) M. E. male. 'Male and female;' Wyclif, Matt. xix. 4. Cf. Chaucer, C. T. 5704. - O. F. masle (later male), 'a male,' Cot. (who gives both spellings); mod. F. mâle; earliest spelling mascle (Burguy). - Lat. masculus, male ; formed with suffixes -cu- and -l- from mas-, stem of mās, a male creature, man (gen. mar.is = mas.is).  $\beta$ . The Lat. mas stands for mar.s, a man, cognate with E. man and Vedic Skt. manus, a man. See Man. Der. mascul-ine, mallard.  $\P$  Nowise connected with female.

MALEDICTION, a curse, execration. (F., -L.) In Shak. K. Lear, i. 2. 160. Spelt malediccion in the Bible of 1551, Gal. iii. 10. - F. malediction, 'a malediction;' Cot. - Lat. maledictionem, acc. of maledictio, a curse. - Lat. maledictus, pp. of maledicere, to speak evil against. - Lat. male, adv., badly; and dicere, to speak. See Malice and Diction. Doublet, malison.

MALEFACTOR, an evil-doer. (L.) 'Heretik or any malefactour;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 941 h. - Lat. malefactor, an evil-doer. - Lat. male, adv., badly; and factor, a doer, from facere, to do. See Malice and Fact. Der. So also malefaction, Hamlet, ii. 2. 621, from factionem, acc. of factio, a doing. MALEVOLENT, ill-disposed to others, envious. (L.) Lit.

'wishing ill.' In Shak. 1 Hen. IV, i. 1. 97.-Lat. maleuolent-, stem of maleuolens, wishing evil. - Lat. male, adv., badly, ill; and uolens, pres. pt. of uelle, to wish. See Malice and Voluntary. Der. malevolent-ly, malevolence (made to pair with benevolence, but the Lat. maleuolentia is a real word, though there is no F. malevolence).

MALFORMATION, an ill formation. (F., -L.) Coined from mal and formation; see Maladministration.

MALICE, ill will, spite. (F., -L.) M.E. malice, Rob. of Glouc. p. 570, l. 18. - F. malice. - Lat. malitia, badness, ill will. - Lat. mali-, for malo-, crude form of malus, bad; with suffix -i-a.  $\beta$ . The orig. sense of Lat. malus was dirty, or black; cf. Gk.  $\mu\ell\lambda$ as, black, Skt. mala, dirty, malina, dirty, black, sinful, bad. Cf. also Irish maile, evil, W. mall, softness, evil; Corn. malan, the devil; and see Mole (I). Mole (1). Y. All from a root MAL, to soil, dirty; a secondary formation from √MAR, to grind, grind to dust or powder. [Hence W. mall also means 'softness,' and is allied to task of powder. [Infect W. mall also means 'softness,' and is allied to Lat. moliis, soft, from the same root.] See Mar. Der. malicious, M. E. malicious, K. Alisaunder, 3323, 5045, from F. malicious, 'malicious-ly, -ness. MALIGN, unfavourable, malicious, (F.,-L.) 'The spirit maligness' Milton D. L iii soo for formation and the spirit malign ;' Milton, P. L. iii. 553 ; cf. iv. 503, &c. [Curiously enough, the derived verb malign, to curse, is found earlier, in Sir T. More, Works, p. 37 b.] = O. F. maling, fem. maligne, 'malignant;' Cot. (Mod. F. malin.) - Lat. malignus, ill-disposed, wicked; put for maligen-us, ill-born; like benignus for benigen-us. = Lat. mali- = malo-, crude form of malus, bad; and gen-, base of gignere, to produce. See Malice and Generate. Der. malign, verb (as above), due to Lat. malignare, to act spitefully; malign-ly, malign-er; also malignant, Temp. i. 2. 257. from Lat. malignant-, stem of pres. pt. of malignare, to act spitefully; malign-ant-ly; malign-anc-y, Tw. Nt. ii. 1. 4; malign-i-ty, M. E. malignitee, Chaucer, Persones Tale, De Invidia (Six-text, I. 513), from F. malignité = Lat. malignitatem, acc. of malignitas, malignity.

MALINGER, to feign sickness. (F., -L.) Modern. Not in Todd's Johnson. Coined from F. malingre, adj. diseased, sickly, or 'sore, scabby, ugly, loathsome;' Cot. - F. mal, badly; and O. F. haingre, heingre, thin, emaciated (Burguy). - Lat. male, adv. badly, from malus, bad; and agrum, acc. of ager, ill, sick (whence O. F. haingre with intercalated n and initial k). See Malice.

MALISON, a curse. (F., - L.) In early use. M.E. malison, spelt malisun in Havelok, 426. - O.F. malison, malichons, maleiceon, maldeceon; see maldeceon, malichons in Roquefort. A doublet of malediction, just as benison is of benediction; see Malediction and Benison.

MALL (1), a large wooden hammer or beetle. (F., -L.) Prob.

science, 6572.-O. F. (and F.) mail, 'a mall, mallet, or beetle :' Cot. ? -Lat. malleum, acc. of malleus, a hammer. [The vowel a in the E. word is perhaps due to a knowledge of the Lat. form.] B. The Lat. malleus is prob. to be derived from the  $\checkmark$  MAL = MAR, to crush, grind, pound; cf. Icel. mjölnir, i.e. the crusher, the name given to Thor's hammer; see Max Müller, Lect. on Language, Series ii. lect. 7, note 34. And cf. Russ. molos', a hammer, moloie, to grind. Der. mall (2), q. v.; mall-e-able, q. v., mall-et, q. v. MALL (2), the name of a public walk. (F., -L.) Preserved in the name of the struct called D. Will work in the New York of the struct the name of the street called Pall Mall, and in The Mall in St. James's Park. In Pope, Rape of the Lock, v. 133. 'To walk in the Mall',' Parsons, Wapping Old Stairs, l. 9. Named from O. F. pale-maille, a game wherein a round box bowle is with a mallet struck through a high arch of iron,' &c. [i. e. the game imitated in mod. croquet]; Cot. A representation of the game is given in Knight's Old England, vol. ii. fig. 2152. — O. Ital. polamaglio, 'a stick with a mallet at one end to play at a wooden ball with ; also, the name of such a game;' Florio. Better spelt pallamaglio, as in Meadows' Dict. Lit. 'a ball-mallet' or 'ball-mall.' – Ital. palla, a ball; and maglio (=F. mail), a mace, mall, hammer. B. A hybrid word; from O. H. G. palla, pallo (M. H. G. balle, G. ball), a ball, cognate with E. Ball, q. v.; and Lat. malleum, acc. of malleus, a hammer; see Mall (1). ¶ See and Lat. malleum, acc. of malleus, a hammer; see Mall (1).

my note to P. Plowman, C. xix. 34. [†] MALLARD, a wild drake. (F., -L.) M. E. malard. 'Malarde, anas;' Prompt. Parv. - O. F. malard, later malart, 'a mallard, or wild drake; 'Cot. Formed with suffix -ard (of G. origin) from the suffix - ard (of G. origin) from O. F. male (mod. F. mâle), male; see Malo.  $\beta$ . The suffix -ard (= Goth. hardus, G. hart, hard) was much used in forming masculine O. F. male (mod. F. mâle), male; see Male. proper names, to give the idea of force or strength; hence it was readily added to O. F. male, producing a word mal-ard, in which the notion of 'male' is practically reduplicated. See Introd. to Brachet, Etym. Dict. § 196.

MALLEABLE, that can be beaten out by the hammer. (F., -L.) In Shak. Per. iv. 6. 152; and even in Chaucer, C. T. 16598. – O. F. malleable, 'mallable, hammerable, pliant to the hammer; 'Cot. Formed with suffix -able from obs. Lat. malleare *, to hammer, of which the pp. malleatus occurs. - Lat. malleus, a hammer; see Mall (1). Dor. malleabili-iy, malleable-ness (see Locke, On Hum. Mall (1). Underst. b. iii. c. 6. s. 6, c. 10. s. 17); malleat-ed, Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, from Lat. pp. malleat-us; malleat-ion.

MALLET, a small mall, a wooden hammer: (F., -L.) 'Bearynge great malettes of iron and stele ;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 422 (R.) M. E. maillet, Romance of Partenay, 4698. - F. maillet, 'a mallet or hammer;' Cot. Dimin. of F. mail; see Mall (1).

MALLOW, the name of a plant. (L.) M. E. malwe; Prompt. Pary. - A.S. malwe, mealewe; Wright's Vocab. i. 31, col. 2; 67, col. 2. Prob. not a Teut. word, but merely borrowed from Lat. malua, a β. Named from mallow.+Gk. μαλάχη (= mal-ya-ka), a mallow. its supposed emollient properties; cf. Gk.  $\mu a \lambda \dot{a} \sigma \sigma \epsilon i r$  (= $\mu a \lambda a \kappa \cdot j \epsilon i r$ ), to make soft,  $\mu a \lambda a \kappa \dot{o}_s$ , soft, mild. –  $\checkmark$  MAL, to grind down, later form of MAR, to grind. See Mar. Der. marsh-mallow, A.S. merse-mealewe, Wright's Voc. i. 67, col. 1. Also malu-ac-e-ous = Lat. Mr. Wedgwood shews that the Arabs still use maluaceus, adi.

mallows for poultices to allay irritation. MALMSEY, a strong sweet wine. (F., -Gk.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 233. Spelt malmesay in Tyndall, Works, p. 229, col. 2. Also called malvesie, Chaucer, C. T. 13000. -O. F. malvosie, 'malmesie;' Cot. From Malvasia, now called Napoli di Malvasia (see Black's Atlas), the name of a town on the E. coast of Lacedæmonia in the Morea. We may therefore call it a Gk. word. Cf. Span. malvasia, Ital. malvagia, malmsey.

MALT, grain steeped in water, and dried in a kiln, for brewing. (E.) M. E. malt, Chaucer, C. T. 3989. – A.S. mealt, in comp. mealt-kús, a malt-house, Wright's Vocab. i. 58, col. 2. – A.S. mealt, pt. t. of melian, strong verb, to melt; hence, to steep, soften. + Du. mout. + Icel. malt, whence the weak verb melia, to malt (not the same as E. melt). + Dan. and Swed. malt. + G. malz, malt; cf. M. H. G. malz, soft, weak. Cf. Skt. mridu, soft, mild. See Melt, Mild. Der. malt, vb., M. E. malten, Prompt. Parv. ; malt-horse, Com. Errors, iii. 1. 32; malt-house; malt-worm, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 1. 83; also malt-ster, ¶ The suffix -ster was once M. E. malte-stere, Prompt. Parv. looked upon as a fem. termination, as in brew-ster, baxter for bake-ster, web-ster, spin-ster; and the baking, brewing, weaving, and spinning were once all alike in the hands of females. See Spinster. MALTREAT, to treat ill. (F., -L.) 'Yorick indeed was never better served in his life; but it was a little hard to maltreat him after; Sterne, Tristram Shandy, vol. ii. c. 17, not far from the end. -F. maltraiter, to treat ill. Cf. Ital. maltraitare, to treat ill. - Lat. male, adv., ill, badly; and tractare, to treat, handle. See Malice and Treat. Der. maltreat-ment = O. F. maltraictement, 'hard Cot.

MAN. MALVERSANON, fraudulent behaviour. (F., -L.) Mal

MALVEIR (ON, fraudulent behaviour. (F., -L.) 'Mol-versation, ill COD versation, misdemeanour, misuse;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - F. malversation, 'misdemeanor;' Cot. Regularly formed (with suffix -a-tion) from F. malverser; Cot. gives 'malverser en son office, to behave himself ill in his office.' - Lat. male, adv., badly; and office, to benave "self ill in his office." - Lat. maile, adv., badly; and uersari (pp. uersalus), to dwell, be engaged in, from uersare, frequen-tative form of uertere, to turn. See Malico and Verse. MAMALUKE, MAMELUKE, an Egyptian light horse-soldier. (F., - Arab.) In Sir T. More, Works, p. 279 f. Also in Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Courte, 1. 476; see Spec. of Eng. ed. Skeat, p. 143, and the note. - F. Mamalue, 'a Mameluke, or light-horseman; 'Cot. Cf. Span. Mameluco, Ital. Mammalucco. They were a corps of slaves. - Arab. mamluk, a purchased slave or captive; lit. 'possessed.' - Arab. root malaka, he possessed; Rich. Dict.

pp. 1494, 1488. MAMMA, an infantine term for mother. (E.) Seldom found in books, except of late years; it occurs in Prior's poens, entitled 'Venus Mistaken,' and 'The Dove.' In Skinner and Cotgrave it is spelt mam; Cot. gives: 'Mammam, the voice of infants, mam.' Skel-ton has mammy, Garl. of Laurel, 1. 974. The spelling mamma is doubtless pedantic, and due to the Lat. mamma; it should rather be mama, as it is merely a repetition of ma, an infantine syllable. It may also be considered as an E. word ; most other languages have something like it. Cf. O. F. mammam, cited above, mod. F. maman; Span. mama, Ital. mamma, Du. mama, G. mama, mamme, mamme, all infantine words for mother; also W. mam, mother, Lat. mamma, We have no evidence against the borrowing of mother, &c. the word from French; still it was, most likely, not so borrowed.[+] MAMMALIA, the class of animals that suckle their young. (L.) Modern and scientific; not in Johnson. Formed from Lat. mammalia, belonging to the breasts. - Lat. mamma, the breast.  $\beta$ . There is a doubt whether the word is the same as Lat. mamma, mother; if it be, we may consider it as of infantine origin; see above. y. Otherwise, we may connect it with Gk. µaçós, µaorós, the breast, from & MAD, to be wet, trickle; cf. Skt. mad, orig. to be wet, Lat. madere, to be wet, &c. Der. mammalian; we also use mammal as a convenient short term for 'one of the mammalia."

MAMMILLARY, pertaining to the breasts. (L.) 'The mamillary teats; 'Dr. Robinson, Endoxa (ed. 1658), p. 51; Todd's Johnson. Coined from Lat. mammillaris, adj. formed from mammilla, a teat, dimin. of mamma, a breast. See Mammalia.

MAMMON, riches, the god of riches. (L., - Gk., - Syriac.) In A. V. Matt. vi. 24; Luke, xvi. 9. - Lat. mammona, Matt. vi. 24 (Val-gate). - Gk. μαμωνα; ibid. - Syr. mamona; a word which often occurs in the Chaldee Targums of Onkelos, and later writers, and in the Syriac version, and which signifies 'riches;' Dict. of the Bible. Cf. Heb. matmón, a hidden treasure ; from táman, to hide.

MAMMOTH, an extinct species of elephant. (Russ., - Tatar.) An entire mammoth, flesh and bones, was discovered in Siberia, in 1700; 'Haydn, Dict. of Dates. - Russ. mamani, a mammoth.-Siberian mammont. 'From Tartar mamma, the earth, because the Tungooses and Yakoots believed that this animal worked its way in the earth like a mole;' Webster. ¶ 'The inhabitants of [Siberia] the earth like a mole;' Webster. ¶ 'The inhabitants of [Siberia] have a traditionary fable to account for the constant occurrence [of remains of elephants]. They hold that the bones and the tusks which they incessantly find in their agricultural operations, are produced by a large subterraneous animal, living in the manner of the mole, and unable to bear the light. They have named this animal mammont or mammooth-according to some authorities, from the word mamma which signifies "earth" in Tartar idioms, or, according to others, from the Arabic bekenoth or mekemoth an epithet which the Arabs apply to an elephant when he is very large. The fossil tusks which the Siberians find are called by them mammontowakest, the horns of the mammont;' The Menageries, vol. ii. 363, in the Lib. of Entertaining Knowledge. We cannot credit Siberian peasants with a knowledge of Arabic 1 [†]

MAN, a human being. (E.) M. E. man, Chaucer, C. T. 1. 43.-A. S. mann, also mon; Grein, ii. 105. + Du. man. + Icel. madr (for mannr); also man. + Swed. man. + Dan. mand (with excrescent d). + Goth. manna.+G. mann; [the G. mensch - männisch, i. e. mannish, human]. + Lat. mās (for mass), a male. + Skt. mana, Vedic form manus, a man.  $\beta$ . The sense is 'thinking animal;' from  $\sqrt{MAN}$ , to think; cf. Skt. man, to think; and see Mind. Der. man-child, Gen. xvii. 10; man-ful, Lydgate, Complaint of the Black Knight, st. 60; man-ful-ly, Two Gent. iv. 1. 28; man-ful-ness; man-hood, Chaucer, C. T. 758; man-of-war, Luke, xxiii. 11; man-kind, q. v.; man-ly, M. E. manlick, P. Plowman, B. v. 260, from A. S. manlic, man-like, see Grein, ii. 211; man-li-ness; man-slaughter, M. E. manslagter, Cursor Mundi, 25772; man-slay-er, M. E. mansleer, Trevisa, iii. 41, 1. 8, Wyclif, John, viii. 44. Also man, vb., Rich. II, ii. 3. 54. Also man-like, Antony, i. 4. 5; man-ly, adv., Macb. iv. 3. 235; mannish. As You Like It, i. 3. 123, Chaucer, C. T. 5202; man-gueller, 2 Hen. IV, ii. 1. 58, Wyclif, Mark, vi. 27; man-ik-in, q. v. From the same root are male, masculine, mallard, mandarin, mind, &c.

MANACLE, a fetter, handcuff. (F., -L.) Better spelt maniele, as in Cotgrave. M. E. manyele, Wyclif, Ps. cxlix. 8, earlier text; where the later text has manaele. -O. F. maniele, pl. manieles, 'manica, a long sleeve, glove, gauntlet, manacle, handcuff. -Lat.manuel, the hand; see Manual. Der. manaele, Temp. 1. 2. 461. MANAGE, government of a horse, control, administration.

MANAGE, government of a horse, control, administration. (F., -lial., -L.) Orig. a sb., but now superseded by management. 'Wanting the manage of unruly jades;' Rich. II, iii. 3. 179.-O. F. manage, 'the manage, or managing of a horse;' Cot. Mod. F. manage. - Ital. maneggio, 'a busines, a managing, a handling, ... an exercise;' Florio. Particularly used of managing horses; the mod. Ital. maneggio means 'a riding-school.' The lit. sense is 'a handling,' the word being formed upon Ital. mano, the hand. - Lat. manum, acc. of manus, the hand; see Manual. Der. manage, vb., to handle, Rich. II, iii. 2. 118; management (a coined word), used by Bp. Hall in a Fast Sermon, April 5, 1638 (R.) Doublet, manege, from mod. F. manege. GP Not to be confused with M. E. manage, a household, K. Alisaunder, 2087, from O. F. mesnage (Cot.), mod. F. minage; this O. F. mesnage stands for maison-age, extended from F. maison, a mansion; see Mansion. (Scheler.)

MANATEE, a sea-cow, a dugong. (Span., -W. Indian.) The word occurs in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 404. - Span. manati, a sea-cow; also written manato. A West Indian word; 'from the name of the animal in the language of Hayti;' Webster. The Malay name is dugong, q. v.

MANDARIN, a Chinese governor of a province. (Port., – Malay, – Skt.) Not a Chinese, but a Malay word; brought to us by the Portuguese. In Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 395. – Port. mandarim, a mandarin. – Malay, mantri, 'a counsellor, minister of state; ferdama mantri, the first minister, vizir; . Marsden, Malay Dict., p. 334. – Skt. mantrin, a counsellor; maká-mantrin, the prime minister. – Skt. mantra, a holy text, charm, prayer, advice, counsel. Formed, with suffix -tra, from Skt. man, to think, mind, know; cf. Skt. man-tu, a man, man-tri, an adviser. –  $\checkmark$  MAN, to think. See Man, Mind. 2. Otherwise, it may have been brought from India; directly from Skt. mandala, a district, a province, the older sense being 'circle;' cf. Skt. mand, to dress, to divide.

MANDATE, a command, order, charge. (F., -L.) In Hamlet, iii. 4. 204. - O. F. mandat, 'a mandate, or mandamus, for the preferment of one to a benefice; 'Cot. - Lat. mandatum, a charge, order, commission. - Lat. mandatus, pp. of mandare, to commit to one's charge, enjoin, command. B. Lit. 'to put into one's hand,' from man-, stem of manus, the hand, and dars, to give. [So also manceps -a taker by the hand; from man- and capre, to take.] See Manual and Date (1). Der. mandatory. Doubles, maundy, in the term Maundy Thursday, Q. v. From Lat. mandare are also counter-mand, com-mand, de-mand, re-mand, com-mend, re-com-mend.

MANDIBLE, a jaw. (L.) 'Mandibula, the mandible, or jaw; Phillips, ed. 1706. - Lat. mandibula, a jaw. - Lat. mandëre, to chew, eat. Root uncertain. Der. mandibul-ar, adj., from Lat. mandibula.

Cat. Root uncertain. Der. manuforde dr., auf, num Lat. manuforder. MANDRAKE, a narcotic plant. (L., -Gk.) In Gen. xxz. 14, where the Bible of 1551 has pl. mandragoras. M. E. mandragoras, Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 19, 1. 613. A. S. mandragora, Cockayne's Leechdoms, i. 244. Mandrake (also spelt mandrage in Minsheu) is a mere corruption of mandragora, the form used by Shak. in Oth. iii. 3. 330. Cf. O. F. mandragore, Ital. mandragora, Span. mandragora. - Lat. mandragora. - Gk. μανδραγόραs, the name of the plant; of uncertain origin.

MANDREL, the revolving shank in which turners fix their work in a lathe. (F., -Gk.?) 'Manderil, a kind of wooden pulley, that is part of a turner's leath;' Bailey's Dict. vol. ii. ed. 1731. Corrupted from F. mandrin, a punch, a mandrel (Hamilton).  $\beta$ . Marked by Littré as of unknown origin; but prob. derived (through a Low Lat. mandra) from Gk.  $\mu d \nu \delta \rho a$ , an enclosed space, sheepfold, also used to mean 'the bed in which the stone of a ring is set,' which is very nearly the English sense. See Madrigal.

MANE, long hair on the neck of a horse, &c. (Scand.) M.E. mane, King Alisaunder, 1957. – Icel. mön (gen. manar, pl. manar), a mane; Swed. and Dan. man. + Du. maan (Sewel); O. Du. mane (Hexham). + G. mähne, O. H.G. mana. Cf. W. myngen, a horse's mane; plainly derived from muon, the neck. So also Irish muines, a collar (W. mynci, the hame of a horse-collar), is from Irish muine, the neck. Hence E. mane is plainly connected with Skt. manya, the tendon forming the nape of the neck. We are further reminded of Lat. monile, a necklace.

MANEGE, the control of horses ; see Manage.

MANGANESE, the name of a metal. (F., -Ital., -Gk. ?) The metal was discovered in 1774 (Littré). But the term is much older, otherwise used. 'Mangane:e, so called from its likeness in colour and weight to the magnes or loadstone, is the most universal material used in making glass;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. -O. F. manganese, 'a certain minerall which, being melted with glasse, amends the colour thereof;' Cot. - Ital. manganese, 'a stuffe or stone to make glasses with ; also a kind of mineral stone; 'Florio.  $\beta$ . Of uncertain origin - nethans Blount's glossing is correct; see Magnesia.

with; also a kind of mineral stone;' Florio.  $\beta$ . Of uncertain origin; perhaps Blount's suggestion is correct; see Magnesia. MANGE, the scab or itch in dogs, &c. (F., -L.) Minsheu, ed. 1627, pives 'the mange' as sh., and mangie as adj. It is clear that the adj. mangy is the earlier word, out of which the sb. was developed. The adj, was in common use, whereas the sb. is scarce; Rich. quotes a use of it from Rochester (died 1680). Cf. 'a mangy dog,' Timon, iv. 3. 371; 'In wretched beggary And maungy misery,' Skelton, How the Douty Duke of Albany, &c., Il. 137, 138. The adj. mangy is an adaptation of F. mangé, 'eaten, fed on,' Cot.; pp. of manger, to eat. [The F. sb. for 'mange' is mangeons.] See further under Manger. Der. mangi-ness.

MANGER, an eating-trough for cattle. (F., -L.) In Sir T. More, Works, p. 1139 h. - F. mangeoire, 'a manger;' Cot. - F. manger, to eat. - Lat. manducare, to eat. - Lat. manducus, a glutton. - Lat. mandere, to chew. See Mandible.

MANGLE (1), to render maimed, tear, mutilate. (L.; with E. suffin.) In Sir T. More, Works, p. 538 f. A weakened form of mankelen, frequentative form of M. E. manken, to maim. 'Mankyd or maymyd, Mutilatus. Mankkyn or maymyn, Mutilo. Mankyge, or maymynge, Mutilate, only found in the comp. Marky so note. - A. S. mancian \*, to mutilate, only found in the comp. be-mancian, which is very rare. 'Gif þú gesihst earmas bine bemancude, gód getacnað' - if thou seest [in a dream] thine arms cut off, it betokens good; Cockayne's Leechdoms, iii. 214. Not a true A. S. word, but obviously formed from Lat. mancus, maimed. Mancus is allied to Icel. minnka, to lessen, diminish; and signifies 'lessened' or 'weakened;' see further under Minish. Der. mangl-er. [†] pressing cloth) from cylinder. MANGO, the fruit of an E. Indian tree. (Malay.) In Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1605, p. 350. – Malay maßggá, 'the mangofruit, of which the varieties are numerous; 'Marsden's Dict., p. 327. MANGONELL, a war-engine for throwing stones. (F., – Low Lat., – Gk.) M.E. mangonel, in a MS. of the time of Edw. II; Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 69. – O. F. mangonel, later mangonneau, 'an old-fashioned sling or engine,' &c.; Cot. – Low Lat. mangonellus, dimin. of mangona, manganum, a war-engine. – Gk.  $\mu d\gamma\gamma$ pavor; see Mangle (2).

MANGLE (2), a roller for smoothing linen; vb., to smooth linen. (Du., = Low Lat., = Gk.) A late word; added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. Borrowed from Dutch. = Du. mangelen, to roll with a rolling-pin; linnen mangelen, to roll linen on a rolling-pin; mangelstok, a rolling-pin (Sewell); een mangelstok, a smoothing role, or a battle-dore (Hexham). The corresponding O. Ital. word is mangano, 'a kind of presse to presse buckrom;' Florio. Both Du. and Ital words are modifications of Low Lat. manganum, manganus, mangona, a very common word as the name of a military engine for throwing stones; see Mangonal. The mangle, being worked with an axis and winch, was named from its resemblance to the old warengine; sometimes it was reduced to an axis or cylinder worked by hand. The Ital. mangano also means 'a mangonel.' = Gk.  $\mu \dot{a}\gamma\gamma avor$ , a machine for defending fortifications; also, the axis of a pulley. Allied to  $\mu\eta\chi arh$ , a machine; see Machine. ¶ Thus mangle, mangonel, are merely various machines; cf. the etym. of calender (for pressing cloth) from cylinder.

MANIA, madness, frenzy. (L., -Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. [M. E. manie, Chaucer, C. T. 1376, is from F. manie, 'madnesse;' Cot.] - Lat. manie. - Gk. 'marie, madness, frenzy.  $\beta$ . The orig. sense is 'mental excitement;' cf. mirrow, mind, spirit, force; from  $\sqrt{MAN}$ , to think. See Mind. Der. manie, spelt maniek in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, from F. maniaque, 'mad,' Cot.; as if from a Lat. maniacus\*. Hence manies.

MANIFEST, evident, apparent. (F., - L.) M. E. manifest, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 10, l. 2558. - F. manifeste, 'manifest; 'Cot. - Lat. manifestus, evident.  $\beta$ . The lit. sense is 'struck by the hand,' hence, palpable. - Lat. mani-, for manu-, crude form of manus, the hand; and -festus, = -fed-tus, -fend-tus, pp. of obs. verb fendere \*, to strike, occurring in the compp. de-fendere, of-fendere; cf. in-feitus, in-fensus, hostile. -  $\sqrt{DHAN}$ , to strike; see Defend. And see Manual. Der. manifest-ly, manifest-ness; manifest, vb., manifest-at-ion; also manifesto, q. v.

MANIFESTO, a written declaration. (Ital., -L.) 'Manifesto or evidence; 'Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 17. § 5. - Ital. manifesto, sb., a manifesto. - Ital. manifesto, adj., manifest. - Lat. manifestws; see Manifest. A. S. many; many; and -feeld, suffix (E. -fold), connected with feeldan, to fold. See Many and Fold. MANIKIN, MANAKIN, a little man, dwarf. (Du.) In Tw.

Nt. iii. 2. 57. [Not an E. word.] - O. Du, manneken, a little man (Hexham); mod. Du. mannetje, by alteration of the suffix. Formed, with double dimin. suffix -ek-en, from Du. man, a man. See Man. Cf. G. männchen, from man.

MANIPLE, a handful; small band of soldiers, a kind of priest's scarf. (L.) 'Our small divided maniples,' i. e. bands of men ; Milton, Areopagitica, ed. Hales, p. 48, l. 6. Englished from Lat. manipulus, a handful; hence, a wisp of straw, &c. used as an ensign; and hence, a company of soldiers under the same standard, a band of men. - Lat. mani-, for manu-, crude form of manus, the hand ; and -pulus, lit. filling, from the & PAL, later form of & PAR, to fill; cf. Lat. plenus, full, and A.S. full. See Manual and Full. Der. manipul-ale, q. v. MANIPULATE, to handle. (L.) A modern word; not in Johnson; the sb. manipulation (but not the verb) was added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. The verb was prob. suggested by the sb. manipulation. Even the sh. is quite a coined word, there being nothing nearer to it than the Lat. manipulatim, by troops, an adv. formed from manipulus, a troop. The word manipulate should mean 'to fill the hands' rather than merely to use them. Altogether, the word has little to recommend it on etymological grounds. Der. manipulat-ion, -ive, -or. MANKIND, the race of men. (E.) M. E. mankinde, Gower,

C. A. ii. 83, l. 23. The final d is excrescent, the older form being mankin, Ormulum, 799. - A. S. mancynn, mankind; Grein, ii. 207. -A.S. man, a man; and cynn. kind, race; see Man and Kin.

MANNA, the food supplied to the Israelites in the wilderness of Arabia. (L., = Gk., = Heb.) In A. V. Exod. xvi. 15; Numb. xi. 7; Deut. viii. 3; &c. = Lat. manna, Deut. viii. 3 (Vulgate); but in Exod. xvi. 15 the Vulgate has manhu, and in Numb. xi. 7 it has man. - Gk. μάντα. - Heb. mán, manna. β. Two explanations are given : (1) from Heb. mán ku, what is this? from the enquiry which the Hebrews made when they first saw it on the ground, where man is the neuter interrogative pronoun; see Exod. xvi. 15. And (2) that the sense of man is 'it is a gift' (cf. Arab. mann, beneficence, grace, favour, also manna, Rich. Dict. p. 1495); from the Arab. root mónan, he divided or distributed. [+] MANNER, way, fashion, habit, sort, kind, style. (F.,-L.)

In early use. M. E. manere, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 51, I. 30. -O. F. maniere, 'manner;' Cot. Mod. F. maniere; properly 'habit.'-O. F. manier, adj. habitual, accustomed to (Burguy); allied to O.F. manier, 'to handle, hand, manage, wield ;' Cot. - O.F. main = Lat. manum, acc. of manus, the hand; see Manual. Der. manner-ly, in Skelton, who wrote a poem called Manerly Margery Mylk and Ale; manner-li-ness; un-manner-ly, Hamlet, iii. 2. 364; manner-ism. Gar The phrase to be taken in the manner (a law phrase) is a corruption of to be taken with the mainour; the Lat. phrase is cum manuopere captus. See Wedgwood, s. v. mainour, which is the same word as manazuvre, q. v.

MANCEUVRE, dexterous management, stratagem. (F.,-L.) Introduced into E in the 18th cent. Added to Johnson's Dict. by Todd, who cites it from Burke, but without a satisfactory reference. -F. manœuvre, a manœuvre, properly a work of the hand.-Low Lat. manuopera (more commonly manopera), a working with the hand. Cf. Span. maniobra, handiwork; maniobrar, to work with the hands, manœuvre; Ital. manoura, the working of a ship; manourare, to steer a ship. - Lat. manu operari, to work with the hand. - Lat. manu, abl. of manus, the hand; and operari, to work, from opera, work. See Manual and Operate. Der. manœuvre, vb., manœuvrer. Doublet, manure.

MANOR, a place of residence for a nobleman in former times; estate belonging to a lord. (F., -L.) In Shak. Merry Wives, ii. 2. 19. M. E. manere, P. Plowman, B. v. 595. - O. F. manoir, 'a mansion, mannor, or mannor-house,' Cot.; formerly also spelt maneir, maneir, (Burguy). Properly 'a place to dwell in; ' from O. F. manoir, maneir, to dwell (Burguy). - Lat. manere, to dwell, remain; see Mansion. Der. manor-house, L. L. L. i. 1. 208; manor-seat; manor-i-al.

MANSE, a clergyman's house, in Scotland. (L.) 'Manse, a habitation, a farm;' Blount's Law Lexicon, ed. 1691. An old law term. - Low Lat. mansa, a farm. - Lat. mansa, fem. of mansus, pp. of manere, to dwell; see Mansion.

MANSION, a large house, dwelling-place. (F., -L.) M.E. mansion, Chaucer, C.T. 1976. -O.F. mansion, a dwelling-place; Burguy. - Lat. mansionem, acc. of mansio, an abiding, place of abode. - Lat. mansus, pp. of manere, to dwell. + Gk. µever, to stay, re-

MANIFOLD, various. (E.) M. E. manifold, manyfold, Gower, <sup>2</sup> also E. linger, minuted action of the mind 1 See Mind and Second action of the mind 1 See Mind action of the mi think implies considering action of the mind.] See Mind. Der. mon-sion-house; man. sion-ry, Mach. i. 6. 5; from Lat. manere are also manse, manor. And see menial, menagerie, mastiff.

MANTEL, a shelf over a fire-place. (F., -L.) Hardly used except in the comp. mantel-piece and mantel-shelf; formerly, only used in the comp. mantle-tree, which occurs in Cotgrave, s.v. mantea In old fire-places, the mantel slopes forward like a hood, to catch the smoke; the word is a mere doublet of Mantle, q.v. ¶ The difference in spelling between mantel and mantle is an absurdity.

Der. mantel-piece, -shelf. [†] MANTLE, a cloak, covering. (F.,-L.) Better spelt mantel, as it is the same word as that above. In early use. M.E. mantel, Layamon, 14755, 15724. [Cf. A. S. mentel, a mantle, Ps. cviii, 28.] -O. F. maniel (Burguy), later manieau, 'a cloke, also the mantle-tree of a chimney;' Cot. - Lat. mantellum, a napkin; also, a means of covering, a cloak (in a figurative sense); cf. Lat. man:ele, mantile, a napkin, towel. A more primitive form appears in the Low Lat. mantum, a short cloak, used by Isidore of Seville, whence Ital. and Span. manio, F. manie, a manile. Root unknown; the orig. sense seems to be 'covering.' Der. manile, vb., to cloak, cover, Temp. v. 5ct in to be covering. Det. manne, 10., 10 cload, cover, 1 clip v. 67; also manile, vo, to gather a scum on the surface, Merch. Ven. i. I. 89; mantel-et (with dimin. suffix), 'a short purple mantle, ... in fortification, a moveable pent-house.' Phillips, ed. 1706, from F. manielet, 'a little mantle, a movable pent-house,'&c., Cotgrave. MANUTTA e today's grant (10). Solder and correct is the MANTUA, a lady's gown. (Ital.) Seldom used except in the comp. mantua-maker, a lady's dressmaker. ' Mantoe or Mantua gown, a loose upper garment, now generally worn by women, instead of a straight body'd gown;' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'By th' yellow mantos of the bride'; Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 1. 1. 700. Manto is from Ital. (or Span.) manto, a mantle; but Mantua gown must refer to Mantua in Italy, though this connection seems to have arisen from mere confusion. As to Ital. manto, see Mantle.

MANUAL, done by the hand, suitable for the hand. (F., -L.) We recognise it as a F. word from its use after its sh., in such phrases as 'sign manual,' or 'seal manual;' the spelling has been conformed to the Lat. vowel in the final syllable. Shak. has seal manual, Venus, 1. 516. Formerly spelt manuel, as in Cotgrave. - F. manuel, 'manuel, handy, of the hand;' Cot. - Lat. manualis, manual. - Lat. manucrude form of manus, the hand.  $\beta$ . The sense of manus is 'the former' or 'maker;' formed (with suffix -na) from  $\checkmark$  MA, to mea-B. The sense of manus is ' the sure, whence also Skt. má, to measure, a verb which when used with the prep. nis, out, also means to build, cause, create, compose; cf. also Skt. mana, sb., measuring, measure. See Moto. Dor. manual, sb., a hand-book; manual-ly. From Lat. manus we also have manacle, man-age, mani-fest, mani-ple, mani-pul-ate, mann-er, man-cauvre, man-ure; manu-facture, manu-mit, manu-script, a-manu-ensis; also main-tain, e-man-cip-ate, quadru-man-ous, &c. [†] MANUFACTURE, a making by hand. (F., -L.) In Bacon, Life of Henry VII, ed. Lumby, p. 58, l. 19, p. 196, l. 4. Also spelt manifacture, as in Cotgrave. - F. manufacture (also manifacture in Cot.), 'manifacture, workemanship;' Cot. Coined from Latin. -Lat. manu, by the hand. abl. of manus; and factura, a making, from facere, to make. See Manual and Fact. Der. manufacture, vb., manufactur-al, manufactur-er, manufact-or-y.

MANUMIT, to release a slave. (L.) 'Manumitted and set at liberty; 'Stow, Edw. III, an. 1530. The pp. manumissed occurs in North's Plutarch, p. 85 (R.), or p. 103, ed. 1631. - Lat. manumittere (pp. manumissus), to set at liberty a slave, lit. 'to release from one's power,' or 'send away from one's hand.'- Lat. manu, abl. of manus, the hand; and mittere, to send. See Manual and Missile. Der. manumission, from F. manumission, 'a manumission or dismissing (Cot.), from Lat. manumissionem, acc. of manumissio, a dismissal, formed from the pp. manumissus.

MANURE, to enrich with a fertilising substance. (F.,-L.) The old sense was simply 'to work at with the hand.' 'Arable land, which could not be manured [tilled] without people and families, was turned into pasture; Bacon, Henry VII, ed. Lumby, p. 70, l. 26. 'Manured with industry;' Oth. i. 3. 328. See Trench, Select Glossary. Manure is a contracted form of manarure; see Manceuvre and Inure. Der. manure, sb., manurer, manur-ing. MANUSCRIPT, written by the hand. (L.) Properly an adj., but also used as a sb. 'A manuscript;' Minsheu, ed. 1627.-Low Lat. manuscriptum, a manuscript; Lat. manu scriptum, written by the hand.-Lat. manu, abl. of manus, the hand; and scriptum, neut. of scriphus, pp. of scribere, to write. See Manual and Soribe. MANY, not few, numerous. (E.) M. E. mani, many, moni, frequently followed by a, as ' many a man;' Chaucer, C. T. 229, 3905. The oldest instances of this use are in Layamon, 7993, 16189, 29131. main; allied to µorinos, staying, steadfast, and to µéµora, I wish, -A.S. manig, menig, monig, Grein, ii. 200. + Du. menig. + Dan. yearn. - & MAN, to think, wish; cf. Skt. man, to think, wish. [So mange. + Swed. mange. + Icel. margr (with a singular change from # to r). + Goth. manags. + G. manch. M. H. G. manee, O. H. G. & Chrest. Provençale, col. 233, l. 32. manae. β. All from a Teut. base MANAGA, many; Fick, iii. from O. H. G. marrjan, to hinder, of 228. Further allied to Irish minic. Gael. minig, W. mynych, frequent, Russ. mnogie, pl. many; and prob. to Skt. maiksku, much, exceed-ingly, and makska, multitude. y. Thus the base appears to be MANK, a nasalised form of  $\checkmark$  MAK or MAG, to have power, whence also Lat. magnus, great, and E. much. See Much. The Icel. neut. marge = prov. E. mort, as 'a mort of people.'

MAP, a representation of the earth, or of a part of it.  $(F_{.,-}L)$ The oldest maps were maps of the world, and were called mapper mounde, as in Gower, C. A. iii. 102. This is a F. form of the Lat. name mappa mundi, which occurs in Trevisa, i. 27, and in the corresponding passage of Higden's Polychromicon. B. The original sense of Lat. mappa was a napkin; hence, a painted cloth.

According to Quintilian, it is a Punic word. See Napkin. MAPLE, the name of a tree. (E.) M. E. maple, mapul; Chaucer, C. T. 2925. A. S. mapulder, the maple-tree; 'Acer, mapulder,' Wright's Vocab. i. 33; we also find majolder, a maple, Mapulder-stede, now Maplestead (in Essex), in Thorpe's Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, pp. 146, 403; and Leo cites mæpelsyrst (=maple-hurst, maple-grove) from Kemble's A.S. Charters. [The suffix der is a mere corruption of treow, a tree; thus an apple-tree is called æpeltre in Wright's Vocab. i. 79, col. 2, but apulder in i. 32, col. 2. Hence the A. S. name is mapul.] B. The sense of mapul is unknown; the A.S. name is mapul.]  $\beta$ . The sense of mapul is unknown; it bears a certain resemblance to Lat. macula, a spot. It is not unlikely that the tree was named from the spots on the wood, as we find G. maser, a spot, speckle, whence maserholz, speckled wood, maple. The more usual G. name is masholder, a maple-tree, a word which has not yet been explained. See Mazor.

MAR, to infure, spoil, damage. (E.) M. E. merren, less com-monly marren, P. Ploughman's Crede, 1. 66; Will. of Palerne, 664. -A.S. merran \*, in comp. ámerran, ámyrran, used in various senses, such as to dissipate, waste, lose, hinder, obstruct ; see Matt. x. 42, Luke, xv. 14; Ælfric's Hom. ii. 372, l. 3; Grein, i. 28, 29. Cf. also A. S. mirran, to impede, Exod. v. 4; gemearr, an impediment, Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, ed. Sweet, p. 401, ll. 17, 20, +O. Du. merren, to stay, retard (Hexham); Du. marren, to tarry. + O. H. G. marrian, to hinder, disturb, vex; whence mod. F. marri, vexed, sad.  $\beta$ . Said to be further related to Goth. marzian, to offend, cause to stumble, which is possible; but the next step, whereby Goth. marzjan sumple, which is possible, but the next step, whereby cotthe margare is linked to Skt. mrish, to endure patiently (Benfey, p. 724), is very forced. I prefer to leave out the Goth. word, and to proceed as follows.  $\gamma$ . The A.S. merran, O. H. G. marrian, is obviously a causal verb; I connect it (with Leo) with the A.S. adj. mearn, tender (Grein), O. H. G. maro, tender; thus assigning to mar the orig. sense of 'weaken.' or 'make tender,' whence the senses of dissipate, lose, spoil. 3. This seems to be the more probable, because the true orig. sense of A.S. mearw (cf. Lat. mollis) was a softness produced by grinding down, rubbing away, bruising, crushing, pounding, &c. - MAR, to grind, bruise, pound, crush; on which fertile root see Max Müller's Lectures, vol. ii. lect. 7. ¶ I think this view is supported by the Icel. merja, to bruise, crush, pound. This verb, whilst retaining the orig, sense of the root, answers in form to the causal A.S. merran, O.H.G. marrjan. Note also Gk. µapalueur, to weaken, waste, wear out, which, on the one hand, is certainly from the  $\checkmark$  MAR, and, on the other, is very nearly parallel in sense with A.S. amerran. Even the Goth. marzjan, if related to Skt. mrish, is due (I suppose) to the same root; see Mild. Der. The derivatives from the root MAR are numerous; such as mal-ice, mal-ign, mil-d, moul-d, mall-ow, mill, meal, mall, mall-et, mall-eable, marc-escent, mil-d, mel-t, mal-1, &c. Doublet, moor (2).

MARANATHA, our Lord cometh. (Syriac.) In 1 Cor. xvi. 22. 'It is a Greecised form of the Aramaic words maran atka, our Lord cometh ;' Dict. of the Bible.

MARAUD, to wander in quest of plunder. (F.) 'Marauding, ranging about as soldiers in quest of plunder, forage, &c.;' Bailey's Dict. v. ii. ed. 1731. – F. marauder, 'to beg, to play the rogue;' Cot. - F. maraud, 'a rogue, begger, vagabond, varlet, rascall;' Cot.  $\beta$ . The etymology is much disputed; see Scheler, also Mahn's Etym. Forschungen. The Port. maroto, a rogue, is borrowed from the  $\gamma$ . If we take the form of the word as it is, perhaps the French. simplest (and most probable) solution is to suppose that -avd is the usual F. suffix (= Low Lat. -aldus, from O. H. G. -wald) expressing merely the agent; while the verb is O. F. marir, also marrir, of which, according to Burguy, one sense was to stray, wander, lose one's way. At this rate, the sense is exactly 'vagabond.' 8. The verb also appears in Span. marrar, to deviate from truth, to err, and in Prov. marrir, to lose one's way. 'Si cum hom non pot pervenir lai unt vai ses via, atressi non pot anar ses charitat, mas marrir' = as a man cannot arrive thither where he goes without a road, so he cannot trator of justice, count. Not a G. word, but taken from Low Lat. proceed without charity, but (will be sure to) lose his way; Bartsch, grafio, a judge, prefect, count, grafhio, an exactor of taxes (so used

e. The O. F. marrir is derived from O. H. G. marrjan, to hinder, cognate with E. mar; see Mar. Der. marand er.

MARAVEDI, a small coin, less than a farthing. (Span., - Arab.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627.-Span. maravedi, the smallest Span. coin. Called in Port. both marabitino and maravedim. The name is an old one, the coin being so called because first struck during the dynasty of the Almoravides at Cordova, A.D. 1094-1144 (Haydn, Dict. of Dates, s. v. Spain). Maravedi is derived from the Arab. name of this dynasty.—Arab. Murábitin, the name of an Arab. dynasty; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1382.

MARBLE, a sort of stone. (F., -L.) Gen. called marbreston = marble-stone) in M.E.; afterwards shortened to marbre, and thence changed to marbel or marble. Spelt marbreston, Layamon, cer, C. T. 1895.-O. F. marbel, 'marble;' Cot.-Lat. marmorem, acc. of marmor, marble, considered as a masc. sb.; but it is commonly neuter. A reduplicated form. + Gk. µápµapos, a glistening white stone, from  $\mu a \rho \mu a i \rho \epsilon r$ , to sparkle, glitter; cf.  $\mu a \rho \mu a \rho \epsilon \rho$ , sparkling,  $\mu a i \rho a$ , the dog-star, iit. 'sparkler.'  $\beta$ . Formed, by reduplication, from & MAR, to shine, sparkle, whence Skt. marichi, a ray of light, Gk. µaîpa, the dog-star. Der. marbl-y; also marble-hearted, K. Lear, i. 4. 281, &c. MARCESCENT, withering. (L.) Botanical. In Bailey's Dict. vol. ii. ed. 1731.-Lat. marcescent-, stem of pres. pt. of marcescere, inceptive form of marcere, to wither, lit. to grow faint. B. Marcere is formed as if from an adj. marcus \*, faint (cf. Gk. µalanos, soft, weak), from the base MARK, an extension of MAR, to grind, crush, pound. See Max Müller, Lect. on Language, vol. ii. lect. 7. See Mar. [+] MARCH (1), a border, frontier. (E.) Usually in the pl. marches, as in Hen. V, i. 2. 140. M. E. marche, sing., P. Plowman, B. xv. 438. -A.S. mearc, a mark, fixed point, boundary; Grein, ii. 237. See Mark (1), of which march is a doublet.

MARCH (2), to walk with regular steps, as a soldier. (F., -L.? or G.?) In Spenser, F. Q. v. 10. 33. – F. marcher, 'to march, goe, pace;' Cot.  $\beta$ . Of disputed origin; a good suggestion is Scheler's, who sees in it the notion of regular beating (cf. E. 'to be on the beat,' 'to beat time'), and connects it with Lat. marcus, a hammer, whence a verb marcare \*, to beat, could easily have arisen in Low Latin, and would well express the regular tramp of a marching host. The Lat. marcus, like malleus, is from & MAR, to pound ; see Mallet. y. Otherwise, from F. marche, a frontier, from O. H. G. marcha, cognate with A. S. mearc; see Mark (1). Cotgrave has: 'Marche, ... a march, frontire, . . . a march, marching of soldiers.' Diez cites an O.F. phr. aller de marche en marche, to go from land to land, to make expeditions. Der. march, sb., K. John, ii. 60.

MARCH (3), the mame of the third month. (L.) M.E. March, Chaucer, C. T. 10361. Not from O. F. and F. mars, but corrupted from Low Lat. Marcius, the name of the month in Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 10. – Lat. Martius, the month of Mars, lit. belonging to Mars. – Lat. Marti-, crude form of Mars, the god of war.  $\beta$ . Etym. doubtful; but perhaps from  $\checkmark$  MAR, to shine; see Marble. If so, Mars means 'bright' or 'glorious,' applicable to the god of war, and to the early spring.  $\gamma$ . Or from  $\checkmark$  MAR, to crush. MARCHIONESS, the fem. of Marquis, q. v.

MARE, the female of the horse. (E.) M. E. mere, Chaucer, C. T. 543.-A.S. mere; we find 'equa, mere' in Wright's Gloss, i. 23, col. 1. This is the fem. form of A.S. meark, a horse, Grein, ii. 238; also spelt mearg, mear. + Icel. merr, a mare, mer-kross, mer-hryssi, a mare-horse, used as fem. of marr, a steed. + Dan. mör, a mare. + Swed. märr, a mare. + Du. merrie, a mare. + G. mähre, O. H. G. merihá, a mare ; fem. of O. H. G. marah, a battle-horse.  $\beta$ . The A. S. mearh, Icel. marr, O. H. G. marah, a battle-horse, steed, are cognate with (if not borrowed from) Irish and Gael. marc, W. and Corn. march, a horse, a stallion. Root uncertain. Der. mar-shal, q.v. GF The mare in night-mare (q. v.) is a different word.

MARGIN, an edge, border. (L.) M. E. margin; spelt margyne, P. Plowman, B. vii. 18. Trevisa (i. 41) translates Lat. margines by margyns. - Lat. margin-, stem of margo, a brink, margin, border; cognate with E. Mark, q.v. Dor. margin-al, margin-al-ly, marginat-ed. Doublets, margent, with excrescent t, Tyndal, Works, p. 32; marge, Spenser, F. Q. iv. 8. 61, from F. marge.

MARGRAVE, a marquis, a lord of the marches. (Du.) maregrane, as their call him, of Bruges; 'tr. of Sir T. More's Utopia, 1551, ed. Arber, p. 28. – Du. markgraaf, a margrave. – Du. mark, a mark, also a march, border, border-land; and graaf, a count, earl. + G. markgraf, similarly compounded. B. For the first element, in Du. The count element in Du. see Markera, similarly compounded. p. For the mist children is see Markera (1). The second element is Du graaf, G, graf, M.H.G. grave, O. H.G. kravjo, graveo, graveo, a lord chief justice, administrator of justice, count. Not a G. word, but taken from Low Lat.

in A. D. 1061); Ducange. Evidently formed from Gk. γράφειν, to write, Ψ propose a law, prescribe, ordain; see Grave. Der. margravine, from Du. markgravin, where in is a fem. suffix. See marguis. [†] MARIGOLD, the name of a plant. (Hybrid; Heb. and E.) Spelt marygould in Levins; maryguld in G. Douglas, Palace of Honour, Prol. st. 5. In Shak. Wint. Ta. iv. 4. 105. It bears a yellow flower, whence also the Du. name goud-bloem (gold-bloom), a marigold. Compounded of Mary and Gold. Chaucer has gold for marigold; C. T. 1931 (whence W. gold, a marigold). The Gaelic name is lus-mairi, Mary's leek or plant. Flowers named from the Virgin Mary are numerous; hence our lady's-slipper, lady's tresses, &c. The name Mary (from F. Marie, Lat. Maria, Gk. Mapia) is Hebrew, and is the same as Heb. Miryam or Miriam.

MARINE, belonging to the sea. (F.,-L.) In Cotgrave. [The sb. mariner is in much earlier use, spelt marinere, Chaucer, C. 13367.]-F. marin, 'marine, of the sea;' Cot. - Lat. marinus, adj., of the sea.-Lat. mare, the sea; cognate with E. mere, a pool; see Mere (1). Der. mariner, which first occurs in Floriz and Blancheflur, ed. Lumby, l. 71, from F. marinier, 'a mariner;' Cot.

MARISH, a marsh. (F., =O. Low G.) In Ezek, Xivii. 11. This form of the word answers rather to O. F. marsegs, a marsh (Burguy, Roquefort), marez, marets in Cotgrave, Low Lat. mariscus, than to M. E. mareis, Chaucer, C. T. 6552, F. marais, with the same sense. The latter forms, like Ital. marses, a marsh, answer better to a Low Lat. marses; * a form not found.] Marisk = Low Lat. mariscus, is a word wholly Teutonic, from Low G. marsck (Bremen Wörterbuch), cognate with E Marsh, q.v. ¶ The F. marais is preserved in the name Beagmaris, in Anglesey. Doublet, marsk.

MARITAL, belonging to a husband. (F.,-L.) In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. - F. marital, 'belonging to a mariage, esp. on the husband's side:' Cot. - Lat. maritalis, adj., formed from maritus, a husband; see Marry.

MARITIME, pertaining to the sea. (F., -L.) In Shak. Ant. i. 4. 51. - F. maritime, 'maritime; ' Cot. - Lat. maritimus, adj., formed with suffix -timus from mari-, crude form of mare, the sea, cognate with E Mere (1), q. v.

MARJORAM, an aromatic plant. (F,-L.,-Gk.) The first r is often omitted in various languages. M. E. majoran, Gower, C. A. iii. 133. - F. marjolaine, margerome, Cot.; of which an older form must have been marjoraine, though it is not recorded. Cf. Ital. majorana, Span. mayorana, Port. maiorana, marjoram. 8. All corruptions from Low Lat. majoraca, marjoram, Ducange; which again is a much disfigured form of Lat. a-maracus, marjoram, with loss of initial a. - Gk. auópanos, marjoram. (Probably of Oriental origin.)

MARK (1), a stroke, outline, bound, trace, line, sign. (E.) M.E. merke, Chaucer, C. T. 6201. - A. S. meare, a mark, bound, end ; also a border, confine (Grein, ii. 327); see March (1) + Du. merk. + Icel. mark. + Swed. märke. + Dan. mærke. + M. H. G. marc, a mark, token; M. H. G. marke, O. H. G. marcha, a march, boundary, border; (hence F. margue). + Goth. marka, a border-country, coast, Matt. viii. 34. + Lat. margo, a border, margin (whence F. and E. marge, E. margin).
 β. Prob. further related to Lithuan. margas, particoloured, esp striped ; and perhaps to Skt. márga. a trace, esp. used of the trace of a hunted animal, from the verb mrij, to rub lightly, wipe. stroke, cleanse. - A MARG, to rub lightly, an extension of MAR, to rub, pound, bruise, crush, grind. See Mar. ¶ The order of ideas appears to be to rub, rub lightly, leave a trace; hence a trace, line, mark, boundary. Cf. E. to stroke with the sb. a stroke. Der. mark, vb., from A.S. mearcian (Grein); mark-er, mark-ing-ink; marks-man, Dryden's Meleager (from Ovid, b. viii), l. 188, earlier Marsman, Differing interested (10th Order, D. 11), 1 200, out of form markman, Romeo, i. 1. 212. Also mark (2). MARK (2), the name of a coin. (E.) The Old E. mark was valued at 13s. 4d. M. E. mark, Chaucer, C. T. 12324. - A. S. marc. pl. marcan; 'i. marc goldes' - 1 mark of gold, Diplomatarium Ævi Saxon., ed. Thorpe, p. 379. + G. mark, a certain weight of silver, viz. 8 oz.; also a coin. + Icel. mork.  $\beta$ . Merely a particular use of the word above, as denoting (1) a fixed weight, and (2) a fixed value. Cf. the use of token to denote a coin.

M.E. market, Old. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 16, l. 491.-O. F. market \*, not recorded, also scale market \*, not recorded. marché. Cf. Prov. mercatz (Bartsch), Ital. mercato, Span. mercado, a market. - Lat. mercatus, traffic, trade, also a market (whence also G. markt, Du. markt, Icel. markaor, &c.).-Lat. mercatus, pp. of mercari, to trade. Closely connected with Lat. merse (crude form merci-), merchandise.  $\beta$ . It is supposed that the base mer-c- is extended from mer- as seen in mer-ere, to obtain, get, gain; so that mers is 'gain' or profit, hence traffic as a means of getting gain. 'Corssen takes mers simply as "the earning one;"' Curtius, i. 413. See further under Morit. Dor. martet-able, Temp. v. 266; marketeross, -town. And see merchant.

MAROON.

MAROON. MARL, a rich Eng. ed. (F., -L.) M. E. marle, marl, Trevisa, ik. 15; see Spec. of Eng. ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 236, ll. 25, 27. Dis-syllabic in marle, period. Chaucer. C. T. 3460. - O. F. marle, merle, malle, marne; see Lincer. C. T. 3460. - O. F. marle, merle, malle, contrast the derivative syllabic in marie; see Littré, s. v. marne. Cot. has the derivative marliere, 'a marle. Dittré, s. v. marne. Cot. has the derivative marliere, 'a marle. Low Lat. margila, marl; dimin. of Low marliere, 'a marl (a common word); Ducange. It occurs in Pliny, Lat. marga, marl (a common word); Ducange. It occurs in Pliny, xvii. 6. 4, § 42, who considers it to be a word of Gaulish origin. Probably, like mould, from MAR, to rub, grind. See Mould. The Irish and Gael. marla, W. marl, must be borrowed from E.; the G., Du., Dan., and Swed. mergel are from the Low Lat. margila. Der. marl-y, marl-pit.

MARLINE, a small cord used for binding large ropes, to protect them. (Du.) 'Some the galled ropes with dauby marling bind;' them. (Du.) Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 148. - Du. marling, marlin, a marline; also called marireep (corruption of marreep). So called from its use in binding ropes. - Du. marren, to tie (O. Du. marren, maren, 'to bynde, or to tye knots, 'Hexham); and lijn (corruptly ling), a line. Similarly mar-reep, from reep, a rope. The Du. maren is used by us in the expres-sion 'to moor a ship.' See Moor (2) and Line. Der. marline-spike. MARMALADE, a jam or conserve, gen. made of oranges, but formerly of quinces. (F., - Port., - L., - Gk.) 'Marmalet, Marma-lade, a kind of confection made of quinces, or other fruit ;' Phillips. Spelt marmalat, marmalet in Levins; marmelad in Tyndall, Works, p. 229, col. 2. - O. F. mermelade, 'marmelade;' Cot. Mod. F. mar-melade. - Port. marmelada, marmelade; orig. made of quinces. s quince; thus the sense is ' made of quince; - Lat. mélimélum, lit. a honey-apple, sometimes applied to the quince, as shewn by the allied word melomeli, the syrup of preserved quinces. - Gk. µeliphov, a sweet apple, an apple grafted on a quince; cf.  $\mu\eta\lambda\delta\mu\kappa\lambda$ , honey flavoured with quince. – Gk.  $\mu\lambda\lambda$ -, honey, cognate with Lat. mel. honey; and  $\mu \hat{\eta} \lambda or$ , an apple. See Mellifluous and Melon.

MARMOSET, a small variety of American monkey. (F., -L.) Formerly applied to a different animal, as the word is older than Columbus. M. E. marmosette, marmozette, 'Apes, marmozettes, babewynes [baboons], and many other dyverse bestes; Mandeville's Travels, ed. Halliwell (1866), p. 210; see Wright's note to Temp. ii. 2. - F. marmouset (O. F. marmoset), 'the cock of a cistern or fonntaine, made like a woman's dug; any antick image, from whose teats water trilleth; any puppet, or antick; any such foolish or odd representation; also, the minion, favorite, or flatterer of a prince; Cot. It is hence perfectly clear that the word was applied to some kind of ape because of its grotesque antics. β. The origin of O.F. marmoset (Cotgrave) looks uncertain; but Scheler's statement that the Low Lat. vicus marmoretorum occurs as a translation of F. rue des Marmousets (a statement repeated by Littré with the additional information that the said street is in Paris) is decisive. The sense of marmoretum is 'made in marble;' applied, as shewn by Cotgrave, to spouts of cisterns and drinking-fountains, the grotesqueness of them being an accident. - Lat. marmor, marble; see Marble. B. At the same time, it is perfectly clear that one reason for the transference of this particular word to a kind of ape was due to simple confusion with the wholly unrelated F. word marmot (not to be confused with E, marmot, which is again a different word). Cotgrave has: 'Marmot, a marmoset, or little monky;' also: 'Marmotie, a she marmoset, or she monky.' The etym. of this F. marmot is uncertain; the most likely explanation is Scheler's; he takes it to be a dimin. with suffix -ot from O. F. merme, little, tiny, lit. very small. This O.F. merme is a curious corruption of Lat. minimus (like O.F. arms from Lat. animus); see Minim. This gives to F. marmot the sense of 'dear little creature,' and accounts for the mod, use in the senses of ' puppet' and ' little child' (Hamilton); cf. Ital. marmotta, a marmoset, a babie for a childe to play withall, a pugge; ' Florio. MARMOT, a mountain-rat, a rodent animal. (Ital., L.) Intro-duced into Eng. from Ital., not from F. Ray speaks of 'the Marmotto or mus Alpinus, a creature as big [as] or bigger than a rabbet; ' On the Creation, pt. ii (R.) 'Marmoito, a mountain-rat;' Kersey, ed. 1715. - Ital. marmotto, a marmot; Meadows, Eng. Ital. division. Cf. O.F. marmotaine, marmotan, 'the Alpine mouse, or mountain-rat; β. Another O. F. form of the name was marmontain (Littré); Cot. Diez cites the Romansch names (cauton Grisons) as montanella and murmont; the O. H. G. name was murmenti, murmunto, muremun'o, now corrupted to murmelthier (where thier = deer or animal). y. The comparison of these names, variously corrupted, at once leads us, without any doubt, to the right solution ; viz. that the word is a debased Latin one, founded on mur-, stem of mus, a mouse, and mont- or montan-, stem of mons, a mountain, or of montanus, belonging to a mountain. The sense is certainly 'mountain-mouse.' See Mountain and Mouse. And see Marmoset.

MAROON (1), brownish-crimson. (F., - Ital.) Modern ; not in Todd's Johnson. Lit. 'chesnut-coloured.'-F. marrow, 'the great chestnut; Cot.-Ital. marrone; Florio gives the pl. as marroni, of of marchio, a prefect of the marches, which is a doublet of marchensis. maroni, 'a kind of greater chestnuts then any we have.' Of unknown origin. Cf. late 'Gk. µapaor, the fruit of the cornel-tree, in Eustathius (12th cent.).

MAROON (2), to put ashore on a desolate island. (F., - Span., -L., -Gk.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. It occurs in Scott, The Pirate, c. xli. And see Marcons in Haydn, Dict. of Dates. -F. marron, adj., an epithet applied to a fugitive slave ; negre marron, a fugitive slave who takes to the woods and mountains (Littré); hence the E. verb to maroon = to cause to live in a wild country, like a fugitive slave. See Scheler, who points out that the F. word is a clipt form of Span. cimarron, wild, unruly, lit. living in the moun-tain-tops. – Span. cima, a mountain-summit. Cf. Ital. and Port. cima, F. cime, a mountain-top. B. According to Diez, the O. Span. cime also meant a twig, sprout; from Lat. cyme, a young sprout of a cabbage. -Gk.  $\kappa \tilde{\nu} \mu a$ , anything swollen, a wave, young sprout. - $\checkmark$  KU, to swell; see Colewort. ¶ Mr. Wedgwood says that ✓ KU, to swell ; see Colewort. ¶ Mr. Wedgwood says that the fugitive negroes are mentioned under the name of symarons in Hawkins' Voyage, § 68, where they are said to be settled near Panama.' He also cites the following: 'I was in the Spanish service, some twenty years ago in the interior of Cuba, and negro cimarrón or briefly cimarrón, was then an every-day phrase for fugitive or outlawed negroes hidden in the woods and mountains;' Notes and Queries, Jan. 27, 1866. I may add that the pronunciation of c (before i) as s, is Portuguese rather than Spanish.

MARQUE, LETTERS OF, letters authorising reprisals. (F.,-G.) The old sense of a letter of marque was a letter signed by a king or prince authorising his subjects to make reprisals on another country, when they could not otherwise get redress. It is now only used in naval affairs, to shew that a ship is not a pirate or a corsair. 'Law of Marque, or [corruptly] Mart; this word is used 27 Edw. III, stat. 2. c. 17, and grows from the German word march [which, however, is the English form of the word], i.e. limes, a bound or limit. And the reason of this appellation is because they that are driven to this law of reprizal, take the goods of that people (of whom they have received wrong and can get no ordinary justice) when they catch them within their own territories or precincts;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'Marque . . . signifies in the ancient statutes of our land as much as reprisals; as A. 4 Hen. V, c. 7, Marques and Reprisals are used as synonima; and letters of marque are found in the same signification in the same chapter;' id. See also Ducange, s. v. Marcha. In one instance, cited by Wedgwood and Littré, the O. F. marquer seems to mean 'to pillage,' the lit. sense being 'to catch within one's borders.' Littre also shews that the spelling marche was used in the same sense as marque, in this connection; it would hence appear that margue is lit. a border, and hence a catching within one's borders, perhaps also a border-raid, foray. - O. F. marque, properly a boundary; explained by Cot. as 'a distresse, arrest, or seisure of body or goods.' He also gives: 'Droict de Marque, power to arrest the body, and seize the goods of another; granted by the king, and in old time given by the parliament, against a stranger or forreiner.'-M. H. G. marke, O.H.G. marcha, a march, boundary, border. See March (1) and Mark (1). (ar The corrupt form letters of mart occurs in Beaum. and Fletcher, Wife for a Month, ii. I (Tony). and Mark (1).

MARQUER, a large field-tent. (F, -G). Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. This is one of the words in which a final s has been cut off, from a false idea that marguees is a plural form; so also we have sherry for sherris, pea for pease, and 'Chines' for Chinese, Scc. Marquees is nothing but an E. spelling of F. marquise, an officer's tent, large tent, marquee.  $\beta$ . Littre says that marquise, a tent, a little elegant construction, was no doubt so named from marguise, a marchioness, or lady of rank who was to be protected from the inclemency of the weather. That is, it is short for 'tent of the marchioness.' The F. marquise is the fem. of marquis, a marquis; see Marquis.

MARQUETRY, inlaid work. (F., -M. H. G.) In Sir T. Her-bert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 146. -F. margueterie, 'inlaied work of sundry colours;' Cot. - F. margueter, 'to inlay, to diversifie, flourish, or work all over with small pieces of sundry colours, also, to spot;' id. Lit. 'to mark slightly, or with spots; ' iterative form of marguer, to mark. - F. margue, a mark. - M. H. G. mark, G. marke, a mark, token; cognate with E. mark; see Mark (1).

MARQUIS, a title of nobility. (F., -Low Lat., -G.) M. E. markis, marguis; Chaucer, C. T. 7940, 8473.-O. F. markis, marchis (Burguy), later marguis; 'a marquesse, in old time the governour of a frontire, or frontire town; Cot. Cf. Prov. and Span. margues, Port. marguez, Ital. marchese. - Low Lat. marchensis, a prefect of the marches. - Low Lat. marcha, a march, boundary. - O. H. G. marcha, a march, boundary; see March (1) and Mark (1). Der. marquisate, in Minsheu; also marchioness = Low Lat. marchionissa, formed with fem, suffix -isra (= Gk, -100a) from Low Lat, marchion-one, acc., also martalus (with the common change of I for r). - M. H. G. and G.

Also marquee, q.v. Doublets, marquess, Merch. Ven. i. 2. 125, from Span. marques; also margrave, q. v. MARROW, pith, soft matter within bones. (E.) M. E. marow.

maruka, marugak (with one r), Prompt. Parv. p. 326. More com-monly mary, Chaucer, C. T. 12476. – A. S. marak, marrow; Wright's Vocab. i. 44, col. 2. + Du. merg, marrow, pith. + Icel. mergr, mar-row. + Swed. merg, marrow. + Dan. maro, marrow. + G. mark, M. H. G. marc, O. H. G. marag, marrow. + W. mer, Com. maru, marrow. B. The orig. Teut. form MARGA prob. stands for an older MASGA, which is the form given in Fick, iii. 236. This links Irish smear, grease, do not belong here, but are related to E. smear.

Der. marrou-bone, M. E. mary-bone, Chaucer, C. T. 382. MARRY, to take for a husband or wife. (F.,-L.) Properly 'to provide with a husband." M. E. marien (with one r), Rob. of Glouc. p. 30, l. 5.-F. marier, to marry.-Lat. maridare, (1) to give a woman in marriage, (2) to take a woman in marriage. - Lat. maritus, a husband; the fem. marita means lit. provided with a husband, or joined to a male. - Lat. mari-, crude form of mas, a male. See Male. Der. marri-age, M. E. mariage (with one r), Rob. of Glouc. p. 31, 1. 7, from F. mariage, which from Low Lat. maritaticum, a woman's dowry, in use A.D. 1062, later maritagium (Ducange); marriage-able, marriage-able-ness. And see marital.

MARSH, a morass, swamp, fen. (E.) M. E. mersche, Wyclif, Gen. xli. 18 (earlier text). - A. S. merse, a marsh; Grein, ii. 234. [The change from se to sk is usual and regular.] Merse is a contraction of mer-ise, orig. an adj. signifying full of meres or pools (= mere-ish); formed with suffix -isc (-isk) from A.S. mere, a mere, pool, lake ; see More. + Low G. marsch, Bremen Wörterbuch, iii. 133; whence Low Lat. mariscus, and E. marisk. Der. marsk-y, marsk-i-ness. Doublet, marisk.

MARSHAL, a master of the horse; variously applied as a title of honour. (F., -O.H.G.) The orig. sense is 'horse-servant,' a farrier or groom; it rose to be a title of honour, like constable, q.v. M. E. mareschal, Rob. of Glouc. p. 491, l. 10; marschal, P. Plowman, B. iii. 200. – O. F. mareschal (mod. F. maréchal), 'a marshall of a kingdom or of a camp (an honourable place), also, a blacksmith, farrier; 'Cot. = O. H. G. maraschalk (M. H. G. marshale, G. marschall), an attendant upon a horse, groom, farrier. - O. H. G. marak, a battlehorse, whence the fem. merika, a mare, cognate with E. Mare, q.v.; and schalk, M. H. G. shale, a servant, whence G. schalk, a knave, a rogue (by a change of sense exactly parallel to that of E. knave). β. The latter element is cognate with A.S. scealc, a servant, man (Grein), Du. schalk, a knave, Icel. skálkr, a servant, knave, rogue, Swed. skalk, a rogue; the oldest form and sense being preserved in Goth. skalks, a servant, Mat. viii. 9. Y. Perhaps we may refer this word to the Teut. root SKAL, to be obliged to do; see Shall. Der. marshal, vb., Macb. i. 1. 42, the sense being 'to act as marshal,' it being orig. a part of his duty to arrange for tournaments and to direct ceremonies ; marshall-er, marshal-ship. Gr The syllable -kal occurs also in sene-schal, q. v.

MARSUPLAL, belonging to a certain order of animals. (L., -Gk.) Modern. Applied to such animals as have a pouch in which to carry their young .- Lat. marsupium, a pouch .- Gk. µapovirior, μαρσίπιον, a little pouch; dimin. of μάρσυπος, μάρσιπος, a bag, pouch (Xenophon, Anab. 4. 3. 11).

MART, a contracted form of Market, q. v. In Hamlet, i. 1. 74. MARTELLO TOWER, a circular fort on the S. coast of England. (Ital.-L.) 'The English borrowed the name of the tower from Corsica in 1794;' Webster. - Ital. martello, a hammer; a name given to 'towers erected on the coasts of Sicily and Sardinia against the pirates in the time of Charles V' (A.D. 1519-1556); Webster. -Low Lat. martellus, a hammer ; dimin. from a form martus *, which is equivalent to Lat. marcus, a hammer. - A MAR, to crush, pound; see Mallot. I cannot verify the above statements; another theory, that the fort taken in 1794 by the English was situate in Moriella bay, Corsica, is given in the Eng. Cyclopædia. The Ital, moriella means a myrtle. [+] MARTEIN, a kind of weasel. (F., - Low Lat., - Teut.) a. Marten is a contraction of the older form martern, in Harrison's Description of England, b. ii, c. 19, ed. Furnivall, p. 310. β. Again, the final n in martern is excrescent, as in bitter-n; see Mätzner, Gramm. i. 177. The older term is marter or martre; it is spelt martre in Caxton, tr. of Reynard the Fox, ed. Arber, p. 112, l. 18.-F. martre (also marte), 'a martin,' Cot.; spelt martre in the 11th cent. (Littre). Cf. Ital. martora, Span. marta. - Low Lat. marturis*, of which Ducange gives the pl. martures, as being a common word; been a Punic word; indeed, it would not be very surprising if the equelled, subdued, Also of M.E. mate, confounded, Ancren Riwle words mappa and matta were one and the same. Der. mat, verb;

May (1). MATCH (1), one of the same make, an equal, a contest, game, marriage. (E.) M. E. macche, mache. Spelt macche = mate, com-B. Blasson R. viii 47. 'This was a mache vnmete' = this panion; P. Plowman, B. xiii. 47. 'This was a mache vnmete'= this was an unfit contest; Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 4070; whence the pp. machede = matched, id. 1533, 2904. The orig. sense was 'companion' or 'mate,' hence an equal, giving the verb to match = to consider equal; the senses of 'contest, game, marriage,' &c., are really due to the verb. - A.S. macca, generally ge-macca, a companion, comrade, spouse; Grein, i. 426. [The prefix ge, often and easily dropped, makes no difference.] The change of sound from final -cca to -cche, and later to -tch, is perfectly regular. B. The form gemacca or macca is one of secondary formation, due to a causal suffix -ya; thus mac-ya* passes into macca (with double c, and vowel-change), and would mean 'one who is made a companion,' the orig. word thus operated on being maca, a companion, the word now spelt mate. See further under Mate. Der. match, verb, see Der. match, verb, see exx. above, and see P. Plowman, B. ix. 173; also match-less, matchless-ly, match-less-ness.

MATCH (2), a prepared rope for firing a cannon, a 'lucifer.' (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. macche; 'the macche brenneth' - the match burns (used of a smouldering torch); P. Plowman, B. xvii. 231.-O. F. mesche, meiche, the wicke or snuffe of a candle; the match of a lamp; also, match for a harquebuse, &c.; 'Cot. Mod. F. meche. -Low Lat. myxa\*, not found, but justified by the orig. Gk. form; we find Low Lat. myzus, the wick of a candle (Ducange); and Martial (14. 41. 2) uses the acc. pl. myzos, as if from nom. myzus, i. e. the nozzle of a lamp, the part through which the wick protrudes. Gk.  $\mu b f a$ , the nozzle of a lamp; the more orig. senses being (1) mucus, discharge from the nose, (2) a nostril. See further under Mucus. Der. match-lock, i. e. a lock of a gun holding a match, and hence the gun itself; added by Todd to Johnson's Dict.

MATE (1), a companion, comrade, equal. (E.) Spelt mate in Prompt. Parv., p. 329; Rob. of Glouc. p. 536, l. 1. But it has been well suggested that the word is a corruption of the older M.E. make, with the same sense. The same change from k to t occurs in M. E. bakke, now spelt bat; see Bat (2); also in O. Fries. matia, to make. 'In bat and mate a t supplies the place of an orig. k,' &c., Morris, Eng. Accidence, p. 25. The M. E. make is of common occurrence; see P. Plowman, B. iii. 118, Chaucer, C. T. 9954, Havelok, 1150, &c. - A. S. gemaca (or maca), a mate; 'twegen gemaca' = two mates, i. e. a pair, Gen vi. 19. [The prefix ge, easily and often dropped, makes no difference.] + Icel. maki, a mate, used of birds, &c. + Swed. make, a fellow, mate, match; cf. maka, a spouse, wife. + Dan. mage, a mate, fellow, equal. + O. Sax. gi-mako, a mate; whence O. Du. maet, 'a mate' (Hexham), with change from k to t as in E.; mod. Du. maat.  $\beta$ . All closely related to the adj. which appears as Icel. makr, suitable, M.H.G. gemach, O.H.G. kamak, belonging to, suitable, like, peaceful (whence G. gemach, gently); and further related to A. S. macian = mod. E. make. a mate is 'one of like make,' anything that is 'suitably made' for another; this force comes out still more clearly in the closely related sb. match, which is a secondary formation from A.S. gemaca. See Match (1), Make. Y. Ma'e, as used by sailors, is from O. Du. maet. Der. mate, vb., All's Well, i. 1. 102; mate-less. [†]

MATE (2), to check-mate, confound. (F., - Pers., - Arab.) Used by Shak. in the sense 'to confound ;' as in 'My mind she has mated, and amazed my sight ;' Macb. v. 1. 86. It is the same word as is used in chess, the true form being check-mate, which is often used as a verb.  $\beta$ . Properly, check mate is an exclamation, meaning 'the king is dead ;' this occurs in Chaucer, Book of the Duchess, 658. -O. F. eschee et mat, 'check-mate;' Cot. Here the introduction of the conj. et is unnecessary and unmeaning, and due to ignorance of the sense. - Pers. shak mat, the king is dead. - Pers. shak, king; and mát, he is dead, Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 518. Y. Skák is a Pers. word; but mát is not, being of Arab. origin. - Arab. root máta, he mát, he is dead, Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 518. died; Rich. Dict. p. 1283; whence is derived the Turk. and Pers. mail, 'astonished, amazed, confounded, perplexed, conquered, subjected, ... receiving check-mate,' id.; also Pers. mát kardan, ' to give check-mate, to confound;' id. Cf. Heb. múth, to die. ¶ We MATERNAL, belonging to a mother. (F.,-L.) Spelt maternall in Minsheu and Cotgrave. - F. maternel, 'maternall;' Cot. - Low Lat. maternalis, extended from Lat. maternus, motherly. This adj. is formed with suffix -nus ( = Aryan suffix -na, Schleicher, Compend. § 222) from Lat. mater, cognate with E. mother; see Mother. Der. maternal-ly; also matern-i-ty, from F. maternité, 'maternity' (Cot.), which from Lat. acc. maternitatem.

MATHEMATIC, pertaining to the science of number. (F., -L., -Gk.) Gower speaks of 'the science ... mathematique;' C. A. iii. 87.-O. F. mathematique, 'mathematical;' Cot. - Lat. mathematicus. - Gk. µaθηµarucos, disposed to learn, belonging to the sciences, esp. to mathematics. - Gk. µaθήµar-, stem of µåθηµa, that which is learnt, a lesson, learning, science. - Gk. µa0/1-, appearing in µa0/1σομαι, I shall learn, fut. of μανθάνειν, to learn; one of the very numerous derivatives from  $\checkmark$  MA or MAN, to think ; cf. µárras, a seer. uiros, mind, Skt. man, to think. See Mind, Man.

mathematic al, vally, mathematic-i-an; also mathematic-s, sb. pl. MATTINS, MATTINS, morning prayers. (F.,-L.) 'Masse and matyns;' Rob. of Glouc. p. 369. 'Matynes and masse;' P. Plowman, B. v. 418. - F. matins, 'matins, morning praier;' Cot. A pl. sb. from F. matin, properly an adj., but used as a sb. to mean 'the morning.' - Lat. matutinum, acc. of matutinus, belonging to the morning; which passed into F. with the loss of u, thus pro-ducing mat'tin, contracted to matin; cf. Ital. mattino, morning. - Lat. Matua, the goddess of morning or dawn; cf. Lucretius, v. 655; as if from a masc. matutus*, with the sense of 'timely,' or 'early:' closely related to Lat. maturus; see Mature. Der. matin, sb. morning (in later use), Hamlet, i. 5. 89, from F. matin, the morning; hence matin, adj., as in the matin trumpet,' Milton, P. L. vi. 526. And see matutinal. The spelling with double t may be due to Ital. mattino, or simply to the doubling of t to keep the vowel a short, as in matter, mattock.

MATRICIDE, the murderer of one's mother. (F.,-L.) 1. The above is the correct sense, but rare ; see Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674 -F. matricide, adj., 'mother killing;' Cot. - Lat. matricida, a murderer of a mother. - Lat. matri-, crude form of mater, a mother (see Mother); and -cida, killing, formed from caders (pt. t. os-cidi), to kill (see Cassura). 2. Sir T. Browne has the word in the sense 'murder of one's mother; 'Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 17. § 5. In this case, it is coined directly from Lat. matricidium, a killing of a mother. - Lat. matri-, as before; and -cidium, a killing, from cædere, ¶ Fratricide, parricide, are equally ambiguous. as before. Der. matricid-al.

MATRICULATE, to admit to membership, esp. in a college, to register. (L.) Used as a pp., with the sense of 'enrolled,' in Skelton, Garland of Laurel, 1. 1281. - Late Lat. matriculatus, pp. of matriculare, to enrol, a coined word. - Lat. matricula, a register; a dimin. of matrix, (1) a breeding animal, (2) a womb, matrix, (3) a public register, roll, list, lit. a parent-stock. See Matrix. Der. matriculat-ion MATBIMONY, marriage. (F., - L.) M. E. matrimoine, Chaucer, C. T. 3097. - O. F. matrimonie, 'matrimony,' Cot.; of which another (unrecorded) form was probably matrimoine.-Lat. matrimonium, marriage. - Lat. matri-, crude form of mater, a mother (see Mother); with suffix -monio- = Aryan man-ja, on which see Der. matrimoni-al, matrimoni-Schleicher, Compend. § 219.

MATRIX, the womb, a cavity in which anything is formed, a mould. (L.) Exod. xiii. 12, 15. [Written matrice in Numb. iii. 12 in A. V., cd. 1611. Minsheu has both matrice and matrix; the former is the F. form. Cf. 'matrice, the matrix,' Cot. ; from the Lat. matricem, the acc. case.] - Lat. matrix, the womb. - Lat. matri-, crude form of mater, mother, cognate with E. Mother, q.v. MATRON, a married woman, elderly lady. (F.,-L.) M. E. matrone, Gower, C. MATTER (1), the material part of a thing, substance.  $(F_{.,-}L)$ have here the obvious original of O.F. mat, 'deaded, mated, amated, # M.E. matere (with one t), Chaucer, C. T. 6492. Earlier forma enaterie, Ancren Riwle, p. 270, l. 7. – O. F. matiere, matere (prob. <sup>2</sup> maler, a painter, from malen, to represent, paint; and stock, a stick, also materie); mod. F. matière. – Lat. materia, matter, materials, stuff; so called because useful for production, building, &c. draw, paint), is der. from G. maki, M. H. G. and O. H. G. mál, mól, B. Formed with suffix -ter- ( = Aryan -tar, on which see Schleicher, Compend. § 225) from 🖌 MA, to measure ; cf. Skt. má, to measure, also (when used with nis) to build, form, produce. ¶ Allied to Mother, q. v. Der. matter, vb., not in early use; matter-less;

materi-al, q. v. Also matter (2), q. v. MATTER (2), pus, a fluid in abscesses. (F., -L.) 'Matter, that which runs out of a sore; ' Kersey, ed. 1715. Really the same word as the above; see Littré, s. v. matière, sect. 8, who gives: 'Matière purulente, ou simplement matière, le pus qui sort d'une plaie, d'un abscès.' So also in the Dict. de Trevoux. Littré gives the ex-amples: 'Il est sorti beaucoup de matière de cette plaie'= much matter has come out of this sore. See Matter (1).

MATTINS, the same as Matins, q. v.

MATTOCK, a kind of pickaxe. (C.) M. E. mat/ok. 'Hoc bidens, a mat/ok;' Wright's Vocab. i. 234; and see Prompt. Parv. -A.S. mattue, Orosius, b. iv. c. 8. § 2. β. Of Celtic origin. - W. matog, a mattock, hoe; cf. Gael. madag, a mattock, pickaze, Russ. motuika, Lithuan. matikkas, a mattock.

MATTRESS, a quilt to lie upon. (F., - Arab.) 'A mattress, culcitra; 'Levins. – O. F. materas, 'a mattersse, or quilt to lie on; 'Cot. Mod. F. matelas (by change of r to l); cf. Span. and Port. al-madraque, a quilted cushion, mattress (where al is the Arab. def. article). - Arab. matrah, 'a place, station, post, situation, foundation, a place where anything is thrown; mutrah, thrown away, rejected;' Rich. Dict. p. 1440. This Arab. word came to mean anything hastily thrown down, hence, something to lie upon, a bed (Devic); just as the Lat. straium, lit. 'anything spread,' came to mean a bed. The Arab. matrak is derived from the Arab. root taraka, he threw prostrate; Rich. Dict. p. 967. [+] MATURE, ripe, completed. (L.) 'Maturity is a mean between two extremities, ... they be maturely done;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 22 (R.) - Lat. maturus, mature, ripe, arrived at  $\beta$ . It seems to be related to a lost noun signifying full growth. 'period,' cognate with Lithuan. metas, a period, a year (Nesselmann); and with Lithuan. matoti, to measure (id.) If so, the root is  $\checkmark$  MA, to measure; see Moto. The sense is then 'measured,' or 'completed; hence fully ripe. Der. mature-ly; matur-i-ty, from F. maturité, 'maturity' (Cot.), which from Lat. acc. maturitatem; mature-ness; matur-at-ion, from O. F. maturation, 'a maturation, ripening' (Cot.), which from Lat. acc. maturationem, due to maturatus, po of maturare, to ripen; matur-at-ive, from O.F. maturatif, 'maturative, ripening' (Cot.), a coined word; matur-esc-ent, from the stem of the pres. pt. of maturescere, inceptive form of maturare. Closely related words are matin, matutinal.

MATUTINAL, pertaining to the morning, early. (L.) Matu-tinal is in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; matutine in Kersey, ed. 1715. Matu-Lat. matutinalis, belonging to the morning; formed with suffix -alis from matutin-us, belonging to the morning; see further under Matins.

MAUDLIN, sickly sentimental. (F., -L., -Gk., -Heb.) The orig. sense was 'shedding tears of penitence,' like Mary Magdalene, who was taken as the type of sorrowing penitence. Hence the expression 'their maudin eyes' in Dryden's Prol. to Southerne's play of The Loyal Brother, l. 21 (A. D. 1682). Corrupted from M. E. Maudelein, or Magdelaine, Chaucer, C. T. 412; P. Plowman, B. xv. 289. - O. F. Magdaleine. - Lat. Magdalene. - Gk. Maydalnry, i. c. belonging to Magdala; Luke, viii. 2. Here 'Magdala' answers to Heb. migdal, a tower: Smith's Dict. of the Bible. ¶ Observe the spelling Maudlin (for Magdalen) in All's Well, v. 3. 68. [†] MAUGRE, in spite of. (F., -L.) Obsolete, except in imitating archaic writing. In Shak. Tw. Nt. iii. I. 163; Titus, iv. 2. 110; K. Lear, v. 3. 131. In P. Plowman, B. ii. 204, it means 'in spite O. F. malgre, margre, margre; Cot. has 'maulgre' ewa, mauger their teeth, in spite of their hearts, against their wils.' The lit. sense of malgre is 'ill will' or 'displeasure.' Compounded of mal, from Lat.

malgre is 'll will' or 'displeasure.' Compounded of mal, from Lat. malus, bad, ill; and O.F. gre, gret, from Lat. gratum, a pleasant thing. See Malice and Agree. MAUL, to beat grievously, to bruise greatly, disfigure. (F., -L.)Formerly mall. 'Then they malled the horsses legges, that their mightie coursers lefte praunsynge;' Bible, 1551, Judges, v. 22. M.E. mallen, to strike with a mall or mace, Joseph of Arimathie, ed. Skeat, l. 508. Merely formed from M.E. malle, a mall, mace; en Merely (1) see Mall (1). ¶ Even the sb. is spelt maul in A. V. Prov. xxv. 18.

MAUNDY THURSDAY, the day preceding Good Friday. (F., - L.; and E.) Thursday is the E. name of the fifth day of the week; see Thursday. Maundy is M. E. maundee, maunde, a command, used with especial reference to the text 'Mandatum novum,' kc.; John, xill. 3. 'He made his maundee, 'He [Christ] performed his own command, i. e. washed his disciples' feet; P. Plowman, B. xvi. 140. 'Lord, where wolte thou kepe thi maunde?' Coventry Mysteries, ed. Halliwell, p. 259. The 'new commandment' really is 'that ye love one another;' but in olden times it was, singularly enough, appropriated to the particular form of devotion to others exemplified by Christ when washing his disciples feet, as told in earlier verses of the same chapter. The Thursday before Easter is called Maundy Thursday, dies mandati, a name derived from the ancient custom of washing the feet of the poor on this day, and singing at the same time the anthem—Mandatum nowm, &c.; John, xiii, 34... The notion was, that the washing of the feet was a fulfilling of this command, and it is so called in the rubric, conveniunt clerici ad faciendum mandatum. This rite, called mandatum or lavipedium, is of great antiquity, both in the Eastern and Western church; ' &c.; Humphrey on the Common Prayer, p. 179. See my long note on P. Plowman, B. xvi. 140, and Maundy Thuriday in the Index to the Parker Society's publications. Maundy, for mandatum, occurs in Grindal's Works, p. 51; Hutchinson, pp. 221, 259, 346; Tyndale, i. 250, iii. 256 (Parker Soc.). B. From O. F. mande, that which is commanded. Cot. has 'mandé, commanded, ... directed, appointed. - Lat. mandatum, a command, lit. that which is commanded, neut. of mandatus, pp. of mandars, to command. The older sense is 'loathsome.' or, more literally, 'maggoty.' Formed with suffix 'loathsome,' or, more literally, 'maggoty.' Formed with suffix -isk from M. E. mauk, mauk, a maggot. 'Hec cimex, Anglice mawke; 'Wright's Vocab. i. 190, col. 1. Mauk is a corruption, or rather, an easy contraction of the older form madek, a maggot, which occurs (in another MS.) as a variant of meabe, a maggot; O. Eng. Homilies, i. 251, l. 19; cf. note on p. 326. - Icel. maokr, a maggot. + Dan. maddik, a maggot; whence the Norweg. makk (Aasen) - E.

mawk. B. This is a dimin, form with suffix -k (or -ik) from the older form appearing in A. S. mada, Goth. maka, Du. and G. mada, a maggot; see Moth.  $\gamma$ . The comparison of G. mada (O. H. G. a magori ; see Moth. y. The comparison of G. made (O. H. G. mado) with O. H. G. madari, a mower, reaper, suggests that the orig: sense of A. S. mada was 'mower,' or 'reaper,' i. e. devourer; cf. the A. S. mad- with Lat. met-ere, to reap; see Mow (1). Der. mawkish-ly, mawkish-ness.

MAXILLAR, MAXILLARY, belonging to the jaw-bone. (L.) Blount, ed. 1674, gives both forms. Bacon has 'maxillary (G.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. One of the few G. words imported into English. - G. malerstock, a maulstick, lit. 'painter's stick.' - G. bone : Lat. maxilla, the jaw-bone ; dimin. of māla, the cheek-be (which stands for mac-sa-la). - Lat. mac-, base of macerare, to $ spot, mark of a macerate, chew : see Macanata macerate, chcw; see Macerate.

MAXIM, a proverb, general principle. (F., -L.) Lit. 'a saying of the greatest importance.' In Shak. Troil. i. 2. 318. - F. maxime, 'a maxime, principle;' Cot. - Lat. maxima, greatest (put for maxima santentiarum, the chief of opinions); fem. of maximus, greatest, superl. of magnus, great. -  $\checkmark$  MAGH, to have power; see May (1).

MAXIMUM, the greatest value or quantity. (L.) A mathematical term. - Lat. maximum, neut. of maximus, greatest; see Maxim.

MAY (1), I am able, I am free to act, I am allowed to. (E.) There is no infinitive in use; if there were, it would rather take the form mow than may. All from a Teut. base MAG, to have power. Further allied to Russ. moche, to be able; cf. moche, sb., power, might; Lat. magnus, great, mactus, honoured; Gk. 47xarh, means; Skt. mak, to honour. All from  $\checkmark$  MAGH, to have power, be great, further, help; see Fick, i. 388. Der. The derivatives from this root are very numerous. Some of the chief are main, sb., main, adj., magnate, magnitude, magistrate, maid, major, mayor, make, machine, master, matador, maxim, mechanics, megatherium, &c. Also dis-may, q v. Also might, michle, much, more, most; perhaps many; perhaps maw and May (a). MAY (a), the fifth month. (F., -L.) M. E. Mai, May; Chaucer, C. T. 1502, 1512. - O. F. May, Mai, 'the month of May;' Cot. -Lat. Maius, May; so named as being the month of 'growth.' It was dedicated to Maia, i. e. 'the increaser' or 'the honoured.' Allied to maior, greater, magnus, great, mactare, to honour, &c. - MAGH, to have power; see May (1). Der. May-day, -flower,

-fly, -pole, -gueen. MAYOB, the chief magistrate of a town. (F., -L.) M. E. maire, P. Plowman, B. iii. 87. There were mayors of London much earlier. -F. maire, a mayor. - Lat. maiorem (shortened to mairem), acc. of maior, greater; hence, a superior. See Major. (B) It is most remarkable that we have adopted the Span. spelling mayor, which came in in Elizabeth's time. Spelt maior in Shak. Rich. III, iii. 1. 17 (first folio). The word maire was first used temp. Hen. III; Liber Albus, p. 13. Der. mayor-ess, a coined word, formed by adding the F. fem. suffix -esse (= Lat. -issa, Gk. -100a); Ben Jonson speaks of the lady may'ress' in An Elegy, Underwoods, lx. 1. 70. Also mayor-al-ty, Lord Bacon, Life of Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 209, l. 24; a coined word, as if from a Lat. acc. maioralitatem \*. Also mayor-ship, mayor-dom, in Cotgrave, s. v. mairie. MAZE, a labyrinth, confusion, perplexity. (Scand.) M. E. more, P. Plowman, B. i. 6. [We also find M. E. masen, to confuse, puzzle; Chaucer, C. T. 4946.] Of Scand. origin ; cf. Norweg. masa-st (where the final -st = -sk = sik, oneself), a verb of reflexive form, to fall into a slumber, to lose one's senses and begin to dream ; maia, to be continually busy at a thing, to have a troublesome piece of work to do, also, to prate, chatter (Aasen). Icel. masa, to chatter, prattle; Swed. dial. masa, (1) to warm, (2) to bask before the fire or in the sun, ... (4) to be slow, lazy, work slowly and lazily; mas, adj., slow, lazy (Rietz).  $\beta$ . These senses of lounging, poring stupidly over work, dreaming, and the like, agree with the E. phrase to be in a maze, i.e. in a dreamy perplexity. Compare the following: 'Auh pe bimasede Isboset, lo! hwu he dude maseliche' = but the stupid Ishbosheth, lo I how stupidly he acted ; Ancren Riwle, p. 272. Prob. the orig. sense was 'to be lost in thought,' to dream; hence to be in perplexity, lounge, be idle, &c.; from the  $\checkmark$  MA, to think (shorter form of MAN); cf. Skt. man, to think, Gk.  $\mu \epsilon \mu a a$ , I was eager, ματεύειν, to strive after, seek, μάτην, vainly, μάταιοs, foolish, stupid. Der. maz-ed, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 113 (cf. M.E. mased, bimased above); maz-y, maz-i-ness. Also a-maze, q.v.

MAZER, a large drinking-bowl. (O. Low G.) Obsolete. Mazer, a broad standing-cup, or drinking-bowl; 'Phillips, ed. 1706. M. E. maser, Prompt. Parv. (Not found in A. S.) Of O. Low G. origin; cf. O. Du. maser, 'a knot in a tree,' Hexham. Mazers were so called because often made of maple, which is a spotted wood; the orig. sense of the word being 'a spot,' a knot in wood, &c. Cf. Icel. mösurr, 'a maple-tree, spot-wood;' mïsur-bolli, a mazerbowl; mösurtré, a maple-tree.

q. v. MEAD (2), MEADOW, a grass-field, pasture-ground. (E.) So called because 'mowed.' 1. M. E. mede, Chaucer, C. T. 89.– A. S. mźd; 'Pratum, mźd;' Wright's Vocab. i. 38, l. 1. Allied to the prov. E. math, a mowing, used only in the comp. after-math, an after-mowing, a second crop. - A. S. máwan, to mow; see Mow (1). Cf. G. mahd, a mowing; M. H. G. mát, a mowing, a crop, a mead; M. H. G. mate, matte, a meadow; Swiss matt, a meadow, in the wellknown names Zermatt, Andermatt; all from O. H. G. majan, to mow, cognate with E. mow. 2. The fuller form meadow is due to an A. S. form mdedu, of which the stem is mdedu-; the change from final -we to later -ow is the usual one, as in sparrow, arrow, &c. 'Mid laswe and mid madwe = with leasow and with meadow; A.S. Chron., an. 777, MS. E. (see Thorpe's edit. p. 92, note 1); where mædwe is the dat. case. Dor. meadow-y.

MEAGRE, lean, thin, poor, scanty. (F., - L.) M. E. megre, P. Plowman, B. v. 128; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1198. (Not in earlier use; and not from the supposed A.S. mager, an unauthorised form in Lye.) - F. maigre, thin. - Lat. macrum, acc. of macer, thin, lean; whence also Icel. magr, Dan., Swed., and G. mager, thin, lean, were borrowed at an early period (which will also account for A. S. mager, if it be a true word); see Fick, iii. 228.  $\beta$ . The Lat. macer is prob. cognate with Gk. µunpos, small; see Microcosm. Dor. meagre-ly, -ness. From the same source, e-mac-i-ate.

MEAL (1), ground grain. (E.) M. E. mele, Chaucer, C. T. 3993. - A. S. melu, melo, gen. melewes, Matt. xiii. 33. + Du. meel. + Icel. mjöl, later form mél. + Dan. meel. + Swed. mjöl. + G. mikl. ß All from the Teut. base MAL, to grind, appearing in Icel. mala, Goth. malan, O. H. G. malan, to grind, which are cognate with W. malw. Lat. molere, to grind. - & MAR, to grind; see Mill, Mar. Der. meal-y, meal-i-ness, meal-y-mouth-ed.

MEAL(2), a repast, share or time of food. (E.) M. E. mele. Chaucer, C. T. 4886. - A. S. mdl (1), a time, portion of time, stated time, Grein, ii. 221. Hence the orig. sense was 'time for food ;' cf. mod. E. ' regular meals.' It has reference to the common meal at a stated time, not to the hastily snatched repast of a wayfaring man. + Du. maal, (1) time, (2) a meal. + Icel. mal, (1) a measure, (2) time, nick of time, (3) a meal. + Dan. maal, measure, dimension ; maaltid, a meal (lit. meal-time). + Swed. mdl, measure, due size, meal. + Goth. mel, time, season. + G. mahl, a meal: mal, a time.  $\beta$ . All from the Teut. base MALA, a measured or stated time. -MA, to measure; cf. Skt. má, to measure; see Moto. (Fick, iii. 223.) Der. meal-time, meal-tide.

MEAN (1), to have in the mind, intend, signify. (E.) M. E. menen, Chaucer, C.T. 2065. - A. S. menan, to intend; Grein, ii. 222. + Du. meenen, to think, believe, fancy, mean. + Dan. mene, to mean, think. + Swed. mena, to mean, think. + G. meinen, O. H. G. meinjan, to think upon, mean, signify.  $\beta$ . These are all causal or secondary verbs, as shewn by the O. H. G. form, and derived from the sb. which appears as M. H. G. meine, O. H. G. meina, thought, intent, signification. A still more orig. form appears in Icel. minni, O. H. G. minni, remembrance, memory, mind, which are closely melated to E. Mind, q. v. -  $\checkmark$  MAN, to think. Dor. mean-ing. M.E. mening, Chaucer, C. T. 10465 (cognate with G. meinung); mean-ing-less. See moan.

MEAN (2), common, vile, base, sordid. (E.) M.E. mene; 'je mene and he riche ; P. Plowman, B. prol. 18. - A. S. mene, wicked, Grein, ii. 222, closely related to A. S. mán, iniquity, id. 207. (Perhaps further related to A.S. gemáne, common, general; but this is by no means so certain as might at first appear.) + Du. gemeen, common, vulgar, bad, low, mean (but the relationship is uncertain). + Icel. meinn, mean, base, hurtful; cf. mein, a hurt, harm. Cf. Dan. bowl; mösurtré, a maple-tree.  $\beta$ . The word is merely extended meen, Swed. men, hurt, injury. + M. H. G. mein. false; mein, a false-"om the form which appears in M.H.G. mase, O.H.G. másá, a hood; cf. G. meineid, perjury. And cf. Goth. gamains, common, Tit. i. 4; unclean, Mk. vii. 2.  $\beta$ . Root uncertain; but I think the word may perhaps be referred to  $\sqrt{MI}$ , to diminish, hence, to injure; see Minish.  $\gamma$ . It might then be best to refer A.S. β. Root uncertain; but I think gemane, common, general, and Du. gemeen (at any rate in the senses of 'common' and 'vulgar') to the same root as Lithuan. mainas, larter, mainyti, to barter. 8. The oft-suggested connection berather reject it. Der. mean-ly, L. L. L. v. 2. 328; mean-ness (not in early use).

MEAN (3), coming between, intermediate, moderate. (F., -L.) M. E. mene. And a mene [i. e. an intermediate one, a mediator] M. E. mene, bitwene je kyng and je comune' [commons]; P. Plowman, B. i. 158. Mal-ardgos, the name of a river, remarkable for its circuitous course;

Pliny, b. v. c. 29. Der. meander, vb., meander-ing. MEASILES, a contagious fever accompanied by small red spots

DEFASILES, a contagious itever accompanied by small red spots on the skin. (Du.) The remarks in Trench, Select Glossary, are founded on a misconception. The word is quite distinct from M. E. messel, a leper, which will be explained below. 'The maysilles, variolæ,' Levins. 125. 15. 'Rougeoile, the meazles;' Cot. In Shak. Cor. iii. 1. 78, the sense is 'measles,' not 'leprosy,' as explained in Schmidt. The use of the term was quite definite. 'The maisils, a disease with many reddish spottes or speckles in the face and bodie, much like freckles in colour; 'Baret. M. E. massles, to translate O.F. rugeroles (14th cent.), in Wright's Voc. i. 161, l. 23. Borrowed from Dutch. – Du. masslen. 'De masslen, ofte [or] massl-sieckte, the measels, or sick of the measels. De massl-sucht, the measell-sicknesse ;' Hexham. The same word as O. Du. masselen. 'Masselen ofte masseren, black spots or blemishes of burning upon one's body or leggs ;' Hexham. He also gives : ' Maesche, masche, maschel, a spot, a blemish, or a blott. B. It is obvious that the word simply means 'spots,' or rather 'little spots;' the form massel or maschel being a dimin. of an older form mase or masche. Of these older forms, Hexham actually gives the latter, whilst the former is cognate with (and vouched for by) the M.H.G. máse, O.H.G. missi, a spot, the mark of a wound; whence G. mars [=massi], a spot, speckle, and massrn, pl. measles. Cf. O. H. G. massel], a bloody tumour on the knuckles.  $\gamma$ . Precisely the same form mass, 'a spot,' is the source whence is derived the E. Massor, q. v. It thus appears that measle means 'a little spot.' It is therefore wholly unconnected with M.E. mesel, which invariably means 'a leper (see Stratmann); whence meselrie, i. e. leprosy. Both mesel and meselrie occur in Chaucer, Pers. Tale, De Ira. The spelling with the simple vowel e (instead of ai or ea) makes all the difference. This word is borrowed from O. F. mesel, which is from Lat. misellus, wretched, unfortunate, dimin. of miser, wretched; see Misor. The confusion between the words is probably quite modern; when, e.g., Cotgrave explains O.F. mssel, meseau, by a meselled, scurvy, lea-porous, lazarous person,' he clearly uses meselled as equivalent to leprous; whilst he reserves the spelling meazles to translate rougeoile. Dor. measled, measley.

MEASURE, extent, proportion, degree, moderation, metre. (F., -L.) M. E. mesure, P. Plowman, B. i. 35; Ancren Riwle, p. 372, l. 1; O. Eng. Homilies, and Ser. p. 55, l. 8. - O. F. mesure. -Lat. mensura, measure. - Lat. mensura, fem. of mensurus, fut. part. of metiri, to measure. – (MA, to measure; see Moto. Der. measure, vb., M. E. mesuren, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 2, l. 1782; measur-able, M. E. mesurable, P. Plowman, B. i. 19; measur-abl-y, measur-ed, measure-less, measure-ment.

MEAT, food, flesh of animals used as food. (E.) M.E. mete, Chaucer, C. T. 1615. - A.S. mete, John, iv. 32, 34. + Du. met. flesh for sausages. + Icel. matr, food. + Dan. mad, victuals, food.+ Swed. mat, victuals.+Goth. mats, food (whence matjan, to use as food, eat).+O.H.G. maz, food.  $\beta$ . Prob. from  $\checkmark$  MAD, to chew, appearing in I.at. mandere; see Mandible. Der. meat-offering. MECHANIC, pertaining to machines. (F., -L., -Gk.) First used as a sb., with the sense 'mechanic art.' M.E. mechanike. used as a sb., with the sense 'mechanic art.' M.E. mechanike. Gower. C. A. iii. 142. - O. F. mechanique, mecanique, 'mechanicall; Cot - Lat. mechanica, mechanic; also used as sb., the science of mechanics. - Gk. μηχανική, sb., the science of mechanics; fem. of adj. μηχανικόs, relating to machines. - Gk. μηχανή, a machine; see Machine. Der. mechanic-al (see Trench, Select Glossary); mechanical-ly; mechanic-s, mechanic-i-an; also mechan-ist, mechan-ism.

MEDAL, a piece of metal in the form of a coin. (F.,-Ital.,-

Low Lat., -L.) Shak. has medal to signify 'a piece of metal stamped with a figure;' Wint. Ta. i. 2. 307. -O. F. medaille, 'a medall, an ancient and flat jewel, &c.; Cot. (Mod. F. medalle, a Ital. medaglia, a medal, coin; equiv. to O. F. meaille, whence mod. F. maille, a small coin. - Low Lat. medalia, a small coin; 'obolus, quod est medalia,' in a Lat. glossary cited by Brachet; we also find low Lat. medalla, a small coin; Ducange. These are corrupted forms due to Lat. metallum, metal. See Motal. Der. medal-isi or medall-isi; medall-i-on, in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, from O. F. medaillon (F. medaillon), 'a little medall,' Cot., which is from the Ital. medaglione, formed from medaglia.

MEDDLE, to mix or interfere with. (F.,-L) To meddle with is to mix with. The M.E. verb medlen simply means 'to mix.' 'Medled togideres' = mixed together, P. Plowman, B. ix. 3. Also frequently spelt mellen; thus, for ' imedled togidres,' another reading is ymelled, in Trevisa, iii. 469, l. 4. - O. F. mesler, medler, meller, to mix, interfere or meddle with (Burguy). Cotgrave has: 'mesler. to mingle, mix, . . jumble; se mesler de, to meddle, intermeddle, deal with, have a hand in.' Mod. F. måler. Cf. Span, mesclar, Port. mesclar, Ital. mischiare [put for misclare, by usual change of el to chi], to mix. - Low Lat. misculare, to mix; cf. Lat miscellus, mixed. -Lat. miscere, to mix; for which see Mix. β. The orig. O. F. form was mesler, of which medler was a curious corruption, and meller a simplification. An intrusive d occurs, similarly, in medlar, q.v. Dor. meddl-er, meddle-some (with E. suffix), meddl-ing. Also medley, q. v. MEDIATE, middle, acting by or as a means. (L.) Rare as an adj., and not very common in the adv. form mediate-ly. 'Either immediatly or mediatly; Fryth's Works, p. 18. - Lat. mediatus, pp. of mediare, to be in the middle. - Lat. medius, middle; cognate with A. S. midda, middle; see Mid. Der. mediate, verb (rare in old books); Rich. quotes: 'employed to mediate A present marriage, to be had between Him and the sister of the young French queen ; Daniel, Civil Wars, b. viii. Also media:-ion, q. v., mediat-or, q. v.

Also im mediate. Also medial, from Lat. medi-alis. MEDIATION, intercession, entreaty for another. (F.,-L.) M.E. mediation, mediacioun, Chaucer, C. T. 4654.-O. F. mediation, 'mediation;' Cot. Formed as if from a Lat. acc. mediationem*, from a nom. mediatio*. - Lat mediatus, pp. of mediare, to be in the middle, be between ; see Mediate.

MEDIATOR, an intercessor. (F., -L.) Now conformed to the Lat. spelling. M. E. mediatour, Wyclif, 1 Tim. ii. 5. -O. F. mediateur. - Lat. mediatorem, acc. of mediator, one who comes between, a mediator. - Lat. mediatus, pp. of mediare; see Mediate. Der. mediator-i-al, mediator-i-al-ly.

MEDIC, a kind of clover. (L., - Gk.) Botanical. Lit. 'Median.' Phillips, ed. 1706, has both medick and the Lat. form medica. - Gk. Myourn, put for Myourn woa, Median grass; fem. of Myourds, Median. From Media, the name of a country in Asia; Pliny, b. xviii. c. 16.

MEDICAL, relating to the art of healing diseases. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Low Lat. medicalis. medical. - Lat. medicus, a physician. - Lat. mederi, to heal. See Medicine. Der. medical-ly MEDÍCATE, to impregnate with anything medicinal. (L.) Rich. quotes 'his medicated posie at his nose' from Bp. Hall, A Sermon of Thanksgiving. - Lat. medicatus, pp. of medicari, to heal. - Lat. medi-cus, a physician. See Medicine. Der. medicat-ed, medicat-jon, medicat-ive. Also medica-ble, Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, from Lat. medicabilis; medicament, from O.F. medicament, 'a medicament, salve' (Cot.), which from Lat. medicamentum.

MEDICINE, something given as a remedy for disease. (F., -L.) In early use. M. E. medicine, in O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 187, 1. 4 from bottom. - O. F. medecine (put for medicine). - Lat. medicina, medicine. - Lat. medicus, a physician. - Lat. mederi, to heal.  $\beta$ . Closely allied to Gk. base  $\mu a\theta$ , in  $\mu a \nu \theta d\nu e \nu$ , to learn; with reference to the science of healing. Fick (i. 714) compares also Zend madk, to treat medically, madha, medical science. From a base MADH, to learn, heal; which from  $\checkmark$  MA, shorter form of MAN. to think. See Meditate, Man. Der. medicine. vb., Oth. iii. 3. 332; medicin-al, Wint. Ta. ii. 3. 37 ; medicin-al-ly ; medicin-able, Much Ado, ii. 2. 5. And see medical, medicate.

MEDIEVAL, relating to the middle ages. (L.) Also written mediæval. Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. Coined from Lat. mediput for medio-, crude form of medius, middle; and Lat. envin, an age; with suffix -al. See Mediate and Age. MEDIOCRE, middling, moderate. (F., -L.) 'A very mediocre poet, one Drayton;' Pope, To Dr. Warburton, Nov. 27, 1742 (R.) -F. médiocre, middling. - Lat. mediocrem, acc. of mediocris, middling; extended from medius, middle. (Cf. ferox from ferus.) See Mid. Der. mediocri-ty, F. médiocrité, from Lat. acc. mediocritatem. MEDITATE, to think, ponder, purpose. (L.) In Shak. Rich.

III, iii. 7. 75. [The sb. meditation is in much earlier use, spelt meditacium in the Ancren Riwle, p. 44, l. 4.]-Lat. meditatus, pp. of meditari, to ponder.  $\beta$ . A frequentative verb, from the base med-(=Gk.  $\mu a\theta$ -) appearing in Lat. med-eri, to heal, Gk.  $\mu a \nu \theta a \nu \epsilon_{\mu}$ , to learn; from the base MADH, due to  $\checkmark$  MA (also MAN), to think. See Medicine, Man. Der. meditat-ion, from O. F. meditation Lat. acc. meditationem ; meditat-ed, meditat-ive, meditat-ive-ly, meditative-ness.

MEDITERRANEAN, inland. (L.) In Shak. Temp. i. 2. 234; and in Cotgrave, who translates O.F. Mediterrance by the mediterranean or mid-earth sea.'- Lat. mediterrane-us, situate in the middle of the land; with suffix -an (=F. -an, Lat. -anus). - Lat. medi-, for medio-, crude form of medius, middle; and terra, land; with suffix -an-e-. See Mid and Terrace. ¶ Chiefly applied to the Mediterranean Sea, which appeared to the ancients as nearly in the middle of the old world; but the word was sometimes used more generally : see Trench, Select Glossary.

MEDIUM, the middle place, means, or instrument. (L.) In Dryden, Art of Poetry, c. iv. 1. 888-Lat. medium, the midst, a means; neut. of medius, middle; see Mid.

MEDLAR, a small tree with a fruit somewhat like an apple or pear. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) Properly, medlar is the name of the tree; the fruit should be called a medie, but the word is obsolete; the medlar is so called because it bears medies. M. E. medier, a mediar-tree; Rom. of the Rose, 1375. Also called medie-tre, Sir Beves of Hamptoun, ed. Turnbull, 52 (Stratmann). – O. F. meslier, 'a medlar-tree; ' Cot. – O. F. mesle, 'a medlar (a Picard word);' Cot. – Lat. mespilum, a medlar; cf. mesfilus, a medlar-tree; Pliny, b. xv. c. 20.-Gk. μέσπιλον, a medlar. ¶ The introduction of d before l in this word is curious; but the same phenomenon occurs also in meddle and medley; it appears to be due to the O.F. s.

MEDLEY, a confused mass, confusion, mixture. (F., - L.) M.E. medle, medle, . 'Medle, mixtura;' Prompt. Parv. p. 331. Also spelt melle (dissyllabic), which occurs in Barbour's Bruce in the sense of 'mixture,' b. v. l. 404, and over and over again in the sense of 'fray,' 'contest,' exactly corresponding to the mod. F. mélée, which is in fact the same word. See Trench, Select Glossary. Chaucer has medlee in the sense of ' mixed in colour,' as in : 'He rood but hoomly in a medlee cote,' Prol. to C. T. 330.-O. F. medle, mesle, melle (fem. forms medlee, meslee, mellee), pp. of medler, me ler, or meller (mod. F. meler), to mix. See further under Meddle. ¶ The verb to meddle is sometimes contracted to mell, All's Well, iv. 3. 257; and see Nares. The M. E. melle, easily shortened to mell, is obviously the original of the slang word mill, a contest; for the change of vowel from e to i, see Mill. [+] MEDULLAR, MEDULLARY, belonging to the marrow. (L.) Medullar is in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1074. Kersey, ed. 1715, has both forms. - Lat. medullaris, belonging to the marrow. - Lat. β. The orig. sense was prob. 'inmost;' medulla, the marrow. from Lat. med-ius, middle ; see Mid.

P. Plowman, B. ii. 20, 27, 34, 36, 39, &c. - A. S. méd., Matt. vi. 1; older form moord (with r for older s), John, iv. 36, Rushworth MS. + G. miethe, hire; M. H. G. miete, O. H. G. mieta. + Goth. mizdo, reward. + Russ. mzda, remuneration. + Gk. μαθόs, pay. β. Origin doubtful; an ingenious suggestion is that cited in Verill's the doubtful; an ingenious suggestion is that cited in Vaniček, that the orig. form was mad-dka, that which is set or put by measure; from MAD, an extension of  $\checkmark$  MA, to measure, and  $\checkmark$  DHA, to put, place. Observe that meed stands for mizd.

MEEK, mild, gentle. (Scand.) M. E. meke, Chaucer, C. T. 69; Havelok, 945; spelt meoc, Ormulum, 667. – Icel. mjukr, soft, agile, meek, mild. + Swed. mjuk, soft, pliable, supple. + Dan. myg, pliant, soft. + Du. muik, soft. + Goth. muks *, only in comp. muka-modei, gentleness. Here migrim is a corruption, by change of n to m, of the older form migrene. - F. migraine, ' the megrim, head ach ;' Cot. - Low Lat. kemigranea, megrim, Ducange; cf. emigranea in Prompt. Parv., just cited. - Lat. kemicranium, a pain on one side of the face. - Gk. humparior, half the skull. - Gk. hu-, half (see Homi-); and sparior, the cranium, skull (see Cranium).

MELANCHOLY, depression or dejection of spirits, sadness. (F., -L., -Gk.) Supposed to be caused by an excess of black bile; whence the name. M. E. melancolie, Gower, C. A. i. 39; cf. 'engen-dred of humours melancholike,' Chaucer, C. T. 1377.-O. F. melancholie, 'melancholy, black choler;' Cot.-Lat. melancholia.-Gk. μελαγχολία, melancholy. – Gk. μελάγχολο, jaundiced, filled with black bile. – Gk. μέλαν-, stem of μέλαε, black, dark, gloomy (allied to Skt. mala, dirty, malina, black); and xohn, bile, cognate with E. Gall, q. v. Der. melanchol-ic, O. F. melancholique, 'melancholick' (Cot.), from Lat. melancholicus.

MELILLOT, the name of a plant. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Levins and Cotgrave. - O. F. melilot, 'melilot;' Cot. - Lat. melilotos. - Gk. μελίλωτος, μελίλωτος, a kind of clover; so called from the honey it contained. - Gk. μέλι, honey; and λωτόε, lotus, clover. See Mellifluous and Lotus.

MELIORATE, to make better, improve. (L.) Bacon has meliorate and melioration, Nat. Hist. §§ 232, 433 (R)-Lat. melioratus, pp. of meliorare, to make better (White). - Lat. melicr, better. β. Cognate with Gk. μαλλον, rather, compar. of μάλα, adv., very much, exceedingly. Root unknown. Der. melioration, a-meliorate. MELLIFLUOUS, flowing sweetly, sweet. (L.) In Milton,

P. L. v. 429; P. R. iv. 277. And in Shak. Tw. Nt. ii. 3. 54.-Lat. mellifluus, flowing like honey (by change of -us to -ows, as in numerous other instances). - Lat. melli-, crude form of mel, honey; and suffix -fluws, flowing, formed from fluere, to flow. B. Lat. mel is cognate with Gk. µέλι, Goth. militk, honey; the root is uncertain. For Lat. fluere, see Fluent. Der. So also melli-fluent, from mel'i-

(as above) and fluent, stem of pres. pt. of fluere. So also melli ferous, i.e. honey-bearing, from Lat. ferre, to bear. And see marmalade. MELLOW, fully ripe. (E.) 'Melwe, melowe, or rype, Maturus;' Prompt. Parv. The true sense is 'soft' or 'pulpy,' like very ripe fruit. By the frequent substitution of l for r, it stands for (or is a mere variant of) A.S. mearn, soft, tender, Grein, ii. 239. Closely allied words are Marrow, Moal (1), which see. + Du. muru, soft. tender; cf. mollig. soft, malsch, soft, tender. + M. H. G. mar, O. H. G. maro, soft, tender. Cf. also Lat. mollis, soft, Gk. µalanós, soft; Goth. gamalwiths, contrite (Luke, iv. 18), from gemalwian, to grind down, extension of malan, to grind. B. All from the common down, extension of malan, to grind. MAR, MAL, to grind, crush, pound; see Mar, Melt. Mild. Der. mellow-ne-s

MELODRAMA, MELODRAME, a theatrical performance, with songs. (F., -Gk.) Given in Todd's Johnson only in the form melodrame, noted by Todd as a modern word lately borrowed from French. It is now always written melodrama. – F. melodrame, properly, acting with songs. A coined word. – Gk.  $\mu \epsilon \lambda o$ -, crude form of µέλos, a song (see Molody); and δpâµa, an action, drama (see Drama). Der. melodramat-ic, melodramat-ist, from the stem bojuar-. MELODY, an air or tune, music. (F., - L., - Gk.) M. E. melodie, melodye, Chaucer, C. T. 9; Legend of St. Christopher, 1. 18. - Ο. F. Melodye, Chaucer, C. T. 9; Legend of St. Christopher, 1. 18. - Ο. F. singing, musical. = Gk.  $\mu \epsilon \lambda_{-}$ , for  $\mu \epsilon \lambda_{0-}$ , crude form of  $\mu \epsilon \lambda_{00}$ , a song, music; and  $\psi \delta h$ , a song, ode (see Ode). Perhaps  $\mu \epsilon \lambda_{00}$  is allied to μαλακόs; see Mellow. Der. melodi-ous, -ly, -ness. MELON, a kind of fruit. (F., -L., -Gk.) 'Of melons;' see Sir T. Elyot, Castell of Helth, b. ii. c. 7.-O. F. melon, 'a melon;' Cot.-Lat. melonem, acc. of melo, an apple-shaped melon. - Gk. µŋilor, (1) an apple, (2) fruit of various kinds. Cf. Lat. mālum, an apple ossibly borrowed from Gk.) Der. mar-mal-ade, q. v.

MELT, to make liquid, dissolve. (E.) M. E. melen; pt. t. mak, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 1017; pp. molien, P. Plowman, Plying. Allied to mentiri, to lie. B. xiii. 82. - A.S. meltan, pt. t. mealt, Grein, ii. 230.  $\beta$ . It seems best to connect this word with Skt. mridu (base mard-), soft, and the  $\beta$ . It seems O. Slavonic mladu, soft (cited by Max Müller, Lect. on Language, 8th edit., ii. 3(3). –  $\checkmark$  MAKD, to rub down, crush, overcome; an extended form of  $\checkmark$  MAR, to grind, pound. Cf. Marrow, Mellow, from the same root. ¶ The connection with smelt is by no means so sure as might at first appear. The words may be independent of each other. Der. melt-ing, melt-ing-ly. Also malt, q. v., milt, q. v.

MEMBER, a limb, a clause, one of a community. (F.,-L.) M. E. membre, Rob. of Glouc. p. 511, l. 12. - F. membre, a member. - Lat. membrum, a member. Cf. Skt. marman, a member, a joint. Koot uncertain. Der. member-ship, with E. suffix. Also membr-ane, q.v.

MEMBRANE, a thin skin or film. (F., -L.) 'The skin is a membrane of all the rest the most large and thick; ' P. Fletcher, Purple Island, c. 2, note 13 (R.) - F. membrane, 'a membrane;' Cot. - Lat. membrana, a skin covering a member of the body, a membrane. - Lat. membr-um, a member; see Mombor. Der. membranous, membran-ac-e-ous.

MEMENTO, a memorial or token whereby to remember another. (L.) A Lat. word, adopted into E., but it is not easy to say at what date. The phrase memento mori (remember you must die) is in Shak. 1 Hen. IV, iii. 3. 35; but this is used in a different con-nection. That memento would do well for you too, sirrah; 'Dryden, Kind Keeper, A. iv. sc. 1. We find ' for memento sake' as early as in P. Plowman, B. v. 476, where there is a special allusion to the text 'Remember me,' Luke, xxiii. 42. - Lat. memento (see Luke, xxiii. 42, Vulgate); imperative of memini, I remember; see Montion, Mind.

MEMOIR, a record, short biographical sketch, collection of recollections. (F., - L.) Commonly in the pl. memoirs, spelt meor] writings for remembrance... records; Cot. Pl. of memoire, memory. - Lat. memoria, memory; also, a historical account, record, memoir. See Momory.

MEMORY, remembrance, recollection. (F., -L.) M. E. memorie, Chaucer, C. T. 10118; King Alisaunder, 4790. -O. F. memoire, memory (of which an older form was probably memorie). - Lat. memoria, memory. - Lat. memor, mindful.  $\beta$ . The Lat. memor appears to be a reduplicated form (like me-min-i, I remember); cf. Gk.  $\mu \delta \rho \mu \epsilon \rho o \epsilon_{1}$ anxious,  $\mu \epsilon_{p-\mu\eta\rho}$  ( $\epsilon_{\mu\eta}$ , to be anxious, to ponder earnestly (with which the notion of memory is closely associated); the simpler form in Gk. appears in  $\mu \epsilon_{\mu\nu}\mu\nu_{\alpha}$ , care, thought. Y. Thus the base appears as MAR, a later form of SMAR, to remember, as seen in Skt. smri, to remember; whence also E. Martyr, q.v. See Benfey, Skt. Dict., p. 1091. Der. memori-al, Gower, C. A. ii 19, from O. F. memorial, 'a memoriall' (Cot.), from Lat. memorialis ; memori-al-ist, memori-al-ise. Also memorable, Hen. V, ii. 4. 53, from O. F. memorable, 'memorable' (Cot.) = Lat. memora-bilis, from memorare, which from memor. Hence memor-abl-y. Also memorandum, pl. memorandums, 1 Hen. IV, iii. 3. 179, from Lat. memorandum, neut. of fut. pass. part. of memorare, to record. Also com-memor-ate, im-memor-ial, remem-ber. Doublet, memoir.

MENACE, a threat. (F., -L.) M.E. menace, manace; spelt manas, King Alisaunder, 1. 843. 'Now cometh manace, that is an open folie; for he that ofte manaceth,' &c.; Chaucer, Pers. Tale, De Ira, near end. - O. F. menace, menache, manache (Burguy), menace (Cot.), a threat. - Lat. minacia, a threat, of which the pl. minaciæ is nsed by Plautus. - Lat. minaci-, crude form of minax, full of threats; also, projecting. - Lat. mina, pl., things projecting, hence (from the idea of threatening to fall) threats, menaces. - Lat. minere, to jut out, project. Der. menace, verb, as above ; menac-ing, menac-ing-ly. From the same source, com-min-at-ion, de-mean; also e-min-ent, promin-ent.

 $(F_{.,} = Low$ MENAGERIE, a place for keeping wild animals. Lat., -L.) 'The menagerie in the tower;' Burke, On a Regicide Peace, let. I (R.) - F. ménagerie, 'properly a place where the animals of a household are kept, then by extension a place in which are kept rare and foreign animals; ' Brachet. (So also Scheler.) -F. ménager, to keep house. - F. ménage, a household, housekeeping; O. F. mesnage, 'houshold stuffe, businesse, or people, a houshold, family, or meyney;' Cot. See further under Monial, Mansion.

MEND, to remove a fault, repair. (F., -L.) M. E. menden, Will. of Palerne, 647. The sb. mendyng is in King Alisaunder, 5206. Mend is a mere corruption of amend, by the loss of the initial vowel. See Amend. Der. mend-er, mend ing.

MEINDACITY, falsehood, lying. (L.) 'The mendacity of Greece;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. i. c. 6. § 9. Formed, by analogy with F. words in -ty, from Lat. acc. mendacitatem, from nom.

β. The orig. meaning of Lat. mentiri was 'to think out, invent, devise ;' cf. commentum, a device. a falsehood, comminisci, to devise. y. Hence the base man-!- is plainly an extension from the common & MAN, to think. See Mention, Mentor, Man. Der. mendaci-ous, formed with suffix -ous from the crude form mendaci- above ; mendaci-ous-ly, -ness.

MENDICANT, a beggar. (L.) Properly an adj., as 'the men-dicant (or begging) friars.' The word came in with these friars, and must have been well known, as a Latin word at least, in the 14th century. Chaucer has the F. form mendiant, C. T. 7488. But it does not appear very early as an E. word; it occurs in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. mendicant-, stem. of pres. part. of mendicare. to beg. - Lat. mendicus, beggarly, poor; of uncertain origin. Der. mendicanc-y. Also mendic-it-y, M.E. mendicite, Rom. of the Rose,

6427, 6436, from O. F. mendicité, 'mendicity,' Cot. MEINIAL, one of a honsehold, servile. (F.,-Low Lat.,-L.) Properly an adj., but also used as sb. 'His seruauntes menyall;' Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Courte, 592. M. E. meineal, meyneal. "Grete 3e wel her meyneal chirche,' i. e. the church of their house-hold, Wyclif, Rom. xvi. 5. This adj. is formed, by help of the common suffix -al (= F. -al, Lat. -alis) from the M.E. sb. meine, meinee, maine, mainee, a household, now obsolete, but once in common use; see Rob. of Glouc., pp. 167, 202; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 15; Will. of Palerne, 184, 416; Havelok, 627; Wyclif, Matt. x. 25, Luke, ii. 4; Chaucer, C. T. 7627, 7738, 14348, 17177.  $\beta$ . Note that this word is entirely unconnected with E. many, with which Richardson confuses it. In Spenser, prob. owing to such con-fusion, the word is badly spelt many or manie, F. Q. v. 11. 3 - O. F. naisne, the word is bardy spett many of many is the second state of the second state o the forms mansnada, maisnada, a family, household; whence the derivative mansionaticum, expenses of a household, as explained in medical phrase. In Phillips, ed. 1706. - Lat. menses, with the same sense; pl. of mensis, a month; from the same root as E Month, q. v.

Brachet, s. v. menage.  $\gamma$ . Formed, with fem. part. suffix -a'a, from mansion-, stem of Lat. man: io, a dwelling. See Mansion. MENIVER, MINEVER, MINIVER, a kind of fur. (F.,-L.) M.E. meniuer (with u for v); spelt menyuere, P. Plowman, B. xx. 137. - O. F. menu ver; 'menu ver. on verk, the furre minever, also, the beast that bears it;' Cot. Also spelt menu vair, ' minever, the furre of ermine mixed or spotted with the furre of the weesell called gris;' Cot. - O. F. menu, 'little, small,' Cot.; and vair, 'a rich fur of ermines powdered thick with blue hairs;' Cot.  $\beta$ . The F. menu is from Lat. minutus, small; see Minute. The F. Thus the sense is 'little spotted' fur or animal. [†] MENSES, the monthly discharge from the womb. (L.) A Lat.

N. Der menstruous, q. v. MENSTRUOUS, having or belonging to menses. (L.) Isaiah, xxx. 22 (A.V.) - Lat. menstruus, monthly. - Lat. mensis, a month. See Month. Der. menstru-ate, from menstruare. Also menstruum, a solvent, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 1. § 11; so called, says Richardson, 'because its action was, as we are told, assisted by a moderate fire during a month;' or, says Wedgwood, from the notion that chemical solvents could only be duly prepared in dependence on the changes of the moon.'

MENSURATION, measuring, measurement. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Formed, by analogy with F. words in -tion, from Lat. mensurationem, acc. of mensuratio, a measuring. - Lat. mensuratus, pp. of mensurare, to measure. - Lat. mensura, measure; see Measure.

-MENT, a common suffix. (F., - L.) F. -men!, from Lat. -mentum, crude form -men-tc-, an extension of -men- = Aryan -man-; see Schleicher, Compend. § 219.

MENTAL, pertaining to the mind. (F.,-L) In Shak. Timon, i. 1. 31. - F. mental, 'mentall;' Cot. - Low Lat. mentalis, mental. - Lat. ment., stem of mens, the mind; see Mind. Der. mental-ly MERLE, a blackbird. (F., - L.) In Henrysoun's Com Creseide, 1. 24.-O. F. merle, 'a mearle, owsell, blackbird; In Henrysoun's Complaint of Cot. -Lat. merula. a blackbird. Root uncertain. Der. merl-in.

MERLIN, a kind of hawk. (F.,-L.?) M. E. merlion, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, 339.-O.F. emerillon, esmerillon, 'the hawk termed a marlin;' Cot. Cf. Ital. smerlo, a kind of hawk, whence smeriglione, a merlin; Span. esmerejon, a merlin. β. Diez supposes these words to have been formed from Lat. merula, a blackbird; the initial s being unoriginal. See Marle. MERMAID, a fabled marine animal. (E.) M. E. mermaid, Chaucer, C. T. 15276; also meremaidens, Rom. of the Rose, 683. A.S. mere, a lake, mere; and magd, a maid; cf. A.S. mere-wif. a mere-woman, Grein, ii. 233. See More and Maid. ¶ The sense of mere was easily exchanged for that of sea under the influence of F. mer, the cognate word. Der. mer-man, similarly formed.

MERRY, sportive, cheerful. (C.) M. E. merie, mirie, murie (with one r). Chaucer, C. T. 235, 1388. – A. S. merg, merry, Grein, ii. 233.  $\beta$ . Not a Teutonic word, but borrowed from Celtic. – Irish and Gael. meur, merry, mirthful, playful, wanton. The root appears in Gael. mir, to sport, play, firt, whence also Gael. mire, play, pastime, mirth, transport, fury, mireagach, merry, playful, Irish mire, play, levity, madness. Perhaps allied to Mild, q. v. Dor. merri-ly, merri-ness, L. L. L. i. 1. 202; also merri-ment (a hybrid word, with F. suffix, which has almost displaced merriness), Spenser, F. Q. ii. 6. 3. Also merry-andrew, where Andrew is a personal name, asserted by Hearne (Benedict. Abbas, ed. 1735, tom. i. pref. p. 50) to have been given to jesters in remembrance of the once famous Andrew Boorde, Doctor of Physic in the reign of Henry VIII; several jestbooks were ascribed to him, perhaps wrongly; see Mr. Furnivall's preface to his edition of Andrew Boorde's Introduction of Knowledge, and see the passage from Hearne cited at length in Todd's Johnson. Also merry-thought; Cot. translates F. lumette by 'the merry-thought, the forked craw-bone of a bird, which we use in sport to put on our noses.' And see mirth. MESENTERY, a membrane in the middle of the intertines. (L.,-Gk.) In Minsheu, ed. 1647. Englished from Lat. mesenterium. - Gk. μεσεγτέριον, also μισέντερον, the membrane by which all the intestines are connected. - Gk. Heg., for Hegos, middle, cognate with Lat. medius (see Mid); and errepor, a piece of the entrails (see Entrails). Der. mesenter-ic.

MESH, the opening between the threads of a net. (E.) Sometimes math. Surrey has meast as a verb. 'How smal a net may take and meask a hart of gentle kinde;' Description of the Fickle Affections, I. 44; in Tottel's Misc., ed. Arber, p. 7. M.E. maske; 'maske of nette, macula;' Prompt. Parv. - A.S. mas, a net (equivalent to mase, by the frequent interchange of x and se, as in ask = A. S. axian, aesian). We find 'max mine,' glossed by retia mea; Ælfric's Colloquy, in Thorpe's Analecta, p. 23, l. 5 (or in Wright's Vocab. i. 5, 1. 18). The very rare dimin. mæscre, a mesh, is glossed by Lat. macula in a gloss (Bosworth). + Du. mass, a mesh. net. + Icel. möskvi, a mesh. + Dan. maske. + Swed. maska. + G. masche. + W. masg, a mesh, net-work; masgl, a mesh. B. The orig. sense seems to have been 'a knot,' from the use of knots in netting; this sense appears in Lithuanian mazgas, a knot, magz:as, a knitting-needle, allied to the verb megsti (pres. t. mezgu), to knot, to weave nets; forms cited by Fick, iii. 236; Nesselmann, p. 387. Der. mesh, vb., as above MESMERISE, to induce an extraordinary state of the nervous system, in which the operator controls the action of the patient. (G. proper name.) Formed with verbal suffix -ise (= F. -iser), from Mesmer, the name of a German physician, of Mersburg, who first published his doctrines in 1766. See Haydn, Dict. of Dates. Der. mesmer-ist, mesmer-ism, mesmer-ic.

MEBS (1), a dish of meat, portion of food. (F., -L.) 'A mease of meat, ferculum;' Levins, 204. 36. 'A messe, or dish of meate borne to the table, ferculum;' Baret, Alvearie. And see Gen. xliii. 34. M. E. messe; 'Messe of mete, ferculum;' Prompt. Parv. [Cf. 34. M. E. messe; messe on meter, personal, more to Barbour's M. E. entremesse, a side dish, on which see my note to Barbour's M. E. entremesse, a side dish, on which source at table (the invari-Bruce, b. xvi. 1, 457.] = O. F. mes, a dish, course at table (the invariable form, Burguy). Cotgrave has: 'mes, a messe, or service of meat, a course of dishes at table.' Mod. F. mets (which also appears in Cotgrave), is a misspelt form due to a wish to point out more distinctly its connection with the verb mettre, of which the old pp. was & METAMORPHOSIS, change of form, transformation. (L., -mes; see Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, col. 11, l. 43. Cf. Ital. (Gk) Chaucer has Metamorphoseos, short for Metamorphoseos liber, messo, a course of dishes at table; also, a messenger (the former = Lat. missum, the latter = Lat. missus) .= O.F. mes (= Low Lat. missum), that which is set or placed, viz. on the table; pp. of mettre, to place. - Low Lat. mittere, to place; Lat. mittere, to send. See Message. ¶ Not to be derived from A.S. myse, a table, nor from Lat. mensa, nor from O. H. G. maz, meat; all of which have been (absurdly) suggested. Der. mess, sb., a number of persons who cat together, the orig. number being four; see Levins, and Trench, Select Glossary; also L. L. L. iv. 3. 207. Also mess, vb., to eat of a mess, associate at table; whence mess-mate.

MCESS (2), a mixture, disorder. (E., or Scand.) 'As pure a mess almost as it came in ;' Pope, Epilogue to Satires, Dial. ii. 166. A corruption of mesh, which is another form of mash; as pointed out by Wedgwood. 'Mescolare, to mixe, to mingle, . . to intermeddle, to mash, to meth, to mell;' Florio. 'Mescolanza, . . a medlie, a mesh, . . a mixture; ' id. It is, accordingly, a mere variant of Mash, q.v.

MESSAGE, a communication sent to another, an errand. (F., -L.) In early use. In Rob. of Glouc. p. 359, l. 24. - F. message, 'a message;' Cot. - Low Lat. missaticum, message. Extended from Lat. missus, pp. of mittere, to send; see Mission. Der. messenger, q.v. And see mess (1), mass (2). MESSEIN GER, the bearer of a message. (F., -L.)

The n is excrescent, as in scavenger for scavager, passenger for passager; so also messenger is for messager. M.E. messager, Chaucer, C. T. 5163, 5191, 5205, 5226; Ancren Riwle, p. 190, l. 20. Formed from mes-sage with suffix -er of the agent; see Mossage. ¶ We also find ¶ We also find M. E. message in the sense of 'messenger,' as in Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 454. This form answers to Low Lat. missaticus. [†] MESSIAH, the anointed one. (Heb.) In Dan. ix. 25.-Heb.

MESSUAGE, a dwelling-house with offices, &c. (F., -L.) 'Messuage (messuagium), a dwelling-house; but by that name may also pass a curtilage, a garden, an orchard, a dove-house, a shop, a mill, a cottage, a toft, as parcel of a message, &c.; Blount, Nomolexicon, ed. 1691. M. E. message, Chaucer, C. T. 3977.-O. F. message, a manor-house (Roquefort): cf. Low Lat. messagium, messagium, a manor-house (Ducange), closely allied to Low Lat. massagium, manswagium, a farm-house. B. Closely allied to (if not the same word as) O. F. masage, masaige (given by Roquefort s. v. mas), mais-sage, massaige (Burguy), a tenement. All these words are derivatives from O. F. mas (also mes, mez, msx, meix, metz), answering to E. manse. Cotgrave has: 'mas de terre, an oxe-gang, plow-land, or hide of land, containing about 20 acres, and having a house belonging to it.' Also: 'metz, a mesuage, tenement, or plowland, a Walloon word.'-Low Lat. masa, massa, mansa, a small farm with a house, a manse. - Lat. mansa, fem. of mansus, pp. of mansre, to remain, dwell. See Manse, Mansion. Thus messuage = mans-age.

META., prefix. (Gk.) From Gk. µerá, prep., among, with, after; frequently used as a prefix, when it commonly implies 'change. Cognate with Goth. mith, A.S. mid, G. mit, with. Der. met-al, meta-morphosis, meta-phor, meta-phrase, meta-physics, meta-thesis, metempsychosis, met-eor, meth-od, met-onymy.

METAL, a name given to certain solid opaque substances, as gold. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. metal, Rob. of Glouc. p. 28, 1. 16; also metel, id. p. 6, 1. 20. -O. F. metal, 'mettal, mettle;' Cot. - Lat. metallum, a mine, metal. - Gk. µérallor, a pit, cave, mine, mineral, metal. Cf. μεταλλάω, I search after, search carefully, explore; also μετέρχομαι, I come among, follow, go after, seek for. β. The prefix is certainly Gk. µer-, short for µerd, among, with, cognate with Goth. mith, A. S. mid, G. mit, with.  $\gamma$ . The base  $d\lambda$ - in  $d\lambda$ -haw is supposed to be from the same root as ip- in ip- $\chi o \mu a_i$ , viz.  $\sqrt{AR}$ , to go; cf. Skt. ri, to go, meet, attain, whence rickeha, archekha, to go (corresponding to Gk. Epxopal). See Curtius. Thus the orig. sense would seem to be ' a place for going about among,' a mine ; later, a mineral. Dor. metall-ic, Milton, P. L. i. 673, immediately from Lat. metallicus; metalli-fer-ous, from metalli- = metallo-, crude form of metallum, and -fer, producing, from ferre, to bear; also metallcid, i.e. metal-like, from Gk. μέταλλο-, crude form of μέταλλον, and eldoe, form; also metallurgy, q. v. Doublet, metile. METALLURGY, a working in metals. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Phillips, World of Words, ed. 1706.-O. F. metallurgie, 'a search for metall in the bowels of the earth,' Cot. [But this would appear to be but a partial explanation.] - Low Lat. metallurgia\*, not recorded, but such a form must have existed as a transcription from the Gk. - Gk. µeralloupyde, adj., working in metals, mining; μεταλλουργείν, to smelt ore or work metals. - Gk. μέταλλο-, crude form of µérallor, a metal; and foror, work, cognate with E. work. See Motal and Work.  $\P$  The vowel u = Gk, ov, resulting from v and  $\epsilon$ . Der. metallurg-ic-al, metallurg-ist.

Gk) Chaucer has Metamorphoseos, short for Metamorphoseos liber, book of metamorphosis, C. T. 4513. He alludes to the celebrated Metamorphoseon Libri, books of metamorphoses, by Ovid; and there is no doubt that the word became widely familiar because Ovid used it. - Lat. metamorphosis (gen. sing. metamorphosis or metamorphoseos, the latter being the Gk. form; gen. pl. metamorphoseon), a transformation. - Gk. µeraµópφωσιs, a transformation. - Gk. µera μορφόσμαι, I am transformed. - Gk. μετά, which in comp. has the sense of 'change;' and μορφόω, I form, from μορφή, form. B. The etymology of µopph is uncertain; but it is probably to be connected with µ*aparten*, to grasp, and with Skt. mrig. to touch, to stroke; the orig. sense being 'a moulded shape.' See Curtius. Der. metamorphose, Two Gent. i. I. 66, ii. I. 32, a verb coined from the sb. above ; also used by Gascoigne, Complaint of Philomene, l. 18 from end. Also metamorph-ic, a geological term, likewise a coined word.

METAPHOR, a transference in the meaning of words. (F., -L.,-Gk.) 'And make therof a metathore; 'Gascoigne, Complaint of Philomene (near the end); ed. Arber, p. 116. - F. metaphore, 'a metaphor;' Cot. - Lat. metaphora. - Gk. μεταφορά, a transferring of a word from its proper signification to another. - Gk. µeraφépew, to transfer. - Gk. µerá, which in comp. often gives the sense of 'change ;' and offew, to bear, carry, cognate with E. bear. See Mota- and Bear. Der. metaphor-ic, metaphor-ie-al, metaphor-ical-ly.

METAPHRASE, METAPHRASIS, a literal translation. (Gk.) 'Metaphrasis, a bare translation out of one language into another;' Phillips, World of Words, ed. 1706. - Gk. µeráopagis, a paraphrasing. – Gk. μεταφράζειν, to paraphrase, translate, lit. to change the style of phrase. – Gk. μετά, signifying 'change :' and opageur, to speak. See Mota- and Phrase. Dor. metat hrast =

Gk. μεταφράστηε, a translator; metaphrast-ie. METAPHYSICS, the science of mind. (L.,-Gk.) Formerly called metaphysic; thus Tyndall speaks of 'textes of logike, ... of metaphysishe ;' Works, p. 104, l. 1. - Lat. metaphysicus, metaphysical ; whence metaphysica, sb. pl, metaphysics. - Gk. µerà rà quousa, after metaphysike ;' physics; because the study was supposed filly to follow the study of physics or natural science. The name is due to editors of Aristotle. See Physics. Der. metaphysic-al, Levins; metaphysic-al-ly, metaphysic-i-an.

METATHESIS, transposition of the letters of a word. (L., -Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. metathesis. - Gk. µeráberis, transposition. - Gk. µerá, signifying 'change ;' and béris, a Setting, place. See Meta- and Thenis. METE, to measure. (E.) M. E. meten, P. Plowman, B. i. 175.

A. S. metan, gemetan, to measure ; Grein, ii. 234.+Du. meten.+Icel. meta, to tax, value. + Swed. mäta, to measure. + Goth. mitan. + G. messen. Cf. Gk.  $\mu$ tõeuv, to rule; Lat. modus, measure, moderation.  $\beta$ . All from Teut. base MAT, an extension from  $\sqrt{MA}$ , to measure; cf. Skt. má, to measure, Gk. µé-rpor, a measure; Lat. me-tiri, to measure. Der. mete-yard, Levit. xix. 35, from A.S. met-geard, a measuring-rod, Wright's Vocab. p. 38, l. 5 (see Yard). From the same root are meet(1), measure, mensuration, mature, manual, material, moral, mode, modest, month, moon, metre, &c. Also baro-meter, thermo-

METEMPSYCHOSIS, the transmigration of souls. (Gk.) METEMPSYCHOSIS, the transmigration of souls. (Gk.) Metempsychosis, a passing of the soul from one body to another; Blonnt's Gloss, ed. 1674. Spelt metempsichosis in Herbert's Travels, defined and the source of the ed. 1665, p. 53. - Gk. μετεμβύχωσιε, a transferring of the soul. - Gk. μετεμψυχών, I make the soul pass from one body to another. - Gk.  $\mu er-$ , for  $\mu erd$ , denoting 'change; ' $e\mu$ -, put for er, in, into, before the  $\psi$  following;  $\psi v \chi$ , for  $\psi v \chi \gamma$ , the soul; with causal suffix - $\infty$ . See Psychology.

METEOR, an apparition in the sky. (F.,-Gk.) Frequent in Shak.; see Rich. II, ii. 4. 9, &c. - O. F. melsore, 'a meteor; 'Cot. - Gk. mereore, adj., raised up above the earth, soaring in air; hence μετέωρον, a meteor. - Gk. μετ., for μετά, among; and έώνα, col-lateral form of alώρα, anything suspended, from delpeir, to lift, raise B. 'Mertapos (Ionic uer-hop-os) points to delpas, stem df ep. which has prob. arisen from  $d-\sigma f \epsilon \rho$  with a prothetic d, whilst its various ramifications may all be well developed from the idea of swinging or making to swing (dop, dopthp, alwpa, dptaw, dptary); Curtius, i. 442. That is, despear is from & SWAR, to swing, hover, appearing in Lithuan. sversi, to balance. svarsis, the beam of a balance (Nesselmann). Der. meteor-ic; meteoro-lagy, from λόγοs, a discourse, λέγειν, to speak; meteoro-logi-c-al, meteoro-log-ist. METHEGLIN, mead. (W.) In Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 22; L. L. V. 2. 233. - W. meddyglyn, mead; lit. meadliquor. - W. medd, mead; and llyn, liquor (Spurrell, p. 189). See Mead.

METHINKS, it seems to me. (E.). M. E. me thinkes, Will. of Palerne, 430 ; also me thinketh, id. 839. - A. S. me byncet, it seems to $ = F. muer, and me, Grein, ii. 613. Here me is the dat. case of the 1st pers. pronoun; and bynced is from the impersonal verb byncan, to seem, quite distinct from pencan, to think (Grein, ii. 579). β. Cognate with A.S. pyncan are O. Sax. thuncian, Icel. pykkja (= pynkja), Goth. thugkjan (=thumkjan), G. dünken, O. H. G. dunchan, to seem. These answer to a Teut. base THONKYA (Fick, iii. 128), which is a secondary verb formed from the base THANK, to think ; see Think.

METHOD, arrangement, system, orderly procedure, way. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) In Shak. Meas. for Meas. iii. 2. 52. - O. F. methode, 'a method, a short, ready, and orderly course for the teaching, learning, or doing of a thing ;' Cot. - Lat. methodus, methodos. - Gk. µ60000s, an enquiry into, method, system. - Gk. µeo-, for µerá, after ; and  $\delta\delta\delta s$ , a way; the lit. sense being 'a way after,' or 'a following after.'  $\beta$ . The Gk.  $\delta\delta\delta s$  is from  $\checkmark$  SAD, to go; cf. Skt. sddaya (with a), to approach (Benfey, p. 999); Russ. chodite, to go, walk, march, chod', a going, course. Dor. method-ic-al, method-ic, method-ist (Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, and see Trench, Select Glossary), methodise. Method-ism.

METONYMY, a rhetorical figure. (L.,-Gk.) 'I understand your metonýmy;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3. l. 588. 'Metonymie, a putting one name for another; a figure, when the cause is put for the effect, or contrarily; ' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. metonymia. -Gk. μετωνυμία, a change of names, the use of one word for an-other. - Gk. μετά implying 'change;' and δνομα, a name, cognate with E. name; see Name. The vowel ω results from the coalescence of a and o. Der. metonym-ic-al, metonym-ic-al-ly.

METRE, METER, poetical arrangement of syllables, rhythm, verse. (F., = L., = Gk.) M. E. metre, Chaucer, C. T. 13987. = O. F. metre, 'meeter;' Cot. = Lat. metrum. = Gk.  $\mu\epsilon\gamma\rho\sigma\nu$ , that by which anything is measured, a rule, metre.  $\beta$ . From base  $\mu\epsilon$ -, with suffix -roor answering to Alyan -tar, signifying the agent; see Schleicher, Compendium, § 225. –  $\checkmark$  MA, to measure; cf. Skt. má, to measure. See Moto. ¶ The word meter occurs in A. S. (see Bosworth), from Lat. metrum ; but Chaucer took it from the French. Der. metric-al (Skelton, A Replycacion, 338), metr-ic-al-ly; dia-meter. Also metro-nome, a musical time-measurer, from µtrpo-, for µtrpor, and rópos, distribution, from vépeer, to distribute.

METROPOLIS, a mother city. (L.,-Gk.) Properly applied to the chief cathedral city; thus Canterbury is the metropolis of England, but London is not, except in modern popular usage. In K. John. v. 2. 72; and Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. The adj. metro-K. John. v. 2. 72; and Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. politan (= Lat. metropolitanus) was in much earlier use, having a purely ecclesiastical sense. Bysshopes metropolitanes' = metropolitan bishops; Sir T. More, Works, p. 1091 h. (Here Sir T. More uses the word as a F. adj., with added s, and following its sb.) - Lat. metropolis. - Gk. μητρόπολιs, a mother-state; ecclesiastically, the city of a primate. - Gk. μήτρο, used as crude form from μήτηρ, a mother, cognate with E. Mother; and wóλis, a city, for which see Police. Der. metropolit-an, from Lat. metropolitanus (cf. Gk. woltr-ne, a citizen). [+]

METTLE, spirit, ardour. (F., -L., -Gk.) Absolutely the same word as metal, though the difference in sense is now indicated by a difference in the spelling. Common in Shak.; see K. John, ii. 401, Jul. Cæsar, i. 1. 66, i. 2. 313, ii. 1. 134, iv. 2. 24, &c. 'No dis-tinction is made in old editions between the two words, either in spelling or in use;' Schmidt. The allusion is to the temper of the metal of a sword-blade. See Motal. Der. mettl-ed; mettle-some (with E. suffix).

MICA, a glittering mineral. (L.) 'Mica, a crum, or little quan-tity of anything that breaks off; also glimmer, or cat-silver, a metallick body like silver, which shines in marble and other stones, but cannot be separated from them ; ' Phillips, ed. 1706. Cf. mod. F. and Span. mica, mica. Apparently from Lat. mica, a crumb (see Microcosm); but it seems to have been applied to the mineral from a notion that this word was related to Lat. micare, to shine, glimmer; which is not the case. See Microscope. Der. mic-ac--ous, a coined adj.

MICH, to skulk, hide, play truant. (F.) M. E. michen, Prompt. Parv. Prov. E. mooch, mouch. The sb. micher occurs in the Rom. of the Rose, 6543 (or 6541); and, much earlier, spelt muchare, in Ancren Riwle, p. 150, last line. - O. F. mucer, mucier (Burguy), later musser, 'to hide, conceal, . lurke, skowke, or squat in a corner;' Cot. Origin unknown. Der. mich-er, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 450, and in Ancren Riwle (as above); mich-ing, Hamlet, iii. 2. 146; also cur-mudgeon, q. v. MICHAELMAS, the feast of St. Michael. (Hybrid; F., - Heb.

and L.) M. E. michelmesse, mychelmesse, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 240. 1. Michel is from F. Michel, the F. form of Heb. Mithaiel, a proper name, signifying 'who is like unto God !' from Heb. mi. who ! he, like, El, God. 2. The suffix -mas, M. E. messe, A. S. mæsse, is from Lat. missa, a mass; see Mass (2).

MICKLE, great. (E.) M.E. mikel, mukel, mickel, muckel, mockel; used as adv. in Chaucer, C. T. 260. And see Havelok, 1023; Ormulum, 788; &c. - A. S. mycel, micel; Grein, ii. 242. + Icel. mibill, mykill. + Goth. mikils. + M. H. G. michel, O. H. G. mikil. + Gk. µsydaos, great. See Much. The suffix -le answers to Aryan -re; Schleicher, Compend. § 220. MICROCOSM, a little world. (F., -L., -Gk.)

This term, meaning 'a little universe,' was applied in old times to man, who was regarded as a model or epitome of the universe. In Minshen, ed. 1627. 'This word is sometimes applied to man, as being a compendium of all other creatures, his body heing compared to the baser part of the world, and his soul to the blessed angels;' Blount, ed. 1674. Also in Shak. Cor. ii. 1. 68 .- F. microcosme, 'a little world ; Cot. - Lat. microcosmus. - Gk. µunpónoguos, a little world. - Gk. μικρο-, crude form of μικρόε, fuller form σμικρόε, small, little ; and rúe pos, a world (see Cosmetic).

MICROSCOPE, an instrument for viewing small objects. (Gk.) In Milton, P. R. iv. 57. Coined from Gk. μκρό-, crude form of μικρόs, small; and σκοπ-είν, to behold, see. Cf. Gk. inf-σκοποι, an overseer, bishop. See Microcosm and Scope. Der. microscopie, microscop-ic-al. (So also micro-meter, an instrument for measuring small distances; see Motro.)

MID, middle. (E.) M. E. mid, midde; only used in compounds and phrases; see Stratmann. - A. S. mid, midd, adj., middle; Grein, ii. 248. + Du. mid-, used in composition, as mid-dag, mid-day. + Icel. mior, adj + Swed. and Dan. mid-, in composition. + Goth. midja. + O. H. G. mitti, adj. + Lat. medius, adj. + Gk. µeroe, Æolic  $\mu \delta \sigma \sigma \sigma \delta (-\mu \delta \theta, \sigma \sigma)$ . + Skt. maddaya, adj., middle. an adjectival base MADHYA, middle; root unknown. The Teutonic form of the base is MEDYA; Fick, iii. 240. Der. amid, q.v., whence the use of mid (for 'mid) as a preposition, like Russ. mejdu, mej', amid; a-mid->t, q.v. Also mid-day, A.S. mid-dag, John, iv. 6; midland, 2 Macc. viii. 35 (A. V.); mid-night, A. S. mid-niht, Wright's Vocab. i. 53, l. 5; mid-rib, a modern botanical term, not in Todd's Johnson; mid-riff, q.v.; mid-ship, short for amid-ship, first appearing in the term midship-beam, Phillips, World of Words, ed. 1700; midhawks mue; and a mue, or coope wherein fowle is fattened; Cot. + ship-man; mid-summer, A.S. midsumor, A.S. Chron., an. 1131; midway, M. E. midwei, Ancren Riwle, p. 412. Also midd-le, q.v.; mid-:t, \$\$ (see below). - F. mine, 'the countenance, look, cheer;' Cot. q. v. Also (from Lat. medi-us) medi-ate, med-ullar, &c.

MIDDLE, adj., intervening, intermediate, men-uttar, ac. MIDLE, adj. 'In the myddel place;' Mandeville's Travels, p. 2 (in Spec. of English, p. 165, l. 34). Also middel, sb. 'Aboute hire middel;' Gower, C.A. ii. 47, l. 12. – A.S. middel, sb., Grein, ii. 249. B. Formed with mer al (due to Text series to Assure and Schlicker Comp with suffix -il (due to Teut. suffix -ia, Aryan -ra, Schleicher, Com-pend. § 220) from A. S. mid, adj.; see Mid. (Compare mick-le, M. E. muck-el, with E. much). + Du. middel, adj., adv., and sb. + G. mittel, sb., means; O. H. G. mittil, adj., middle. Cf. Icel. medal. prep. among; milli (for mid-li), prep. between; Dan. mellem, Swed. mellan, prep., between. Der. middle-man, given in Phillips, ed. 1706, as a military term, signifying 'he that stands middlemost in a file; middl-ing, used by L'Estrange and Dryden (Johnson), not an early word; middle-most, Ezek. xlii. 5 (in the Bible of 1551 and in the A. V.), an ill-coined superlative on the model of fore-most and aftermost.

MIDGE, a small fly or gnat. (E.) M. E. migge, mygge. 'Hec sicoma, a myge' [better mygge]; Wright's Vocab. i. 223, note 4.-A. S. micge, Alfric's Gloss., Nom. Insectorum; in Wright's Vocab. i. 24; see 'Culix, myge' [misprint for mycg]; id. i. 281, col. 1. Here micge is put for mycge, where y is due to an earlier u, by the usual wowel-change. + Du. mug, a gnat. + Low. G. mugge; Bremen Wörterbuch. + Swed. mygg. + Dan. myg. + Icel. my, + G. mücke, O. H. G. muccá, muggá. β. All from a Teutonic type MUGYA (Fick, iii. 241); perhaps the orig, sense was 'buzzer,' from the noise made by the insect's wings. Cf. Lat. mug-ire, Skt. muj, to sound, make a low sound, low, Gk. µúseiv, to mutter, E. moo, mew. ¶ It cannot well be connected with Lat. musca, Russ. mukha, a fly, which (together with Gk. µvîa) Curtius refers to Skt. makshas, a fly; for this word see Mosquito. Der. mug-wort, q. v.

MIDRIFF, the diaphragm, separating the heart from the stomach, &c. (E.) M.E. midrif, mydryf, Prompt. Parv. – A.S. midrif. 'Disseptum, midrif; Ex:a, midrif;' Wright's Vocab. i. 44, col. a. (Here midrif stands for an older midrif,) - A. S. mid, middle; and krif, the belly, the womb, Grein, ii. 104. Cf. Du. rif, in the sense of 'carcase;' O. H. G. kref, the body, O. Fries. rif, ref, the belly, midref, the midriff. ¶ Note also O. Fries. midrithere, midriff, allied to A. S. Areder, the breast.

MIDST, the middle. (E.) 'In the midst,' Com. Errors, i. 1. 104; and 11 other times in Shakespeare. 'In middest of his race; Spenser, F. Q. vi. 3. 25. In the midst is from this older phrase in middlest. Moreover, the t is excrescent, as in whils-t, amongs-t; and in middest answers to M. E. in middes, as in 'in middes the se' = in the middes answers to M. L. in middes, as in 'in middes the se - in the mids of the sea, Pricke of Conscience, l. 2038. A parallel phrase is amiddes, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 82. B. Here the s gives the phrase an adverbial force, and is due to the habit of forming adverbs from the A. S. gen. case in -es. The older form is without the s, as in a middes, Layamon, 4836, also spelt a midden, id. 8154. Still earlier, we have on midden, Luke, xxii. 36, in the latest version of the A.S. Gospels, where the earlier version has on mydlene. y. The M.E. form midde answers to A.S. middan, dat, case of the sb. midde. formed from the adj. mid, middle. See Mid; and see Amidst.

MIDWIFE, a woman who assists another in childbirth. (E.) M. E. midwif, P. Plowman's Crede, 1. 78; spelt mydwyf, Myrc's Duties of Parish Priest, ed. Peacock, 1. 98; mydewyf, id. 1. 87; mydwijf, Wyclif. Gen. xxxviii. 27 (later version); medewife, id. (earlier version). The false spelling medewife (not common) is due to confusion with mede, i. e. meed, reward; this has misled Verstegan and others as to the etymology. B. The prefix mid- is certainly nothing but the once common A. S. and M. E. mid, prep., together with; it occurs again as a part of the M. E. midpolinge, compassion (lit. suffering with), Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 157. There are several such compounds in A. S.; as mid-wyrcan, to work with, Mk. xvi. 20, mid-wyrhia, a worker together with, co-adjutor, A.S. Chron. an. 945; see Bosworth. This A. S. mid is cognate with Du. mede, with (whence medebroeder, a companion, lit. mid-brother, medegenoot, a partner, medehelpen, to assist); also with G. mit (whence G. mit-bruder, a comrade, mithelfer, a helper, mitmachen, to take a part in, &c.); also with Gk. µετά, with (whence µεταλαµβάνειν, to participate). The sense of mid in this compound is clearly 'helping with,' pare). The sense of main this compound is clearly inciping with, or 'assisting.' The Span. comadre, a midwife, lit. co-mother, ex-presses the same idea. Y. The M. E. wif means no more than 'woman;' see Wife, Woman. And see Mota-. Der. midwif-er-y, spelt midwifry in Bp. Hall, Sat. i. I. 25, a clumsy compound, with F. suffix -ery (= F. -erie).

MIEN, look, bearing, demeanour. (F.,-Ital.,-L.) Spelt meen in Blouri's Gloss., ed. 1674. He has: 'Meen (F. mine), the counte-nance, figure, gesture, or posture of the face.' Perhaps means in Spenser, F. Q. vi. 7. 39, is the same word. The spellings meen,

F. word is not an old one in the language, not being found earlier than the 15th century. Borrowed from Ital. mina, with same sense, a word omitted in Meadows' Dict., but cited by Littré, Scheler, and Brachet. There is some doubt about the etymology, but the F. spellings meen, meane clearly point to the O. Ital mena, 'behauiour, fashion, carriage of a man,' Florio; a word which the etymologists appear to have overlooked. It is clear that mena, mina, are dia. lectal variations of one and the same word. This appears still more clearly from the consideration that mena, conduct, is a sb. due to the Ital. menare, 'to lead, bring, conduct,' Florio; whilst mina is due to the equivalent Low Lat. minare, to lead (Ducange); whence F. mener, which is the verb to which F. mine really belongs. v. From Lat. minare, to threaten; used in Low Lat. in the peculiar sense 'to drive flocks, conduct.' See Monaco, Mino (2). Der de-mean. [*] MIGHT (1), power, strength. (E) M. E. might, mist; Chaucer, C. T. 5580. - A. S. miht, meht, makt, meakt; Grein, ii. 235. + Du. mage. + Icel. mditr (for mahr). + Dan. and Swed. mage. + Got. make. + G. mach, O.H.G. mahr. B. All from Teut. type MAHTI, might (Fick, iii. 227); from MAG, to be able; see May (1). Cf. Russ. moche, might, from moche, to be able. Der. might-y, A.S. mihtig, mechtig, Grein, ii. 237; might-i-ly, might-i-ness. MIGHT (2), was able. (E.) A.S. mechtie, mikte, pt. t. of mugan, to be able; Grein, ii. 267. See May (1). MIGNONETTE, an annual plant. (F., = G.) Modern. Added by Todd to Johnson - F. mignonette, dimin. of mignon, a darling. See Minion.

MIGRATE, to remove from one country to another. (L.) The sb. migration is in Cotgrave, and in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.-Lat. migratus, pp. of migrare, to wander; connected with meare, to go. Der. migration, from F. migration, 'a migration' (Cot.), from Lat.

MILCH, milk-giving. (Scand.) In Gen. xxxii. 15. 'A hundred milch kine;' Tam. Shrew, ii. 1. 359. Merely a weakened form of Milk, q. v. 'Mylche, or mylke of a cowe, lac;' Prompt. Parv. p. 337. 'Mylch cowe, vacca mulsaria;' id. This use of milch as 337. Mylch couve, vacca mulsaria; id. ¶ This use of milch as an adj. is Scandinavian. Cf. Icel. mjólk, milk; milkr, mjúlkr, adj., milk-giving; milk ar, a milch ewe. So G. milk, adj., milch. MILD, gentle, kind, soft. (F.) M. E. mild, milde; Rob of Glouc. p. 72, 1. 8. – A. S. milde, Grein, ii. 250. + Du. mild. + Icel. mild. + Dan. and Swed. mild. + G. mild, O. H. G. milti. + Goth. milds, only in comp. un-milds, without natural affection, 2 Tim. iii. β. All from a Teut. type MILDA, mild; Fick, iii. 235. To be divided as mil-da; allied to Lithuan. melas, dear, myleti, to love (Schleicher); Russ. miluii, amiable, kind, miloste, kindness, miloserduii, gracious ( = A.S. mild-keort, mild-hearted, pitiful). Also to Gk. μείλ-ιχοs, mild, μειλ-ίχιοs, mild, soft. And further, to Skt. mrilámi, I am gracious, I rejoice, mrilikam, grace, pity; the primitive form being MARL, to be mild; Curtius, i. 410. Der. mild-ly, mild-us.

And see merry. MILDEW, a kind of blight. (E.) M. E. meldew, Wyclif, Gen. xli. 6. – A. S. melededw, honey-dew, Grein, ii. 230; mildedw, Lye. C. O. H. G. mildew, cited by Grein. β. The sense is β. The sense is

Cf. O. H. O. multion, mildew, cited by Orem. p. Lue ense is prob. 'honey-dew,' from the sticky honey-like appearance of some kinds of blight, as, e.g. on lime-trees. Cf. Goth. miliths, honey; allied to Lat. mel, Gk.  $\mu i \lambda$ , honey; Irish mil, honey, mildewg, mildew. See Mellifluous and Dew. ¶ The mod. G. word is mehilihaw, i.e. meal-dew; but this is probably an altered form, as it does not agree with the O. H. G. militow; the O. H. G. for meal' being melo. [†] MILE, a measure of distance, 1760 yards. (L.) M. E. mile, pl. mile, Chaucer, C. T. 16023. - A. S. mil, a mile; fcm. sb., with pl. mila, mile; Grein, ii. 250. Formed from Lat. pl. milia, more commonly millia, used in the sense of a Roman mile; the proper sense is 'thousands.' The older name for the Roman mile was mille passus, or mille passnum, a thousand paces. Y. Hence also G. meile, O. H. G. mila, a mile; Du. mijl, a mile; &c. ¶ The M. E. unchanged pl. mile explains such a phrase as ' a ten-mile stage.' Der. mile-age (with F. suffix); mile stone. And see millenary, milfoil, million.

MILFOIL, the name of a plant. (F., -L.) In a Vocabulary of Plant-names, said to be of the thirteenth century, we find 'Mills-folium, milfoil ;' Wright's Vocab. i. 139. The sense is 'thousandleaf,' from the minute and numerous sections into which the plant is divided. - F. mille, a thousand; and O. F. fuil, foil, mod. F. feuille, a leaf. - Lat. mille, a thousand; and folium, a leaf. See Foil.

MILLITATE, to contend, fight, be opposed to. (L.) Modern. Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. [But militant, chiefly used of 'the church militant, occurs in Barnes, Works, p. 253, col. 2.] - Lat. greane, are remarkable, and indicate confusion with O. Ital. mena militatus, pp. of militare, to serve as a soldier, fight. - Lat. milit-, stem of miles, a soldier. Root uncertain. Der. militant, from Lat.<sup>4</sup> Chaucer, C. T. 7267. - F. million, 'a million; 'Cot. - Low Lat. militant-, stem of pres. pt. of militare. From Lat. milit- we have also milit-ar-y, All's Well, i. 1. 132; milit-ar-ist, a coined word, All's tended from Lat. mille, a thousand. See Mile. Der. million-th;

Well, iv. 3. 161. Also militia, q. v. MILLITIA, a body of soldiers for home service. (L.) 'Except his militia of natives be of good and valiant soldiers; 'Bacon, Essay 29, Of Greatness of Kingdoms. - Lat. militia, (1) warfare, (2) troops, army. - Lat. milit-, base of miles, a soldier. See Militate. Dor. militia-man.

MILK. a white fluid secreted by female mammals for feeding their young. (E.) M. E. milk, Chaucer, C. T. 360. - A. S. mile * (not found), parallel to meole, sometimes meolue; Grein, ii. 240.+Du. melk. + Icel. mjúlk. + Dan. melk. + Swed. mjölk. + Goth. miluks, with inserted unoriginal u, as in A. S. meolue. + G. mulch. β. All from a Teut. type MELKI, Fick, iii. 236; derived from MALK, the base of the strong verb which is preserved only in the G. melken (pt. t. molk, pp. gemolken), O. H. G. melckan, to milk; orig. 'to stroke,' from the action employed in milking a cow. y. This Teut. base MALK answers to European MALG, Aryan MARG, to stroke, milk, appearing in Lithuan. milszti, to stroke, milk (Nesselmann), Gk. dμέλγευ, to milk, Lat. mulgere, to milk. The older sense appears in Skt. mrij, marj, to wipe, rub, stroke, sweep, answering to Aryan MARG, to rub, wipe. 8. This root is an extension of MAR, to grind, pound, rub; see Mar. Der. milk, vb., A.S. moleian, Beda, ed. Wheelock, b. v. c. 22, p. 461, 1. 13, shewing that the E. verb is derived from the sb., instead of the contrary, as in German; milk-er, milk-y; milk-maid, milk-pail, milk-tree; milk-sop, q. v.; milek, q. v. MILKSOP, an effeminate man. (E.) 'Alas, quoth she, that euer I was yshape To wedde a milksoppe, or a coward ape ;' Chaucer, C. T. 13916. The lit. sense is 'bread soaked in milk ;' hence, a soft, effeminate man. From M. E. milk, milk; and soppe, a sop, bread soaked in milk. See Milk and Sop.

MILL, a machine for grinding corn, &c. (L.) M. E. melle (riming with telle); Chaucer, C. T. 3921. Also mulle, in comp. windmulle, a windmill, Rob. of Glouc. p. 547, l. 22. Mill is a corruption, for ease of pronunciation, of mile, still in use provincially; cf. the name Milner, equivalent to the commoner Miller. Similarly, M. E. mulle is for M.E. mulne, which occurs in Sir Gawain, ed. Morris, 2203. In P. Plowman, A. ii. 80, we have as various readings the forms muln-In P. Plowman, A. 11. 80, we have as various reasongs the forms muta-ere, mylnere, myllere, mellere, a miller, corresponding respectively to mulne, mylne, mylle, melle, a mill. - A. S. myln, a mill; 'Molendenum, myln;' Wright's Vocab. i. 83, col. 1, 1. 7. Also spelt mylen, Grein, ii. 270. Not an E. word, but borrowed from Lat. molina, a mill; whence also Icel. mylna, a mill. Extended from Lat. mola, a mill, lit. 'that which grinds;' cf. molere, to grind. -  $\checkmark$  MAR, to grind, rub; whence also Lithuan. malit, Goth. malan, G. maklen, to grind, rub; whence also Lithuan. malit, goth. malan, G. maklen, to grind, Der. mill-cog, mill-dam, mill-race, mill-stone, mill-wright, mill-wheel. Also mill-er, mill-er's-thumb (a fish).

MILLENNIUM, a thousand years. (L.) In Johnson's Dict. -Lat. millennium, a period of a thousand years. - Lat. mille, a thousand; and annual, a year; see Annual. The same change of vowel occurs in bi-ennial, tri-ennial, &c. Dor. millenni-al. Gr We also find millenary, Bp. Taylor, Sermons, vol. ii. ser. 2 (R.) This is from Lat. millenarius, belonging to a thousand, a derivative of pl. adj. milleni, extended from mille, a thousand.

MILLIET, the name of a plant. (F., -L.) In Holland, tr. of Pliny, bk. xviii. c. 7. -F. millet, 'millet, mill; 'Cot. Dimin. of F. mil, 'mill, millet; 'Cot. - Lat. milium, millet; whence also A.S. mil, millet (Bosworth).+Gk. μελίνη, millet. Root uncertain. Der. mili-ar-y, directly from Lat. milium.

MILLINER, one who makes bonnets, &c. (Ital.) In Shak. Wint. Ta. iv. 4. 192. 'A millamer's wife ;' Ben Jonson, Every Man (ed. Wheatley), i. 3. 120; see the note. A milliner or millaner was formerly of the male sex. Spelt millener in Phillips ; millenier in Minsheu. Origin somewhat uncertain; but probably a corruption of Milaner, a dealer in wares from Milan, in Italy. Milan steel was in good repute at an early period; we find 'And a Millaine knife fast by my knee' in the Percy Folio MS., ed. Hales and Furnivall, i. 68; where a note says : 'The dealers in miscellaneous articles were also called milliners, from their importing Milan goods for sale, such as brooches, aiglets, spurs, glasses, &c.; Saunders's Chaucer, p. 241.' We must also remember that the old sense of milliner was a haberdasher, or seller of small wares; see Minsheu, ed. 1627, whose suggestion that milliner is derived from Lat. mille (a thousand) is, probably, to be rejected, though it shews that their wares were of a very miscellaneous character, and that they had 'a thousand small wares to sell.' ¶ We also have the term mantua-maker, as if from the Italian town of Mantua, but this appears to be a corruption of Ital. manto. Der. milliner-y. [†] million-aire, from F. millionnaire.

. MILLION, a thousand thousand. (F., -L.) M. E. milliown;

MILLT (1), the spleen. (E.) M. E. mille, O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 178, 1. 171. - A. S. mille; 'Splen, mille;' Wright's Vocab. i. 45, col. 1.+ Du. milt, the spleen. + Icel. milti, the spleen. + Dan. milt, the spleen. + Swed. mjälte, the spleen. + G. milz, milt.  $\beta$ . The Teut. type is MELTYA (Fick, iii. 236); from the verb to melt, in the sense 'to digest;' cf. Icel. melta, (1) to malt for brewing, (2) to digest ; see Molt. MILLT (2), soft roe of fishes. (Scand.) In Walton's Angler ; see Todd. In this sense, it must be regarded as a mere corruption of milk. This use of the word is Scandinavian. Cf. Swed. mjölk, milk : mjölke, milt of fishes ; mjölkfisk, a milter, lit. milk-fish ; Dan. fishemelk, soft roe, lit. fish-milk. So also G. milch, (1) milk, (2) milt of fishes. Der. milt, vb., milt-er.

MIMIC, imitative, apt in imitating. (L., -Gk.) 'Mimic Fancy;' Milton, P. L. v. 110. The sb. mimick occurs in Milton, Samson. 1325; and once in Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 19, spelt mimmick in the folios. - Lat. mimicus, farcical. - Gk. µµnos, imitative, belonging to B. The or like a mime. - Gk. µîµos, an imitator, actor, mime. form  $\mu \hat{\mu} \mu \sigma$  is a reduplicated one, from a repetition of  $\checkmark$  MA, to measure ; cf. the forms mimá, mimí, cited under Skt. má, to measure ; Benfey, p. 694. The sense is one who measures or compares himself with another, an imitator. Der. mimic. sb., mimic, vb., mimic-ry. We sometimes find mime, directly from Gk. µiµos; also mim-er-ic, from Gk. μιμητικόs, imitative, from μιμη-τήs, an imitator.

MINARET, a turret on a mosque. (Span., - Arab.) Added by Todd to Johnson; it occurs in Swinburne's Travels through Spain; letter 44. - Span. minarete, a high slender turret. - Arab. mandrat, a candle-stick, lamp, light-house, a turret on a mosque; Rich. Dict p. 1496. - Arab. manár, the same, id.; connected with nár, fire, p.

1548. + Heb. manoraik, a candle-stick; from núr, to shine. MINCE, to chop small. (E.?) M.E. mineen; the pp. mineid occurs in the Liber Cure Cocorum, ed. Morris, 18 (Stratmann). β. The word appears to be the same as F. mineer, it to mince, to shred;' Cot. But the F. word was, probably, borrowed from a Teutonic source cognate with English, since Diez connects F. minee, small, with O. H. G. minst, minni, smallest, least. Y. It is better to derive E. mince from A. S. minsian; the effect of added s is well seen in E. clean-se = to make clean. Cf. Swed. minska, Dan. mindske, to lessen. 8. The only difficulty is that the A.S. minsian (rather a rare word) appears only in an intransitive sense, viz. to become small, to fail. It only occurs twice : werigra white minsode' - the comeliness of the accursed ones failed; Daniel, 268, ed. Grein; and again, 'swide ne miniade '= it did not greatly fail; Reinlied, 29 (in a very obscure passage). a very obscure passage). a very obscure passage). but it may fairly be urged that to use minian in an active sense, 'to make small,' would be quite proper; cf. A. S. wansian, to make small, diminish, cause to wane; A.S. Chronicle, an. 656, ed. Thorpe, p. 53, note, l. 9. So also clean-se, A.S. cleansian, to make clean. (. Formed, with suffix -s. implying 'to make,' from the adj. min, small, Grein, ii. 252. Cf. Du. min, less; Lat. min-or, less; see Minish. Der. mine-ing = taking small steps, Isa. iii. 16; mince-pie, formerly minced-pie, Spectator, no. 629; mince-meat, formerly minced-meat.

MIND, the understanding, intellect, memory. (E.) M.E. mind. mynd, often in the sense of memory; Chancer, C. T. 1908, 4972.-A. S. gemynd, memory, mind, thought (where the prefixed ge- makes no difference); Grein, ii. 432. Formed (with the usual vowel change of n to y) from A.S. munan, to think, gemunan, to remember; id. i. 431; ii. 268. + Icel. minni (for mindi), memory; from muna, to remember. + Dan. minde, memory. + Goth. gamunds, remembrance, gaminthi, remembrance; from gamunan, to remember. + Lat. mens (stem menti-), mind; connected with memini, I remember. + Lithuan. mintis in comp. isz-mintis, intelligence; from mineti, to think (Nesselmann, p. 381). + Russ. pa-miate, memory; po-maite, to remember. Cf. also Gk.  $\mu\eta\gamma\nu$ e, wisdom,  $\mu\ell\nu\sigma$ e, the mind; Skt. manas, the mind. β. All from & MAN, to think; cf. Skt. man, to think, Lat. mo-min-i, I remember. See Man. Der. mind, verb, A. S. gemyndgian, to remember, Grein, ii. 433; mind-ed; like-mind-ed; mind-ful, Shak. Lucrece, l. 1583; mind-ful-ly, mind-ful-ness; mind-less, Pricke of Conscience, 2288. From the same root, man, mental, mentor, mania, mandarin, money, mint (1), mendacious, com-ment, &c.

MINE(1), belonging to me. (E.) M. E. min, pl. mine, Chaucer, C. T. 1146; frequently shortened to my, as in id. 1145. - A. S. min, poss. pron. (declinable), Grein, ii. 252.-A. S. min (unchangeable), gen. case of the 1st pers. pronoun; see M.O. + Goth. meins, poss. pron. (declinable), mine; from meina, gen. case of 1st personal pronoun. So in other Teut. tongues. Doublet, my.

MINE (2), to excavate, dig for metals. (F., -L.) In King Alisaunder, I. 1216; cf. l. 1218. 'And therupon anon he bad His minours for to go and mine;' Gower, C. A. ii. 198. - F. miner, 'to mine, or undermine;' Cot. Cf. Ital. minare, Span. and Port. minar, to mine - Low Lat. minare, to conduct; with the esp. sense of leading onwards along a vein of metal; so also E. lode, or vein of ore, is allied to the verb to lead. The sense of 'driving cattle' also belongs to minare, and connects it with Lat. minari, to threaten; see Monace. Der. mine, sb.; min-er, M.E. minour, as above; min-ing; min-er-al, q.v. Also counter-mine, under-mine. And see mien. MINERAL, what is dug out of mines. (F.,-L.) M.E. mineral. 'The thridde stone in special By name is cleped mineral Whiche the metalles of every mine Attempreth, till that they been fine ;' Gower, C. A. ii. 87 .- F. mineral, 'a minerall ;' Cot. Formed as adj. to accompany the sb. miniere, 'a mine of metals or minerals,' Cot. - F. miner, to mine; see Mine (2). Cf. Span. minera, a mine. Der. mineral-ise, mineral-ist, minera(1)-logy (where the final l is dropped, owing to the l following), a coined word from Gk.  $\lambda \delta \gamma o_i$ , discourse, from  $\lambda i \gamma \epsilon_i \nu$ , to speak; minera-logi--al, minera-log-ist. MINEVER, MINIVER, the same as Meniver, q. v.

MINGLE, to mix, confuse. (E.) Common in Shak; both trans. and intrans. K. Lear, i. 1, 242; Macb. iii, 4, 3. A frequentative form, lit. 'to mix often,' from the older verb ming, M. E. mengen, mingen. 'The busy bee, her honye now she minges; 'Surrey, Desc. of Spring; see Spec. of Eng. ed. Skeat, p. 217 (C), l. 11. The M. E. verb occurs as myngen, Rob. of Glouc. p. 42, l. 13; it is more often mengen, and mostly used in the pp. meint (contracted form of menged), or meind, Gower, C. A. ii. 262. - A.S. mengan, to mix, also to become mixed; also spelt menegan, mængan, Grein, ii. 231. β. The vowel-change (of a to a or e) shews that mengan is a causal verb, derived from the older form mang, a mixture, preserved in the forms ge-mang, ge-mong, a mixture, crowd, assembly (where the prefixed ge- makes no difference), Grein, i. 425. + Du. mengelen, to mingle; from mengen, to mix. + O. Fries. mengia, to mix; cf. mong, prep. among. + Icel. menga, to mingle. + G. mengen, to mingle. Y. These forms are menga, to mingle. + G. mengen, to mingle. Y. These forms are due to the sb. mang, a mixture, crowd, as above. It seems best to refer this to the Teut. type MANAGA, many; see Many. Cf. G. menge, a crowd, O.H.G. menigi, a crowd, clearly related to O.H.G. manac, G. manch, many. Similarly, Mr. Vigfusson rightly derives the Icel. munga, to mix, from Icel. mangr\*, a form not found, yet undoubtedly the orig. form from which Icel. margr, many, is corrupted. The root is probably  $\checkmark$  MAG, to have power (see Many). ¶ Under the word Among I have, by a strange oversight, deduced the form many from its derivative manyan, thus referring among to mingle. The derivation of course runs the other way. From the  $\checkmark$  MAG, to have power, we have a nasalised many, whence many, numerous, and A. S. many, a great number, crowd, mixture; hence on-mang, in a crowd, E. among; also A.S. mengan, to mix, E. ming-le. GP Observe that there is no connection with to mix, E. ming-le. the verb to mix; the slight resemblance to Gk. µyvvµ, I mix, is purely accidental, and need not delude us. Der. mingl-ing; com-mingle, q. v. And see Monger, and Mongrel. MINIATURE, a painting on a small scale. (Ital., -L.) 'Miniature (from minium, i.e. red lead), the art of drawing pictures in little, being done with red lead. Miniated, painted or inlaid, as we read of porcellane dishes miniated with gold; 'Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. – Ital. miniatura, a miniature. – Ital. miniato, pp. of miniare, 'to die, to paint, to coloure or limne with vermilion or sinople or red lead;  $\beta$ . Said to be an Iberian Florio. - Lat. minium, cinnabar, red lead. word, the Romans getting their minium from Spain; see Pliny, b.

xxxiii. c. 7. MINIKIN, a little darling. (Du.) Florio (in 1498) translates Ital. mignone by 'a minion, a fauorit, a minikin, a darling.'-Du. minnekyn, a cupid ; Sewel's Du. Dict. ; 'Minne, Minneken, my love;' Hexham's Du. Dict. ed. 1658. Dimin. of Du. minne, love, cognate with O. H. G. minna, love, allied to E. mind. See Mind, Minion. Der. minikin, adj., i. e. dear little, K. Lear, iii. 6. 45.

MINIM, a note in music; to th of a drachm. (F.,-L.) The minim was once the shortest note, a quarter of the breve, or short note. The modern semibreve is so long a note that the breve is out of use. Formerly also spelt minum; Romeo, ii. 4. 22, second quarto (Schmidt) - O. F. minime; 'minime blanche, a minume in musick [so called from its white centre]; minime noire, a crochet ' [because wholly black]; Cot. - Lat. minuma (sc. nota), fem. nom. of minimus, minumus, very small; a superlative form with Aryan suffix ma (Schleicher, Compend. § 235) from a base min-, small. See Minor, Minish. Doublet, minimum, directly from Lat. neut.

sense, was prob. borrowed from Ital. mignone, 'a minion, a favorite, a dilling, a minikin, a darling; 'Florio.]  $\beta$ . The F. -on, Ital. -one, is a mere suffix; the base mign is due to M. H. G. minne, O. H.G. minna, minní, memory, remembrance, love; well known by its derivative minnesinger = singer of love. y. This minna, memory, is closely related to E. mind; see Mind. This O.H.G.

MINISH, to make little, diminish. (F., -L.) In Exod. v. 19; see Bible Word-book. M. E. menusen. 'Menused, or maad lesse;' Wyclif, John, iii. 30, earlier version. Chaucer has the comp. amenuse, Pers. Tale, Group I, 377 (Six-text). - F. menuiser, 'to minish, ex-tenuate;' Cot. Cf. Ital. minuzzare, to mince, cut small. - Low Lat. minutiare *, not found, a by-form of Low Lat. minutare, to reduce to fragments. - Lat. minutia, smallness. - Lat. minutus, small (whence F. menu); see Minuto, Minor. Der. di-minisk.

MINISTER, a servant. (F., -L.) M. E. ministre, Chaucer, C. T. 1664; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 312, l. 13. [Afterwards altered to the Lat. form.]-F. ministre. - Lat. ministrum, acc. β. In min-is-ter (from base min, small) of minister, a servant. and in mag-is-ter, a master (from base mag, great), we have a double comparative suffix answering to Aryan -yans-tara; see Schleicher, Compend. § 233. Y. The base min, small, appears in min-or, less, and min-imus, least; see Minor, Minim. Der. minister, vb. M. E. ministren, Rob. of Brunne, p. 80, from F. ministrer, Lat. ministrare; minister-i-al, minister-i-al-ly; ministr-ant, from the stem of pres. pt. of Lat. ministrare ; ministr-at-ion, from Lat. acc. ministrationem, from ministratus, pp. of ministrare; ministr-at-ive; ministr-y. Also minstrel, q. v. MINIVER, the same as Monivor, q. v. MINNOW, the name of a very small fish. (E.) There are two similar names for the fish in early books ; one corresponds to minnow, and is prob. a pure E. word; the other corresponds to O. F. menuise. 1. M. E. menow, spelt menawe in a Nominale of the menuise. 1. M. E. menow, spelt menawe in a roominate of the 15th cent., in Wright's Vocab. i. 222, col. 2; spelt menoum, pl. me-noumys, Barbour's Bruce, ii. 577. The suffix -ow cannot be traced to the earliest period; we find only A. S. myne, 'Capito, myne, vel kelepute' [eel-pout]; Wright's Voc. i. 55. col. 2. We also find, in Ælfric's Colloquy (Wright's Voc. i. 6), the acc. pl. mynas and del-putan as a gloss to Low Lat, menas et capitones. This A. S. myne (=mine) may be derived from A.S. min, small, and thus prob. means 'small fish.' It does not seem to be a mere borrowing from Lat. Cf. Irish min, small; miniasg, a small fish (iasg = fish). mena. 2. The M.E. menuse occurs (spelt menuce) in the Prompt. Parv. 1. 313; and (spelt menuse) in the Babees Book, ed. Furnivall, p. 168, l. 747. Cf. 'Hec menusa, a menys;' Wright's Vocab. i. 253, col. 2.-O.F. menusise, 'small fish of divers sorts, the small frie of fish;' Cot. Clearly connected with O.F. menuiser, to minish; and therefore with Lat. minutia, smallness, also, a small particle; from Lat. minutus, minute; see Minute. If this be correct, the E. minn--ow and O.F. men-uise are from the same base min, small; and merely differ in the suffix. Whatever be the exact history of the words, we are clear as to the ultimate base. ¶ The Low Lat. mena, Lat. mana, is not the same word, being borrowed from Gk.  $\mu a i \nu \eta$ , a small sea-fish, often salted.

MINOR, less, inferior. (L.) Like major, it was a term familiar in logic. It occurs in Sir T. More, Works, p. 504 d. - Lat. minor, less; compar. from a base min, small, not found in Latin, but occurring in the very form min in A.S. and Irish. + Icel. minnr, less i. 724. Der. minor-i-ty, Rich. III, i. 3. 11, coined in imitation of major-ity.

MINOTAUR, a fabulous monster. (L., - Gk.) M.E. Minotaure, Chaucer, C. T. 982. - Lat. Minotaurus. - Gk. Muráraupos, a monster, half man, half bull; born, according to the story, of Pasiphaë, daughter of Minos. - Gk. Mira-, for Miras, Minos, king of Crete; and ravpos, a bull.

MINSTER, a monastery. (L., -Gk.) M. E. minster; in the name West-minster, of frequent occurrence; P. Plowman, B. iii. 12; &c.-A.S. mynster, Grein, ii. 271. Corrupted from Lat. monas-terium, a monastery. See Monastery, which is a doublet. MINSTREL, a musical performer. (F., -L.) M. E. minstrel, minstral; spelt mynstral, P. Plowman, B. prol. 33; ministral, Chaucer, C. T. 10392; menestral, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 192. The pl. menestraus occurs in Ancren Riwle, p. 83, l. 11. - O. F. menestrel, 'a minstrell;' Cot. Also menestral (whence pl. menestraus). - Low Lat. ministralis, ministerialis, an artisan, servant, retainer; hence applied minimum, the smallest thing. MINION, a favourie, flatterer. (F., -O. H. G.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 98; see Trench, Select Glossary. - F. mignon, 'a minion, favorite;' Cot. - F. mignon, adj., 'minion, dainty, neat, spruce; also pleasing, gentle, kind;' Cot. [The use as a sb., with a sinister buffoons and jesters, and the like. - Lat. ministerium, an employment. - Lat. minister, a servant; see Minister. Der. ministerist, London Lyckpeny, st. 12; see Spec. of English, ed. Skeat, p. 26; spelt ministralcie, Chaucer, C.T. 2673. B b to the lazy train of retainers who played instruments, acted as buffoons and jesters, and the like, - Lat. ministerium, an employment. spelt mynt, Myrc's Instructions for Parish Priests, l. 1775; menet, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 241. - A.S. mynet, mynyt, latest text menet, a coin; Matt. xxii. 19. Not an A.S. word, but borrowed from Lat. moneta, (1) a mint, (2) money. B. Moneta was a surname of Juno, in whose temple at Rome money was coined. The lit. sense is 'the warning one,' from monere, to warn, admonish, lit. ' to cause to remember; 'cf. Lat. me-min-i, I remember. - / MAN, to think; see Mind, Man. Der. mint, vb., mint-er, mint-age. Doublet, money.

MINT (2), the name of an aromatic plant. (L.,-Gk.) ME. minte, mynte, Wyclif, Matt. xxiii. 23. - A. S. minte, Matt. xxiii. 23; Wright's Vocab. i. 67, col. 2. Prob. not an E. word, but merely borrowed from Lat. menta, mentha, Matt. xxiii. 23 (Vulgate). - Gk. β. The plant has flowers in whorls; hence μίνθα, μίνθοε, mint. the suggestion that the root may occur in Skt. manth, math, to The G. münze answers to E. mint in both senses ; this chum. makes it almost certain that both the G. and E. words are borrowed.

MINUET, the name of a dance. (F., -L.) 'Menuet or Minuet, a sort of French dance, or the tune belonging to it;' Phillips, ed. 1706. So called from the short steps in it. - F. menuët, 'smallish, little, pretty; ' Cot. Dimin. of F. menu, small. - Lat. minutus; see Minute.

MINUS, the sign of subtraction. (L.) Mathematical. - Lat. minus, less; neuter of minor, less; see Minor.

MINUTE, very small, slight. (L.) The accentuation on the last syllable is modern. 'With minute drops ;' Milton, Il Penseroso, 1. 130. But the word first came into use as a sb., in which use it is much older. M.E. minute, meaning (1) a minute of an hour, (2) a minute of a degree in a circle. 'Four minutes, that is to seyn, minutes of an houre; 'Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 7. 1. 8. 'A degre of a signe contienith 60 mynutis; 'id. pt. i. § 8. 1. 10. - Lat. minutus, small (whence F. menu); Low Lat. minuta, fem., a small portion, a mite (of money). Pp. of minuere, to make small. - Lat. min-, small, only found in min-or, less, min-imus, least; but cognate with A.S. min, small. + Gk. μινύ-θειν, to make small. - √ MI, to diminish; cf. Skt. mí, to hurt. See Minor, Minish. Der. minute-ly, minuteness ; and from the sb., minute-book, minute-glass, minute-gun, minutehand.

MINX, a pert, wanton woman. (Du.?) In Shak. Tw. Nt. iii. 4. 133; Oth. iii. 3. 475. The final x is difficult to account for. The word is most likely a corruption of O. Du. minneken, used as a term of endearment, meaning 'my love;' see Minikin. β. Schmidt connects it with minion (F. mignon), but the base is, either way, the same; viz. Du. and G. minne, love. See Minion. [†] MIOCENE, less recent, in geology. (Gk.) A coined word, signifying 'less recent.' - Gk. µeio-, for µeion, less; and nauv-oe, new, recent.

MIRACLE, a wonder, prodigy. (F., -L.) In very early use. M.E. miracle, Chaucer, C. T. 4897. The pl. miracles is in the A.S. Chron. an. 1137 (last line). - F. miracle. - Lat. mira-culum, anything wonderful. Formed with suffixes -cu- and -lu- (= Aryan suffixes ka, ra) from mira-ri, to wonder at. - Lat. mirus, wonderful (base smai-rosmi-ro). - V SMI, to smile, laugh, wonder at ; see Smile. Cf. Skt. smi, to smile, whence smaya, wonder. Der. miracul-ous, Macb. iv. 3. 177, from F. miraculeux, 'miraculous' (Cot.), answering to a Lat. type miracul-osus *, not used; miracul-ous-ly, -ness. From Lat. mirari we have also mir-age, mirr-or.

MIRAGE, an optical illusion. (F., -L.) Modern. - F. mirage, an optical illusion by which very distant objects appear close at hand; in use in 1809 (Littré) .- F. mirer, to look at. - Low Lat. mirare, to behold. - Lat. mirari, to wonder at. See Miracle, Mirror.

MIRE, deep mud. (Scand.) M.E. mire, myre; Chaucer, C. T. 510; myre, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 70, l. 18; mire, Will. of Paleme, 3507. - Icel. myrr, mod. myri, a bog, swamp. + Swed. myra, a bog, marsh. + Dan. myr, myre, a marsh. + O. Du. moer, 'mire, dirt, or mudd;' Hexham. + O. H. G. mios, M. H. G. mies, moss, swamp.  $\beta$ . Fick (iii. 241) refers Icel. myr and O. H. G. mios to a Teut. type MEUSA, a swamp, a mossy place, a deriva-tive from the type MUSA, whence E. moss; see MOSS. Thus the Thus the ¶ There seems sense is 'mossy ground,' bog, swamp, deep mud. to be no reason for connecting it with mere; but see Moor (I). I cannot find any authority for an alleged A.S. myre, mire. Der. mire, wb., Much Ado, iv. I. 135; mir-y, Tam. Shrew, iv. I. 77. MIRROR, a looking-glass. (F.,-L.) M.E. mirour, myroure (with one r); P. Plowman, B. xi. 8.-O. F. mireor, later miroir, 'a myror; Cot. This form Burguy equates to a Lat. type miratorium \*, not found. Evidently from the Low Lat. mirare, to behold. - Lat. mirari, to wonder at. See Miracle.

MIS- (1), prefix. (E. and Scand.) The A.S. prefix mis- occurs in mis-dad, a misdeed, and in other compounds. It answers to Du., Dan., and Icel. mis-, Swed. miss-, G. miss-; Goth. missa- as in missadeds, a misdeed. Hence the verb to miss; see Miss (1). It is sometimes Scand., as in mis-take. And see Mis-(2). MIS-(2), prefix. (F., = L.) Not to be confused with mis-(1). The proper old spelling is mes-, as in O. F. mes-chief, mischief. The comparison of this with Span. menos-cabo, diminution, Port. menoscabo, contempt, &c. shews that this prefix undoubtedly arose from Lat. minus, less, used as a depreciatory prefix. At the same time, Scheler's observation is just, that the number of F. words beginning with m5- (O. F. mes-) was considerably increased by the influence of the G. prefix miss- (see above) with which it was easily confused, Clear examples of this F. prefix occur in mis-adventure, mis-alliance, mis-chance, mis-chief, mis-count, mis-creant.

MISADVENTURE, ill luck. (F.,-L.) M. E. misaventure; spelt messauenture, King Horn, ed. Lumby, 1. 710. - O.F. mesaventure (Burguy). = O. F. mes-, prefix (= Lat. minus); and F. aventure, adventure. See Mis- (2) and Adventure.

MISALLIANCE, an improper alliance. (F.,-L.) A late word; added by Todd to Johnson's Dict.-F. mésalliance. See Mis- (2) and Ally.

MISANTHROPE, a hater of mankind. (Gk.) 'I am misanthropos;' Timon, iv. 3. 53 .- Gk. μισάνθρωποs, adj., hating mankind. - Gk. mo-eir, to hate, from moos, hatred; and dropornos, a man. See Anthropology. Der. misanthrop-ic, misanthrop-ic-al, mis-anthrop-ist, misanthrop-y (Gk. μσανθρωπία).

MISAPPLY, to apply amiss. (Hybrid; F., - L.; with E. prefue.) In Shak. Romeo, ii. 3. 21. From Mis- (1) and Apply. Der. misapplic-at-ion

MISAPPREHEND, to apprehend amiss. (Hybrid; E. and L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. From Mis- (1) and Apprehend. Der. misapprehens-ion

MISNAME, to name amiss. (E.) In Skelton, A Replycacion, 59. From Mis- (1) and Name.

MISNOMER, a wrong name. (F.,-L.) 'Misnomer, French Law-Term, the using of one name or term for another; 'Prillips, ed. 1706. It properly means 'a misnaming.' Also in Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691, where the prefix is said to be the F. mes-, which is probably correct. The E. word prob. answers to an O. Law-French mesnommer. - O. F. mes- (= Lat. misus), badly; and nommer, to name, from Lat. nominare, to name. See Mis- (2) and Nominate.

MISPLACE, to place amiss. (Hybrid ; E. and F.,-L.) In As You Like It, i. 2, 37. From Mis-(1) and Place. Der. misplace-ment. MISPRINT, to print wrongly. (Hybrid; E. and F., -L.) 'By misse-writing or by mysse-pryntynge;'Sir T. More, Works, p. 772 b. From Mis-(1) and Print. Der. misprint, sb.

MISPRISE, MISPRIZE, to slight, undervalue. (F.,-L.) In As You Like It, i. 1. 177. Spenser has the sb. mesprise = contempt ; F. Q. iii. 9. 9. – O. F. mespriser, 'to disesteem, contemn;' Cot. – O. F. mes- (= Lat. minus), badly; and Low Lat. presiare, to prize, esteem, from Lat. prelium, a price. See Mis- (2) and Prize, Price.

MISPRISION, a mistake, neglect. (F., - L.) See Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691. He says: 'misprision of clerks (Anno 8 Hen. VI. c. 15) is a neglect of clerks in writing or keeping records ... Misprision also signifies a mistaking (Anno 14 Edw. III. stat. 1. cap. 6).' - O. F. mesprison, 'misprision, error, offence, a thing done, or taken, amisse;' Cot.
 β. This O. F. mesprison has the same sense and source as mod. F. méprise, a mistake (Littré). It is written misprisio in Low Latin (Ducange); but this is only the O. F. word turned into Latin. Y. From O. F. mes- = Lat. minus, badly; and Low Lat. prentionem, acc. of prensio, a taking, contracted form of Lat. prehensio, a seizing. The latter is from Lat. prehensus, pp. of prehendere, to take. See Mis- (2) and Prison. ¶ 1. Misprision ¶ 1. Misprision 2. It is toleris, in fact, a bad form; it should be misprison. ably certain that misprision was ignorantly confused with misprise, and wrongly used in the sense of contempt. Thus Blount, in the and wrong y used in the sense of conserve and is a neglect or light account made of treason; and he derives the word from F, mespris, contempt. This easy error has probably resulted in false law. MISPRONOUNCE, to pronounce amiss. (Hybrid; E. and F., - L.) 'They mis-pronounced, and I mislik'd;' Milton, Apology for Smectymnuus (R.) From Mis- (1) and Pronounce. Der. mispronunci-at-ion.
